THE PRESENT reduced facsimile edition of Mr. William Shakespeares Comedies, Histories, & Tragedies (London, 1623), more commonly known as the First Folio, reproduces as faithfully and accurately as modern techniques permit the excellent copy in the possession of the Elizabethan Club of Yale University. This copy, which formerly belonged to Henry Huth (English collector, 1815-78), was purchased in 1911 by the late Alexander Smith Cochran and presented to the Library of the Elizabethan Club, where it is now one of the treasures of the Club's superb Elizabethan collection.

For the sake of convenient handling the size of the original type page has here been reduced by approximately one-fifth. To ensure maximum readability stains have been removed whenever possible without interfering with the text itself, but no other retouching has been undertaken; consequently, because of irregularities in the printing of the Folio an occasional word or passage in the facsimile reproduction may be difficult to read. Liberal outside margins have been provided for the reader's notes and a paper suitable for writing in ink has been used. The photographing was entrusted to Frederic G. Ludwig, head of the Photographic Department of Yale University Library.

This facsimile edition has two paginations. the original numbering at the top of the page (each section of the First Folio was paginated separately, and sometimes erroneously); and a new, continuous pagination supplied by the editor at the foot of each page, beginning with page 1 of The Tempest. In addition the reader will find there a reference number to the last line of each right-hand column, e g (p 1) 126, that is (The Tempest) Act 1, Sc. 2, line 6; here pr means "Prologue" (or "Induction") and ep. "Epilogue."

It is our hope that this handy facsimile edition of one of the greatest books in the English language will prove a valuable tool for scholars and students and a source of both pleasure and inspiration to all those who would savor the impact of a volume which rarity denies to most of Shakespeare's great audience in our time.

NOTE TO REPRINTINGS: It is a source of gratification to the Editors that the first printings of the Folio Facsimile should receive such wide attention. With additional printings the Facsimile begins to achieve its purpose of placing within the reach of everyone interested in Shakespeare an inexpensive, legible, and reliable reproduction of the original Folio text.

The reproduction of the First Folio by line photo offset, a process which prints black on white rather than giving the varying shades of gray of a tonal reproduction, has resulted in minor discrepancies between the original and the Facsimile. Where stains and show-through of the original were removed in the Facsimile, in the interest of legibility, an occasional top or bottom of a letter, a dot over an i, or a mark of punctuation disappeared in the first and second printings. All the important known deviations from the original have been corrected. Attention is called also to the following words which are almost illegible in the original: p. 619, left column, ll. 32 and 34, read respectively people and Hath bin, p. 620, right column, ll. 32 and 34, read respectively sleepe, and Worthy, p. 707, right column, l. 38, read Publius is come; p. 708, left column, l. 39, read Fellow.

INTRODUCTION

THE KING JAMES BIBLE and the First Folio edition of Shakespeare's plays are the two greatest books in the cultural history of the English-speaking peoples. They were published within a comparatively short time of one another: the Bible in 1611 and the Folio in 1623, and thus represent the flowering of literature in the ages of Queen Elizabeth and King James.

The 1623 First Folio enjoys a position of importance because it preserved the text of at least 17 of Shakespeare's plays which might well have been lost to posterity. Had it not been for the pious labor of John Heminge and Henry Condell, two of Shakespeare's friends and fellows of the King's Men Company, in collecting the plays for the Folio, the world might never have known the texts of The Tempest, As You Like It, Twelfth Night, Julius Caesar, Macbeth, Antony and Cleopatra, and at least ten other plays. Nineteen plays had appeared in quarto before 1623 and many of these exist in a different form in the Folio text, thus opening the way for a vast amount of study by scholars seeking to find out as certainly as possible what Shakespeare originally wrote.

Variations are also found among copies of the Folio itself, for corrections were made during the printing. Ultimately what is desired will be a collation of all extant copies of the Folio, but this is a formidable task even though Charlton Hinman has perfected a mechanical device making it possible to compare copies in a fraction of the time required for collation by the unaided eye. Such a collation was the dream of Henry Clay Folger, who gathered together 79 copies of the First Folio as the nucleus of his magnificent Elizabethan collection which is now housed in the Folger Shakespeare Memorial Library in Washington. Approximately 150 more copies are known to be in existence; thus nearly one-fourth of the original edition of probably 1,000 copies has survived the ravages of time. What more fitting tribute to the greatness of this volume than this silent testimony to those who cherished Shakespeare's plays and preserved them over the centuries?

Although the Folio cannot be considered a rare book, or even a first-rate example of the printer's art, it has become one of the most expensive books in the world because it does contain all but one or two plays which Shakespeare wrote in whole or in part. Originally it sold for about £1; by 1756 the price had advanced to £3-3-0. The nineteenth century saw a tremendous increase in the Folio's value, but the £712-2-0 paid in 1864 for a fine copy was quite eclipsed when, in the 1930's, Frank Hogan spent $70,000 plus commission for the famous Roseberry copy. The most recent sale of a fine copy by the Rosenbach Company reputedly lifted the price even higher, to $100,000. Only one or two other printed books have ever brought a higher price and here the rarity of the items was the determining factor.

While preserving the text of 17 plays which were not printed elsewhere, the Folio does not print a very few plays which have been regarded as Shakespearean at least in part. Sir Edmund Chambers would include in this group Sir Thomas More, Edward III, Pericles, and The Two Noble Kinsmen. Of these Pericles appeared in the second issue of the Third Folio in 1664, along with six other plays ascribed to Shakespeare, but editors have generally followed Malone in accepting Pericles and rejecting all others. A fairly strong case can be made for Shakespeare's collaboration with Fletcher in The Two Noble Kinsmen, but for the other plays the evidence is slight or inconclusive.

The obvious popularity of the First Folio led to the printing of a second folio in 1632, a third in 1663-64, and a fourth in 1685. Each is a reprint of the preceding except, as has been noted, that the Third Folio, second issue, contains the added plays. Since these Folios have no independent authority, being derived from their predecessors, the important textual studies of this century have been concerned with the First Folio and the various quarto editions of individual plays which appeared before 1623.

The Victorians were convinced that the problem of Shakespeare's text had been settled by The Cambridge Shakespeare of 1863-66 and its offspring The Globe Shakespeare, but the works of Pollard, Greg, McKerrow, John Dover Wilson, and their followers have demonstrated that much remains to be done before we can speak of a standard text of Shakespeare. The reader need only compare the text of such a play as The Two Gentlemen of Verona as it appears in the Folio with that found in a modern edition of the play to realize how much various editors have added. Of more importance than editorial changes and additions is the question, "What kind of copy was furnished the printer for the text of this play?" There are very few stage directions, and the names of the actors are grouped at the beginning of each scene, regardless of the fact that some of them enter later in the scene.

To understand this and the related textual problems the reader must have some knowledge of theatrical customs and the physical business of printing in the Elizabethan and Jacobean periods. First of all, we have very few dramatic manuscripts of the time, and the reason for this is not far to seek. For the Elizabethans, plays were not literature in the sense that poetry was. Gentlemen could, without loss of caste, write plays while they attended the University or were students at one of the Inns of Court, but to write plays for a commercial company stigmatized the author. After 1600 some playwrights, such as Ben Jonson and John Webster, did value the literary quality of their plays sufficiently to see that they were printed, but others echoed the words of Thomas Heywood, "It never was any great ambition in me to be in this kind voluminously read." The only works which Shakespeare was seemingly interested in having printed were his two poems, Venus and Adonis and The Rape of Lucrece. For these two and for nothing else he provided dedications. The attitude of the time is well expressed by Sir Richard Baker, a contemporary of Shakespeare and a friend of the poet John Donne. In his Chronicle of the Kings of England, Baker treats in turn the reign of successive sovereigns and at the end of each he discusses the famous men of the time. For Elizabeth's reign he notes statesmen such as Burleigh and Walsingham, famous seamen and soldiers—Raleigh, Drake, and the Earl of Essex—and the literary figures who are mostly theologians with the exception of Sir Philip Sidney. In conclusion Baker observes:

After such men, it might be thought ridiculous to speak of Stage-players; but seeing excellency in the meanest things deserve remembring, and Roscarius the Comedian is recorded in History with such commendation, it may be allowed us to do the like with some of our Nation. Richard Bourbidge [Burbage] and Edward Allen, two such actors as no age must ever look to see the like: and, to make their Comedies compleat, Richard Tarleton, who for the part called the Clowns Part, never had his match, never will have. For Writers of Playes, and such as had been Players themselves, William Shakespeare and Benjamin Johnson, have specially left their Names recommended to posterity.

This being the attitude of the times, as a large number of other writers testify, it is small wonder that most playwrights did not bother to see that their works were printed. Returning to Heywood, we find two other reasons why that author had not, as had Ben Jonson in 1616, published a large volume of Works. For one thing Heywood tells us that many of the manuscripts of his plays had been lost through negligence during the shifting and changing of companies, while others were still in the hands of the actors, who did not wish to have them printed lest such publication would damage attendance at the theatre.

Actually plays were not the best commodity for printers and publishers. As H. S. Bennett has shown in his recent work English Books and Readers 1475 to 1557, only a very small part of a printer's output was devoted to literature. Fully a half of all books printed by 1640 dealt with religion. Textbooks such as Lyly's Grammar were also highly profitable for the book trade, and even the most cursory examination of The Short Title Catalogue of English Printed Books 1475-1640 reveals the very minor attention given to the drama.

Today we know of 623 plays printed by 1642, and Sir Walter Greg gives evidence of 47 more that may have been printed but are not extant. Any study of the available evidence leads to the conclusion that only a part of the plays produced in the Tudor and Stuart period came into the printer's hands. Although it is impossible to tell with certainty how many plays were written, some inferences may be drawn. We now know, as a result of the discovery of the Trinity Hall playhouse, that professional actors were regularly presenting plays in London at least eight years before Shakespeare was born. It is my belief that there were frequent performances in London throughout the century even though documentary evidence is limited to the accounts of Trinity Hall and references to one or two inns as the scenes of plays. The contributory evidence seems conclusive. In the first place, a City edict of 1569 forbade the performance of stage plays or interludes in any mansion house, yard, court, garden, orchard, or other place or places. Such a sweeping prohibition would not have been made in the first place unless there existed just such widespread theatrical activity. Secondly, by 1569 there are records of the existence of 39 theatrical companies. These appear almost exclusively in provincial records, for the actors had to secure permission of the local authorities before presenting a play; thus a record of their existence is preserved. Evidently no such permissions were necessary in and around London, because before the discovery of the Trinity Hall records the only notice of plays in London, aside from those presented at Court, was of six inn-yard performances in 1557, 1567, 1575, 1576, and 1578. In 1576 the Theatre was built and plays were presumably presented there regularly until 1598 when the building was dismantled and rebuilt south of the river Thames with the new name of the Globe. Actually we have very few references to specific performances at the Theatre and very few of the plays there presented have survived.

It seems folly to assume, as a number of textbooks do, that the actors would avoid the largest potential audience in the kingdom, and certainly James Burbage and John Brayne would not have invested over £500 in building the Theatre unless they had good reason to believe that the presentation of plays would be a profitable undertaking. Thus it seems reasonable to conclude that a great many plays now lost were presented in London years before Shakespeare arrived on the scene.

Fortunately we do have some factual records of theatrical activity in London from 1592 on. These are the accounts of Philip Henslowe, an entrepreneur who backed several companies, but chiefly the Admiral's Men whose leading actor was Edward Alleyn, Henslowe's son-in-law. On September 13, 1619 Alleyn founded the College of God's Gift at Dulwich on the south side of the Thames. To this college he left books and papers including the manuscript known to us as "Henslowe's Diary," and from this we gain a fascinating picture of the management of a theatrical company in Shakespeare's London. From February 17, 1592 through November 5, 1597 Henslowe records his receipts from performances of specific plays. From the later date through May, 1603 other plays are mentioned not by performances but by sums of money paid various playwrights for composition or revision.

The extent of the repertoire is truly amazing. For the eleven-year period we have mention of 280 plays and when it is realized that there were long intervals when the actors were not presenting their productions, either because of the plague as in the period from April 9, 1593 to June 3, 1594, or for other reasons, the tremendous activity of both playwrights and actors during the working seasons can be realized. For example, in the nine months from October 27, 1596 through July 28, 1597, the Admiral's Men presented 32 different plays, 15 of which were new and the remaining 17 were revivals of earlier successes. The most popular play of this season was "Alexander and Lodowick," which was never printed and whose author is unknown. It was first presented as a new play on January 14, 1597, was repeated fourteen more times during the season, and only once were there performances on successive days. Tied for second place with twelve performances each were "Valteger," "That Will Be Shall Be," and "Jeronymo." Of the first of these we know little except that Thomas Middleton probably used it in some fashion as the basis of his play The Mayor of Queenborough (ca. 1620) wherein appears the character Vortiger (Henslowe spells it both "valtegar" and "vortiger"), a native Briton who enlisted the aid of the Saxons. Of the second play nothing is known. The third is clearly Kyd's The Spanish Tragedy, a perennial success in the Elizabethan theatre

But even the blood, thunder, and rant of The Spanish Tragedy could draw an audience on only twelve occasions, and the constant demand for new plays is a dominant factor in the methods of dramatic composition. For example, it has been noted that in the eleven-year period covered by the Diary a total of 280 plays is mentioned, and this does not represent constant playing. To produce part of this number Henslowe had dealings with 23 different playwrights during the years 1598-1602. Before this he does not mention authors by name so the total number would presumably be even larger. How these men worked is equally instructive. In many instances they collaborated. Dekker, for example, worked with Drayton, Munday, and Wilson; with Chettle and Ben Jonson; with Chettle, Day, and Houghton; and on other occasions and in other combinations with Hathaway, Middleton, Smith, and Webster. Dekker had a hand in some 44 plays during 1598-1602, and his total known output during his lifetime is in the neighborhood of 75; the actual total was probably much more.

This latter suggestion is based on the evidence of Henslowe. Of the 280 plays mentioned in the Diary only 37 found their way into print, so our only knowledge of the remaining 243 is Henslowe's mention of them. Thus 87 per cent of the repertoire for an eleven-year period is known only through the fortunate preservation of Henslowe's manuscript. When we realize that but 17 of Dekker's plays were printed and that only four of these represent plays referred to by Henslowe, the reasonable inference is that many more have perished. At least five plays for which Ben Jonson was paid by Henslowe have vanished, even though in 1616 there appeared The Works of Benjamin Jonson which the author had himself prepared for publication. And while Thomas Heywood, unlike Jonson, had no wish to preserve his "works" for posterity, he did add that he had had a hand in over 200 plays, truly an enormous output.

The total number of plays printed by 1642 when the Puritans succeeded in closing the theatres was approximately 670, of which 623 are extant today, as can be seen in Sir Walter Greg's Bibliography of the English Printed Drama. Taking the figure of 13 per cent, the printing percentage as found in Henslowe's records, this would give a total of better than 5,000 plays for the period ending in 1642. The exact number is in itself unimportant; what is significant is the conclusion that several thousand plays were performed of which we know nothing in comparison with the 623 plays that we currently possess. We may confidently hope that only the dross has been lost and that the pure gold has been preserved, but everything we know about the printing of plays militates against such optimism. If success in the theatre is any criterion of literary worth, the great majority of the most successful plays noted by Henslowe were never printed. We know that Edmund Spenser wrote comedies, but no trace of them remains. The early Hamlet written presumably by Kyd has vanished along with Shakespeare's Love's Labor Won. The truth of the matter is that we have imperfect knowledge of what has disappeared. If none of Shakespeare's plays had been printed, contemporary references would tell us of about half the contents of the Folio. Such plays as As You Like It, King Lear, Macbeth, Antony and Cleopatra, and Coriolanus are known to us only because they were printed as Shakespeare's, and while we would know of a Titus Andronicus and a Hamlet we would not know who wrote them. The reason for this disregard has been shown by the quotation from Sir Richard Baker who viewed actors and playwrights as "the meanest things." A final instance of this attitude toward the theatre is found in the "Diary" of Sir William Peter, a fashionable young man who frequented London in the last years of Queen Elizabeth's reign and the opening ones of King James's. Sir William meticulously records his gambling debts, his purchase of books, his wife's allowance, his expenditures for food, drink, and lodging, but there is not a single item listed for attendance at plays or the purchase of a printed play.

While it is, of course, a matter of regret that we have no accounts for the Chamberlain's Men as we do for the Admiral's, it is reasonable to conclude that Shakespeare's company conducted their affairs in the same general fashion. Both companies had to face the public demand for a large repertoire, some 30 to 35 different plays each season with one-third to one-half of this number being new plays, that is, either completely new plays or revisions of old ones. The reason for this demand lies in the nature of the audience that came to the theatres. Recent studies have shown that a relatively small percentage of the total population constituted the play-going public. Under such conditions there could be no sequent presentation of the same play, since the bulk of the potential audience would have been accommodated by two or perhaps three performances. Never does Henslowe record more than two successive performances of a given play and then it is always one of demonstrated drawing power or else a new play being given its premiere.

An extensive repertoire was provided for Henslowe by a large number of playwrights working in collaboration on new materials or in the revision of old plays. Since we have already seen some indication of the extent of collaboration, we can turn to the problem of revision. Henslowe records many payments to playwrights for reworking old plays that belonged to the company. These range from 5 s. to £4 or £5. With the usual price of a new play £6, a payment of £5 would seem to indicate an almost complete reworking of the original. Of course there is no means of knowing when an author either alone or in collaboration reworked an old play that did not belong to the company. In such a case the natural presumption is that the full price for a new play would be demanded.

The history of The Spanish Tragedy as recorded by Henslowe illustrates the sort of thing that happened. From March 14, 1592 to January 22, 1593 it was performed sixteen times by Lord Strange's Men. Nothing more is heard of it until four years later when the Admiral's Men presented it as a new play on January 7, 1597. This of course means that the play had been revised, but there is no record of any payment for this revision, so we are forced to conclude that Henslowe's Diary is not a complete record of all the financial details of the company. In 1601, however, we do find a payment to Jonson of £2 for additions to the play. Again in 1602 Jonson received £10 for a play called "Richard Crookback" and for new additions to The Spanish Tragedy. When the play with these Jonsonian additions was performed and whether it was marked as a new play on both occasions we do not know, because after November 5, 1597 Henslowe ceased to record his lists of performances and receipts. Two texts of this play do exist but which state of revision the later represents is uncertain. It could hardly be the second reworking by Jonson for which £4 was paid, if we assume the usual payment of £6 for the new play "Richard Crookback." Such a sum would indicate fairly extensive revision, while the extant revised text reveals five new passages which add 293 lines to the 2,967 of the original. The second Jonsonian additions must have been of greater scope than this to warrant the large payment, so it would seem that a third revision of this play must have existed and that it has been lost along with the manuscripts of all but a very few plays.

The history of Hamlet probably followed much the same pattern. To judge from the words of Thomas Nashe such a play written by Thomas Kyd was in existence by 1589. When in 1594 the combined companies of the Admiral's Men and the Chamberlain's Men were playing together for ten days Henslowe records a production of Hamlet. This along with Titus Andronicus and The Taming of a Shrew, which were played at the same time, belonged to the Chamberlain's Men, since there is no further mention of them in the Diary. A pamphlet by Thomas Lodge printed two years later refers to the ghost "which cried so miserably at the theatar [the Theatre], Hamlet revenge." The Theatre being the regular playhouse of the Chamberlain's Men, it is apparent the company continued the play in its repertoire. The history of its revision or revisions might be found if we had records comparable to Henslowe's for Shakespeare's company; but we do not, and so a deal of ink has been spilled over such vexing problems as those posed by the fact that we have three texts of Hamlet: the first quarto of 1603, the second quarto of 1604-05, and the Folio of 1623.

At any rate the evidence we do have suggests strongly that the general pattern revealed by Henslowe's Diary may be reasonably applied to the activities of the Chamberlain's Men. The inferences to be drawn from the foregoing are twofold. First, it is apparent that the bulk of the plays performed in the Elizabethan theatres have not been preserved, and that only a small percentage were ever printed. Whether this means that the Folio does not contain all the plays which Shakespeare wrote in whole or in part cannot be easily decided. We have seen that Thomas Heywood had a hand in over 200 plays of which only 12 were printed. Forty-eight plays either in whole or in part by Henry Chettle are lost as are 49 in which Thomas Dekker had a hand. About 17 plays by Dekker either alone or in collaboration are extant, so it may well be that Shakespeare was as prolific as his contemporaries and that some of his work has not survived.

A second inference is that Shakespeare probably worked with other playwrights in his company, and that they, like those in the Admiral's, collaborated and at times revised old plays in order to satisfy the demands of the public. Such a conclusion will not meet with the favor of most Shakespeare scholars, as I am well aware, but the facts that we have I believe allow no other alternative.

Henslowe also affords some information on the composition of plays, another area of study which is extremely important to our understanding of the Folio and the nature of the texts therein printed. In many cases a playwright might well begin with an old play in the possession of the company which he could rework and modernize. This view, particularly when applied to Shakespeare, is and has been under violent attack, but let us look at the facts. We know, for example, that there was a Romeo and Juliet play on the stage in 1562, for in that year Arthur Brooke, in the prefatory matter of his poem, The Tragicall Historye of Romeus and Juliet, tells us, "I saw the same argument lately set foorth on stage with more commendation, then I can looke for: (being there much better set forth then I have or can dooe)." In 1579, according to Stephen Gosson, there was a play at the Bull Inn that bore some resemblance to The Merchant of Venice, for it involved a "Jew . . . representing the greedinesse of worldly chusers, and bloody mindes of Usurers. " The Hamlet play we have noted and Shakespeare's version must be dated after 1598 and probably before February, 1601. Such old plays as The Troublesome Reign of King John, The Famous Victories of Henry V, The Most Famous Chronicle History of Lene King of England and his Three Daughters, and The Taming of a Shrew all were reworked by Shakespeare and indicate still further the widespread Elizabethan custom of revising old plays

Other sources of dramatic material were Italian collections of short stories and other narratives, or volumes of history. The revising of old plays or the transformation of tales into plays stemmed from the critical beliefs of the age which required that an author should tell the truth, that "truth" being based on "authority," an event that had actually occurred or an event that could be regarded as true since it had been accorded previous literary treatment. No question of plagiarism in the modern sense was involved because the important aspect was not originality of plot but originality of treatment.

One interesting example of this concern with "truth" is the dramatization of contemporary murders, scandals, and the like. In 1592 there was printed Arden of Faversham, a play which dealt with a famous murder committed in 1551 which was still so noteworthy that Holinshed's Chronicle contains a full account. Two such plays which are now lost are known to us from the research of Professor Sisson in the Public Record Office in London. No less a dramatist than George Chapman accepted a commission from the interested parties to dramatize the fortunes of one Agnes Howe, a wealthy heiress whose stepfather tried to profit by arranging her marriage. This play bore the revealing title "The Old Joiner of Aldgate," and it brought Chapman into the courts. Similarly another commissioned play in which Dekker had a hand dealt with the cheating of a wealthy widow under the title "Keep the Widow Waking," and again legal action resulted.

His play completed, the author made himself, or had made by a professional scrivener, a final copy which is referred to on two or three occasions as the "fair copy." The author's rough drafts, which he kept, destroyed, or gave to the company as a safeguard against the possible loss of the fair copy, were known as "foul papers." The fair copy became the property of the company when payment—around £6—had been made. It is generally assumed, without too much factual evidence, that every company had an employee known variously as "the book-keeper," "the prompter," or "the playhouse reviser," who then prepared the manuscript for acting by adding stage business, making sure that all entrances and exits were clearly marked and in some instances adding marginal warnings to have properties ready in advance of their actual use on stage. A great deal has been written about the activities of this individual; at one time it was thought that he was responsible for the introduction of actors' names in place of the characters they impersonated. In Much Ado About Nothing, for example, one scene gives the name of the actor Will Kemp instead of the character Dogberry. Fashions change and it is now thought that such substitutions were the work of the author who, as he wrote, thought in terms of the personnel of his company. Why such a variation should occur in only one scene is something of a problem.

A major difficulty in assessing the contribution of the bookkeeper is the lack of homogeneity in the extant dramatic manuscripts. A further complication which has received scant attention is afforded by the fact that Shakespeare was an actor as well as a dramatist. In view of this, it is distinctly possible that he would, in the course of composition or in the final revision, have added a good many of the details ascribed to the bookkeeper.

An extension of this line of thought leads to speculation on the interesting subject of what happened to the text during rehearsal. It is highly probable that changes were introduced into the promptbook at this time to suit the exigencies of actual performance, to enhance dramatic effectiveness, or to suit the demands of an actor. Changes of personnel subsequent to the original composition of a play seem to have required alteration of the text, as may be seen in at least one episode in Twelfth Night. In scene iv of Act II the Duke calls on Cesario (the disguised Viola) for a song, but Cesario neither sings nor replies to the Duke's request. Instead Curio gives us the strange information, "He is not here, so please your lordship, that should sing it." It turns out that Feste, Olivia's fool, is the singer and has to be sent for. It would seem that originally the boy who played Viola-Cesario could and did sing. On the occasion of a subsequent revival the boy player could not sing so it was necessary to alter the text to provide for a substitute. A later interpolation is also found in this same play. When Malvolio dreams on the possibility of his marrying the Lady Olivia he cites as an example "The Lady of the Strachy [who] married the yeoman of the Wardrobe." Professor C. J. Sisson has discovered material in the Public Record Office that proves this reference must date after 1616, some fourteen years after the play was first performed.

It seems to me incredibly at odds with the facts to suppose that a dramatic manuscript would remain unchanged from its first appearance as fair copy. Everything we know about theatrical conditions from Henslowe to the present day demonstrates that the texts of plays are constantly subject to change and alteration to suit the demands of the actors, whose last thought would be to preserve a pure original version

Thus it is apparent that the promptbook might differ markedly from the author's first draft or even from the final copy which he sold to the company. During times of plague the London companies, deprived of their livelihood in town, took to the road, as Shakespeare's company did in 1596. On such occasions it would be necessary to reduce the number of actors required and the amount of paraphernalia that had to be transported. One such abridgment of which we have definite knowledge is George Peele's The Battell of Alcazar. For this play we have a quarto printed in 1594 and a manuscript entitled "The Plott of the Battell of Alcazar." Such "plots" were outlines of the action of the play, listing entrances and exits and the properties required. Pasted on a board, the plott was hung backstage in the tiring house for the use of the actors. In the present case, it is clear that the quarto was printed from an abridged text which required a smaller cast than is indicated by the plott, thus simplifying the action and eliminating much of the stage paraphernalia. Just how long the original play was must remain uncertain, but it is manifest that there must have been a great deal of re-writing. Whether the original author was responsible for the abridgment is again uncertain, and it may well be that such a task was turned over to one of the minor playwrights attached to the company. Inferior writing might result from such a practice when the abridger might not have the literary ability of the original author.

Still another alteration of the original text of a play is indicated by the accounts of the Revels Office, which was in direct charge of all plays presented at Court. Unfortunately these accounts do not exist for the years of Shakespeare's greatness, but the procedures of an earlier age are illuminating. In 1571-72, for example, six plays were chosen for Court performance out of the many that were submitted. These six were "often perused, & necessarily corrected & amended" by all the officers of the Revels. How the plays were chosen is explained by a later entry recording payments to John Sherborne "for sondrye thinges by h[is]m boughte provided vsed expended & brought into the Masters Lodginge for the rehearsall of sondrie playes to make choise of dyvers of them for her Maestie." It would seem as though the Revels Office made transcripts of the plays, for the payment to Sherborne includes "ynke and paper" and another entry covers payment to Thomas Blagrove, Clerk of the Revels, for ". . . paper, Ink & suche other Necessaries as to his office appertayneth & is incident to the devices plottes orders, Bills, Reckonings, & Bookes by him devysed, framed, sett owt, compiled, conferred, cast vpp, concluded & preferred. . . .”

That Court performances required alterations of the text of a play is confirmed by the evidence of the plays themselves. The conclusion of The Arraignement of Paris has Diana presenting the golden ball “to the Queen’s own hands.” If the play was given elsewhere than at Court this piece of business and the attendant lines would have been deleted. In the plays of John Lyly we find alternate prologues and epilogues for use at Court or at the Blackfriars. In fact practically any play presented at Court required a prologue and epilogue addressed to the sovereign.

From what has already been said, it is evident that different manuscripts of the same play could be in existence, and this state of affairs is further complicated because still other types of manuscripts are known to have existed. In 1592 Robert Greene was accused of having sold his play Orlando Furioso to two different companies: first to the Queen’s Players and then, when they were touring in the country, to the Admiral’s Men. Some eight years later Thomas Heywood also refers to this reprehensible practice. The question which immediately arises is whether the two texts would be identical. If a dramatist prepared a second fair copy from his own foul papers, he might well make alterations. On the other hand if he had originally prepared two fair copies in the hope of a double sale, they would probably be alike.

A somewhat analogous situation is found in the case of Fletcher’s Bonduca; the promptbook was lost for a time and a scrivener made a transcript from the author’s foul papers. Comparison of this text with the version which was printed in 1647, presumably from the recovered promptbook, reveals that extensive revision took place when the original fair copy was made. This transcript from the foul papers was made for a private individual, and a number of such manuscripts exist for the late Jacobean and Caroline periods.

Still another type of dramatic manuscript has been posited by the majority of recent scholars of textual problems. This is a reported text made, not by stenography, but rather by an actor or a group of actors, generally called “pirates.” It is usually assumed that the pirates had gone on tour and had carelessly left their promptbooks in London. An alternative is that they had sold their promptbooks to another company and wishing to profit from a play that was no longer theirs they concocted a text from memory. A third hypothesis is that one or two minor actors sought to gain ready money by vamping from memory a text which they would sell to a printer. In any event the memory of the actor or actors is the agency which reconstructed the play. Such memorial reconstructions are called "bad quartos," because all printed texts thought to derive from such manuscripts were printed in quarto format. The adjective "bad" has an unfortunate connotation but it was originally used by Professor Pollard to apply to those Shakespearean quartos which gave a text differing in various degrees from a later quarto or from the Folio text. The first quarto of Romeo and Juliet (1597) and the first quarto of Hamlet (1603), for example, differ from the second quartos of these same plays and are thus classified as bad quartos. A more accurate description might perhaps be "variant quartos," for it is by no means certain in my opinion and in that of some other scholars that these quartos derive from manuscripts based on the memorial efforts of pirate actors.

Finally there is one other kind of dramatic manuscript which has survived. This is an actor's part or, in modern terms, an actor's "sides," which are half pages containing the lines of a specific character with cues and stage directions. The one such document which has survived is Edward Alleyn's part for the title role in Greene's Orlando Furioso. This consists of sheets of paper pasted end to end making a continuous roll, and contains all of Orlando's speeches with cues from the lines of other characters who appear on stage with him. At times there are corrections or additions in Alleyn's own hand, an interesting comment on the actor's interest in his own part. From a collection of such parts it would be possible to assemble the complete text of a play and there is some reason to believe that this might have been done.

The Folio text was printed in part from one or another of the types of dramatic manuscripts which have been discussed, but for a number of plays the compositor in Jaggard's shop used as his copy a printed quarto. Such was the case with Much Ado About Nothing, a quarto of which was printed in 1600 by Valentine Simmes for Andrew Wise and William Aspley. In this instance we can distinguish between Simmes, the printer, and Wise and Aspley as the publishers, but all three men were members of the Company of Stationers, the livery company chartered in 1557 by Queen Mary of which all printers and booksellers had to be members in order to carry on their business. Theoretically the Company had complete economic control of all printing and publishing, and also theoretically the Government could, by virtue of the royal charter, control or suppress books of a seditious or inimical nature.

In practice both controls were far from absolute. Many books were printed without the legal formality of entering their titles in the Registers of the Company and paying the requisite fee. At one time it was thought that failure to enter a book was an indication of surreptitious printing, but this view has been shown to be false as more is learned about printed books of the period. The reason for entering a book was to secure copyright for the owner of the work, and the owner was not the author but the printer or publisher who had ordinarily paid the author for the manuscript. After this the author had no rights whatsoever, for these belonged in perpetuity to the person making entry. In turn these could be bequeathed to heirs from generation to generation. With a valuable commodity such as Shakespeare's plays the rights become subdivided to hundreds of parts by the eighteenth century, when (1710) Parliament passed the Copyright Act that gave rights to authors and limited the term to 28 years. Finally in 1774 a court decision ended perpetual copyright.

The Register contains a record of entry for Much Ado by Wise and Aspley on August 23, 1600 but at once something of a problem is encountered. In the Register under the date of August 4, 1600 four plays, As You Like It, Henry V, Much Ado and Ben Jonson's Everyman in His Humour, are listed with the notation "to be staied," that is, not printed. Just what this means is uncertain, as are so many things connected with dramatic texts in general and Shakespeare's in particular. It has been thought that the Chamberlain's Men sought to prevent the publication of these plays for at least two reasons: publication might reduce attendance at the theatre or publication was going forward without authorization or without payment for the manuscript. In any event all the plays except As You Like It were printed in 1600.

The manuscript that Wise and Aspley had in their possession was probably Shakespeare's foul papers, for definite indications of this are found in the printed text. There are no act or scene divisions; characters who have no lines are mentioned in stage directions; the directions are far from complete, with many exits and entrances unmarked; Leonato's brother Anthonio is not given the name Anthonio until near the end of the play and his speech ascriptions read variously as "Brother" or "Old"; and Dogberry's ascriptions read "Kemp," "Kem" and "Ke." The latter three are explicable when it is realized that the famous Will Kemp played this part. Richard Cawley, a known member of the Company, played the part of Verges as is indicated by the speech ascriptions "Cawley" and "Cauley" for this character. Such evidence, particularly the use of actors' names, together with the negative evidence of a lack of any indication of use in the playhouse, makes it reasonably certain the quarto was printed from Shakespeare's foul papers.

The Folio text of Much Ado was set up from a copy of the quarto, but some interesting changes had been made. The majority of these may be attributed to the compositor of the Folio who corrected some errors but introduced new ones, chiefly through the omission of words; but there are variations which require another explanation. Certain stage directions have been changed and most curious are those in II, 3. Here the quarto has "Enter prince, Leonato, Claudio, Musicke." Six lines later occurs this direction. "Enter Balthaser with musicke." The Folio has for the first, "Enter Prince, Leonato, Claudio, and Iacke Wilson," and omits the entrance of Balthaser. The use of the actor's name "Iacke Wilson" is similar to the use of "Kemp" and "Cawley" which we have noted but two questions arise. Why was Balthaser made to come in with the Prince, Leonato and Claudio? And why does the name Wilson appear in the Folio?

A possible answer to both problems would be that the changes were the work of the prompter or bookkeeper. For performance it would simplify matters if the singer carrying his lute came in with the other characters. To follow the author's directions found in the quarto, a musician or musicians (Musicke) would have to enter with the Prince and then still another musician (Balthaser) would have to make a later entrance. Sir Edmund Chambers suggests that the quarto used by the Folio compositor had either been used as a promptbook or been corrected by reference to the promptbook, but Sir Walter Greg shows that only the second theory can be admitted and even here we are far from certainty. Other stage directions are altered in the Folio with the seeming purpose of clarifying the business for performance, but the majority are left in the quarto form even though a number of these would have to be altered. In other words the Folio text is far from being a prompt book that could have been used in performance.

The identity of "Iacke Wilson" might clarify matters but we do not know who he was with certainty. There was a court musician named John Wilson who was born in 1595, and if he is meant it might be that the person who prepared the copy for the Folio compositor had witnessed a recent performance of Much Ado, say in 1621, when Wilson had appeared. Of one thing we may be certain: someone had gone over a printed quarto making alterations, cursory deletions of oaths, and in one case deleting an uncomplimentary reference to German and Spanish costume. It is also clear that this "editing" was far from thorough and might almost be described as haphazard.

The case of Much Ado is, however, simplicity itself when compared with such a play as King Lear. A quarto of this play was printed in 1608 and 12 copies are presently extant; but because extensive corrections were made during the printing no two of these copies are in complete agreement. The current view of leading textual scholars is that a copy of this quarto was used as the basis of the Folio text. The two texts differ so widely that an editor must be regarded as intervening. Accordingly, it is assumed that the editor compared his printed text with the company's promptbook and made corrections, cuts, and additions to his printed text. As will be realized, the amount of close study involved in examining such a textual problem is truly enormous, and much still remains to be done on those plays in the Folio which were set up from printed copy if we are to know just what Shakespeare wrote as distinguished from the corrections or errors of compositors, the alterations of the bookkeeper, and the work of an anonymous editor.

According to Sir Walter Greg 11 Folio plays were set from their quartos and in the majority of cases there was some consultation of a playhouse manuscript by the anonymous editor or editors. The activity of the editor varied, as we have seen from the rather cursory work on Much Ado to the elaborate and thorough preparation of the King Lear quarto. Other scholars would add to or subtract from this list, but it is reasonably safe to say that Titus Andronicus, Love's Labour's Lost, Romeo and Juliet, Richard II, A Midsummer Night's Dream, The Merchant of Venice, 1 Henry IV, 2 Henry IV, Much Ado About Nothing, Troilus and Cressida, and King Lear were thus printed in the Folio.

For the remaining 25 plays of the Folio, manuscripts were used as the compositor's copy, but the nature of the manuscript in many instances is far from certain. The author's foul papers, the fair copy, the promptbook, and transcripts of the latter two all appear to have been used, but our lack of exact knowledge as to the nature of such documents often renders a categorical statement impossible. We do not know, for example, whether all foul papers were uniformly lacking in stage directions designed for production. What must be kept in mind is that we are dealing with the work of a man who was earning his living in the professional theatre. Shakespeare himself never sought to publish any of his plays, and there is no reason to believe that he or anyone else was interested in preserving definitive texts of the plays he had written. Thus the materials assembled by Heminge and Condell were not homogeneous but were a very mixed bag indeed. The study of Shakespeare's text and the establishment of a definitive text must rest on patient and time-consuming study of the materials which we have, and our greatest source of information is the Folio itself.

This volume was not the first attempt to publish a collection of Shakespeare's plays, for in 1619 Thomas Pavier began publication of a quarto containing ten plays. Six of these were by Shakespeare and four were ascribed to Shakespeare with no authority. Pavier had the rights to five plays: The Whole Contention (2 parts), A Yorkshire Tragedy, Henry V and Sir John Oldcastle; while Jaggard, the printer of the volume, owned The Merchant of Venice and A Midsummer Night's Dream. Of the remaining three Pericles was probably derelict and Pavier simply appropriated it; King Lear was owned by Nathaniel Butter, and The Merry Wives of Windsor by Arthur Johnson. The rights to these two were probably purchased by Pavier and Jaggard. Whether Pavier planned to publish more plays than these is uncertain but we do know that all ten were printed in 1619 and that although the original intention had been to produce a single quarto volume, they appeared separately.

Just what happened is not certain, but it would seem that Shakespeare's company brought some pressure to bear which forced Pavier to give up the project of the collected volume, and in fact prevented him from selling any of the plays. Apparently Pavier had foreseen such a difficulty and had hit upon a novel scheme to protect his investment; he had Jaggard print false title pages giving 1600 as the date for The Merchant of Venice, Sir John Oldcastle, and A Midsummer Night's Dream, 1608 for King Lear and Henry V. Thus these plays could be sold as old stock and Pavier could avoid any possible legal action. No date at all was given on the title of The Whole Contention (Pavier's title for The First Part of the Contention and The True Tragedy), so that too could presumably be sold in the same fashion. The remaining plays were dated 1619 either by error or else because Pavier saw no legal objection to his sale of these books.

It was only in comparatively recent times that the truth about the falsely dated title pages and the whole scheme was discovered. A striking demonstration of the techniques of the "New Bibliography" revealed that all ten plays had similar water-marks in their paper; that all the title pages, except that of A Midsummer Night's Dream, were printed from the same setting of type, only the different titles of the individual plays being changed as needed; and that in nine of the ten appeared the same printer's device, one known to have been used by Jaggard.

It may well have been that this venture by Pavier was the first cause of the publication of the Folio. Perhaps to forestall other such unethical publishers and to honor their fellow, Shakespeare, John Heminge and Henry Condell decided to bring out a collection which they could oversee and from which the King's Men might presumably profit.

To this end Heminge and Condell gathered together the manuscripts and printed quartos which were to serve as copy for the compositors in the shop of William and Isaac Jaggard. Some indication of the general nature of this far from homogeneous copy has been given, and now we can investigate the actual course of the printing of the volume I am particularly indebted to two scholars for much of the information which follows. Edwin E. Willoughby, whose The Printing of the First Folio of Shakespeare was published in 1932, and John Shroeder, whose doctoral dissertation, "The Jaggard Folio," has just been completed under my direction. Dr. Willoughby's book was the first full-scale examination and in the main it will endure as a basic reference for information on this subject. Mr. Shroeder's work, which should appear in print in the next year or so, revises certain of Dr. Willoughby's conclusions and offers new and important evidence as to the sequence of printing and other bibliographical problems connected with the Folio. Other scholars have contributed to our knowledge of this problem but in general I have drawn on the two works here noted.

Modern bibliographical study began with the pioneer work of Alfred Pollard, R. B. McKerrow, and Sir Walter Greg. Their purpose was to examine printed books with reference to what actually happened in a sixteenth- or seventeenth-century printing house. The earliest English book on this subject is Joseph Moxon's Mechanik Exercises, 1683, and from this we derive knowledge of the techniques of printing which continued to be followed until about 1800, when a different type of press, new methods of casting type, and new methods of making paper drastically altered the traditional procedures.

The paper used in Jaggard's shop had been made completely by hand. A pulp of linen rags was dipped from a large vat with frames or moulds which had a mesh wire base to allow the water to drain off. In the center of this mesh there was usually a wire device which left a semi-transparent design in the sheet. This watermark, as it is called, indicated the manufacturer of the paper and is an invaluable aid in the study of bibliographical problems. The most frequent watermark in the Folio is a crown, of which some seven varieties have been noted. The sheet formed by the mould was turned out to dry. The size of sheets varies throughout the period, but that used for the Folio was approximately  $13\frac{1}{2} \times 17\frac{1}{2}$  and on this were printed two pages on each side. When folded the sheet thus contained four pages, as may be seen from the following diagrams of a sheet where the two sides are indicated by their technical names "inner forme" and "outer forme."

INNER FORME

OUTER FORME

A book with the sheet thus folded once is termed a folio. A smaller book is produced by folding the paper a second time to produce a quarto, with four pages printed on each forme as follows:

INNER FORME

OUTER FORME

While most quartos were printed according to the foregoing diagram, a somewhat different procedure was followed with a folio. To sew together a series of individual folio sheets would entail considerable labor and so three folded sheets were fitted inside one another to produce a quire or gathering containing twelve pages. It follows that the outer forme of the outside sheet will contain pages 1 and 12, the inner forme of the same sheet, 2 and 11; the outer forme of the second sheet 3 and 10, and so on. In order to assemble the quires and to be sure that the finished book was complete, a letter, called a signature, was printed at the bottom of the outer forme of each sheet. The first play in the Folio, The Tempest, thus has on page 1 the letter A; on page 3, A2; on page 5, A3. The next quire uses the letter B and when the alphabet was exhausted, double letters were used, as Aa, etc. There are various irregularities in the signatures of the Folio, and the interested reader will find an account of these given by Dr. Willoughby, although some significant alterations have been made by Mr. Shroeder. The Folio was furthermore divided into three sections, "Comedies," "Histories" and "Tragedies," each with its own pagination, but here again there are strange irregularities.

Before turning to the fascinating story of the printing of the Folio we need to consider the very first steps in Jaggard's shop. The copy supplied by Heminge and Condell was given to the compositor or compositors (there is evidence that at least two and possibly more were employed) after the necessary details as to the format of the book had been decided. The compositor held in his left hand a compositor's stick adjusted to hold a line of the correct length. From a case in front of him he took the first letter of the first word and placed it in the stick. Spaces were inserted after each word and these varied in width so that the line of type would be of the proper length. The Elizabethan printer could also get his line to the proper length by varying the spelling. For example, "busy" could be spelled "busie"; "here" could also be "heere."

After setting some six or seven lines, the compositor removed them from his stick and continued the process until he had enough lines for a page. This block of type was then tied together with string and when enough pages had been set printing could begin. The usual manner of printing the Folio was to begin with the inner forme of the inner sheet, that is, pages 6 and 7, so at least seven pages had to be set before the pressmen could start to work.

The type blocks for individual pages were "imposed" or laid on a stone and were then enclosed by a frame called a "chase." The correct spacing of the blocks forming the individual pages was achieved by using pieces of metal or wood called the "furniture." The whole was then "locked" by using wedges or "quoins" that could be driven in to make all secure for lifting to the press. There the type was inked by hand and the impression was made by pressing the sheet against the type. The sheet was then hung up to dry. As a necessary result of drying, all the inner formes of a quire were printed before work could begin on the outer formes.

At some point during the foregoing a proofreader took one of the dry sheets and made corrections. According to the findings of Dr. Hinman this individual did not check against the copy but rather corrected obvious errors and things which seemed to him errors. In other words his corrections have no textual authority. The proofreading finished, the chase was removed from the press and the necessary corrections made, but the sheets that had already been printed were not discarded. So it happens that different copies of the Folio may contain variant readings, one being the uncorrected state of a given sheet.

An interesting example of this preservation of uncorrected sheets is found in a Folio at the Folger Shakespeare Library in Washington. Originally Jaggard planned to print Troilus and Cressida after Romeo and Juliet, and in fact had the type set for the conclusion of Romeo and the first three pages of Troilus when difficulties arose over the copyright of the latter play. The last page of Romeo had been printed with the first page of Troilus on its verso but it now became necessary to reset with Timon of Athens taking the place of Troilus. The Folger copy contains the original sheet with the conclusion of Romeo and the beginning of Troilus, a fortunate preservation since it explains why Troilus finally appeared at the beginning of the Tragedies without any pagination except for the second and third pages which are numbered 79 and 80. The copyright having been finally secured after everything else had been finished, Troilus was printed, but one leaf was salvaged from the original printing.

This is but one instance of the many vagaries which attended the printing of the Folio. We now know, for example, that the printing of the Comedies proceeded in orderly fashion until we come to Twelfth Night and The Winter's Tale. It is now apparent, thanks to Mr. Shroeder, that these two were not printed until after work had already been completed on King John and Richard II, the first of the Histories. In the remainder of this latter section other strange things occur and the order of printing differs markedly from the order as found in the finished book. There are leapings about from one play to another, resettings, cancels, and breaks in pagination and in the sequence of signatures. In general the irregularities seem due to difficulties over copyright, and in the case of The Winter's Tale to loss of the actual copy.

Although the title page mentions only Isaac Jaggard and Edward Blount, the colophon reveals the existence of a syndicate as the backers of the printing of the Folio. There we read that the volume was "Printed at the Charges of W. Jaggard, Ed. Blount, I. Smithweeke, and W. Aspley," a group who among them had clear title to 22 plays. By November 8, 1623 printing had progressed to the point where the syndicate could produce a copy of the Folio first for licensing and then for registration with the Stationers' Company. At this time they secured the rights to 16 unpublished plays: The Tempest, Two Gentlemen of Verona, Measure for Measure, The Comedy of Errors, As You Like It, All's Well That Ends Well, Twelfth Night, The Winter's Tale, Henry VI, Henry VIII, Coriolanus, Timon of Athens, Julius Caesar, Macbeth, Anthony and Cleopatra, and Cymbeline. In addition, Smethwick owned Hamlet, Romeo and Juliet, The Taming of the Shrew, and Love's Labour's Lost, while Aspley had title to Much Ado About Nothing and 2 Henry IV. Jaggard's friend and erstwhile partner Pavier had the rights to Henry V and 2 and 3 Henry VI, but outside the syndicate Matthew Law owned 1 Henry IV, Richard II, and Richard III, while the remaining plays were owned singly by other printers and publishers.

It is in the plays held outside the syndicate that we find the major irregularities in the printing of the Folio. Troilus and Cressida is an excellent example of how copyright affected the printing of the Folio. Henry Walley owned this play, and threats of legal action forced Jaggard, at least for some time, to omit it. Matthew Law also made trouble, and the printing of the plays which he owned was postponed for a time. The syndicate indeed had their troubles, but they must have profited well from their venture, for in nine years the demand for Shakespeare's plays was such that a second folio was printed.

The enduring popularity of Shakespeare called for the publication of a third folio in 1663-64 and of a fourth in 1685. The eighteenth century saw numerous editors at work on the plays, producing texts which differed in varying degrees from both the original quartos and the First Folio. In the nineteenth century interest in the Folio caused Lionel Booth to publish a reduced type facsimile. The best photographic facsimile was that done by Sir Sidney Lee in 1902, but this has long been out of print and a used copy commands a very substantial price. Now at last the general reader, as well as the student and scholar, has in the present volume an opportunity to read and study Shakespeare at first hand.

Censure will not diuue a Trade, or make the lacke go. And though you be a Magistrate of wit, and sit on the Stage at Black-Friers, or the Cock-pit, to arraigne Playes daile, know, these Playes haue had their triall already, and stood out all Appeals, and do now come forth quitted rather by a Decree of Court, then any purchas'd Letters of commendation

It had bene a thing, we confesse, worthie to haue bene wilhed, that the Author himselfe had liu'd to haue set forth, and ouerseen his owne writings, But since it hath bin ordain'd otherwise, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you do not envie his Friends, the office of their care, and paine, to haue collected & publish'd them; and so to haue publish'd them, as where (before) you were abus'd with diuerse stolne, and surreptitious copies, maimed, and deformed by the frauds and stealthes of iniurious impostors, that expos'd them: euen those, are now offer'd to your view cur'd, and perfect of their limbes; and all the rest, absolute in their numbers, as he conceiu'd the. Who, as he was a happie imitator of Nature, was a most gentle expresser of it His mind and hand went together: And what he thought, he vttered with that easinesse, that wee haue scarce receiued from him a blot in his papers. But it is not our prouince, who onely gather his works, and giue them you, to praise him. It is yours that reade him. And there we hope, to your diuers capacities, you will finde enough, both to draw, and hold you: for his wit can no more lie hid, then it could be lost Reade him, therefore; and againe, and againe: And if then you doe not like him, surely you are in some manifest danger, not to vnderstand him. And so we leaue you to other of his Friends, whom if you need, can bee your guides: if you neede them not, you can leade your selues, and others. And such Readers we wish him.

To the memory of my beloued, The AVTHOR

MR. WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE:

what he hath left vs.

DO draw no enuy (Shakespeare) on thy name,
Am I thus ample to thy Booke, and Fame.
While I confesse thy writings to be such,
As neither Man, nor Mus, can praise too much.
'Tis true, and all mens suffrage. But these wayes were not the paths I meant vnto thy praise
For feeblest Ignorance on these may light,
Which, when it sounds at best, but eccho's right;
Or blinde Affection, which doth ne're aduance
The truth, but gropes, and vrgeth all by chance;
Or crafty Malice, might pretend this praise,
And thinke to ruine, where it seem'd to raise.
These are, as some infamous Baud, or whore,
Should praise a Matron. Wh it could hurt her more?
But thou art prooffe against them, and indeed
Aboue th' ill fortune of them, or the need.
I, therefore will begin. Soule of the Age!
The applause! delight! the wonder of our Stage!
My Shakespeare, rise, I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lye
A little further, to make thee a roome:
Thou art a Monument, without a tombe,
And art al.ue still, while thy Booke doth liue,
And we haue wits to read, and praise to giue.
That I not mixe thee so, my braine excuses;
I meane with great, but disproportion'd Muses:
For, if I thought my iudgement were of yeeres,
I should commit thee surely with thy peeres,
And tell, how farre thou didst out our Lily out-shine,
Or sporting Kid, or Marlowes mighty line.
And though thou hadst small Latine, and lesse Greeke,
From thence to honour thee, I would not seeke
For names, but call forth thundring Æschilus,
Euripides, and Sophocles to vs,
Paccuius, Accius, him of Cordoua dead,
To life againe, to heare thy Buskin tread,
And shake a Stage: Or, when thy Sockes were on,
Leaue thee alone, for the comparison

Of all, that insolent Greece, or haughtie Rome sent forth, or since did from their ashes come.
 Triumph, my Britaine, thou hast one to shew,
 To whom all Scenes of Europe homage owe.
 He was not of an age, but for all time!
 And all the Muses still were in their prime,
 when like Apollo he came forth to warme
 Our eares, or like a Mercury to charme!
 Nature her selfe was proud of his designs,
 And ioyd to weare the dressing of his lines!
 which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
 As, since, she will vouchsafe no other Wit.
 The merry Greeke, tart Aristophanes,
 Neat Terence, witty Plautus, now not please,
 But antiquated, and deserted lye
 As they were not of Natures family.
 Yet must I not giue Nature all. Thy Art,
 My gentle Shakespeare, must enioy a part.
 For though the Poets matter, Nature be,
 His Art doth giue the fashion. And, that he,
 Who cists to write a living line, must sweate,
 (such as thine are) and strike the second heat
 Vpon the Muses anuile. turne the same,
 (And himselfe with it) that he thinks to frame
 Or for the lawrell, he may gaine a scorne,
 For a good Poet's rinde, as well as borne.
 And such wert thou. Locke how the fathers face
 Issues in his issue, euen so, the race
 Of Shakespeares munde, and manners brightly shine:
 In his well torned, and true filed lines:
 In each of which, he seemes to strike a Lanze,
 As brandish't at the eyes of Ignorance
 Sweet Swan of Auon' what a sight it were
 To see thee in our waters yet appeare,
 And make those sights vpon the bankes of Thames,
 That so did take Eliza, and our Iames!
 But stay, I see thee in the Hemisphere
 Advanc'd, and made a Constellation there!
 Shine forth, thou Starre of Poets, and with rage,
 Or influence, chide, or cheere the drooping Stage;
 Which, since thy sight fro hence, hath monn'd like night,
 And despaires day, but for thy Volumes light.

Vpon the Lines and Life of the Famous Scenicke Poet, Master WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Those hands, which you so clapt, go now, and wring
You Britaines brauc, for done are Shakespeares dayes :
His dayes are done, that made the dainty Playes,
Which made the Globe of heu'n and earth to ring.
Dry'de is that veine, dry'd is the Thespian Spring,
Turn'd all to teares, and Phæbus clouds his rayes .
That cor'p's, that coffin now besticke those bayes,
Which crown'd him Poet first, then Poets King.
If Tragedies might any Prologue haue,
All those he made, would scarce make one to this :
Where Fame, now that he gone is to the graue
(Deaths pu'lique tyring-house) the Nuncius is.
For though his line of life went soone about,
The life yet of his lines shall neuer out.

TO THE MEMORIE

of the deceased Authour Maister
W. SHAKESPEARE.

SHake-speare, at length thy pious fellowes giue
The world thy Workes : thy Workes, by which, out-live
Thy Tombe, thy name must when that stone is rent,
And Time dissolues thy Stratford Monument,
Here we aliuie shall view thee still. This Booke,
When Brasse and Marble fade, shall make thee looke
Fresh to all Ages when Posteritie
Shall loath what's new, thinke all is prodegie
That is not Shake-speares; eu'ry Line, each Verse
Here shall reuiue, redeeme thee from thy Herse.
Nor Fire, nor canking Age, as Naso said,
Of his, thy wit-fraught Booke shall once inuade.
Nor shall I e're beleuee, or thinke thee dead
(Though mist) vntill our bankrout Stage be sped
(Impossible) with some new straine t'out-do
Passions of Iuliet, and her Romeo;
Or till I heare a Scene more nobly take,
Then when thy half-Sword parlying Romans spake.
Till these, till any of thy Volumes rest
Shall with more fire, more feeling be exprest,
Be sure, our Shake-speare, thou canst neuer dye,
But crown'd with Laurell, liue eternally.

To the memorie of M. W. Shake-speare.

WE wondred (Shake-speare) that thou went'st so soone
From the Worlds-Stage, to the Graues-Tyring-roome.
Wee thought thee dead, but this thy printed worth,
Tels thy Spectators, that thou went'st but forth
To enter with applause. An Actors Art,
Can dye, and liue, to acte a second part.
That's but an Exit of Mortalitie;
This, a Re-entrance to a Plaudite.

THE T E M P E S T.

Act. primus, Scena prima.

A tempestuous noise of Thunder and Lightning heard: Enter a Ship-maister, and a Boatswaine.

Ote-swaine.

Boatsw. Heere Maister. What cheere?
Maist. Good Speake to th' Mariners fall too't, yarely, or we run our selues a ground, bestirre, bestirre. Exit.

Enter Mariners

Boatsw. Heigh my hearts, cheerely, cheerely my harts. yare, yare Take in the toppe-sale Tend to th' Masters whistle. Blow till thou burst thy winde, if room be enough.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Ferdinando, Gonzalo, and others.

Alon. Good Boatswaine haue care. here's the Maister? Play the men.

Boatsw. I pray now keepe below.

Anth. Where is the Maister, Boson?

Boatsw. Do you not heare him? you marre our labour, Keepe your Cabines you do afis't the storme.

Gonz. Nay, good be patient.

Boatsw. When the Sea is: hence, what cares these roarrers for the name of King? to Cabine, silence: trouble vs not.

Gon. Good, yet remember whom thou hast aboard

Boatsw. None that I more loue then my selfe. You are a Counsellor, if you can command these Elements to silence, and worke the peace of the present, wee will not hand a rope more. vse your authoritie. If you cannot, giue thanks you haue liu'd so long, and make your selfe readie in your Cabine for the mischance of the houre, if it so hap. Cherely good hearts. out of our way I say. Exit.

Gon. I haue great comfort from this fellow-methinks he hath no drowning marke vpon him, his complexion is perfect Gallowes. Stand fast good Fate to his hanging, make the rope of his destiny our cable, for our owne doth little aduantage. If he be not borne to bee hang'd, our case is miserable. Exit.

Enter Boatswaine.

Boatsw. Downe with the top-Mast: yare, lower, lower, bring her to Try with Main-course. A plague—

Acty within. Enter Sebastian, Antonio & Gonzalo.

vpou this howling. they are lowder then the weather, or our office: yet againe? What do you heere? Shal we giue ore and drowne, haue you a minde to sinke?

Sebas. A poxe o' your throat, you bawling, blasphemous incharitable Dog

Boatsw. Worke you then

Anth. Hang cur, hang, you whoreson insolent Noyse-maker, we are lesse afraid to be drownde, then thou art.

Gonz. I'll warrant him for drowning, though the Ship were no stronger then a Nut-shell, and as leaky as an vnstanch'd wench.

Boatsw. Lay her a hold, a hold, set her two courses off to Sea againe, lay her off.

Enter Mariners wet.

Mars. All lost, to prayers, to prayers, all lost.

Boatsw. What must our mouths be cold?

Gonz. The King, and Prince, at prayers, let's assist them, for our case is as theirs.

Sebas. I am out of patience.

Anth. We are meerey cheated of our liues by drunkards, This wide-chop'd rascall, would thou mightst lye drowning the washing of ten Tides.

Gonz. Hee'll be hang'd yet, Though euery drop of water sweare against it, And gape at widst to glur him. A confused noise within. Mercy on vs.

We split, we split, Farewell my wife, and children, Farewell brother. we split, we split, we split.

Anth. Let's all sinke with King

Seb. Let's take leaue of him, Exit.

Gonz. Now would I giue a thousand furlongs of Sea, for an Acre of barren ground. Long heath, Browne firs, any thing, the wills about be done, but I would faine dye a dry death. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mira. If by your Art (my dearest father) you haue Put the wild waters in this Rore, alay them:

The skye it seemes would powre down stinking pitch, But that the Sea, mounting to th' welkins cheekes,

Dashes the fire out. Oh I haue suffered With those that I saw suffer. A braue vessell

(Who

(Who had no doubt some noble creature in her)
Dash'd all to peeces : O the cry did knocke
Against my very heart : poore soules, they perish'd.
Had I byn any God of power, I would Haue suncke the Sea within the Earth, or ere
It should the good Ship so haue swallow'd, and
The fraughting Soules within her.

Prof. Be collected,
No more amazement - Tell your pittieous heart
there's no harme done.

Mira. O woe, the day.

Prof. No harme:

I haue done nothing, but in care of thee
(Of thee my deere one; thee my daughter) who Art ignorant of what thou art. Naught knowing
Of whence I am nor that I am more better
Then Prospero, Master of a full poore cell,
And thy no greater Father.

Mira. More to know

Did neuer medle with my thoughts

Prof. 'Tis time

I should informe thee farther Lend thy hand
And plucke my Magick garment from me So,
Lye there my Art: wipe thou thine eyes, haue comfort,
The direfull spectacle of the wracke which touch'd
The very vertue of compassion in thee.
I haue with such prouision in mine Art
So safely ordered, that there is no foule
No not so much perdition as an hayre
Berid to any creature in the vessell
Which thou heardst cry, which thou saw'st sinke - Sit
For thou must now know farther. [downe,

Mira. You haue often

Begun to tell me what I am, but stopt
And left me to a bootelisse Inquisition,
Concluding, stay not yet.

Prof. The howr's now come

The very minute byds thee ope thine eare,
Obey, and be attentue. Canst thou remember
A time before we came vnto this Cell?
I doe not thinke thou canst, for then thou was't not
Out three yeeres old.

Mira. Certainly Sir, I can

Prof. By what? by any other house, or person?
Of any thing the Image, tell me, that
Hath kept with thy remembrance.

Mira. 'Tis farre off

And rather like a dreame, then an assurance
That my remembrance warrants Had I not
Fowre, or fve women once, that tended me?

Prof. Thou hadst; and more Miranda But how is it
That this liues in thy minde? What seest thou els
In the dark backward and Abisme of Time?
Yf thou remembrest ought ere thou cam'st here,
How thou cam'st here thou maist.

Mira. But that I doe not.

Prof. Twelue yere since (Miranda) twelue yere since,
Thy father was the Duke of Milaine and
A Prince of power

Mira. Sir, are not you my Father?

Prof. Thy Mother was a peeces of vertue, and
She said thou wast my daughter; and thy father
Was Duke of Milaine, and his onely heire,
And Princeesse, no worse Issued.

Mira. O the heanens,
What fowle play had we, that we came from thence?

Or blessed was't we did?

Prof. Both, both my Girl.

By fowle-play (as thou saist) were we heau'd thence,
But blessedly holpe hither.

Mira. O my heart bleedes

To thinke oth' teene that I haue turn'd you to,
Which is from my remembrance, please you, farther;

Prof. My brother and thy vncle, call'd Antonio :
I pray thee marke me, that a brother should
Be so perfidious. he, whom next thy selfe
Of all the world I lou'd, and to him put
The mannage of my state, as at that time
Through all the signories it was the first,
And Prospero, the prime Duke, being so reputed
In dignity; and for the liberall Artes,
Without a paralell; those being all my studie,
The Government I cast vpon my brother,
And to my State grew stranger, being transported
And apt in secret studies, thy false vncle
(Do'st thou attend me?)

Mira. Sir, most heede fully.

Prof. Being once perfected how to graunt suites, how to deny them : who t'aduance, and who
To trash for ouer-toppings; new created
The creatures that were mine, I say, or chang'd 'em,
Or els new form'd 'em; hauing both the key,
Of Officer, and office, set all hearts i'th state
To what tune pleas'd his care, that now he was
The Iuy which had hid my princely Trunck,
And suckt my verdure out on't : Thou attend'st not?

Mira. O good Sir, I doe.

Prof. I pray thee marke me:

I thus negleeding worldly ends, all dedicated
To closenes, and the bettering of my mind with that, which but by being so retir'd
Ore-priz'd all popular rate in my false brother
Awak'd an euill nature, and my trust
Like a good parent, did beget of him
A falsehood in it's contrarie, as great
As my trust was, which had indeede no limit,
A confidence fans bound. He being thus Lorded,
Not onely with what my reuenuew yielded,
But what my power might els exact. Like one
Who hauing into truth, by telling of it,
Made such a synner of his memorie
To credite his owne lie, he did beleue
He was indeed the Duke, out o'th' Substitution
And executing th' outward face of Royaltie
With all prerogatiue: hence his Ambition growing :
Do'st thou heare?

Mira. Your tale, Sir, would cure deafenesse.

Prof. To haue no Schreene between this part he plaid,
And him he plaid it for, he needs will be Absolute Milaine, Me (poore man) my Libranie
Was Dukedom large enough of temporall roalties
He thinks me now incapable. Confederates
(so drie he was for Sway) with King of Naples
To giue him Annuall tribute, doe him homage
Subiect his Coronet, to his Crowne and bend
The Dukedom yet vnbow'd (alas poore Milaine)
To most ignoble stooping.

Mira. Oh the heauens:

Prof. Marke his condition, and th'euent, then tell me
If this might be a brother.

Mira. I should sione

To thinke but Noble of my Grand-mother,

Good

Good wombes have borne bad sonnes.

Pro. Now the Condition.

This King of Naples being an Enemy
To me inueterate, hearkens my Brothers suit,
Which was, That he in lieu o' th' premises,
Of homage, and I know not how much Tribute,
Should presently extirpate me and mine
Out of the Dukedome, and confer faire Mistake
With all the Honors, on my brother Whereon
A treacherous Armie leuied, one mid-night
Fated to th' purpose, did Anthanio open
The gates of Mistake, and ith' dead of darkenesse
The ministers for th' purpose hurried thence
Me, and thy crying selfe

Mr. Alack, for pittie :

I not remembering how I cride out then
Will cry it ore againe it is a hint
That wrings mine eyes too't.

Pro. Heare a litle further,
And then I'll bring thee to the present businesse
Which now's vpon's without the which, this Story
Were most impertinent.

Mr. Wherefore did they not
That howre destroy vs?

Pro. Well demanded, wench
My Tale prouokes that question. Deare, they durst not,
So deare the loue my peop'le bore me nor set
A marke so bloody on the businesse, but
With colours fairer, painted their foule ends
In few, they hurried vs a-board a Barke,
Bore vs some Leagues to Sea, where they prepared
A rotten carkasse of a Burt, not rigg'd,
Nor tackle, sayle, nor mast, the very rats
Instinctiuely haue quit it. There they hoyst vs
To cry to th' Sea, that roard to vs; to sigh
To th' windes, whose pittie fighting backe againe
Did vs but louing wrong.

Mr. Alack, what trouble
Was I then to you?

Pro. O, a Cherubin
Thou wast that did preferue me, Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heauer,
When I haue deck'd the sea with drops full salt,
Vnder my burthen groan'd, which rais'd in me
An vndergoing stomacke, to beare vp
Against what should ensue.

Mr. How came 've a shore?

Pro. By prouidence diuine,
Some food, we had, and some fresh water, that
A noble Neapolitan Gonzalo
Our of his Charity, (who being then appointed Master of this designe) did giue vs, with Rich garments, linnens, stuffs, and necessaries
Which since haue freeded much, so of his gentlenesse
Knowing I lou'd my bookes, he furnisht me
From mine owne Library, with volumes, that I prize about my Dukedome.

Mr. Would I might
But euer see that man.

Pro. Now I arise,
Sit still, and heare the last of our sea-sorrow:
Heere in this Island we arriv'd, and heere
Haue I, thy Schoole-m'ster, made thee more profit
Then other Princesses can, that haue more time
For vainer howres; and Tutors, not so carefull

Mr. Heuens thank you for't. And now I pray you Sir,

For still 'tis beating in my minde; your reason
For rayling this Sea-sorrow?

Pro. Know thus far forth,

By accident most strange, bountifull Fortune
(Now my deere Lady) hath mine enemies
Brought to this shore: And by my prescience
I finde my Zenith doth depend vpon
A most auspicious starre, whose influence
If now I court not, but omit; my fortunes
Will euer after droope. Heare cease more questions,
Thou art inclinde to sleepe 'tis a good dulnesse,
And giue it way. I know thou canst not chuse:
Come away, Seruant, come, I am ready now,
Approach my Ariel. Come Enter Ariel.

Ari. All haile, great Master, graue Sir, haile I come
To answer thy best pleasure; be't to fly,
To swim, to diue into the fire. to ride
On the cild clouds. to thy strong bidding, taske
Ariel, and all his Qualitie.

Pro. Hast thou, Spirit,
Perform'd to point, the Tempest that I bad thee.

Ar. To euery Article.

I boarded the Kings ship now on the Beake,
Now in the Wastle, the Decke, in euery Cabin,
I flam'd amazement, sometime I'd diuide
And burne in many places; on the Top-mast,
The Yards and Bore-spirit, would I flame distinctly,
Then meete, and ioyne. Ioues Lightning, the precursors
O' th' dreadfull Thunder-claps more momentarie
And fight out running were not; the fire, and cracks
Of sulphurous roaring, the most mighty Neptune
Seeme to besiege, and make his bold waues tremble,
Yea, his dread Trident shake.

Pro. My braue Spirit,
Who was so firme, so constant, that this coyle
Would not infect his reason?

Ar. Not a foule

But felt a Feauer of the madde, and plaid
Some tricks of desperation, all but Mariners
Plung'd in the foaming bryne, and quit the vessell;
Then all a fire with me the Kings sonne Ferdinand
With haire vp staring (then like reeds, not haire)
Was the first man that leapt, cride hell is empty,
And all the Duels are heere.

Pro. Why that's my spirit:
But was not this nye shore?

Ar. Close by, my Master

Pro. But are they (Ariel) safe?

Ar. Not a haire perisht:

On their sustaining garments not a blemish,
But fresher then before, and as thou badst me,
In troops I haue disperd them 'bout the Isle.
The Kings sonne haue I landed by himselfe,
Whom I left cooling of the Ayre with sighes,
In an odde Angle of the Isle, and sitting
His armes in this sad knot.

Pro. Of the Kings ship,
The Mariners, say how thou hast dispos'd,
And all the rest o' th' Fleet?

Ar. Safely in harbour

Is the Kings shippe, in the deepe Nooke, where once
Thou call'dst me vp at midnight to fetch dewe
From the still-vext Bermoothes, there she's hid;
The Mariners all vnder hatches stowed,
Who, with a Charme ioyn'd to their suffred labour
I haue left asleepe: and for the rest o' th' Fleet

(Which I dispers'd) they all haue met againe,
And are vpon the Mediterranean Flore
Round sadly home for Naples,
Supposing that they saw the King's ship wrackt,
And his great person perisht.

Pro. Arul, thy charge
Exactly is perform'd; but there's more worke:
What is the time o'th' day?

Ar. Past the mid season.

Pro. At least two Glasses: the time 'twixt six & now
Must by vs both be spent most preciouslly.

Ar. Is there more toyle? Since y<sup>e</sup> do't giue me paine,
Let me remember thee what thou hast promis'd,
Which is not yet perform'd me.

Pro. How now? moodie?

What is't thou canst demand?

Ar. My Libertie.

Pro. Before the time be out? no more:

Ar. I prethee,

Remember I haue done thee worthy seruice,
Told thee no lyes, made thee no misthings, 'ciu'd
Without or grudge, or grumblings, thou did promise
To bate me a full yeere.

Pro. Do'st thou forget
From what a torment I did free thee? Ar. No.
Pro. Thou do'st. & thinkest it much to tread y<sup>e</sup> Ooze
Of the salt deepe;
To run vpon the sharpe winde of the North,
To doe me businesse in the venus o'th' earth
When it is bak'd with frost.

Ar. I doe not Sir.

Pro. Thou hast, malignant Thing: wilt thou forget
The fowle witch Sycorax, who with Age and Enuy
Was growne into a hoope: hast thou forgot her?

Ar. No Sir.

Pro. Thou hast: where was she borne? speake tell me:
Ar. Sir, in Argier.

Pro. Oh, was she so: I must

Once in a moneth recount what thou hast bin,
Which thou forgetst. This damn'd Witche Sycorax or mischiefs manifold, and sorceries terrible
To enter humane hearing, from Argier
Thou know'st was banish'd: for one thing she did
They would not take her life: Is not this true? Ar. I, Sir.

Pro. This blew ey'd hag, was hither brought with
And here was left by th' Saviors, thom my slaue, (child,
As thou reportst thy selfe, was then her seruant,
And for thou wast a Spirit too delicate
To set her earthy, and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand hests, she did confine thee
By helpe of her more potent Ministers,
And in her most vnnurtigable rage,
Into a clouen Pyne, within which rift
Imprison'd, thou didst painefullly remaine
A dozen yeeres: within which space she di'd,
And left thee there: where thou didst vent thy groanes
As fast as Mill-wheeles strike. Then was this Island (Saue for the Son, that he did liour heere,
A sickel'd whelpe, hag-borne) not honour'd with
A humane shape.

Ar. Yes: Caliban her sonne.

Pro. Dull thing, I say so: he, that Caliban
Whom now I keepe in seruice, thou best know'st
What torment I did finde thee in, thy groanes
Did make volours howle, and penetrate the breasts
Of euer-angry Beares; it was a torment

To lay vpon the damn'd, which Sycorax
Could not againe vndoe: it was mine Art,
When I arriv'd, and heard thee, that made gape
The Pyne, and let thee out.

Ar. I thanke thee Master.

Pro. If thou more murmur'st, I will rend an Oake
And peg thee in his knotty entrails, till
Thou hast howl'd away twelue winters.

Ar. Pardon, Master,

I will be correspondent to command
And doe my spryting, gently.

Pro. Doe so, and after two daies
I will discharge thee

Ar. That's my noble Master:

What shall I doe? say what? what shall I doe?

Pro. Goe make thy selfe like a Nymph o'th' Sea,
Be subject to no sight but thine, and mine: inuisible
To euerie eye-ball else: goe take this shape
And hither come in't: goe: hence
With diligence. Exit.

Pro. Awake, deere hart awake, thou hast slept well, Awake.

Ar. The strangenes of your story, put Heauens effem me

Pro. Shake it off: Come on,
Wee'll visit Caliban, my slaue, who neuer
Yeeld's vs I inde answere.

Ar. 'Tis a villaine Sir, I doe not loue to looke on.

Pro. But as 't is

We cannot misse him: he do's make our fire,
Fetch in our wood, and seruice in Offices
That profit vs. What hea slaue Caliban:
Thou Ea'st, thou, speake.

Cal. With. There's wood enough within.

Pro. Come forth I say, there's other businesse for thee:
Come thou Tortoise, when? Enter Arul like a waterfine apparition: my quiant Arul, Nymph.
Hearke in thine eare.

Ar. My Lord, it shall be done. Exit.

Pro. Thou poisonous slaue, got by y<sup>e</sup> diuell himselfe Vpon thy wicked Dam, come forth. Enter Caliban.

Cal. As wicked dewe, as ere my mother brust'd
With Rauens feather from vnwholesome Fen
Drop on you both: A Southwest blow on yee,
And blister you all ore.

Pro. For this be sure, to night thou shalt haue cramps,
Side-stitches, that shall pen thy breain vp, Vrchins
Shall for that vast of night, that they may worke
All exercise on thee: thou shalt be pinch'd
As thicke as hony-combe, each pinch more stinging
Then Bees that made 'em.

Cal. I must eat my dinner:

This Island's mine by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou tak'st from me: when thou cam'st first
Thou stroak'st me, & made much of me: wouldst giue me
Water with berries in't: and teach me how
To name the bigger Light, and how the lesse
That burne by day, and night: and then I lou'd thee
And shew'd thee all the qualities o'th' Isle,
The fresh Springs, Brine-pits; barren place and fertill,
Curs'd be I that did so. All the Charms
Of Sycorax: Toades, Beetles, Batts light on you:
For I am all the Subjects that you haue,
Which first was mine owne King: and here you sty-me
In this hard Rocke, whiles you doe keepe from me
The rest o'th' Island.

Pro. Thou

Pro. Thou most lying slaue,
Whom stripes may moue, not kindnes. I haue vs'd thee
(Filt as thou art) with humane care, and lodg'd thee
In mine owne Cell, till thou didst seeke to violate
The honor of my childe.

Cal. Oh ho, oh ho, would't had bene done:
Thou didst preuent me, I had peopel'd else
This Ile with Calibans.

Mra. Abhorred Slaue,
Which any print of goodnesse wilt not take,
Being capable of all ill: I pittied thee,
Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each houre
One thing or other: when thou didst not (Savage)
Know thine owne meaning; but wouldst gabble, like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them knowne. But thy vild race
(Thou thou didst learn) had that in't, which good natures
Could not abide to be with; therefore wast thou Deseruedly confin'd into this Rocke, who hadst
Deser'd more then a prison.

Cal. You taught me Language, and my profit on't
Is, I know how to curse: the red-plague rid you
For learning me y<sup>r</sup> our language.

Prof. Hag-seed, hence:
Fetch vs in Fewell, and be quicke thou'rt best
To answer other businesse shrug'st thou (Malice)
If thou neglect'st, or dost vnwillingly
What I command, Ile racke thee with old Crampes,
Fill all thy bones with Aches, make thee rore,
That beasts shall tremble at thy dyn.

Cal. No, pray thee.
I must obey, his Art is of such pow'r,
It would controull my Dams god Setses,
And make a vassalle of him.

Pro. So slaue, hence Exit Cal
Enter Ferdinand & Ariel, vnvisibly playing & singing
Ariel Song Come vnto these yellow sands, and then take hands.
Cint'sied wher you haue, and kist
the wilde wanes whist

Foote it fealty here, and there, and sweete Sprights beare the burthen.
Harke, harke, bough wagh the watch-Dogges barke,
bough-wagh

Ar. Hark, hark, I heare, the straines of strutting Chanticleere cry cockadiddle-dowe.

Fer Where shold this Musick be? I'th aire, or th'earth?
It sounds no more: and sure it waytes vpon
Some God'oth' Island, sitting on a banke,
Weeping againe the King my Fathers wracke.
This Musicke crept by me vpon the waters,
Allaying both their fury, and my passion
With it's sweet ayre: thence I haue follow'd it (Or it hath drawne me rather) but 'tis gone.
No, it begins againe

Ariel Song. Full fadome fiew thy Father lies,
Of his bones are Corall made:
Those are pearles that were his eyes,
Noshing of him that doth fade,
But doth suffer a Sea-change
Into something rich, & strange
Sea Nymphs hourly ring his knell.
Burthen. ding dong.

Hark'e now I heare them, ding-dong bell!
Fer. The Ditty do's remember my drown'd father,
Thus is no mortall busshes, nor no found

That the earth owes: I heare it now about me.

Pro. The fringed Curtaines of thine eye aduance,
And say what thou see'st yond.

Mra. What is't a Spirit?
Lord, how it lookes about: Beleeue me sir,
It carries a braue forme. But 'tis a spirit

Pro. No wench, it eats, and sleeps, & hath such senses
As we haue: such. This Gallant which thou see'st
Was in the wracke: and but hee's something stain'd
With greese (that's beauties canker) y<sup>e</sup> might'st call him
A goodly person: he hath lost his fellowes,
And strays about to finde 'em.

Mir. I might call him
A thing diuine, for nothing naturall
I euer law so Noble

Pro. It goes on I see
As my soule prompts it: Spirit, fine spirit, Ile free thee
Within two dayes for this.

Fer. Most sure the Goddesse
On whom these ayres attend: Vouchsafe my pray'r
May know if you remaine vpon this Island,
And that you will some good instruction giue
How I may beare me heere my prime request
(Which I do last renounce) in (O you wonder)
If you be Mayd, or no?

Mir. No wonder Sir,
But certainly a Mayd.

Fer. My Language? Heauens -
I am the best of them that speake this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken.

Pro How? the best?
What w'er't thou if the King of Naples heard thee?

Fer. A single thing, as I am now, that wonders
To heare thee speake of Naples he do's heare me,
And that he do's, I weepe: my selfe am Naples,
Who, with mine eyes (newer since at ebbe) beheld
The King my Father wrack't.

Mir Alacke, for mercy.

Fer. Yes faith, & all his Lords, the Duke of Milaine
And his braue sonne, being twaine.

Pro The Duke of Milaine
And his more brauer daughter, could controull thee
If now 'twere fit to do't: At the first sight
They haue chang'd eyes: Delicate Ariel,
Ile set thee free for this. A word good Sir,
I feare you haue done your selfe some wrong: A word:

Mir. Why speakes my father so vngently? This Is the third man that ere I saw. the first
That ere I sight'd for: pittie moue my father
To be inclin'd my way.

Fer. O, if a Virgin,
And your affection not gone forth, Ile make you
The Queene of Naples.

Pro Soft sir, one word more.
They are both in cythers pow'r: But this swift busines
I must vncase make, least too light winning
Make the prize light. One word more. I charge thee
That thou attend me. Thou do'st heere vsurpe
The name thou ow'st not, and hast put thy selfe
Vpon this Island, as a spy, to win it
From me, the Lord on't.

Fer. No, as I am a man.

Mir. Ther's nothing ill, can dwell in such a Temple,
If the ill-spirit haue so fayre a house,
Good things will strue to dwell with't.

Pro. Follow me.

Prof. Speake not you for him · hee's a Traitor. come,
Ile manacle thy necke and feete together:
Sea water shalt thou drinke: thy food shall be
The fresh-brooke Mussels, wither'd roots, and huskes
Wherein the Acorne cradled. Follow,

Fer. No,
I will resist such entertainment, till
Mine enemy ha's more pow'r.

He draws, and is charmed from moving

Mira O deere Father,
Make not too rash a triall of him, for Hee's gentle, and not fearfull.

Prof. What I say,
My foote my Tutor? Put thy sword vp Traitor,
Who mak'st a shew, but dar'st not strike. thy conscience
Is so posselt with guilt Come, from thy ward,
For I can heere disarm thee with this sticke,
And make thy weapon drop.

Mira. Beseech you Father.

Prof. Hence · hang not on my garments,

Mira. Sir haue pity,
Ile be his surety.

Prof. Silence One word more
Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee What,
An aduocate for an Impostor? Hush ·
Thou think'st there is no more such shapes as he,
(Hauing seene but him and Caliban) Foolish wench,
To th'most of men, this is a Caliban,
And they to him are Angels.

Mira. My affections
Are then most humble I haue no ambition
To see a goodlier man

Prof. Come on, obey
Thy Nerues are in their infancy againe.
And haue no vigour in them.

Fer. So they are:
My spirits, as in a dreame, are all bound vp:
My Fathers losse, the weaknesse which I feele,
The wracke of all my friends, nor this mans threats,
To whom I am subdude, are but light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day
Behold this Mayd · all corners else o'th' Earth
Let liberty make vse of space enough
Haue I in such a prison.

Prof. It workes: Come on.
Thou hast done well, fine Arrell follow me,
Harke what thou else shalt do mee.

Mira. Be of comfort,
My Fathers of a better nature (Sir)
Then he appeares by speech. this is vnwonted
Which now came from him.

Prof. Thou shalt be as free
As mountaine windes, but then exactly do
All points of my command.

Arrell. To th'syllable.

Prof. Come follow · speake not for him. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and others:

Gonz. Beseech you Sir, be merry, you haue cause,
(So haue we all) of ioy; for our escape

Is much beyond our losse; our hint of woe
Is common, every day, some Saylor's wife,
The Masters of some Merchant, and the Merchant
Haue iust our Theame of woe: But for the miracle,
(I meane our preferuation) few in millions
Can speake like vs. then wisely (good Sir) weigh
Our sorrow, with our comfort.

Alon. Prethee peace.

Seb. He receiues comfort like cold porredge.

Ant. The Visitor will not giue him ore so.

Seb. Looke, hee's winding vp the watch of his wit,
By and by it will strike.

Gon. Sir.

Seb. One: Tell.

Gon. When euery greefe is entertaind,
That's offer'd comes to th'entertainer.

Seb. A dollor.

Gon. Dolour comes to him indeed, you haue spoken truer then you purpos'd.

Seb. You haue taken it wiselier then I meant you should.

Gon. Therefore my Lord.

Ant. Fie, what a spend-thrift is he of his tongue.

Alon. I pre-thee spare.

Gon. Well, I haue done: But yet

Seb. He will be talking.

Ant. Which, of he, or Adrian, for a good wager, first begins to crow?

Seb. The old Cocke.

Ant. The Cockrell.

Seb. Done: The wager?

Ant. A Laughter.

Seb. A match.

Adr. Though this Island seeme to be desert.

Seb. Ha, ha, ha.

Ant. So. you'r paid.

Adr. Vnhabitable, and almost inaccessible.

Seb. Yet

Adr. Yet

Ant. He could not misse't.

Adr. It must needs be of subtile, tender, and delicate temperance.

Ant. Temperance was a delicate wench.

Seb. I, and a subtile, as he most learnedly deliuer'd.

Adr. The ayre breathes vpon vs here most sweetly.

Seb. As if it had Lungs, and rotten ones.

Ant. Or, as 'twere perfum'd by a Fen.

Gon. Heere is euery thing aduantageous to life.

Ant. True, saue meanes to liue.

Seb. Of that there's none, or little.

Gon. How lush and lusty the grass looks?

How greene?

Ant. The ground indeed is tawny.

Seb. With an eye of greene in't.

Ant. He misles not much.

Seb. No. he doth but mistake the truth totally.

Gon. But the rarity of it is, which is indeed almost beyond credit.

Seb. As many voucht rarities are.

Gon. That our Garments being (as they were) drencht in the Sea, hold notwithstanding their freshnesse and glosses, being rather new dy'de then stain'd with salte water.

Ant. If but one of his pockets could speake, would it not say helyes?

Seb. Loe very falsly pocket vp his report.

Gon.

Ant. We two my Lord, will guard your person,
While you take your rest, and watch your safety.

Alon Thank you Wondrous heavy

Seb What a strange drowlines possesseth them?

Ant. It is the quality o'th' Clymate.

Seb. Why

Doth it not then our eye-lids sinke? I finde
Not my selfe dispos'd to sleep

Ant. Nor I, my spirits are nimble.

They fell together all, as by consent
They dropt, is by a Thunder-stroke: what might Worthy Sebastian? O, what might? no more.

And yet, me thinkes I see it in thy face,
What thou should'st be th' occasion speaks thee, and
My strong imagination see's a Crowne
Dropping vpon thy head.

Seb. What art thou waking?

Ant. Do you not heare me speake?

Seb I do, and surely

It is a sleepey Language, and thou speak'st
Out of thy sleepe: What is it thou didst say?
This is a strange repose, to be asleepe
With eyes wide open. Standing, speaking, mouing
And yet so fast asleepe.

Ant. Noble Sebastian,

Thou let'st thy fortune sleepe die rather. wink'st
Whiles thou art waking.

Seb Thou do'st snore distinctly,
There's meaning in thy snores.

Ant. I am more serious then my custome: you Must be so too, if heed me. which to do,
Trebbles thee o're.

Seb. Well. I am standing water.

Ant. Ile teach you how to flow.

Seb. Do so. to ebbe
Hereditary Sloth instructs me.

Ant. O!

If you but knew how you the purpose cherish
Whiles thus you mocke it. how in stripping it
You more inuest it. ebbing men, indeed
(Most often) do so neere the bottome run
By their owne feare, or sloth.

Seb. Pre-thee say on,
The setting of thine eye, and cheek proclaime
A matter from thee, and a birth, indeed,
Which throwes thee much to yeeld.

Ant. Thus Sir.

Although this Lord of weake remembrance, this
Who shall be of as little memory
When he is earth'd, hath here almost perswaded
(For hee's a Spirit of perswasion, onely Professes to perswade) the King his sonne's aloue,
'Tis as impossible that hee's vndrown'd,
As he that sleepes heere, swims.

Seb. I have no hope
That hee's vndrown'd.

Ant. O, out of that no hope,
What great hope haue you? No hope that way, Is Another way so high a hope, that euen
Ambition cannot pierce a winke beyond
But doubt discouery there. Will you grant with me
That Ferdinand is drown'd.

Seb. He's gone.

Ant. Then tell me, who's the next heire of Naples?

Seb Claribel.

Ant. She that is Queene of Tunis she that dwells

Ten leagues beyond mans life: she that from Naples
Can haue no note, vnlesse the Sun were post: I
The Man i'th Moone's too slow, till new-borne chinnes
Be rough, and Razor-able: She that from whom
We all were sea-swallow'd, though some cast againe,
(And by that destiny) to performe an act
Whereof, what's past is Prologue; what to come
In yours, and my discharge.

Seb. What stuffe is this? How say you?
'Tis true my brothers daughter's Queene of Tunis,
So is she heire of Naples, twixt which Regions
There is some space.

Ant. A space, whose eu'ry cubit
Seemes to cry out, how shall that Claribel
Measure vs backe to Naples? keepe in Tunis,
And let Sebastian wake. Say, this were death
That now hath seiz'd them, why they were no worse
Then now they are. There be that can rule Naples
As well as he that sleepes. Lords, that can prate
As amply, and vnneccessarily
As this Gonzallo: I my selfe could make
A Chough of as deepe chat O, that you bore
The minde that I do, what a sleepe were this
For your aduancement? Do you vnderstand me?

Seb. Me thinkes I do

Ant. And how do's your content
Tender your owne good fortune?

Seb. I remember

You did supplant your Brother Prospero.

Ant. True.

And looke how well my Garments sit vpon me,
Much feater then before My Brothers seruants
Were then my fellowes, now they are my men.

Seb. But for your conscience

Ant. I Sir where lies that? If 'twere a kybe
'Twould put me to my slipper But I feele not
This Deity in my bosome. Twentie consciences
That stand 'twixt me, and Stillus, candied be they,
And melt ere they mollest. Heere lies your Brother,
No better then the earth he lies vpon,
If he were that which now hee's like (that's dead)
Whom I with this obedient Steele (three inches of it)
Can lay to bed for euer whiles you doing thus,
To the perpetuall winke for aye might put
This ancient morsell: this Sir Prudence, who Should not vpbraide our course for all the rest
They'l take suggestion, as a Cat laps milke, They'l tell the clocke, to any businesse that
We say besits the houre.

Seb. Thy case, deere Friend
Shall be my president. As thou got'st Millaine,
I'll come by Naples Draw thy sword, one stroke
Shall free thee from the tribute which thou payest,
And I the King shall loue thee.

Ant. Draw together.

And when I reare my hand, do you the like
To fall it on Gonzallo.

Seb. O, but one word.

Enter Ariel with Musicke and Song.

Ariel. My Master through his Art foresees the danger
That you (his friend) are in, and sends me forth
(For else his proiect dies) to keepe them liuing.

Sings in Gonzaloes eare.

While you here do snoring lie,
Open-eyed Conspiracie
His time doth take:

*If of Life you keepe a care,
Shake off slumber and beware.
Awake, awake.*

Ant. Then let vs both be sodaine.

Gen. Now, good Angels preferue the King.

Alc. Why how now ho; awake? why are you drawn?
Wherefore this ghastly looking?

Gen. What's the matter?

Seb. Whiles we stood here securing your repose,
(Euen now) we heard a hollow burst of bellowing
Like Bulls, or rather Lyons, did't not wake you?
It strooke mine eare most terribly.

Alc. I heard nothing

Ant. O, 'twas a din to fright a Monsters eare;
To make an earthquake: sure it was the roare
Of a whole heard of Lyons.

Alc. Heard you this Gonzalo?

Gen. Vpon mine honour, Sir, I heard a humming,
(And that a strange one too) which did awake me.
I shak'd you Sir, and cride: as mine eyes opened,
I saw their weapons drawne. there was a noyse,
That's verily: 'us best we stand vpon our guard;
Or that we quit this place: let's draw our weapons.

Alc. Lead off this ground & let's make further search
For my poore sonne.

Gen. Heavens keepe him from these Beasts:
For he is sure i'th Island.

Alc. Lead away. (done.)

Ariell. Prospero my Lord, shall know what I haue
So (King) goe safely on to seeke thy Son. Exeunt.

Scœna Secunda.

Enter Caliban, with a burthen of Wood (a noyse of Thunder heard)

Cal. All the infections that the Sunne suckes vp
From Bogs, Fens, Flats, on Prosper fall, and make him
By yench-meale a disease his Spirits heare me,
And yet I needes must curse, But they'll nor pinch,
Fright me with Vrchyn-shewes, pitch me i'th mire,
Nor lead me like a fire-brand, in the darke
Out of my way, vlesse he bid'em; but
For euery trifle, are they set vpon me,
Sometime like Apes, that moe and chatter at me,
And after bite me: then like Hedg-hogs, which Lye tumbling in my bare-foote way, and mount
Their pricks at my foot-fall: sometime am I
All wound with Adders, who with clouen tongues
Doe hisse me into madnesse: Lo, now Lo, Enter
Here comes a Spirit of his, and to torment me Tremulo
For bringing wood in slowly. I'll fall flat,
Perchance he will not minde me

Tri. Here's neither bush, nor shrub to beare off any weather at all: and another Storme brewing, I heare it sing i'th' winde. yond same blacke cloud, yond huge one, looks like a foule bombard that would shed his licquor: if it should thunder, as it did before, I know not where to hide my head: yond same cloud cannot choose but fall by paile-fuls What haue we here, a man, or a fish? dead or alue? a fish, hee smells like a fish: a very ancient and fish-like smell: a kinde of, not of the newest poore John: a strange fish: were I in England now (as once I was) and had but this fish painted; not a holiday-foole there but would giue a peece of siluer

there, would this Mc Ister, make a man: any strange beast there, makes a man: when they will not giue a doit to relieue a lame Begger, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian: Leg'd like a man; and his Finnes like Armes: warme o' my troth: I doe now let loose my opinion; hold it no longer; this is no fish, but an Islander, that hath lately suffered by a Thunderbolt: Alas, the storme is come againe: my best way is to creepe vnder his Gaberdine: there is no other shelter hereabout. Misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows: I will here throw dill the dregges of the storme be past.

Enter Stephano singing.

Ste. I shall no more to sea, to sea, here shall I dye ashore.
This is a very scurvy tune to sing at a mans
Funerall: well, here's my comfort. Drunkes.

Sings. The Master, the Swabber, the Boate-swaine & I;
The Gunner, and his Mate

Low'd Mall, Meg, and Marrion, and Margaret,
But none of vs car'd for Kate.

For she had a tongue with a tang,

Would cry to a Sailor goe hang.

She lov'd not the fauour of Tar nor of Pitch,

Tet a Taulor might scratch her where ere she did itch.

Then to Sea Boyes, and let her goe hang.

This is a scurvy tune too:

But here's my comfort. drunkes.

Cal. Doe not torment me: oh.

Ste. What's the matter?

Haue we duels here?

Doe you put trickes vpon's with Saluages, and Men of Inde? ha? I haue not scap'd drowning, to be asfeard now of your foure legges: for it hath bin said; as proper a man as euer went on foure legs, cannot make him
gue ground: and it shall be said so againe, while Stephano breathes at' nostrils.

Cal. The Spirit torments me. oh.

Ste. This is some Monster of the Isle, with foure legs;
v ho hath got (as ' take it) an Ague: where the diuell should he 'earne ou' language? I will giue him some re-liefe if it be but for that: if I can recouer him, and keepe him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a Present for any Emperour that euer trod on Neates-leather.

Cal. Doe not torment me 'prethee: I'll bring my wood home faster.

Ste. He's in his fit now; and doe's not talke after the wisest; hee shall taste of my Bottle: if hee haue neuer drunke wine afore, it will goe neere to remoue his Fit:
if I can recouer him, and keepe him tame, I can tell you,
and that soundly.

Cal. Thou do'st me yet but little hurt; thou wilt anon, I know it by thy trembling: Now Prosper workes vpon thee.

Ste. Come on your wayes: open your mouth: here is that which will giue language to you Cat; open your mouth; this will shake your shaking, I can tell you, and that soundly: you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps againe.

Tri. I should know that voyce:

It should be,

But

But hee is drown'd; and these are diuels; O defend me.

Ste. Foure legges and two voyces; a most delicate Monster. his forward voyce now is to speake well of his friend; his backward voyce, is to utter foule speeches, and to detract. if all the wine in my bottle will recouer him, I will helpe his Ague. Come: Amen, I will poure some in thy other mouth.

Tri. Stephano.

Ste. Doth thy other mouth call me? Mercy, mercy. This is a duell, and no Monster. I will leaue him, I haue no long Spoon.

Tri. Stephano. if thou bee'st Stephano, touch me, and speake to me. for I am Trinculo, be not afraid, thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou bee'st Trinculo come forth. I'll pull thee by the lesser legges. if any be Trinculo's legges, these are they: Thou art very Trinculo indeede. how cam'st thou to be the sieg of this Moone-calf? Can he vent Trinculo's?

Tri. I tooke him to be kil'd with a thunder-strook; but art thou not drown'd Stephano. I hope now thou art not drown'd: Is the Storme ouer-blowne? I hid mee vnder the dead Moone-Calfes Gaberdine, for feare of the Storme: And art thou liuing Stephano? O Stephano, two Neapolitanes scap'd?

Ste. Prethee doe not turne me about, my stomacke is not constant.

Cal. These be fine things, and if they be not sprights that's a braue God, and beares Celestiall liquor: I will kneele to him.

Ste. How did'st thou scape?
How cam'st thou hither?

Sweare by this Bottle how thou cam'st hither. I escap'd vpon a But of Sacke, which the Saylor heaued o're-board, by this Bottle which I made of the barke of a Tree, with mine owne hands, since I was cast a-shore.

Cal. I'll sweare vpon that Bottle, to be thy true subiect, for the liquor is not earthly.

St. Heere: sweare then how thou escap'd'st.

Tri. Swom ashore (man) like a Ducke. I can swim like a Ducke: I'll be sworne.

Ste. Here, kisse the Booke.

Though thou canst swim like a Ducke, thou art made like a Goose.

Tri. O Stephano, ha'st any more of this?

Ste. The whole But (man) my Cellar is in a rocke by th'sea-side, where my Wine is hid:

How now Moone-Calf, how do's thine Ague?

Cal. Ha'st thou not dropt from heauen?

Ste. Out o'th Moone I doe assure thee. I was the Man ith' Moone, when time was.

Cal. I haue seene thee in her. and I doe adore thee: My Mistris shew'd me thee, and thy Dog, and thy Bush.

Ste. Come, sweare to that. kisse the Booke: I will furnish it anon with new Contents. Sweare.

Tri. By this good light, this is a very shallow Monster: I afraid of him? a very weake Monster:

The Man ith' Moone?

A most poore credulous Monster:

Well drawne Monster, in good sooth

Cal. Ile shew thee euery fertill yench' oth Island: and I will kisse thy foote. I prethee be my god

Tri. By this light, a most perfidious, and drunken Monster, when's god's a sleepe he'll rob his Bottle.

Cal. Ile kisse thy foot. Ile sweare my selfe thy Subiect.

Ste. Come on then: downe and sweare.

Tri. I shall laugh my selfe to death at this puppi-headed Monster: a most scurue Monster: I could finde in my heart to beate him.

Ste. Come, kisse.

Tri. But that the poore Monster's in drinke: An abhominable Monster.

Cal. Ile shew thee the best Springs. Ile plucke thee Berries: Ile fish for thee; and get thee wood enough. A plague vpon the Tyrant that I serue; Ile beate him no more Stuckes, but follow thee, thou wondrous man.

Tri. A most ridiculous Monster, to make a wonder of a poore drunkard.

Cal. I prethee let me bring thee where Crabs grow; and I with my long nayles will digge thee pig-nuts; shew thee a Iayes nest, and instruct thee how to snare the nimble Marmazet: Ile bring thee to clustring Philbirts, and sometimes Ile get thee young Scamels from the Rocke: Wilt thou goe with me?

Ste. I prethee now lead the way without any more talking. Trinculo, the King, and all our company else being drown'd, wee will inherit here. Here; beare my Bottle: Feilow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by againe.

Cal. in Sings drunkenly?

Farewell Master; farewell, farewell.

Tri. A howling Monster a drunken Monster.

Cal. No more dams I'll make for fish,

Nor fetch in firing, at requesting,

Nor set the treacherer, nor wash dish,

Ian't bin' Cacal, ban

Has'trew Master, get a new Man.

Freedome, high-day, high-day freedome, freedome high-day, freedome.

Ste. O braue Monster; lead the way. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Enter Ferdinand (bearing a Log)

Fer. There be some Sports are painfull, & their labor Delight in them set off: Some kindes of basenesse Are nobly vndergon; and most poore matters Point to rich ends. this my meane Taske Would be as heauy to me, as odious, but The Mistris which I serue, quickens what's dead, And makes my labours, pleasures. O She is Ten times more gentle, then her Father's crabbed; And he's compos'd of harshnesse. I must remoue Some thousands of these Logs, and pile them vp, Vpon a fore inunction; my sweet Mistris Weepes when she sees me worke, & saies, such basenes Had neuer like Executor. I forget:

But these sweet thoughts, doe euen refresh my labours, Most busie left, when I doe it.

Enter Miranda

Mir. Alas, now pray you and Prospero.

Worke not so hard: I would the lightning had Burnt vp those Logs that you are enioynd to pile: Pray set it downe, and rest you: when this burnes I will weepe for hauing wearied you: my Father Is hard at study; pray now rest your selfe,

He's

Hee's safe for these three houres

Fer. O most deere Mistris,
The Sun will set before I shall discharge
What I must striue to do.

Mir. If you'll sit downe
Ile beare your Logges the while: pray giue me that,
Ile carry it to the pile.

Fer. No precious Creaturt,
I had rather cracke my sinewes, breake my backe,
Then you should such dishonor vndergoe,
While I sit lazy by.

Mir. It would become me
As well as it do's you; and I should do it
With much more ease: for my good will is to it,
And yours it is against.

Pro. Poore worme thou art infected,
This visitation shewes it.

Mr. You looke wearily.

Fer. No, noble Mistris, 'tis fresh morning with me
When you are by at night: I do beseech you
Chiefely, that I might let it in my prayers,
What is your name?

Mir. Miranda, O my Father,
I haue broke your heft to say so.

Fer. Admir'd Miranda,
Indeede the top of Admiration, worth
What's deereft to the world: full many a Lady
I haue ey'd with best regard, and many a time
Th'harmony of their tongues, hath into bondage
Brought my too diligent care: for seuerall vertues
Haue I lik'd seuerall women, neuer any VVith so full soule, but some defect in her
Did quarrell with the noblest grace she ow'd,
And put it to the foile. But you, O you,
So perfect, and so peetelesse, are created
Of euerie Creatures best.

Mir. I do not know
One of my sexe, no womans face remember,
Saue from my glasse, mine owne. Nor haue I seene
More that I may call men, then you good friend,
And my deere Father: how features are abroad
I am skillesse of, but by my modestie
(The ieuell in my dower) I would not wish
Any Companion in the world but you
Nor can imagination forme a shape
Besides your selfe, to like of: but I prattle
Something too wildly, and my Fathers precepts
I therein do forget.

Fer. I am, in my condition
A Prince (Miranda) I do thinke a King
(I would not so) and would no more endure
This wodden slauerie, then to suffer
The flesh-sie blow my mouth: heare my soule speak.
The verie instant that I saw you, did
My heart flie to your seruice, there resides
To make me slave to it, and for your sake
Am I this patient Logge-man.

Mr. Do you loue me?

Fer. O heauen; O earth, beare witnes to this sound,
And crowne what I profess with kinde euent
If I speake true: is hollowly, inuert
VVhat best is boaded me, to mischance: I,
Beyond all limit of what eise the world
Do loue, prize, honor you.

Mr. I am a foole
To weepe at what I am glad of.

Pro. Faire encounter

Of two most rare affections: heauens raine grace
On that which breeds betwene 'em.

Fer. VVherefore weepe you?

Mr. At mine vnworthinesse, that dare not offer
VVhat I desire to giue; and much lesse take VVhat I shall die to want: But this is trifling,
And all the more it seekes to hide it selfe,
The bigger bulke it shewes. Hence bashfull cunning,
And prompt me plaine and holy innocence.
I am your wife, if you will marrie me;
If not, Ile die your maid: to be your fellow
You may denie me, but Ile be your seruant
VVhether you will or no.

Fer. My Mistris (decreft)

And I thus humble euer

Mr. My husband then?

Fer. I, with a heart as willing
As bondage ere of freedome: heere's my hand.

Mr. And mine, with my heart in't, and now farewell
Till halfe an houre hence.

Fer. A thousand, thousand.

Exeunt.

Pro. So glad of this as they I cannot be,
VVho are surpriz'd with all; but my reioyning
At nothing can be more. Ile to my booke,
For yet ere supper time, must I performe
Much businesse appertaining.

Ea:

Scœna Secunda.

Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo.

Ste. Tell not me, when the But is out we will drinke water, not a drop before, therefore beare vp, & boord em' Seruant Monster, drinke to me.

Trin. Seruant Monster? the folly of this Iland, they say there's but siue vpon this Isle, we are three of them,
if th'other two be brain'd like vs, the State totters.

Ste. Drinke Seruant Monster when I bid thee, thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

Trin. VVhere should they bee set else? hee were a braue Monster indeede if they were set in his taile.

Ste. My man-Monster hath drown'd his tongue in sacke: for my part the Sea cannot drowne mee, I swam ere I could recover the shore, siue and thirtie Leagues off and on, by this light thou shalt bee my Lieutenant Monster, or my Standard.

Trin. Your Lieutenant if you list, hee's no standard.

Ste. VVee'l not run Monsieur Monster.

Trin. Nor go neither: but you lie like dogs, and yet say nothing neither

Ste. Moone-calfs, speak once in thy life, if thou bee't a good Moone-calfs.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me lick thy shooe:
Ile not serue him, he is not valiant.

Trin. Thou liest most ignorant Monster, I am in case to iustle a Constable. why, thou debosh'd Fish thou, was there euer man a Coward, that hath drunk so much Sacke as I to day? wilt thou tell a monstrous lie, being but halfe a Fish, and halfe a Monster?

Cal. Lge, how he mockes me, wilt thou let him my Lord?

Cal.

Trin Lord, quoth he? that a Monster should be such a Naturall?

Cal. Loe, loe againe - bite him to death I prethee.

Ste. Trinculo, keepe a good tongue in your head. If you proue a mutineere, the next Tree the poore Monster's my subiect, and he shal not suffer indignity.

Cal. I thanke my noble Lord. Wilt thou be pleas'd to hearken once againe to the suite I made to thee?

Ste. Marry will I kneele, and repeate it, I will stand, and so shall Trinculo.

Enter Ariell musically.

Cal. As I told thee before, I am subiect to a Tyrant, A Sorcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated me Of the Island.

Ariell. Thou lyest.

Cal. Thou lyest, thou testing Monkey thou: I would my valiant Master would destroy thee. I do not lye.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in's tale, By this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.

Trin. Why, I said nothing

Ste. Mum then, and no more proceed.

Cal. I say by Sorcery he got this Isle From me, he got it. If thy Greatnesse will Reuenge it on him, (for I know thou dar'st) But this Thing dare not.

Ste. That's most certaine,

Cal. Thou shalt be Lord of it, and Ile serue thee.

Ste. How now shall this be compass'd?

Canst thou bring me to the party?

Cal. Yea, yea my Lord, Ile yeeld him thee asleepe, Where thou maist knocke a nail into his head.

Ariell. Thou liest, thou canst not.

Cal. What a py'de Ninnie's this? Thou scurvy patch: I do beseech thy Greatnesse giue him blowes, And take his bottle from him. When that's gone, He shall drinke nought but brine, for Ile not shew him Where the quicke Prestikes are.

Ste. Trinculo, run into no further danger Interrupt the Monster one word further, and by this hand, Ile turre my metcle out o' doories, and make a Stockfish of thee.

Trin. Why, what did I? I did nothing Ile go farther off.

Ste. Didst thou not say he lyed?

Ariell. Thou liest.

Ste. Do I so? Fake thou that,

As you like this, giue me the lye another time

Trin. I did not giue the lye Out o' your wittes, and hearing too?

A pox o' your bottle, this can Sacke and drinking doo. A murther on your Monster, and the diuell take your fingers.

Cal. Ha, ha, ha.

Ste. Now forward with your Tale: prethee stand further off.

Cal. Beat him enough - alter a litle time Ile beate him too.

Ste. Stand farther Come proccede.

Cal. Why, As I told thee, 'tis a custome with him I'll afternoone to sleepe there thou maist braine him, Hauing first seiz'd his bookes Or with a logge Batter his skull, or paunch him with a stake, Or cut his wezard with thy knife. Remember first to possesse his Bookes; for without them

Hee's but a Sot, as I am; nor hath not One Spirit to command: they all do hate him As rootedly as I. Burne but his Bookes, He ha's braue Vtenils (for so he calles them) Which when he ha's a house, hee'l decke withall. And that most deeply to consider, is The beautie of his daughter. he himselfe Cals her a non-pareil: I neuer saw a woman But onely Sycorax my Dam, and she; But she as farre surpasseth Sycorax, As great'st do's least.

Ste. Is it so braue a Lasse?

Cal. I Lord, she will become thy bed, I warrant, And bring thee forth braue brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter and I will be King and Queene, saue our Graces: and Trinculo and thy selfe shall be Vice-royes: Dost thou like the plot Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Giue me thy hand, I am sorry I beate thee: But while thou liu'st keepe a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this halfe houre will he be asleepe, Wilt thou destroy him then?

Ste. I on mine honour.

Ariell. This will I tell my Master.

Cal. Thou mak'st me merry I am full of pleasure, Let vs beiocond Will you trouble the Catch You taught me but whileare?

Ste. At thy request Monster, I will do reason, Any reason Come on Trinculo, let vs sing.

Sings.

Flout 'em, and cont 'em, and skew 'em, and flout 'em, Thought is free.

Cal. That's not the tune.

Ariell plays the tune on a Tabor and Pipe.

Ste. What is this fame?

Trin. This is the tune of our Catch, plaid by the picture of No-body.

Ste. If thou beest a man, shew thy selfe in thy likeness. If thou beest a diuell, take't as thou list.

Trin. O forgiue me my finnes.

Ste. He that dies payes all debts. I defie thee, Mercy vpon vs

Cal. Art thou affear'd?

Ste. No Monster, nor I.

Cal. Be not affear'd, the Isle is full of noyses, Sounds, and sweet aires, that giue delight and hurt not Sometimes a thousand twangling Instruments Will hum about mine eares, and sometime voices, That if I then had wak'd after long sleepe, Will make me sleepe againe, and then in dreaming, The clouds methought would open, and shew riches Ready to drop vpon me, that when I wak'd I cri'de to dreame againe.

Ste. This will proue a braue kingdome to me, Where I shall haue my Musicke for nothing.

Cal. When Prospero is destroy'd.

Ste. That shall be by and by:

I remembert the storie.

Trin. The sound is going away, Lets follow it, and after do our worke.

Ste. Leade Monster, Wee'll follow. I would I could see this Tabor, He layes it on.

Trin. Wilt come?

Ile follow Stephano.

Exeunt
Scenes

Scena Tertia.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, &c.

Gen. By't lakin, I can goe no further, Sir,
My old bones akes: there's a maze trod indeede
Through fourth rights, & Meanders: by your patience,
I needs must rest me.

Al. Old Lord, I cannot blame thee,
Who, am my selfe attach'd with v carnisse
To th'dulling of my spirits. Set downe, and rest:
Euen here I will put off my hope, and keepe it
No longer for my flatterer. I leaue drown'd
Whom thus we stray to finde, and the Sea mockes
Our frustrate search on land: well, let him goe

Ant. I am right glad, that he's so out of hope:
Doe not for one repulse forgoe the purpose
That you resolu'd effect.

Seb. The next advantage will we take throughly.

Ant. I see it be tonight,
For now they are oppress'd with traile, they
Will not, nor cannot vie such vigilance
As when they are fresh.

Solemn and strange Musicke - and Prosper on the top (musically): Enter severall strange spirits, bringing in a Banquet; and dance about it with gentle allusions of salutations, and inviting the King, &c. to eat, they depart.

Seb. I say to night no more

Al. What harmony is this? my good friends, hark

Gen. Marvellous sweet Musick

Al. Give us kind keepers, heaues: what were these?

Seb. A living Drelerie: now I will beleue

That there are Vnicornes: that in Arabia

There is one Tree, the Phoenix throne, one Phoenix
At this house reigning there.

Ant. He beleue both:

And what do's elie want credit, come to me
And he be some 'tis true: Trauellers nere did lye,
Though fooles at home condemne em

Gen. If in Naples

I should report this now, would they beleue me?

If I should say I saw such Islands;

(For certes, these are people of the Island)

Who though they are of monstrous shape, yet note

Their manners are more gentle, kinde, then of

Our humane generation you shall finde

Many, nay almost any.

Pro. Honest Lord,

Thou hast said well for some of you there present;
Are worse then diuels.

Al. I cannot too much muse

Such shapes, such gestures, and such sound expressing

(Although they want the use of tongue) a kinde

Of excellent discorde discourse.

Pro. Praise in departing,

Fr. They vanish'd strangely

Seb. No matter, since

They haue left their Vizards behinde; for wee haue sto-
Wit please your taste of what is here?

Al. Not I.

(Boyes

Gen. Faith Sir, you neede not feare: when wee were
Who would beleue it as there were Mountaynes,
Downe like Pulis, whose throats had harping in'em
Wallers of fish: for that there were such men

Whose heads stood in their breasts: which now we see
Each putter out of fire for one, will bring vs.
Good warrant of.

Al. I will stand to, and see,
Although my last, no matter, since I see
The best is past: brother: my Lord, the Duke,
Stand too, and doe as we.

*Thunder and Lightning. Enter Arr. 2 (like a Harpy) clep:
In wings upon the Table, and with a quier deuise the Banquet vanishes.*

Ar. You are three men of sinne, whom destiny
That hath to instrument this looser world,
And what is it: it a neuer surfer'd Sea,
Hath caus'd to belch vp you; and on this Island,
Where man doth not inhabit, you mongst men,
Being most vnfit to liue I haue made you maile;
And euen with such liue valour, men hang, and drowne
Their proper feluts: you fooles, I and my fellows
Are ministers of Fate, the Elements
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well Wound the loud windes, or with bemockt at. Soaks kill the still closing waters, as diminish
One doyle that's in my plume. My fellow ministers
Are liue-inuulnerable: if you could hurt,
Your swords are now too massie for your strengths,
And will not be splited. But remember
(For that's my Lufinesse to you) that you three
From Alisare did supplant good Prospero,
Expos'd vnto the Sea (which hath requit it)
Him, and his innocent child: for which foule deed,
The Powres, delaying (not forgetting) haue
Incens'd the Seas, and Shores; yea, all the Creatures Against your peace. Thee of thy Sonne, Alonso
They haue bereft; and doe pronounce by me
Ingiring perdition (worse then any death
Can be at once) shall step, by step attend
You, and your wayes, whose wraths to guard you from,
When here, in this most desolate Ile, elie fails
Vpon your heads, is nothing but heart's-sorrow,
And a cleere life ensuing

He vanishes in Thunder then (to soft Musicke) Enter the Spirits againe, and dance (with roeles and reues) and carry on the Table.

Pro. Brauely the figure of this Harpy, hast thou Perform'd (my Arr.) a grace it had deuou'd
Of my Instruction, I tell thou'st nothing bated
In what thou had'st to say. So with good life,
And obseruation strange, my meane ministers
Their severall kindes haue done: my high charmes work,
And these (mine enemies) are all knit vp
In their d'stractions: they now are in my powte,
And in these fits, I leaue them, while I visit
Yong Ferdinand (whom they suppose is drown'd)
And his, and mine lou'd darling.

Gen. I thinke of something holy, Sir, w<sup>h</sup> stand you
In this strange stare?

Al. O it is monstrous
Methought the billowes spoke, and told me of it,
The windes did sing to me: and the Thund'ring
(That deepe and dreadfull Organ-Pipe) per now told
The name of Prospero: it did bate my Tiresias, Therefore my Sonne with Ore is bodied; and
He seek'd in deeper then ere plumes sound'd,
And with him elie hee addred.

Fr.

Seb. Put one second at a time,
He'll getteth I eg. one ore.

Al.

Ant. Ile be thy Second.

Exeunt.

Gen. All three of them are desperate: their great guilt (Like payson giuen to worke a great tunc after)
Now gins to bite the spirits: I doe beseech you (That are of suppler ioynts) follow them swiftly,
And hinder them from what this extasie
May now prouoke them to.

Ad. Follow, I pray you.

Exeunt omnes.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pro. If I haue too austere punish'd you,
Your compensation makes amends, for I
Haue giuen you here, a third of mine owne life,
Or that for which I live. who, once againe
I tender to thy hand. All thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy loite, and thou
Hast strangely flood the test. here, above heauen
I ratifie this my rich guilt. O Ferdinand,
Doe not smile at me, that I boast her of,
For thou shalt finde she will out-strip all praise
And make it halt, behinde her.

Fer. I doe beleue it Against an Oracle.

Pro. Then, as my guest, and thine owne acquisition Worthily purchas'd, take my daughter. But If thou do'st breake her Virgin-knot, before
All sanctimonious ceremonies may
With full and holy right, be minilred,
No sweet aspersions shall the heauens let fall
To make this contract grow, but barraine hate,
Sower-ey'd disdaine, and discord shall bestrew
The vnion of your bed, with vnedes so loathly
That you shall hate it both: Therefore take heede,
As Hymens I amps shall light you.

Fer. As I hope
For quiet dayes, faire Issue, and long life,
With such loue, as 'tis now the murkiest den,
The most opportune place, the strongest suggestion,
Our worser Genius can, shall neuer melt
Mine honor into lust, to take away
The edge of that dayes celebration,
When I shall thinke, or Phobus Steeds are sounderd,
Or Night kept chain'd below.

Pro. Fairly spoke;
Sit then, and talke with her, she is thine owne;
What Ariell, my industrious seruāt Ariell. Enter Ariell.

Ar. What would my potent master? here I am.

Pro. Thou, and thy meauer fellowes, your last seruice
Did worthily performe and I must vse you
In such another tricke goe bring the rabble
(Ore whom I giue thee powre) here, to this place:
Incite them to quicke motion, for I must Bestow vpon the eyes of this yong couple
Some vanity of mine Art it is my promise,
And they expect it from me.

Ar. Presently?

Pro. I. with a twincke.

Ar. Before you can say come, and goe,
And breathe twice, and cry, so, so.
Each one tripping on his Toe,
Will be here with mop, and mowe.
Doe you loue me Master? no?

Pro. Dearely, my delicate Ariell: doe not approach
Till thou do'st heare me call.

Ar. Well. I conclue.

Exit.

Pro. Look thou be true. doe not giue dalliance
Too much the raigne: the strongest oathes, are straw
To th' fire th' blood: be more abstentious,
Or else good night your vow.

Fer. I warrant you, Sir,
The white cold virgin Snow, vpon my heart
Abates the ardour of my Liue.

Pro. Well.

Now come my Ariell, bring a Corolari,
Rather then want a Spirit; appear, & pently. Sist musick.
No tongue: all eyes: be silent. Enter Iris.

Ir. Ceres, most bounteous Lady, thy rich Less
Of Wheate, Rye, Barley, Fetches, Oates and Pease;
Thy Turpie-Mountaines, where liue nibbling Sheepe,
And flat Medes therchd with Stouer, el em to keepe:
Thy bankes with plowed, and tilled brims
Which sponge Ariell, at thy heft betrim;
To make cold N, mphe's chaste croones; & thy broome-
Whole shadow the dismissed Batchelor loues, (groues,
Being I ste-lorne: thy pole-clipt vineyard,
And thy Sea-marge flurrie, and rocky-hard,
Where thou thy selfe do'st ayre, the Queene o'th Skie,
Whose vart, Arch, and messenger, am I.

Bids thee leaue these, & with her loversigne grace, Intro
Here on this grasse-plot, in this very place desce-de.
To come, and sport: here Peacocks flye amaire:
Approach, rich Ceres, her to enterta ne. Enter Ceres.

Cer. Haile, many-coloured Messenger, that nere
Do'st disobey the wife of Iupiter:
Who, with thy siffion wings, vpon my flowres
Diffuselt hony drops, refreshing showres,
And vnteach end of thy blew bowe do'st crowne
My boskie acres, and my vnstrubd downe,
Rich tearph to my proud earth. why hath thy Queene
Summond me hither, to this st ore gras'd Greene?

Ir. A contract of true Loue, to celebrate,
And to ne donation freely to sitate
On the blest'd Louers

Cer. Tell me heavenly Dowe,
If Genus or her Sonne, as thou do'st know,
Doe now attend the Queene? since they did plot
The meanes, that duskie Du, my daughter got,
Her, and her blind-Boyes scandall company,
I haue forsworne.

Ir. Of her societie
Be not afraid. I met her demie
Cutting the clouds towards Paphos: and her Son
Doue-drawn with her: here thought they to haue done
Some wanton charme, vpon this Man and Maide,
Whose vowes are, that no bed-right shall be paid
Till Hymens Torch be lighted. but in vaine,
Marses hot Minion is returned againe,
Her waspish headed sonne, has broke his arrowes,
Swears he will shoote no more, but play with Sparrows,
And be a Boy right out.

Cer. Highest Queene of State,
Great Iuno comes, I know her by her gate.

Iu. How do's my bounteous sister? goe with me
To blesse this twaine, that they may prosperous be,
And honoured in their Issue. They Sing.

Iu. Honor, riches, marriage, blessing,
Long continuance, and increasing,
Hourly ioyes, be still vpon you,

Iuno

Iris says her blessings on you.
Earth increase, joy on plenty,
Barren, and Barren, never empty.
Fires, with clustering bunches growing,
Plants, with goodly burden bowing,
Spring come to you at the first best,
In the very end of Harvest.
Scarcity and want shall sting you,
Ceres blessing you on you.

For This is a most marvellous vision, and Harmonious charmingly: may I be bold
To think these spirits?

Pro Spirits, which by mine Art
I have from their confines call'd to enact
My present varities.

For Let me live here ever,
So rare a wond'ring Father, and a wife
Makes this place Paradise.

Pro Sweet row, silence:
Iris and Ceres v. hisper seriously,
There's something else to do: hush, and be mute
Or else our spell is mar'd.

Iris and Ceres v. hisper, and send his even-plains.
Iris You Nymphs call'd Naiades of winding brooks,
With your sedge'd crowns, and ever-harmelle looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green Land
Ans were your summons: Iris do's command
Come temperate Nymphs, and helpe to celebrate
A Contract of true Love: be not too late.

Enter Certain Nymphs
You Sun-bum'd Sicklemen of August weary,
Come hether from the sorrow, and be merry,
Make holly day: your Rye-straw hats, v. an,
And these fresh Nymphs encounter every one
In Country footing.

Enter certain Reapers (properly habited) they sing v. b
the Nymphs a graceful dance, towards the end whereof, Prospero starts suddenly and speaks, as if which is a strange hallo and confusion, they beautily sing.

Pro I had forgot that soile conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates
Against my life: the minure of their plot
Is almost come: Well done, and no more.

For This is strange: your fathers in some passion
That wokes him strongly.

Mr Never till this day
Saw I him touch'd with anger, so distemper'd

Pro You doe looke (my son) in a moud'torr,
As if you were dismaid: be cheerefull Sir,
Our Reuels now are ended: These our actors,
(As I foretold you) were all Spirits, and
Are melted into Ayre, into thin Ayre,
And like the baselesse fabricke of this vision
The Cloud-capt Towres, the gorgeous Pallaces,
The solemne Temples, the great Globe it selfe,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And like this insubstantiall Pageant faded
Leave not a racke behinde: we are such stuffe
As dreames are made on; and our little life
Is rounded with a sleepe: Sir, I am vex'd,
Beate with my weaknesse, my old braine is troubled:
Be not disturb'd with my infirmities,
If you be pleas'd, retire into my Cell,
And there repose, a turne or two, Ile walke
To still my beating minde.

For Mr. We wish your peace.

Exit.

Pro. Come with a thought; I thank thee Ariel: come.

Enter Ariel.

Ar. Thy thoughts I cleave to, what's thy pleasure?

Pro. Spirit: We must prepare to meet with Caliban.

Ar. I my Commander, when I presented Ceres
I thought to have told thee of it, but I fear'd
Least I might anger thee.

Pro. Say again, where didst thou leave these varlots?

Ar. I told you Sir, they were red-hot with drinking,
So full of valour, that they smote the ayre
For breathing in their faces: beate the ground
For kissing of their feet; yet alwaies bending
Towards their proiect: then I beate my Tabor,
As which like vnbuck't colts they prickt their eares,
Aduanc'd their eye-lids, lifted vp their noses
As they smelt musicke, so I charm'd their eares
That Calfe-like, they my lowing follow'd, through Tooth'd briars, sharpe firer, pricking gosse, & thorne,
Which entred their fraile shins: at last I left them
Ith' filthy mantled poole beyond your Cell,
There dancing vp to th'chins, that the fowle Lake
Ore-stunk their feet.

Pro This was well done (my bird)
Thy shape inuisible remaine thou still:
The trumphy in my house, goe bring it hither
For sale to catch these theetes. Ar. I go, I goe. Exit.

Pro. A Deuill, a borne-Deuill, on whose nature Nurture can neuer stick: on whom my paines
Humanely taken, all, all lost, quite lost,
And, as with age, his body oughier grows,
So his minde cankers: I will plague them all,
Euen to rooing: Come, hang on them this line.

Enter Ariel, leaden with glittering apparel, &c. Enter

Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo, all wet.

Cal. Pray you tread softly, that the blinde Mole may not heere a foot fall: we now are neere his Cell

St. Monster, your Fairy, & you say is a harmles Fairy,
Has done little better then paid the lacke with vs.

Trin. Monster, I do smell all horse-pisse, at which My nose is in great indignation.

St. So is mine. Do you heere Monster: If I should Take a displeasure against you: Looke you.

Trin. Thou wert but a lost Monster.

Cal. Good my Lord, giue me thy fauour still,
Be patient, for the prize Ile bring thee too
Shall hudy inke this mischance: therefore speake softly,
All's hush as midnight yet.

Trin. I, but to loose our bottles in the Poole

St. There is not onely disgrace and dishonor in that Monster, but an infinite losse.

Tr. That's more to me then my wetting:
Yet this is your harmlesse Fairy, Monster.

St. I will fetch off my bottle,

Though I be o're eares for my labour.

Cal Pre thee (my King) be quiet. Seest thou heere
This is the mouth o'th Cell. no noise, and enter:
Do that good mischeefe, which may make this Island
Thine owne for euer, and I thy Caliban
For aye thy foot-licker.

St. Giue me thy hand,
I do begin to haue bloody thoughts

Trin. O King Stephano, O Peere: O worthy Stephano, Looke what a wardrobe heere is for thee.

Cal Let it alone thou foole, it is but trash.

Trin. Oh, ho, Monster: wee know what belongs to a frippery, O King Stephano.

B 2

St. Put

Ste. Put off that gowne (Trinculo) by this hand Ile haue that gowne.

Tri. Thy grace shall haue it. (meane

Cal. The dropie drowne this foole, what doe you To doate thus on such luggage? let's alone And doethe murder first: if he awake, From toe to crowne hee'll fill our skins with pinches, Make vs strange stuffe.

Ste. Be you quiet (Monster) Mistress line, is not this my Ierkin? now is the Ierkin vnder the line: now lerkin you are like to lose your haire, & proue a bald Ierkin.

Tri. Doe, doe; we steale by lyne and leuell, and'd like your grace.

Ste. I thank thee for that iest, heer's a garment for't: Wit shall not goe vn-rewarded while I am King of this Country: Steale by line and leuell, is an excellent passe of pate: there's another garment for't.

Tri. Monster, come put some Lime vpon your fingers, and away with the rest.

Cal. I will haue none on't: we shall loose our time, And all be turn'd to Barnacles, or to Apes With foreheades villanous low.

Ste. Monster, lay to your fingers: helpe to beare this away, where my hoghead of wine is, or Ile turne you out of my kingdome: goe to, carry this

Tri. And this.

Ste. I, and this.

A noise of Hunters heard. Enter driers Spirits in shape of Dogs and Hownds, hunting them about. Prospero and Ariel sitting them on.

Pro. Hey Mountaine, hey

Ariel Siluer: there it goes, Siluer.

Pro. Fury, Fury there Tyrant, there harke, harke. Goe, charge my Goblins that they grinde their ioynts With dry Convulsions, shorten vp their sinewes With aged Cramps, & more pinch-spotted make them, Then Pard, or Cat o' Mountaine.

Ari. Harke, they rore.

Pro. Let them be hunted soundly At this houre Lies at my mercy all mine enemies: Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou Shalt haue the ayre at freedome for a little Follow, and doe me seruice. Exeunt.

Actus quintus: Scœna Prima.

Enter Prospero (in his Magicke robes) and Ariel

Pro. Now do's my Project gather to a head. My charmes cracke not my Spirits obey, and Time Goes vp right with his carriage: how's the day?

Ari. On the sixth hower, at which time, my Lord You said our worke should cease.

Pro. I did say so, When first I rais'd the Tempest say my Spirit, How fares the King, and 's followers?

Ari. Confin'd together In the same fashion, as you gauern charge, Iust as you left them; all prisoners Sir In the Lime-groue which weather-fends your Cell, They cannot boudgetill your release: The King, His Brother, and yours, abide all three distracted, And the remainder mourning ouer them, Brim full of sorrow, and dismay: but chiefly

Him that you term'd Sir, the good old Lord Gonzalo, His teares runs downe his beard like winters drops From caues of freeds: your charm so strongly works 'em That if you now beheld them, your affections Would become tender.

Pro. Dost thou thinke so, Spirit?

Ari. Mine would, Sir, were I humane.

Pro. And mine shall.

Hast thou (which art but aire) a touch, a feeling Of their afflictions, and shall not my selfe, One of their kinde, that relish all as sharply, Passion as they, be kindlier mou'd then thou art? Thogh with their high wrongs I am strook to th' quick, Yet, with my nobler reason, gainst my furie Doe I take part: the rarer Action is In vertue, then in vengeance: they, being penitent, The sole drift of my purpose doth extend Not a frowne further: Goe, release them Ariel, My Charmes Ile breake, their fences Ile restore, And they shall be themselves.

Ari. Ile fetch them, Sir.

Exit.

Pro. Ye Elues of hills, brooks, standing lakes & groues, And ye, that on the sands with printlesse foote Doe chase the ebbing-Neptune, and doe flie him When he comes backe: you demy-Puppets, that By Moone-shine doe the Greene sower Ringleets make, Whereof the Ewe not bites: and you, whose pastime Is to make midnight-Mushrumps, that reioyce To heare the solemne Curfewe, by whose ayde (Weake Masters though ye be) I haue bedymn'd The Noone tide Sun, call'd forth the muienous windes, And twixt the Greene Sea, and the azur'd vault Set roaring warre. To the dread raling Thunder Haue I giuen fire, and risted Jones stowt Oke With his owne Bolt: The strong bass'd promontorie Haue I made shake, and by the spurs pluckt vp The Pyne, and Cedar. Graues at my command Haue wak'd their sleepers, op'd, and let 'em forth By my so potent Art. But this rough Magicke I heere abiure and when I haue requir'd Some heavenly Musicke (which euen now I do) To worke mine end vpon their Sences, that This Ayrie-charme is for, Ile breake my Staffe, Bury it certaine fadomes in the earth, And deeper then did euer Plummet sound Ile drowne my booke. Solemne musicke.

Heere enters Ariel before Then Alonso with a franticke gesture, attended by Gonzalo Sebastian and Antonio in like manner attended by Adrian and Francisco. They all enter the circle which Prospero had made, and there stand charmd which Prospero obseruing, speaks.

A solemne Ayre, and the best comforter, To an vnfeild fancie, Cure thy braines (Now vnfeild) boile within thy skull: there stand For you are Spell stopr. Holy Gonzalo, Honourable man, Mine eyes ev'n sociable to the shew of thine Fall fellowly drops: The charme dissolues apace, And as the morning steales vpon the night (Melting the darkenesse) so their rising fences Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle Their cleerer reason. O good Gonzalo My true preseruer, and a loyall Sir, To him thou follow'st; I will pay thy graces Home both in word, and deede: Most cruelly

Did thou Alonso, use me, and my daughter:
Thy brother was a furtherer in the Act,
Thou art pinch'd for't now Sebastian. Flesh, and bloud,
You, brother mine, that entertaine ambition,
Expell'd remorse, and nature, whom, with Sebastian
(Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong)
Would heere haue kill'd your King: I do forgiue thee,
Vnnaturall though thou art: Their vnderstanding
Begins to swell, and the approaching tide
Will shortly fill the reasonable shore
That now ly foule, and muddy. not one of them
That yet lookes on me, or would know me. Ariell,
Fetch me the Hat, and Rapier in my Cell,
I will discase me, and my selfe present
As I was sometime Milaine quickly Spirit,
Thou shalt ere long be free.

Ariell sings, and helps to assure him.
Where the Bee sucks, there suck I,
In a Cowslips bell, I lie,
There I couch when Owles doe crye,
On the Batts backe I doe lye
after Sommer merrily.

Merrily, merrily, shall I lye now,
Vnder the blossom that hangs on the Bow

Pro. Why that's my dainty Ariell. I shall misse Thee, but yet thou shalt haue freedom. so, so, so.
To the Kings ship, inuisible as thou art,
There shalt thou finde the Mariners asleepe
Vnder the Hatches: the Master and the Boat-swaine
Being awake, enforce them to this place;
And presently, I pre'three.

Ar I drinke the aire before me, and returne
Or ere your pulse twice beate. Exit.

Gen. All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement
Inhabits heere: some heavenly power guide vs
Out of this fearefull Country.

Pro. Behold Sir King
The wronged Duke of Milaine, Prospero
For more assurance that a liuing Prince
Do's now speake to thee, I embrace thy body,
And to thee, and thy Company, I bid
A hearty welcome.

Alo. Where thou bee't he or no,
Or some enchanted trifle to abuse me,
(As late I haue beene) I not know: thy Pulse
Beats as of flesh, and blood: and since I saw thee, Th'affliction of my minde amends, with which
I feare a madnesse held me: this must e'ra
(And if this be at all) a most strange story.
Thy Dukedome I resigne, and doe entreat
Thou pardon me my wrongs. But how should Prospero
Believing, and be heere?

Pro First, noble Friend,
Let me embrace thine age, whose honor cannot
Be measur'd, or confin'd

Gen. Whether this be,
Or be not, I'll not sweare.

Pro. You doe yet taste
Some subtilties o'th'Isle, that will not let you Beleeue things certaine: Wellcome, my friends all,
But you, my brace of Lords, were I so minded
I heere could plucke his Highnesse frowne vpon you
And iustifie you Traitors at this time
I will tell no tales.

Seb. The Diuell speaks in him.

Pro No:

For you (most wicked Sir) whom to call brother
Would euen infect my mouth, I do forgiue
Thy rankest fault: all of them: and require
My Dukedome of thee, which, perforce I know
Thou must restore.

Alo. If thou bee't Prospero
Giue vs particulars of thy preseruatiou,
How thou hast met vs heere, whom three howres since
Were wrackt vpon this shore? where I haue lost (How sharp the point of this remembrance is)
My deere Sonne Ferdinand.

Pro I am woe for't, Sir.

Alo. Irreparable is the losse, and patience
Saies, it is past her cure.

Pro. I rather thinke
You haue not sought her helpe, of whose soft grace
For the like losse, I haue her soueraigne aid,
And rest my selfe content.

Alo. You the like losse?

Pro As great to me, as late, and supportable
To make the deere losse, haue I meanes much weaker
Then you may call to comfort you: for I
Haue lost my daughter.

Alo. A daughter?

Oh heauens, that they were liuing both in Nalpes
The King and Queene there, that they were, I wish
My selfe were mudded in that oo-zie bed
Where my sonne lies: when did you lose your daughter?

Pro In this last Tempest. I perceiue these Lords
At this encounter doe so much admire,
That they deuoure their reason, and scarce thinke
Their eyes doe offices of Truth: Their words
Are naturall breath: but howsoe'er you haue
Beene iustled from your senses, know for certain
That I am Prospero, and that very Duke
Which was thrust forth of Milaine, who most strangely
Vpon this shore (where you were wrackt) was landed
To be the Lord on't: No more yet of this,
For 'tis a Chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a break-fast, nor Befitting this first meeting: Welcome, Sir;
This Cell's my Court: heere haue I few attendants,
And Subiects none abroad: pray you looke in:
My Dukedome since you haue giuen me againe,
I will requite you with as good a thing,
At least bring forth a wonder, to content ye
As much, as me my Dukedome.

Here Prospero discovers Ferdinand and Miranda, playing at Chess.

Mr. Sweet Lord, you play me false.

Fer. No my dearest loue,
I would not fot the world. (wrangle,

Mr. Yes, for a score of Kingdomes, you should
And I would call it faire play.

Alo If this proue
A vision of the Island, one deere Sonne
Shall I twice loose

Seb. A most high miracle.

Fer Though the Seas threaten they are mercifull,
I haue curs'd them without cause.

Alo. Now all the blessings
Of a glad father, compass thee about:
Arise, and say how thou cam'st heere.

Mr. O wonder!

How many goodly creatures are there heere?
How beauteous mankinde is? O braue new world

That has such people in't.

Pro. 'Tis new to thee.

(play)

Alo. What is this Maid, with whom thou wast at Your eld'st acquaintance cannot be three houres :
Is she the goddess that hath seuer'd vs,
And brought vs thus together?

Fer. Sir, she is mortall,
But by immortall prouidence, she's mine,
I chose her when I could not aske my Father
For his aduise : nor thought I had one. She
Is daughter to this famous Duke of Milaine,
Of whom, so often I haue heard renowne,
But neuer saw before. of whom I haue
Receiu'd a second life ; and second Father
This Lady makes him to me.

Alo. I am hers.

But O, how odly will it sound, that I
Must aske my childe forgiveness?

Pro. There Sir stop,
Let vs not burthen our remembrances, with
A heauinesse that's gon.

Gon. I haue inly wept,
Or should haue spoke ere this. looke downe you gods
And on this couple drop a blessed crowne ;
For it is you, that haue chalk'd forth the way
Which brought vs hither.

Alo. I say Amen, Gonzallo.

Gon. Was Milaine thrust from Milaine, that his Issue
Should become Kings of Naples? O reioyce
Beyond a common ioy, and set it downe
With gold on lasting Pillers. In one voyage
Did Claribell her husband finde at Tunis,
And Ferdinand her brother, found a wife,
Where he himselfe was lost. Prospero, his Dukedome
In a poore Isle. and all of vs, our selues,
When no man was his owne

Alo. Gue me your hands :
Let griefe and sorrow still embrace his heart,
That doth not wish you ioy.

Gon. Be it so, Amen.

Enter Ariell, with the Master and Boatswaine amazedly following

O looke Sir, looke Sir, here is more of vs :
I prophes'd, if a Gallies were on Land
This fellow could not drowne. Now blasphemy,
That swear'tt Grace ore-board, not an oath on shore,
Hast thou no mouth by land?
What is the newes?

Bor. The best newes is, that we haue safely found
Our King, and company. The next our Ship,
Which but three glasses since, we gaue out split,
Istye, and yare, and brauely rig'd, as when
We first put out to Sea.

Ar. Sir, all this seruice
Haue I done since I went

Pro. My tricksey Sprit.

Alo. These are not naturall euents, they strengthen
From strange, to stranger : say, how came you hither?

Bor. If I did thinke, Sir, I were well awake,
I'd strue to tell you : we were dead of sleepe,
And (how we know not) all clapt vnder hatches,
Where, but euen now, with strange, and seuerall noyses
Of roring, shrieking, howling, ginsling chaines,
And mo diuersitie of sounds, all horrible.
We were awak'd. straight way, at liberty ;
Where we, in all our trim, freshly beheld

Our royall, good, and gallant Ship : our Master
Capring to eye her : on a trice, so please you,
Euen in a dreame, were we diuided from them,
And were brought moaping hither.

Ar. Was't well done?

Pro. Brauely (my diligence) thou shalt be free.

Alo. This is as strange a Maze, as ere men trod,
And there is in this businesse, more then nature
Was euer conduct of : some Oracle
Must rectifie our knowledge.

Pro. Sir, my Leige,

Do not infect your minde, with beating on
The strangenesse of this businesse, at pickt leisure
(Which shall be shortly single) I'll resolute you,
(Which to you shall seeme probable) of euery
These happend accidents till when, be cheerefull
And thinke of each thing well. Come hither Spirit,
Set Caliban, and his companions free :
Vntye the Spell How fares my gracious Sir?
There are yet missing of your Companie
Some few odde Lads, that you remember not.

Enter Ariell, driving in Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo in their stolne Apparell.

Ste. Euery man shift for all the rest, and let
No man take care for himselfe ; for all is
But fortune Coragio Bully-Monster Corasio

Tri. If these be true spies which I weare in my head, here's a goodly sight

Cal. O Settbo, these be braue Spirits indeede :
How fine my Master is? I am afraid
He will chastise me.

Seb. Ha, ha :

What things are these, my Lord Antibono?
Will money buy em?

Ant. Very like one of them
Is a plaine Fish, and no doubt marketable.

Pro. Marke but the badges of these men, my Lords,
Then say if they be true. This mishapen knaue;
His Mother was a Witch, and one so strong
That could controule the Moone, make flowes, and ebs,
And deale in her command, without her power.
These three haue robd me, and this demy-duell;
(For he's a bastard one) had plotted with them
To take my life. two of these Fellowes, you Must know, and owne, this Thing of darkenesse, I Acknowledge mine

Cal. I shall be pinch't to death.

Alo. Is not this Stephano, my drunken Butler?

Seb. He is drunke now ;

Where had he wine?

Alo. And Trinculo is reeling ripe : where should they finde this grand Liquor that hath gilded 'em?
How cam'it thou in this pickle?

Tri. I haue bin in such a pickle since I saw you last,
That I feare me will neuer out of my bones :
I shall not feare fly-blowing.

Seb. Why how now Stephano?

Ste. O touch me not, I am not Stephano, but a Cramp

Pro. You'd be King o'the Isle, Sirha?

Ste. I should haue bin a fore one then.

Alo. This is a strange thing as ere I look'd on.

Pro. He is as disproportion'd in his Mahtiers
As in his shape : Goe Sirha, to my Cell,
Take with you your Companions : as you looke
To haue my pardon, trim it handsomely.

Cal. I that I will : and Ile be wise hereafter,

And

And seeke for grace : what a thrice double Asse
Was I to take this drunkard for a god ?

And worship this dull foole ?

Pro. Goe to, away.

(found it.

Alc. Hence, and bestow your luggage where you
Seb. Or stole it rather.

Pro. Sir, I inuite your Highnesse, and your traine
To my poore Cell where you shall take your rest
For this onenight, which part of it, Ile waste
With such discourse, as I not doubt, shall make it
Goe quicke away : The Booy of my life,
And the particular accidents, gon by
Since I came to this Isle. And in the morne
I'll bring you to your ship, and so to Naples,

Where I haue hope to see the nuptiall
Of these our deere-belou'd, solemnized,
And thence retire me to my Milaine, where Euery thurd thought shall bemy graue.

Alc. I long

To heare the story of your life ; which must Take the care strangely.

Pro I'll deliuer all,

And promise you calme Seas, auspicious gales,
And saile, so expeditious, that shall catch
Your Royall fleete farre off. My Ariel ; clucke
That is thy charge. Then to the Elements
Be free, and fare thou well : please you draw neere.

Exeunt omnes.

EPILOGVE,

spoken by Prospero.

NOW my Charmes are all ore-throwne,
And what strength I haue s mine owne.

Which is most faint : now 'tis true

I must be heere confinde by you,

Or sent to Naples, Let me not

Since I haue my Dukedome got,

And pardon'd the deceiver, dwell

In this bare Island, by your Spell,

But release me from my bands

With the helpe of your good hands -

Gentle breath of yours, my Sailes

Must fill, or else my proiect failes,

Which was to please. Now I want

Spirits to enforce. Art to inchant.

And my ending is despaire,

Vnlesse I be reliev'd by prayer

Which pierces so, that it assaults

Mercy it selfe, and frees all fault's.

As you from crimes would pardon'd be,

Let your Indulgence set me free.

Exit.

FINIS

T H E Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Actus primus, Scena prima.

Valentine, Proteus, and Speed.

Valentine.

Come to perswade, my loving Proteus;
Home-keeping youth, how ever homely wits,
Wer'e not affection chaires thy tender dayes
To the sweet glaunces of thy hartour'd Loue,
I rather would entreat thy company,

To see the wonders of the world abroad,
Then (living dully sluggardiz'd at home)
Weare out thy youth with shapelesse idlenesse.
But since thou lou'st; love still, and thrue therein,
Euen as I would, when I to loue begin.

Pro. Wilt thou be gone? Sweet Valentine adew, Thinke on thy Proteus, when thou (hap'ly) seest
Some rare note-worthy object in thy triuall.
With me partaker in thy happinesse,
When thou do'st meet good hap, and in thy danger,
(If euer danger doe enuiron thee)
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer,
For I will be thy beades-man, Valentine.

Val. And on a loue-booke pray for my successe?

Pro. Vpon some booke I loue, I'll pray for thee.

Val. That's on some shallow Storie of deepe loue,
How young Leander crost the Hellespont.

Pro. That's a deepe Storie, of a deeper loue,
For he was more then ouer-shoes in loue.

Val. 'Tis true; for you are ouer-bootes in loue,
And yet you neuer swom the Hellespont.

Pro. Ou'er the Bootes? nay giue me not the Boots.

Val. No, I will not, for it boots thee not.

Pro. What? (grones.)

Val. To be in loue; where scorne is bought with Coy looks, with hart-fore sighes: one fading moments
With twenty watchfull, weary, tedious nights, (mirth,
If hap'ly won, perhaps a haplesse gaine;
If lost, why then a grieuous labour won;
How euer: but a folly bought with wit,
Or else a wit, by folly vanquished.

Pro. So, by your circumstance, you call me foole.

Val. So, by your circumstance, I feare you'll proue.

Pro. 'Tis Loue you caull at, I am not Loue.

Val. Loue is your master, for he masters you;
And he that is so yoked by a foole,
Methinks should not be chronicled for wise.

Pro. Yet Writers say; as in the sweetest Bud,
The eating Canker dwels, so eating I oue
Inhabits in the finest wits of all.

Val. And Writers say; as the most forward Bud

Is eaten by the Canker ere it blow,
I euen so by Loue, the young, and tender w
Is euen'd to folly, blis'rag in the Bud,
Looing his verdure, euen in the prime,
And all the faire effects of future hopes
But wherefore waste I time to co'mitate these
That are a votary to fond 'Lure?

Once more adew: my Father at the Road
Expects my coming, there to see me sp'd.

Pro. And thither will I bring thee Valentine.

Val. Sweet Proteus, no: Now let vs take our leave:
To Milaine let me heare from thee by Letters
Of thy successe in loue; and what reues else
Bendeth herein absence of thy Friend:
And I likewise will visite thee with mine.

Pro. All happinesse bechance to thee in Milaine.

Val. As much to you at home, and so farewell. Exit.

Pro. He after Honour hunts, I after Loue;
He leaues his friends, to dignifie himselfe;
I leue my selfe, my friends, and all for loue.
If on Iulius thou hast metamorphis'd me:
Made me neglect my Studies, loose my time;

Warre with good counsaile; set the world at naught;
Made Wit with musing, weak; hart sick with thought.

Sp. Sir Proteus, 'haue you saw you my Master?

Pro. But now he parted hence to embarke for Milaine.

Sp. Twenty to one then, he is ship'd already,
And I haue plaid the Sheepe in loofing him.

Pro. Indeede a Sheepe doth very often Pray,
And if the Shepheard be awhile away.

Sp. You conclude that my Masters a Shepheard then and I Sheepe?

Pro. I doe.

Sp. Why then my homes are his homes, whether I wake or sleepe.

Pro. A silly answer, and fitting well a Sheepe.

Sp. This proues me still a Sheepe.

Pro. True: and thy Master a Shepheard.

Sp. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.

Pro. It shall goe hard but ile proue it by another.

Sp. The Shepheard seekes the Sheepe, and not the Sheepe the Shepheard; but I seeke my Master, and my Master seekes not me: therefore I am no Sheepe.

Pro. The Sheepe for fodder follow the Shepheard, the Shepheard for foode followes not the Sheepe: thou for wages followest thy Master, thy Master for wages
followes not thee: therefore thou art a Sheepe.

Sp. Such another proofe will make me cry ha!

Pro. But do'st thou heare: gau'st thou my Letter to Iulius?

Sp. I

Sp. I Sir, I (a lost-Mutton) gaue your Letter to her (a lac'd-Mutton) and she (a lac'd-Mutton) gaue mee (a lost-Mutton) nothing for my labour

Pro. Here's too small a Pasture for such store of Muttons.

Sp. If the ground be ouer-charg'd, you were best sicke her.

Pro. Nay; in that you are astray - 'twere best pound you.

Sp. Nay Sir, lesse then a pound shall serue me for carrying your Letter.

Pro. You mistake; I meane the pound, a Pinfold

Sp. From a pound to a pin? fold it ouer and ouer, 'Tis threefold too little for carrying a letter to your louer

Pro. But what said she?

Sp. I.

Pro. Nod-I, why that's noddie

Sp. You mistooke Sir I say she did nod, And you aske me if she did nod, and I say I

Pro. And that set together is noddie.

Sp. Now you haue taken the paines to set it together, take it for your paines.

Pro. No, no, you shall haue it for bearing the letter

Sp. Well, I perceiue I must be faine to beare with you.

Pro. Why Sir, how doe you beare with me?

Sp. Marry Sir, the letter very orderly, Hauing nothing but the word noddie for my paines.

Pro. Beshrew me, but you haue a quicke wit.

Sp. And yet it cannot ouer-take your slow purse

Pro. Come, come, open the matter in brieft, what said she.

Sp. Open your purse, that the money, and the matter may be both at once deliuered.

Pro. Well Sir here is for your paines what said she?

Sp. Truly Sir, I thinke you'll hardly win her.

Pro. Why? could'st thou perceiue so much from her?

Sp. Sir, I could perceiue nothing at all from her; No, not so much as a ducket for deliuering your letter And being so hard to me, that brought you minde, I feare she'll proue as hard to you in telling your minde. Giue her no token but stones, for she's as hard as Steele.

Pro. What said she, nothing?

Sp. No, not so much as take this for thy pains (me, To testifie your bounty, I thank you, you haue cestern'd In requital whereof henceforth, carry your letters your selfe; And so Sir, I'll commend you to my Master.

Pro. Go, go, be gone, to saue your Ship from wrack, Which cannot perish hauing thee aboard, Being destin'd to a drier death on shore I must goe send some better Messenger, I feare my Julia would not daigne my lines, Receiuing them from such a worthless post. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul. But say Lucetta (now we are alone) Would'st thou then counsaile me to fall in loue?

Luc. I Madam, so you stumble not vnheedfully.

Jul. Of all the faire resort of Gentlemen, That euery day with par'le encounter me,

In thy opinion which is worthiest loue?

Luc. Please you repeat their names, I'll shew my minde, According to my shallow simple skill.

Jul. What think'st thou of the faire sir Eglamont?

Luc. As of a Knight, well-spoken, neat, and finte; But were I you, he neuer should be mine.

Jul. What think'st thou of the rich Mercutio?

Luc. Well of his wealth, but of himselfe, so, so.

Jul. What think'st thou of the gentle Protheus?

Luc. Lord, Lord, to see what folly raignes in vs.

Jul. How now? what meane's this passion at his name?

Luc. Pardon deare Madam, 'tis a passing shame, That I (vnworthy body as I am)

Should censure thus on louely Gentlemen

Jul. Why not on Protheus, as of all the rest?

Luc. 'I then thus of many good, I thinke him best.

Jul. Your reason?

Luc. I haue no other but a womans reason.

I thinke him so, because I thinke him so

Jul. And would'st thou haue me cast my loue on him?

Luc. I if you thought your loue not cast away.

Jul. Why he, of all the rest, hath neuer mou'd me.

Luc. Yet he, of all the rest, I thinke best loues ye.

Jul. His little speaking, shewes his loue but small.

Luc. Fire that's closefist kept, burnes most of all.

Jul. They doe not loue, that doe not shew their loue.

Luc. Oh, they loue least, that let men know their loue.

Jul. I would I knew his minde.

Luc. Peruse this paper Madam.

Jul. To Julia - say, from whom?

Luc. That the Contents will shew.

Jul. Say, say who gaue it thee?

Luc. Sir Valentines page & sent I thinke from Protheus, He would haue giuen it you, but I being in the way, Did in your name receiue it - pardon the fault I pray.

Jul. Now (by my modesty) a goodly Broker - Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines?

To whisper, and conspire against my youth?

Now trust me, 'tis an office of great worth,

And you an officer fit for the place:

There take the paper: see it be return'd, Or else returne no more into my sight.

Luc. To plead for loue, deserues more fee, then hate.

Jul. Will ye be gone?

Luc. That you may ruminate.

Exit.

Jul. And yet I would I had ore-look'd the Letter;

It were a shame to call her backe againe,

And pray her to a fault, for which I chid her.

What foole is she, that knowes I am a Maid,

And would not force the letter to my view?

Since Maides, in modesty, say no, to that,

Which they would haue the profferer construe, I.

Fie, fie - how way-ward is this foolish loue;

That (like a testie Babe) will scratch the Nurse,

And presently, all humbled kisse the Rod?

How churlishly, I chid Lucetta hence,

When willingly, I would haue had her here?

How angerly I taught my brow to frowne,

When inward ioy enforc'd my heart to smile?

My pennance is, to call Lucetta backe

And aske remission, for my folly past.

What hoc - Lucetta.

Luc. What would your Ladiship?

Jul. Is't neere dinner time?

Luc. I would it were,

That you might kill your stomacke on your meat,

And

And not vpon your Maid.

In. What is't that you
Tooke vp so gingerly?

Lu. Nothing.

In. Why didst thou stoop then?

Lu. To take a paper vp, that I let fall.

In. And is that paper nothing?

Lu. Nothing concerning me.

In. Then let it lye, for those that it concernes.

Lu. Madam, it will not lye where it concernes, Vnlesse it haue a false Interpreter.

In. Some loue of yours, hath writ to you in Rime.

Lu. That I might sing it (Madam) to a tune:

Giue me a Note, your Ladship can set

In. A little by such toyes, as may be possible -

Best sing it to the tune of Light O, Loue.

Lu. It is too heavy for so light a tune.

In. Heauy? belike it hath some burden then?

Lu. I: and melodious were it, would you sing it,

In. And why not you?

Lu. I cannot reach so high.

In. Let's see your Song

How now Minion?

Lu. Keepe tune there still; so you will sing it out.

And yet me thinkes I do not like this tune.

In. You doe not?

Lu. No (Madam) tis too sharpe.

In. You (Minion) are too saucie.

Lu. Nay, now you are too flat,
And marre the concord, with too harsh a descant.

There wanteth but a Meane to fill your Song.

In. The meane is dround with you vnruely base.

Lu. Indeede I bid the base for Prothem.

In. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me,
Here is a coile with protestation -

Goe, get you gone - and let the papers lye

You would be fingring them, to anger me.

Lu. She makes it strage, but she would be best pleas'd

To be so angered with another Letter.

In. Nay, would I were so angered with the same
Oh hatefull hands, to teare such louing words,

Iniurious Waspes, to feede on such sweet hony,

And kill the Bees that yeelde it, with your stings,

Ile kisse each feuerill paper, for amends -

Looke, here is writ, kinde Julia - vnkinde Julia,

As in reuenge of thy ingratitude,

I throw thy name against the bruizing-stones,

Trampling contemptuously on thy disdain.

And here is writ, Loue wounded Prothem

Poore wounded name my bosome, as a bed,

Shall lodge thee till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd,

And thus I search it with a soueraine kisse

But twice, or thrice, was Prothem written downe:

Be calme (good winde) blow not a word away,

Till I haue found each letter, in the Letter,

Except mine own name That, some whirle-winde beare

Vnto a ragged, fearefull, hanging Rocke,

And throw it thence into the raging Sea.

Loe, here in one line is his name twice writ

Poore forlorne Prothem, passionate Prothem -

To the sweet Julia that ile teare away -

And yet I will not, sith so prettily

He couples it, to his complaining Names;

Thus will I fold them, one vpon another;

Now kisse, embrace, contend, doe what you will.

Lu. Madam: dinner is ready and your father staires.

In. Well, let vs goe.

Lu. What, shall these papers lye, like Tell-tales here?

In. If you respect them; best to take them vp.

Lu. Nay, I was taken vp, for laying them downe.
Yet here they shall not lye, for catching cold.

In. I see you haue a months minde to them.

Lu. I (Madam) you may say what sights you see;
I see things too, although you iudge I winke.

In. Come, come, wilt please you goe. Exiunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Antonio and Panthino. Prothem

Ant. Tell me Panthino, what sad talke was that,
Wherewith my brother held you in the Cloyster?

Pan. 'Twas of his Nephew Prothem, your Sonne.

Ant. Why? what of him?

Pan. He wondred that your Lordship
Would suffer him, to spend his youth at home,
While other men, of slender reputation
Put forth their Sonnes, to seeke preferment out.
Some to the warres, to try their fortune there;
Some, to discouer Islands farre away:

Some, to the studious Vniuersities;
For any, or for all these exercises,
He said, that Prothem, your sonne, was meet;
And did request me, to importune you
To let him spend his time no more at home;
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In hauing knowne no trauaile in his youth.

Ant. Nor need't thou much importune me to that Whereon, this month I haue bin hamering.
I haue consider'd well, his losse of time,
And how he cannot be a perfect man,
Nor being tryed, and tutored in the world
Experience is by industry atchieu'd,
And perfected by the swift course of time
Then tell me, whether were I best to send him?

Pan. I thinke your Lordship is not ignorant
How his companion, youthfull Valentine,
Attends the Emperour in his royall Court.

Ant. I know it well. (thither,

Pan. 'Twere good, I thinke, your Lordship sent him
There shall he practise Tilts, and Turnaments;
Heare sweet discourse, conuerse with Noble-men,
And be in eye of euery Exercise

Worthy his youth, and noblenesse of birth.
Ant. I like thy counsaile - well hast thou aduis'd -
And that thou maist perceiue how well I like it,
The execution of it shall make knowne;
Euen with the speediest expedition,
I will dispatch him to the Emperours Court.

Pan. To morrow, may it please you, Don Alphonso,
With other Gentlemen of good esteeme
Are iourning, to salute the Emperour,
And to commend their seruice to his will.

Ant. Good company. with them shall Prothem go:
And in good time: now will we breake with him.

Pro. Sweet Loue, sweet lines, sweet life,
Here is her hand, the agent of her heart;
Here is her oath for loue, her nonors paunc;

O that our Fathers would applaud our loves
To scale our happiness with their consents.

Pro Oh heavenly Julia,

Ant. How now? What Letter are you reading there?

Pro. May't please your Lordship, 'tis a word or two
Of commendations sent from Valentine,
Deliver'd by a friend, that came from him

Ant. Lend me the Letter - Let me see what newes.

Pro. There is no newes (my Lord) but that he writes
How happily he liues, how well-belou'd,
And daily graced by the Emperor;
Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.

Ant. And how stand you affected to his wish?

Pro. As one relying on your Lordships will,
And not depending on his friendly wish

Ant. My will is something sorted with his wish.
Mufe not that I thus sodainly proceed;
For what I will, I will, and there an end
I am resolu'd, that thou shalt spend some time
With Valentine, in the Emperors Court

What maintenance he from his friends receiues,
Like exhibition thou shalt haue from me,
To morrow be in readinesse, to goe,
Excuse it not for I am peremptory

Pro. My Lord I cannot be so soone provided,
Please you deliberate a day or two

Ant. Look what thou want'st shall be sent after thee
No more of stay to morrow thou must goe,
Come on Panthimo; you shall be imployd,
To hasten on his Expedition.

Pro Thus haue I shund the fire, for feare of burning,
And drench'd me in the sea, where I am drown'd.
I fear'd to shew my Father Julius Letter,
Least he should take exceptions to my loue,
And with the vantage of mine owne excuse
Hath he excepted most against my loue.
Oh, how this spring of loue resemblith
The vncertaine glory of an Aprill day,
Which now shewes all the beauty of the Sun,
And by and by a clowd takes all away

Pan. Sir Protheus, your Father. call's for you,
He is in haste, therefore I pray you go.

Pro. Why this it is my heart accords thereto,
And yet a thousand times it answer's no

Exeunt Finis.

Actus secundus: Scœna Prima.

Enter Valentine, Speed, Silvia.

Speed. Sir, your Glour.

Valen. Not mine. my Gloues are on.

Sp Why then this may be yours - for this is but one

Val Ha? Let me see: I, giue it me, it's mine

Sweet Ornament, that deckes a thing diuine,
Ah Silvia, Silvia.

Speed. Madam Silvia. Madam Silvia

Val. How now Silvia?

Speed. Shee is not within hearing Sir.

Val. Why sir, who bad you call her?

Speed. Your worship sir, or else I mistooke,

Val. Well: you'll still be too forward.

Speed. And yet I was last chidden for being too slow.

Val. Goe to, sir, tell me: do you know Madam Silvia?

Speed. Shee that your worship loues?

Val. Why, how know you that I am in loue?

Speed Marry by these speciall markes. first, you haue learn'd (like Sir Protheus) to wreath your Armes like a Male-content, to relish a Loue-song, like a Robin-red-breast. to walke alone like one that had the pestilence:
to sigh, like a Schoole-boy that had lost his A. B. C. to weep like a yong wench that had buried her Grandam:
to fast, like one that takes diet: to watch, like one that feares robbing: to speake pining, like a beggar at Hallow-Masse You were wont, when you laughed, to crow like a cocke; when you walk'd, to walke like one of the Lions: when you fasted, it was presently after dinner - when you look'd sadly, it was for want of money And now you are Metamorph's'd with a Mistress, that when I looke on you, I can hardly thinke you my Master.

Val Are all these things perceiu'd in me?

Speed They are all perceiu'd without ye.

Val. Without me? they cannot.

Speed Without you? nay, that's certaine - for without you were so simple, none else would - but you are so without these follies, that these follies are within you, and shine through you like the water in an Urinall - that not an eye that sees you, but is a Physician to comment on your Malady.

Val But tell me: do'st thou know my Lady Silvia?

Speed. Shee that you gaze on so, as she sits at supper?

Val. Hast thou obseru'd that? euen she I meane.

Speed. Why sir, I know her not.

Val Do'st thou know her by my gazing on her, and yet know'st her not?

Speed Is she not hard-fauour'd, sir?

Val. Not so faire (boy) as well fauour'd.

Speed. Sir, I know that well enough.

Val What dost thou know?

Speed That shee is not so faire, as (of you) well-fa-uour'd?

Val I meane that her beauty is exquisite,
But her fauour infinite.

Speed That's because the one is painted, and the other out of all count.

Val How painted? and how out of count?

Speed. Marry sir, so painted to make her faire, that no man counts of her beauty.

Val How esteem'st thou me? I account of her beauty.

Speed. You neuer saw her since she was deform'd.

Val How long hath she beene deform'd?

Speed Euer since you lou'd her.

Val I haue lou'd her euer since I saw her,
And still I see her beautifull.

Speed. If you loue her, you cannot see her.

Val Why?

Speed Because Loue is blinde. O that you had mine eyes, or your owne eyes had the lights they were wont to haue, when you chidde at Sir Protheus, for going vn-garter'd.

Val What should I see then?

Speed Your owne present folly, and her passing deformitie - for hee beeing in loue, could not see to garter his hose; and you, beeing in loue, cannot see to put on your hose (ning)

Val Belike (boy) then you are in loue, for last mor-
You could not see to wipe my shoes.

Speed. True sir: I was in loue with my bed, I thanke you, you swing'd me for my loue, which makes mee the bolder

bolder to chide you, for yours.

Val. In conclusion, I stand affected to her.

Speed. I would you were set, so your affection would cease.

Val. Last night she emoynd me,
To write some lines to one she loues.

Speed. And haue you?

Val. I haue.

Speed. Are they not lamely writ?

Val. No (Boy) but as well as I can do them:

Peace, here she comes.

Speed. Oh excellent motion; oh exceeding Puppet.
Now will he interpret to her.

Val. Madam & Mistres, a thousand good-morrrows.

Speed. Oh, 'giue ye-good-ey'n: heer's a million of manners

Sil. Sir Valentine, and seruant, to you two thousand

Speed. He should giue her interest & she giues it him.

Val. As you inioynd me; I haue writ your Letter
Vnto the secret, names friend of yours

Which I was much vnwilling to proceed in,

But for my duty to your Ladiship. (done.)

Sil. I thanke you (gentle Seruant) 'tis very Clerkly.

Val. Now trust me (Madam) it came hardly-off.

For being ignorant to whom it goes,
I writ at randome, very doubtfully.

Sil. Perchance you think too much of so much pains?

Val. No (Madam) so it steed you, I will write (Please you command) a thousand times as much
And yet —

Sil. A pretty period well. I ghesse the sequell;
And yet I will not name it; and yet I care not.

And yet, take this againe: and yet I thanke you:
Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more

Speed. And yet you will — and yet, another yet.

Val. What meanes your Ladiship?

Doe you not like it?

Sil. Yes, yes. the lines are very queintly writ,
But (since vnwillingly) take them againe.
Nay, take them.

Val. Madam, they are for you.

Sil. I, I. you writ them Sir, at my request,
But I will none of them. they are for you.
I would haue had them writ more mouingly:

Val. Please you, Ile write your Ladiship another.

Sil. And when it's writ — for my sake read it ouer,
And if it please you, so if not why so:

Val. If it please me, (Madam?) what then?

Sil. Why if it please you, take it for your labour;
And so good-morrow Seruant. Exit. Sil.

Speed. Oh Iest vnscene · inscrutable · inuisible,
As a nose on a mans face, or a Wethercocke on a steeple:
My Master sues to her — and she hath taught her Tutor,
He being her Pupill, to become her Tutor.
Oh excellent deuise, was there euer heard a better?
That my master being seruibel,
To himselfe should write the Letter?

Val. How now Sir?

What are you reasoning with your selfe?

Speed. Nay: I was riming. 'tis you y haue the reason.

Val. To doe what?

Speed. To be a Spokef-man from Madam Silua.

Val. To whom?

Speed. To your selfe. why, she woes you by a figure.

Val. What figure?

Speed. By a Letter, I should say.

Val. Why she hath not writ to me?

Speed. What need she,

When she hath made you write to your selfe?
Why, doe you not perceiue the iest?

Val. No, belecue me.

Speed. No beleueing you indeed sir:

But did you perceiue her earnest?

Val. She gaue me none, except an angry word.

Speed. Why she hath giuen you a Letter.

Val. That's the Letter I writ to her friend.

Speed. And y letter hath she deliuer'd, & there an end.

Val. I would it were no worfe.

Speed. Ile warrant you, 'tis as well:

For often haue you writ to her: and she in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not againe reply,
Or fearing els some messēger, y might her mind discouer
Her self hath taught her Loue himself, to write vnto her
All this I speak in print, for in print I found it. (louer.
Why muse you sir, 'tis dinner time.

Val. I haue dyn'd.

Speed. I, but hearken sir: though the Cameleon Loue can feed on the ayre, I am one that am nourish'd by my victuals; and would faine haue meate · oh bee not like your Mistresse, be moued, be moued. Exeunt.

Scœna secunda.

Enter Prothem, Iulia, Panthion.

Pro. Haue patience, gentle Iulia:

Iul. I rust where is no remedy.

Pro. When possibly I can, I will returne.

Iul. If you turne not, you will return the sooner:
Keepe this remembrance for thy Iulia's sake.

Pro. Why then wee'll make exchange;
Here, take you this

Iul. And seale the bargaine with a holy kisse.

Pro. Here is my hand, for my true constancie:

And when that howre ore-slips me in the day,

Wherein I sigh not (Iulia) for thy sake,

The next ensuing howre, some foule mischance

Torment me for my Loues forgetfulnesse:

My father staies my coming: anwere not:

The tide is now; nay, not thy tide of teares,

That tide will stay me longer then I should,

Iulia, farewell · what, gon without a word?

I, so true loue should doe: it cannot speake,

For truth hath better deeds, then words to grace it.

Panth. Sir Prothem you are staid for.

Pro. Goe: I come, I come:

Alas, this parting strikes poore Louers dumbe.

Exeunt.

Scœna Tertia.

Enter Lambe, Panthion.

Lambe. Nay, 'twill bee this howre ere I haue done weeping: all the kinde of the Lambes, haue this very fault: I haue recess'd my proportion, like the prodigious
sonne,

Sonne, and am going with Sir Prothemus to the Imperials Court : I thinke Crab my dog, be the slowest natured dogge that liues : My Mother weeping : my Father wayling : my Sister crying : our Maid howling : our Catte wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexitie, yet did not this cruell-hearted Curre shedde one teare : he is a stone, a very pibble stone, and has no more pittie in him then a dogge : a few would haue wept to haue seene our parting : why my Grandam hauing no eyes, looke you, wept her selfe blinde at my parting : nay, Ile shew you the manner of it. This shooe is my father : no, this left shooe is my father, no, no, this left shooe is my mother : nay, that cannot bee so neyther. yes ; it is so, it is so : is that the worser sole. this shooe with the hole in it, is my mother : and this my father : a vengeance on't, there 'tis : Now sir, this staffe is my sister : for, looke you, she is as white as a lilly, and as small as a wand : this hat is Nan our maid : I am the dogge : no, the dogge is himselfe, and I am the dogge oh, the dogge is me, and I am my selfe. I, so, so now come I to my Father ; Father, your blessing now should not the shooe speake a word for weeping : now should I kisse my Father ; well, hee weepes on. Now come I to my Mother Oh that she could speake now, like a would-woman : well, I kisse her : why there 'tis ; heere's my mothers breath vp and downe : Now come I to my sister, marke the moane she makes now the dogge all this while sheds not a teare : nor speakes a word : but see how I lay the dust with my teares

Panth. Lance, away, away : a Boord thy Master is ship'd, and thou art to poss after with oares ; what's the matter ? why weep'st thou man ? away asse, you'll loose the Tide, if you tarry any longer.

Lance. It is no matter if the tide were lost, for it is the vnkindest Tide, that euer any man tide.

Panth. What's the vnkindest tide ?

Lance. Why, he that's tide here, Crab my dog.

Panth. Tut, man : I meane thou'lt loose the flood, and in loosing the flood, loose thy voyage, and in loosing thy voyage, loose thy Master, and in loosing thy Master, loose thy seruice, and in loosing thy seruice : — why dost thou stop my mouth ?

Lance. For feare thou shouldst loose thy tongue.

Panth. Where should I loose my tongue ?

Lance. In thy Tale.

Panth. In thy Taile

Lance. Loose the Tide, and the voyage, and the Master, and the Seruice, and the tide. why man, if the River were drie, I am able to fill it with my teares : if the winde were downe, I could driue the boate with my sighes.

Panth. Come. come away man, I was sent to call thee.

Lance. Sir : call me what thou dar'st.

Panth. Wilt thou goe ?

Lance. Well, I will goe.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Valentine, Silvia, Thurio, Speed, Duke, Prothemus.

Sil. Seruant.

Val. Mistress.

Spec. Master, Sir Thurio frownes on you

Val. I Boy, it's for loue.

Spec. Not of you.

Val. Of my Mistresse then.

Spec. 'Twere good you knockt him.

Sil. Seruant, you are sad.

Val. Indeed, Madam, I seeme so.

Thur. Seeme you that you are not ?

Val. Hap'ly I doe.

Thur. So doe Counterfeyts.

Val. So doe you

Thur. What seeme I that I am not ?

Val. Wife.

Thur. What instance of the contrary ?

Val. Your folly.

Thur. And how quoad you my folly ?

Val. I quoad it in your Ierkin.

Thur. My Ierkin is a doublet.

Val. Well then, Ile double your folly.

Thur. How ?

Sil. What, angry, Sir Thurio, do you change colour ?

Val. Giue him leaue, Madam, he is a kind of Camelion.

Thur. That hath more minde to feed on your blood, then lue in your ayre.

Val. You haue said Sir.

Thur. I Sir, and done too for this time.

Val. I know it wel sir, you alwaies end ere you begin.

Sil. A fine volly of words, gentlemē, & quickly shot off

Val. 'Tis indeed, Madam, we thank the giuer.

Sil. Who is that Seruant ?

Val. Your selfe (sweet Lady) for you gaue the fire, Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your Ladships lookes, And spends what he borrowes kindly in your company

Thur. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your wit bankrupt. (words)

Val. I know it well sir - you haue an Exchequer of And I thinke, no other treasure to giue your followers.

For it appeares by their bare Liueries

That they lue by your bare words.

Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more:

Here comes my father.

Duk. Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard beser.

Sil. Valentine, your father is in good health,

What say you to a Letter from your friends

Of much good newes ?

Val. My Lord, I will be thankfull,

To any happy messenger from thence.

Duk. Know ye Don Antonio, your Countreman ?

Val. I, my good Lord, I know the Gentleman

To be of worth, and worthy estimation,

And not without desert so well reputed.

Duk. Hath he not a Sonne ?

Val. I, my good Lord, a Son, that well deserues

The honor, and regard of such a father.

Duk. You know him well ?

Val. I knew him as my selfe : for from our Infancie

We haue conuers't, and spent our howres together,

And though my selfe haue bene an idle Trewant,

Omitting the sweet benefit of time

To cloath mine age with Argel-like perfection :

Yet hath Sir Prothemus (for that's his name)

Made vse, and faire aduantage of his daies :

His yeares but yong, but his experience old :

His head vn-mellowed, but his Iudgement ripe ;

And in a word (for far behinde his worth Comes all the praises that I now bestow.)

C

He

He is compleat in feature, and in minde,
With all good grace, to grace a Gentleman.
Duk. Bestrow me sir, but if he make this good

He is as worthy for an Emperors loue,
As meet to be an Emperors Counsellor;
Well, Sir: this Gentleman is come to me
With Commendation from great Potentates;
And heere he meanes to spend his time a while,
I thinke 'tis no vn-welcome newes to you.

Val. Should I haue wish'd a thing, it had beene he.

Duk. Welcome him then according to his worth
Silvia, I speake to you, and you Sir Thurio,
For Valentine, I need not cite him to it,
I will send him hither to you presently.

Val. This is the Gentleman I told your Ladiship
Had come along with me, but that his Mistresse
Did hold his eyes, lockt in her Christall lookes.

Sil. Be-like that now she hath enfranchis'd them
Vpon some other pawne for fealty.

Val. Nay sure, I thinke she holds them prisoners stil.

Sil. Nay then he should be blind, and being blind
How could he see his way to seeke out you?

Val. Why Lady, Loue hath twenty paire of eyes.

Thur. They say that Loue hath not an eye at all.

Val. To see such Louers, Thurio, as your selfe, Vpon a homely object, Loue can winke.

Val. Welcome, deer Protheus: Mistris, I beseech you Confirm me welcome, with some speciall fauor

Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome hether,
If this be he you oft haue wish'd to heare from.

Val. Mistris, it is: sweet Lady, entertaine him
To be my fellow-servant to your Ladiship.

Sil. Too low a Mistres for so high a servant.

Pro. Not so, sweet Lady, but too meane a servant
To haue a looke of such a worthy a Mistresse.

Val. Leau off discourtie of disabilitye.

Sweet Lady, entertaine him for your Seruant

Pro. My dutie will I boast of, nothing else.

Sil. And dutie neuer yet did want his meed.
Seruant, you are welcome to a worthlesse Mistresse

Pro. Ile die on him that saies so but your selfe.

Sil. That you are welcome?

Pro. That you are worthlesse (you.

Thur. Madam, my Lord, our father wold speak with

Sil. I wait vpon his pleasure Come Sir Thurio, Goe with me: once more, new Seruant welcome;
Ile leaue you to confer of home affaires,

When you haue done, we looke too heare from you.

Pro. Wee'll both attend vpon your Ladiship.

Val. Now tell me how do al from whence you came?

Pro. Your friends are wel, & haue the much comended.

Val. And how doe yous?

Pro. I left them all in health.

Val. How does your Lady? & how thrives your loue?

Pro. My tales of Loue were wont to weary you,
I know you loy not in a Loue-discourse.

Val. I Protheus, but that life is alter'd now,
I haue done penance for contemning Loue,
Whose high imperious thoughts haue punish'd me
With bitter fasts, with penitentiall grones,
With nightly teares, and daily hart-fore sighes,
For in reuenge of my contempt of loue,
Loue hath chas'd sleepe from my enthralld eyes,
And made them watchers of mine owne hearts sorrow.
O gentle Protheus, Loue's a mighty Lord,

And hath so humbled me, as I confesse
There is no woe to his correction,
Nor to his Seruice, no such ioy on earth:
Now, no discourtise, except it be of loue:
Now can I breake my fast, dine, sup, and sleepe,
Vpon the very naked name of Loue.

Pro. Enough; I read your fortune in your eye:
Was this this Idoll, that you worship so?

Val. Euen She; and is she not a heauenly Saint?

Pro. No; But she is an earthly Paragon.

Val. Call her diuine.

Pro. I will not flatter her.

Val. O flatter me: for Loue delights in praises.
Pro. When I was sick, you gaue me bitter pills,
And I must minister the like to you.

Val. Then speake the truth by her; if not d wne,
Yet let her be a principall tie,

Soueraigne to all the Creatures on the earth.

Pro. Except my Mistresse.

Val. Sweet: except not any,
Except thou wilt except against my Loue.

Pro. Haue I not reason to prefer mine owne?

Val. And I will help thee to prefer her to:
Shee shall be dignified with this high honour,
To beare my Ladies traine, left the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steale a kisse,
And of so great a fauor growing proud,
Disdaine to roote the Sommer-ivelling flowre,
And make rough winter euerlastingly.

Pro. Why Valentine, what Bragadisme is this?

Val. Pardon me (Protheus) all I can is nothing,
To 'ier, whose worth, make other worthies nothing;
Shee is alone.

Pro. Then let her alone.

Val. Not for the world: why man, she is mine owne,
As rich as I as rich in hauing such a Jewell
As twenty Seas, if all their sand were pearle,
The water, Ne star, and the Rocks pure gold.
Forgiue me, that I doe not dreame on thee,
Because thou see'st me doate vpon my loue
My foolish Riual that her Father likes (Onely for his possessions are so huge)
Is gone with her along, and I must after,
For Loue (thou know'st is full of ielousie.)

Pro. But she loues you?

(howe,

Val. I, and we are betroath'd: nay more, our marriage
With all the cunning manner of our flight
Determin'd of: how I must climbe her window,
The Ladder made of Cords, and all the means
Plotted, and 'greed on for my happinesse.
Good Protheus goe with me to my chamber,
In these affaires to aid me with thy counsaile.

Pro. Goe on before. I shall enquire you forth:
I must vnto the Road, to dis-embarque
Some necessaries, that I needs must vse,
And then Ile presently attend you.

Val. Will you make haste?

Exit.

Pro. I will.

Euen as one heate, another heate expels,
Or as one naile, by strength diues our another.
So the remembrance of my former Loue
Is by a newer object quite forgotten,
It is mine, or Valentines praise?
Her true perfection, or my false transgression?
That makes me reasonlesse, to reason thus?
Shee is faire: and so is Julia that I loue,

(That

(That I did loue, for now my loue is thaw'd,
Which like a waxen Image gainst a fire Bears no impression of the thing it was,)
Me thinks my zeale to Valentine is cold;
And that I loue him not as I was wont;
O, but I loue his Lady rob-rob much,
And that's the reason I loue him so little.
How shall I doate on her with more aduice,
That thus without aduice begin to loue her?
'Tis but her picture I haue yet beheld,
And that hath dazeld my reasons light:
But when I looke on her perfections,
There is no reason, but I shall be blinde.
If I can checke my erring loue, I will,
If not, to compasse her Ile vse my skill.

Eachnt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Speed and Launce.

Speed. Launce, by mine honesty welcme to Padua.

Laun. Fortweare not thy selfe, sweet youth, for I am not welcome. I reckon this alwaies, that a man is neuer vndon till hee be hang'd, nor neuer welcome to a place, till some certaine shote be paid, and the Hostesse say welcome.

Speed. Come-on you mad-cap. Ile to the Ale-house with you presently; where, for one shot of fine pence, thou shalt haue fine thousand welcomes: But sirra, how did thy Master part with Madam Julia?

Laun. Marry after they clos'd it earnestly, they parted very fairely in iest.

Spee. But shall she marry him?

Laun. No.

Spee. How then? Shall he marry her?

Laun. No, neither.

Spee. What, are they broken?

Laun. No; they are both as whole as a fish.

Spee. Why then, how stands the matter with them?

Laun. Marry thus, when it stands well with him, it stands well with her.

Spee. What an asse art thou, I vnderstand thee not.

Laun. What a blocke art thou, that thou canst not? My staffe vnderstands me?

Spee. What thou saist?

Laun. I, and what I do too: looke thee, Ile but leane, and my staffe vnderstands me.

Spee. It stands vnder thee indeed.

Laun. Why, stand-vnder. and vnder-stand is all one.

Spee. But tell me true, wilt be a march?

Laun. Aske my dogge, if he say I, it will if hee say no, it will: if hee shake his taile, and say nothing, it will.

Spee. The conclusion is then, that it will.

Laun. Thou shalt neuer get such a secret from me, but by a parable.

Spee. 'Tis well that I get it so: but Launce, how saist thou that that my master is become a notable Louer?

Laun. I neuer knew him otherwise.

Spee. Then how?

Laun. A notable Lubber: as thou reportest him to bee.

Spee. Why, thou whorson Asse, thou mistak'st me,
Laun. Why Foole, I meant not thee, I meant thy Master.

Spee. I tell thee, my Master is become a hot Louer.

Laun. Why, I tell thee, I care not, though hee burne himselfe in Loue. If thou wilt goe with me to the Ale-house: if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Spee. Why?

Laun. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee as to goe to the Ale with a Christian: Wilt thou goe?

Spee. At thy seruice.

Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Proteus solus.

Pro. To leaue my Julia, shall I be forsworne?
To loue faire Silvia; shall I be forsworne?
To wrong my friend, I shall be much forsworne.
And ev'n that Powre which gaue me first my oath
Prouokes me to this three-fold perurie.
Loue bad mee sweare, and Loue bid me for-tweare;
O sweet-suggesting Loue, if thou hast sin'd,
Teach me (thy tempted subiect) to excuse it.
At first I did adore a twinkling Starre,
But now I worship a celestiall Sunne:
Vn-heedfull vowes may heedfully be broken,
And he wants wit, that wants resolu'd will,
To learne his wit, to exchange the bad for better;
Hee, hee, vnreuerend tongue, to call her bad,
Whose souerainty so oft thou hast preferd,
With twenty thousand soule-confirming oathes,
I cannot leaue to loue; and yet I doe:
But there I leaue to loue, where I should loue.
Julia I loose, and Valentine I loose,
If I keepe them, I needs must loose my selfe:
If I loose them, thus finde I by their losse,
For Valentine, my selfe: for Julia, Silvia.
I to my selfe am deerer then a friend,
For Loue is still most precious in it selfe,
And Silvia (witness heauen that made her faire)
Shewes Julia but a swarthy Ethiopie:
I will forget that Julia is aliuie,
Remembring that my Loue to her is dead,
And Valentine Ile hold an Enemy,
Ayming at Silvia as a sweeter friend,
I cannot now proue constant to my selfe,
Withont some treachery vs'd to Valentine.
This night he meaneth with a Corded-ladder
To climbe celestiall Silvia's chamber window,
My selfe in counsaile his competitor.
Now presently Ile giue her father notice
Of their disguising and pretended flight:
Who (all intrag'd) will banish Valentine:
For Thurio he intends shall wed his daughter,
But Valentine being gon, Ile quickly crosse
By some sle trick, blunt Thurio's dull proceeding.
Loue lend me wings, to make my purpose swift
As thou hast lent me wit, to plot this drift.

Exit.

Scena septima.

Enter Iulia and Lucetta.

Iul. Counsaile, Lucetta, gentle girle assist me,
And eu'n in kinde loue, I doe comure thee,
Who art the Table wherein all my thoughts
Are visibly Character'd, and engrau'd,
To lesson me, and tell me some good meane
How with my honour I may undertake
A journey to my louing Protheus.

Luc. Alas, the way is wearisome and long.

Iul. A true-deuoted Pilgrime is not weary
To measure Kingdomes with his feeble steps,
Much lesse shall she that hath Loues wings to flie,
And when the flight is made to one so deere,
Of such diuine perfection as Sir Protheus.

Luc. Better forbear, till Protheus make returne.

Iul. Oh, know'st thou not, his looks are my soules food?
Pitty the dearth that I haue pined in,
By longing for that food so long a time.
Didst thou but know the inly touch of Loue,
Thou wouldst as soone goe kindle fire with snow
As seeke to quench the fire of Loue with words.

Luc. I doe not seeke to quench your Loues hot fire,
But qualifie the fires extreame rage,
Lest it should burne aboute the bounds of reason.

Iul. The more thou dam'st it vp, the more it burnes
The Current that with gentle murmure glides
(Thou know'st) being stop'd, impatiently doth rage
But when his faire course is not hindered,
He makes sweet musicke with th'enameld stones,
Giuing a gentle kisse to euery sedge
He ouer-taketh in his pilgrimage.

And lo by many winding hookes he straits
With willing sport to the wilde Ocean
Then let me goe, and hinder not my course -
Ile be as patient as a gentle streame,
And make a pastime of each weary step,
Till the last step haue brought me to my Loue,
And there Ile rest, as after much turmoile
A blessed soule doth in Elizium.

Luc. But in what habit will you goe along?

Iul. Not like a woman, for I would preuent
The loose encounters of lasciuious men -
Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weedes
As may besee me some well reputed Page.

Luc. Why then your Ladiship must cut your haire.

Iul. No girle, Ile knit it vp in silken strings,
With twentie od-conceited true-love knots:
To be fantastique, may become a youth
Of greater time then I shall shew to be. (ches?)

Luc. What fashion (Madam) shall I make your bree-

Iul. That fits as well, as tell me (good my Lord)
What compasse will you weare your Farthingale?
Why eu'n what fashion, thou best likes (Lucetta.)

Luc. You must needs haue the with a cod peece (Ma-

Iul. Out, out, (Lucetta) that wilbe illfauour'd (dam)

Luc. A round hose (Madam) now's not worth a pin Vnlesse you haue a cod-peece to stick pins on.

Iul. Lucetta, as thou lou'st me let me haue
What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly.
But tell me (wench) how will the world repute me
For vndertaking so vnstaid a journey?

I feare me it will make me scandaliz'd.

Luc. If you thinke so, then stay at home, and go not.

Iul. Nay, that I will not.

Luc. Then neuer dreame on Infamy, but go:

If Protheus like your iourney, when you come,
No matter who's displeas'd, when you are gone:
I feare me he will scarce be pleas'd with all.

Iul. That is the least (Lucetta) of my feate:

A thousand oathes, an Ocean of his teares,
And instances of infinite of Loue,
Warrant me welcome to my Protheus.

Luc. All these are seruants to deceitfull men.

Iul. Base men, that vse them to so base effect;
But truer starres did gouerne Protheus birth,
His words are bonds, his oathes are oracles,
His loue sincere, his thoughts immaculate,
His teares, pure messengers, sent from his heart,
His heart, as far from fraud, as heaven from earth.

Luc. Pray heau'n he proue so when you come to him.

Iul. Now, as thou lou'st me, do him not that wrong,
To beare a hard opinion of his truth -
Onely deserue my loue, by losing him,
And presently goe with me to my chamber
To take a note of what I stand in need of,
To furnish me vpon my longing iourney:
All that is mine I leaue at thy dispose,
My goods, my Lands, my reputarion,
Onely, in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence:
Come, answer not - but to it presently,
I am impatient of my tartiance.

Exeunt.

Actus Tertius, Scena Prima.

Enter D. ke, Thurio, Protheus, Valentine,
Launce, Speed.

Duke Sir Thurio, giue vs leaue (I pray) a while,
We haue some secrets to confer about.

Now tell me Protheus, what's your will with me?

Pro. My gracious Lord, that which I wold discouer,

The Law of friendship bids me to conceale,
But when I call to minde your gracious fauours
Done to me (vndeferuig as I am)

My dutie pricks me on to vtter that
Which else, no worldly good should draw from me:

Know (worthy Prince) Sir Valentine my friend

This night intends to steale away your daughter:

My selfe am one made priuy to the plot.

I know you haue determin'd to bestow her

On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates,

And should she thus be stolne away from you,

It would be much vexation to your age.

Thus (for my duties sake) I rather chuse

To crosse my friend in his intended drift,

Then (by concealing it) heap on your head

A pack of sorrowes, which would presse you downe

(Being vnpreuented) to your timelesse graue.

Duke. Protheus, I thank thee for thine honest care,

Which to requite, command me while I liue,

This loue of theirs, my selfe haue often scene,

Haply when they haue iudg'd me fast asleepe,

And oftentimes haue purpos'd to forbid

Sir

Sir Valentine her companie, and my Court.
But fearing lest my ieiulous myne might erre,
And so (vntworthily) disgrace the man
(A rashnesse that I euer yet haue shun'd)
I gaue him gentle lookes, thereby to finde
That which thy selfe hast now disclos'd to me.
And that thou maist perceiue my feare of this,
Knowing that tender youth is soone suggested,
I rightly lodge her in an upper Towre,
The key whereof, my selfe haue euer kept:
And thence she cannot be conuay'd away.

Pro. Know (noble Lord) they haue deuiz'd a meane
How he her chamber-window will ascend;
And with a Corded-ladder fetch her downe:
For which, the youthfull Louer now is gone,
And this way comes he with it presently
Where (if it please you) you may intercept him.
But (good my Lord) doe it so cunningly
That my discouery be not armed at:
For, loue of you, not hate vnto my friend,
Hath made me publisher of this pretence.

Duke. Vpon mine Honor, he shall neuer know
That I had any light from thee of this.

Pro. Adieu, my Lord, Sir Valentine is coming.

Duk. Sir Valentine, whether away so fast?

Val. Please it your Grace, there is a Messenger
That stayes to beare my Letters to my friends,
And I am going to deliuer them.

Duk. Be they of much import?

Val. The repute of them doth but signifie
My health, and happy being at your Court.

Duk. Nay then no matter: stay with me a while,
I am to breake with thee of some affaires
That touch me neere: wherein thou must be secret.
'Tis not vnkown to thee, that I haue sought
To match my friend Sir Thurio, to my daughter.

Val. I know it well (my Lord) and sure the Match
Were rich and honourable: besides, the gentleman
Is full of Verue, Bounty, Worth, and Qualities
Beseeming such a Wife, as your faire daughter:
Cannot your Grace win her to fancie him?

Duk. No, trust me, She is peeuish, fullen, stoward, Prowd, disobedient, stubborne, lacking duty,
Neither regarding that she is my childe,
Nor fearing me, as if I were her father:
And may I say to thee, this pride of hers
(Vpon aduise) hath drawne my loue from her,
And where I thought the remnant of mine age
Should haue bene cherish'd by her child-like dutie,
I know am full resolu'd to take a wife,
And turne her out, to who will take her in:
Then let her beauty be her wedding dowre
For me, and my possessions she esteemes not.

Val. What would your Grace haue me to do in this?

Duk. There is a Lady in Verona heere
Whom I affect: but she is nice, and coy,
And naught esteemes my aged eloquence.
Now therefore would I haue thee to my Tutor
(For long agoe I haue forgot to court,
Besides the fashion of the time is chang'd)
How, and which way I may bestow my selfe
To be regarded in her sun-bright eye.

Val. Win her with gifts, if she respects not words,
Dumbe Jewels often in their silent kinde
More then quicke words, doe moue a womans minde.

Duk. But she did scorne a present that I sent her,

Val. A woman sometime scorns what best contents her.
Send her another: neuer giue her ore,
For scorne at first, makes after-loue the more.
If she doe frowne, 'tis not in hate of you,
But rather to beget more loue in you.
If she doe chide, 'tis not to haue you gone,
For why, the fooles are mad, if left alone.
Take no repulse, what euer she doth say,
For, get you gon, she doth not meane away.
Flatter, and praise, commend, extoll their graces:
Though nere so blacke, say they haue Angells faces,
That man that hath a tongue, I say is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman.

Duk. But she I meane, is promis'd by her friends
Vnto a youthfull Gentleman of worth,
And kept seuerely from resort of men,
That no man hath access by day to her.

Val. Why then I would resort to her by night.

Duk. I, but the doores be lockt, and keyes kept safe,
That no man hath recourse to her by night.

Val. What lets but one may enter at her window?

Duk. Her chamber is aloft, far from the ground,
And built so sheluing, that one cannot climbe it
Without apparant hazard of his life.

Val. Why then a Ladder quaintly made of Cords
To cast vp, with a paire of anchoring hookes,
Would serue to scale another Hero's towre,
So bold Leander would adventure it.

Duk. Now as thou art a Gentleman of blood
Aduise me, where I may haue such a Ladder.

Val. When would you vse it? pray sir, tell me that.

Duk. This very night; for Loue is like a childe
That longs for euery thing that he can come by.

Val. By teauen a clocke, ile get you such a Ladder.

Duk. But harke thee: I will goe to her alone,
How shall I best conuey the Ladder thither?

Val. It will be light (my Lord) that you may beare it
Vnder a cloake, that is of any length.

Duk. A cloake as long as thine will serue the turne?

Val. I my good Lord.

Duk. Then let me see thy cloake;
Ile get me one of such another length.

Val. Why any cloake will serue the turn (my Lord)

Duk. How shall I fashion me to wear a cloake?

I pray thee let me feele thy cloake vpon me.

What Letter is this same? what's here? to Silvia?

And heere an Engue fit for my proceeding,

Ile be so bold to breake the scale for once.

*My thoughts do harbour with my Silvia nightly,
And flanes they are to me, that send them flying.
Oh, could their Master come, and goe at lightly,
Himselfe would lodge where (sencels) they are lying.
My Herald Thoughts, in thy pure bosome rest-them
While I (their King) that thinke them importane
Doe curse the grace, that with such grace hath blest them,
Because my selfe doe want my seruants fortune.
I curse my selfe, for they are sent by me,
That they should harbour where their Lord should be.*

What's here? Silvia, this night I will enfranchise thee
'Tis so: and heere's the Ladder for the purpose.
Why Phaeton (for thou art Merops sonne)
Wilt thou aspire to guide the heavenly Car?
And with thy daring folly burne the world?
Wilt thou reach stars, because they shine on thee?

Goe base Intruder, over-weetning Slave,
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equall mates,
And thinke my patience (more then thy desert)
Is priuledge for thy departure hence.
Thanke me for this, more then for all thy fauors
Which (all too much) I haue bestowed on thee.
But if thou linger in my Territories
Longer then swiftest expedition
Will giue thee time to leaue our royall Court,
By heauen, my wrath shall farre exceed the loue
I euer bore thy daughter, or thy selfe.
Be gone, I will not heare thy vaine excuse,
But as thou lou'st thy life, make speed from hence.

Val. And why not death, rather then liuing torment?

To die, is to be banish'd from my selfe,
And Silua is my selfe: banish'd from her
Is selfe from selfe. A deadly banishment:
What light, is light, if Silua be not seene?
What day is day, if Silua be not by?
Vnlesse it be to thinke that she is by
And feed vpon the shadow of perfection.
Except I be by Silua in the night,
There is no musick in the Nightingale.
Vnlesse I looke on Silua in the day,
There is no day for me to looke vpon.
Shee is my essence, and I leaue to be;
If I be not by her faire influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept aliuie.
I flie not death, to flie his deadly doome,
Tarry I heere, I but attend on death,
But flie thence, I flie away from life.

Pro. Run (boy) run, run, and seeke him out.

Lau. So-hough, So-hough

Pro. What seest thou?

Lau. Him we goe to fiddle,
There's not a haire on's head, but 'tis a Valentine.

Pro. Valentine?

Val. No.

Pro. Who then? his Spirit?

Val. Neither,

Pro. What then?

Val. Nothing.

Lau. Can nothing speake? Master, shall I strike?

Pro. Who wouldst thou strike?

Lau. Nothing.

Pro. Villaine, forbear.

Lau. Why Sir, Ile strike nothing: I pray you.

Pro. Sirha, I say forbear: friend Valentine, a word.

Val. My eares are stoppt, & cannot hear good newes,
So much of bad already hath possesst them.

Pro. Then in dumbe silence will I bury mine,
For they are harsh, vn-tuneable, and bad.

Val. Is Silua dead?

Pro. No, Valentine.

Val. No Valentine indeed, for sacred Silua,
Hath she forsworne me?

Pro. No, Valentine

Val. No Valentine, if Silua haue forsworne me.
What is your newes?

Lau. Sir, there is a proclamation, y you are vanisht.

Pro. That thou art banish'd: oh that's the newes,
From hence, from Silua, and from me thy friend.

Val. Oh, I haue sed vpon this woe already,
And now excesse of it will make me suffer.

Doth Silua know that I am banish'd?

Pro. I, I: and she hath offered to the doome

(Which vn-reuerst stands in effectfull force)

A Sea of melting pearle, which some call teares;
Those at her fathers churlish feete she tenderd,
With them vpon her knees, her humble selfe,
Wringing her hands, whose whitenesse so became them,
As if but now they waxed pale for woe:
But neither bended knees, pure hands held vp,
Sad sighes, deepe grones, nor siluer-shedding teares
Could penetrate her vncompassionate Sire;
But Valentine, if he be tane, must die.
Besides, her intercession cha'd him so,
When she for thy repeale was suppliant,
That to close prison he commanded her,
With many bitter threats of biding there.

Val. No more: vnles the next word that thou speake'tt
Haue some malignant power vpon my life:

If so: I pray thee breath it in mine eare,
As ending Antheme of my endlesse dolor.

Pro. Cease to lament for that thou canst not helpe,
And study helpe for that which thou lament'st,
Time is the Nurse, and breeder of all good;
Here, if thou stay, thou canst not see thy loue:
Besides, thy staying will abridge thy life:
Hope is a louers staffe, walke hence with that
And manage it, againt despairing thoughts:
Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence,
Which, being writ to me, shall be deliuer'd
Euen in the milke-white bosome of thy Loue.
The time now serues not to expostulate,
Come, Ile conuey thee through the City-gate.
And ere I part with thee, confer at large
Of all that may concerne thy Loue-affaires:
As thou lou'st Silua (though not for thy selfe)
Regard thy danger, and along with me.

Val. I pray thee Lauince, and if thou seest my Boy
Bid him make haste, and meet me at the North-gate.

Pro. Goe sirha, finde him out: Come Valentine.

Val. Oh my deere Silua, haplesse Valentine.

Lauince. I am but a foole, looke you, and yet I haue the witto thinke my Master is a kinde of a knaue: but that's all one, if he be but one knaue. He liues not now that knowes me to be in loue, yet I am in loue, but a Teeme of horse shall not plucke that from me: nor who
'tis I loue: and yet 'tis a woman; but what woman, I will not tell my selfe: and yet 'tis a Milke-maid: yet 'tis not a maid: for shee hath had Gossips: yet 'tis a maid, for she is her Masters maid, and serues for wages. Shee hath more qualities then a Water-Spannell, which is much in a bare Christian: Heere is the Cate-log of her Condition. Inprimis. Shee can fetch and carry: why a horse can doe no more; nay, a horse cannot fetch, but onely carry, therefore is shee better then a Iade. Item.
Shee can milke, looke you, a sweet vertue in a maid with cleane hands.

Speed. How now Signior Lauince? what newes with your Mastership?

Lau. With my Mastership? why, it is at Sea:

Sp. Well, your old vice still: mistake the word: what newes then in your paper?

Lau. The black'st newes that euer thou heard'st.

Sp. Whyman? how blacke?

Lau. Why, as blacke as Inke.

Sp. Let me read them?

Lau. Fie on thee Iote-head, thou canst not read.

Sp. Thou lyest: I can.

Lau. I will try thee: tell me this: who begot thee?

Sp. Marry,

Sp. Marry, the son of my Grand-father.
La. Oh illiterate loyterer; it was the sonne of thy Grand-mother: this proues that thou canst not read.
Sp. Come spole, come: try me in thy paper.
La. There: and S. Nicholas be thy speed.
Sp. Inprimis she can milke.
La. I that she can.
Sp. Item, she brewes good Ale.
La. And thereof comes the prouerbe: (Blessing of your heart, you brew good Ale.)
Sp. Item, she can sowe.
La. That's as much as to say (Can she sow?)
Sp. Item she can knit.
La. What neede a man care for a stock with a wench, When she can knit him a stocke?
Sp. Item, she can wash and scoure.
La. A speciall vertue: for then shee neede not be wash'd, and scowr'd
Sp. Item, she can spin.
La. Then may I set the world on wheelles, when she can spin for her liuing.
Sp. Item, she hath many namelesse vertues.
La. That's as much as to say Bastard-vertues: that indeede know not their fathers; and therefore haue no names.
Sp. Here follow her vices.
La. Close at the heeles of her vertues
Sp. Item, shee is not to be fasting in respect of her breath.
La. Well: that fault may be mended with a breakfast read on.
Sp. Item, she hath a sweet mouth.
La. That makes amends for her soure breath.
Sp. Item, she doth talke in her sleepe.
La. It's no matter for that; so shee sleepe not in her talke.
Sp. Item, she is slow in words.
La. Oh villaine, that set this downe among her vices; To be slow in words, is a womans onely vertue I pray thee out with't, and place it for her chiefe vertue
Sp. Item, she is proud.
La. Out with that too:
 It was Euer legacie, and cannot be t'ane from her.
Sp. Item, she hath no teeth.
La. I care not for that neither: because I loue trusts
Sp. Item, she is curst.
La. Well: the best is, she hath no teeth to bite.
Sp. Item, she will often praise her liquor.
La. If her liquor be good, she shall if she will not, I will, for good things should be praised.
Sp. Item, she is too liberal.
La. Of her tongue she cannot; for that's writ downe she is slow of: of her purse, shee shall not, for that she keepe shut. Now, of another thing shee may, and that cannot I helpe. Well, proceede.
Sp. Item, shee hath more haire then wit, and more faults then haire, and more wealth then faults.
La. Stop there. Ile haue her. she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last Article rehearse that once more.
Sp. Item, she hath more haire then wit.
La. More haire then wit: it may be ille proue it: The couer of the salt, hides the salt, and therefore it is more then the salt; the haire that couers the wit, is more then the wit; for the greater hides the lesse: What's next?

Sp. And more faults then haire,
La. That's monstrous: oh that that were our.
Sp. And more wealth then faults.
La. Why that word makes the faults gracious: Well, ile haue her: and if it be a match, as nothing is impossible.
Sp. What then?
La. Why then, will I tell thee, that thy Master staires for thee at the North gate.
Sp. For me?
La. For thee? I, who art thou? he hath staid for a better man then thee.
Sp. And must I goe to him?
La. Thou must run to him; for thou hast staid so long, that going will scarce serue the turne.
Sp. Why didst not tell me sooner? 'pox of your loue Letters
La. Now will he be swing'd for reading my Letter, A mannerly slaue, that will thrust himselfe into secrets: Ile after, to reioyce in the boyes correction. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Duke, Thurio, Protheus.

Du. Sir Thurio, feare not, but that she will loue you Now Valentine is banish'd from her sight.
Th. Since his exile she hath despis'd me most, Forworne my company, and rail'd at me, That I am desperate of obtaining her.
Du. This weake impresse of Loue, is as a figure Trenched in ice, which with an houres heate Dissolues to water, and doth loose his forme. A little time will melt her frozen thoughts, And worthless Valentine shall be forgot. How now sir Protheus, is your countiman (According to our Proclamation) gon?
Pro. Gon, my good Lord.
Du. My daughter takes his going grieuously?
Pro. A little time (my Lord) will kill that griefe.
Du. So I beleue: but Thurio thinks not so:
Protheus, the good conceit I hold of thee, (For thou hast showne some signe of good desert) Makes me the better to confer with thee.
Pro. Longer then I proue loyall to your Grace, Let me not liue, to looke vpon your Grace.
Du. Thou know'st how willingly, I would effect The match betwene sir Thurio, and my daughter?
Pro. I doe my Lord.
Du. And also, I thinke, thou art not ignorant How she opposes her against my will?
Pro. She did my Lord, when Valentine was here.
Du. I, and peruersly, she persueers so What might we doe to make the girl forget The loue of Valentine, and loue sir Thurio?
Pro. The best way is, to slander Valentine, With falsehood, cowardize, and poore discent: Three things, that women highly hold in hate.
Du. I, but she'll thinke, that it is spoke in hate,
Pro. I, if his enemy deliuer it.
 Therefore it must with circumstance be spoken By one, whom she esteemeth as his friend.
Du. Then you must vndertake to slander him,

Pro.

Pro. And that (my Lord) I shall be leath to her
 'Tis an ill office for a Gentleman,
 Especially against his very friend.

Dr. Whence we go, I would commend it to myself.
 You stander not in a damage here;
 Therefore the office is in his friend,
 Being interested to a by your self.

Pro. You have perill'd my Lord's life, and
 By your self, I can take him duplicity,
 She shall not be in a damage here,
 But say this, and I shall be from his friend,
 It follows with a will that I shall be from him.

Th. Therefore, I shall be from his friend,
 Least I should be such, as the good man is,
 You must not do this, as the good man is,
 Which must be do, by your self, as the good man is,
 As you, I would be from his friend.

Pro. And Pro. I shall be from his friend,
 Because we know, for the good man is,
 You shall be from his friend, as the good man is,
 And as the good man is, as the good man is,
 Upon this, as the good man is, as the good man is,
 Where you shall be from his friend, as the good man is,
 For the good man is, as the good man is,
 And I shall be from his friend, as the good man is,
 Where you shall be from his friend, as the good man is,
 To be from his friend, as the good man is.

Pro. As much as I shall be from his friend,
 But you shall be from his friend, as the good man is,
 You shall be from his friend, as the good man is,
 By the good man is, as the good man is,
 Should be from his friend, as the good man is.

Dr. I shall be from his friend, as the good man is.

Pro. Say that you shall be from his friend,
 You shall be from his friend, as the good man is,
 Write it, you shall be from his friend, as the good man is,
 Write it, you shall be from his friend, as the good man is,
 That may be from his friend, as the good man is,
 For Orpheus Lute, as the good man is,
 Whose god shall be from his friend, as the good man is,
 Make it, you shall be from his friend, as the good man is,
 For the good man is, as the good man is,
 After your dire lament, as the good man is,
 Visit by night your Lady, as the good man is,
 With some sweet Comfort, as the good man is,
 Tune a deploring dumper, as the good man is,
 Will well become such sweet complaint, as the good man is,
 This, or else nothing, as the good man is.

Dr. This displeasure, shows thou hast been in love.

Th. And thy advice, this night, I'll put in practice.
 Therefore, sweet Pro. I shall be from his friend,
 Let us into the City presently
 To sort some Gentleman, well skill'd in Musick,
 I have a Sonnet, that will serve the turn
 To give the on-set to thy good advice.

Dr. About it Gentleman.

Pro. We'll wait upon your Grace, till after Supper,
 And afterward determine our proceeding.

Dr. Even now about it, I will pardon you. Exeunt.

Val. I take your offer; and will lue with you, (fer'd.
 Provided that you do no outrages
 On silly women, or poore passengers.
 3. Out. No, we detest such vile base pra'ctises.
 Come, goe with vs, we'll bring thee to our Crewes,
 And show thee all the Treasures we haue got;
 Which, with our selues, all rest at thy dispose. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Protheus, Thurio, Julia, Host, Musitian, Silvia.

Pro Already haue I bin false to Valentine,
 And now I must be as vntrue to Thurio,
 Vnder the colour of commending him,
 I haue access'd my owne loue to prefer.
But Silvia is too faire, too true, too holy,
 To be corrupted with my worthless gifts;
 When I protest true loyalty to her,
 She twits me with my falsehood to my friend;
 When to her beauty I commend my vowe,
 She bids me thinke how I haue bin forsworne
 In breaking faith with Julia, whom I lou'd;
 And notwithstanding all her sodaine quips,
 The least whereof would quell a louers hope -
 Yet (Spaniel-like) the more she spurnes my loue,
 The more it growes, and fawneth on her still;
 But here comes Thurio; now must we to her window,
 And giue some euening Musique to her care.
Th. How now, sir Protheus, are you crept before vs?
Pro. I gentle Thurio, for you know that loue
 Will creepe in seruice, where it cannot goe.
Th. I, but I hope, Sir, that you loue not here.
Pro. Sir, but I doe. or else I would be hence.
Th. Who, Silvia?
Pro. I, Silvia, for your sake.
Th. I thanke you for your owne. Now Gentlemen
 Let's tune and to it lustily a while.
Ho Now, my yong guests; me thinks your' allycholly;
 I pray you why is it?
Th. Marry (mine Host) because I cannot be merry.
Ho Come, we'll haue you merry. Ile bring you where you shall heare Musique, and see the Gentleman that you ask'd for.
Th. But shall I heare him speake
Ho. I that you shall.
Th. That will be Musique.
Ho. Harke, harke.
Th. Is he among these?
Ho. I. but peace, let's heare'm.

Song Who is Silvia? what is she -
 That all our Swaines commend her?
 Holy, faire, and wise is she,
 The beauen such grace did lend her,
 That she might admiue be.
 Is she kinde as she is faire?
 For beauty liues with kindnesse:
 Loue doth to her eyes repaire,
 To helpe him of his blindnesse:

*And being help'd, inhabits there,
 Then to Silvia, let vs sing,
 That Silvia is excelling;
 She excels each mortall thing
 Vpon the dull earth dwelling.
 To her let vs Garlands bring.*

Ho. How now? are you sadder then you were before;
 How doe you, man? the Musicke likes you not.
Th. You mistake the Musitian likes me not.
Ho. Why, my pretty youth?
Th. He plaies false (father)
Ho. How, out of tune on the strings.
Th. Not so: but yet
 So false that he grieues my very heart-strings.
Ho. You haue a quicke eare. (heart.
Th. I, I would I were deafe: it makes me haue a slow
Ho. I perceiue you delight not in Musique.
Th. Not a whit, when it is so.
Ho. Harke, what fine change is in the Musique.
Th. I that change is the spight.
Ho. You would haue them alwaies play but one thing.
Th. I would alwaies haue one play but one thing.
 But Host, doth this Sir Protheus, that we talke on,
 Often resort vnto this Gentlewoman?
Ho. I tell you what Lance his man told me,
 He lou'd her out of all niche.
Th. Where is Lance?
Ho. Gone to seeke his dog, which to morrow, by his Masters command, hee must carry for a present to his Lady.
Th. Peace, stand aside, the company parts.
Pro. Sir Thurio, feare not you, I will so pleade,
 That you shall say, my cunning drift excels.
Th. Where meete we?
Pro. At Saint Gregories well.
Th. Farewell.
Pro. Madam good eu'n to your Ladishipp.
Sil. I thanke you for your Musique (Gentlemen)
 Who is that that spake?
Pro. One (Lady) if you knew his pure hearts truth,
 You would quickly learne to know him by his voice.
Sil. Sir Protheus, as I take it.
Pro. Sir Protheus (gentle Lady) and your Seruant.
Sil. What's your will?
Pro. That I may compass your.
Sil. You haue your wish my will is even this,
 That presently you bid me home to bed.
 Thou subtil, perjur'd, false, disloyall man:
 Think'st thou I am so shallow, so conceitlese,
 To be seduced by thy flattery,
 That has't deceiu'd so many with thy vowe?
 Returne, returne and make thy loue amends:
 For me (by this pale queene of night I sweare)
 I am so farre from granting thy request,
 That I despise thee, for thy wrongfull suite;
 And by and by intend to chide my selfe,
 Euen for this time I spend in talking to thee.
Pro. I grant (sweet loue) that I did loue a Lady,
 But she is dead.
Th. 'Twere false, if I should speake it;
 For I am sure she is not buried.
Sil. Say that she be: yet Valentine thy friend
 Suruiues; to whom (thy selfe art witness)
 I am betroth'd; and art thou not asham'd
 To wrong him, with thy importunacy?

Pro.

Pro. I likewise heare that Valentine is dead,

Sil. And so suppose am I; for in her graue
Assure thy selfe, my loue is buried.

Pro. Sweet Lady, let me take it from the earth.

Sil. Goe to thy Ladies graue and call hers thence,
Or at the least, in hers, sepulcher thine.

Iul. He heard not that.

Pro. Madam: if your heart be so obdurate:
Vouchsafe me yet your Picture for my loue,
The Picture that is hanging in your chamber:
To that ile speake, to that ile sigh and weepe
For since the substance of your perfect selfe
Is else deuoted, I am but a shadow;

And to your shadow, will I make true loue.

Iul. If 'twere a substance you would sure deceiue it,
And make it but a shadow, as I am.

Sil. I am very loath to be your Idoll Sit;
But, since your falsehood shall become you well
To worship shadowes, and adore false shap'es,
Send to me in the morning, and ile send it:
And so, good rest.

Pro. As wretches haue ore-night
That wait for execution in the morne.

Iul. Hoff, will you goe?

Ho. By my hallidome, I was fast asleepe.

Iul. Pray you, where lies Sir Protheus?

Ho. Marry, at my house:

Trust me, I thinke 'tis almost day.

Iul. Not so; but it hath bin the longest night
That ere I watch'd, and the most heauiest.

Scœna Tertia.

Enter Eglamore, Siluia.

Eg. This is the houre that Madam Silvia
Entreated me to call, and know her minde:
There's some great matter she'd employ me in,
Madam, Madam.

Sil. Who calls?

Eg. Your seruant, and your friend,
One that attends your Ladiships command.

Sil. Sir Eglamore, a thousand times good morrow.

Eg. As many (worthy Lady) to your selfe.

According to your Ladiships impose,
I am thus early come, to know what seruice
It is your pleasure to command me in.

Sil. Oh Eglamore, thou art a Gentleman:
Thinke not I flatter (for I sweare I doe not)
Valiant, wise, remorse-full, well accomplish'd.
Thou art not ignorant what deere good will
I beare vnto the banish'd Valentine:
Nor how my father would enforce me marry
Vaine Thurio (whom my very soule abhor'd).
Thy selfe hast lou'd, and I haue heard thee say
No griefe did ever come so neere thy heart,
As when thy Lady, and thy true-loue did,
Vpon whose Graue thou vow'dst pure chastitie:
Sir Eglamore, I would to Valentine
To Mantua, where I heare, he makes aboad;
And for the waies are dangerous to passe,
I doe desire thy worthy company,

Vpon whose faith and honour, I repose.

Virge not my fathers anger (Eglamore)

But thinke vpon my griefe (a Ladies griefe)

And on the iustice of my flying hence,

To keepe me from a most vnholy match,

Which heauen and fortune still rewards with plagues.

I doe desire thee, euen from a heart

As full of sorrowes, as the Sea of sands,

To beare me company, and goe with me

If not, to hide what I haue said to thee,

That I may venture to depart alone.

Egl. Madam, I pittie much your grievances,

Which, since I know they vertuously art plac'd,

I giue consent to goe along with you,

Wreacking as little what betideth me,

As much, I wish all good before you.

When will you goe?

Sil. This evening coming.

Eg. Where shall I meeete you?

Sil. At Friar Patrickes Cell,

Where I intend holy Confession.

Eg. I will not faile your Ladiship:

Good morrow (gentle Lady.)

Sil. Good morrow, kinde Sir Eglamore. Exeunt.

Scœna Quarta.

Enter Lurce, Protheus, Iulia, Siluia.

Lur. When a mans seruant shall play the Curre with him (looke you) it goes hard: one that I brought vp of a puppy: one that I sau'd from drowning, when three or four of his blinde brothers and sisters went to it: I haue taught him (euen as one would say precisely, thus I would teach a dog) I was sent to deliuer him, as a present to Mistress Silvia, from my Master; and I came so sooner into the dying-chamber, but he steps me to her Trencher, and steals her Capons-leg: O, 'tis a foule thing, when a Cur cannot keepe himselfe in all companies: I would haue (as one should say) one that takes vp-on him to be a dog indeede, to be, as it were, a dog at all things. If I had not had more wit then he, to take a faule vpon me that he did, I thinke verily hee had bin hang'd for't: sure as I liue he had suffer'd for't: you shall iudge:
Hee thrusts me himselfe into the company of three or four gentleman-like-dogs, vnder the Dukes table: hee had not bin there (bless the marke) a pissing while, but all the chamber smelt him: out with the dog (saies one) what cur is that (saies another) whip him out (saies the third) hang him vp (saies the Duke.) I hauing bin acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab; and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogges: friend (quoth I) you meane to whip the dog: I marry doe I (quoth he) you doe him the more wrong (quoth I) 'twas
I did the thing you wor of: he makes me no more adoe, but whips me out of the chamber: how many Masters would doe this for his Seruant? nay, ile be sworne I haue sat in the stocks, for puddings he hath stolne, otherwise he had bin executed: I haue stood on the Pillorie for Geese he hath kil'd, otherwise he had suffer'd for't: thou thinkest not of this now: nay, I remember the tricke you seru'd me, when I tooke my leaue of Madam Silvia: did not

not I bid thee still marke me, and doe as I do; when did'st thou see me heaue vp my leg, and make water against a Gentlewomans farthingale? did'st thou euer see me doe such a trick?

Pro. Sebastian is thy name: I like thee well, And will imploy thee in some seruice presently.

Iu. In what you please, I'll doe what I can.

Pro. I hope thou wilt

How now you whor-son pezzant, Where haue you bin these two dayes loytering?

La. Marry Sir, I carried Mistris Silua the dogge you bad me.

Pro. And what saies she to my little Jewell?

La. Marry she saies your dog was a cur, and tels you currish thanks is good enough for such a present.

Pro. But she receiu'd my dog?

La. No indeede did she not:

Here haue I brought him backe againe.

Pro. What, didst thou offer her this from me?

La. I Sir, the other Squirrill was stolne from me By the Hangmans boyes in the market place, And then I offer'd her mine owne, who is a dog As big as ten of yours, & therefore the guilt the greater.

Pro. Goe, get thee hence, and finde my dog againe, Or nere returne againe into my sight.

Away, I say. stayest thou to vex me here; A Slaue, that still an end, turnes me to shame.

Sebastian, I haue entertained thee, Partly that I haue neede of such a youth, That can with some discretion doe my businesse. For 'tis no trusting to yond foolish Lowe; But chiefly, for thy face, and thy behaviour, Which (if my Augury deceiue me not) Witnesse good bringing vp, fortune, and truth. Therefore know thee, for this I entertaine thee. Go presently, and take this Ring with thee, Deliuier it to Madam Silua, She lou'd me well, deliuer'd it to me.

Iu. It seemes you lou'd not her, not leaue her token She is dead belike?

Pro. Not so. I thinke she liues.

Iu. Alas.

Pro. Why do'st thou cry alas?

Iu. I cannot chooseth but pity her.

Pro. Wherefore should'st thou pity her?

Iu. Because, methinkes that she lou'd you as well

As you doe loue your Lady Silua. She dreames on him, that has forgot her loue, You doate on her, that cares not for your ioue. 'Tis pittie Loue, should be so contrary. And thinking on it, makes me cry alas

Pro. Well giue her that Ring, and therewithall This Letter - that's her chamber. Tell my Lady, I claime the promise for her heavenly Picture. Your message done, hie home vnto my chamber, Where thou shalt finde me sad, and solitarie

Iu. How many women would doe such a message?

Alas poore Protheus, thou hast entertain'd A Foxe, to be the Shepheard of thy Lambs;

Alas, poore foole, why doe I pittie him That with his very heart despiseth me? Because he loues her, he despiseth me, Because I loue him, I must pittie him. This Ring I giue him, when he parted from me, To binde him to remember my good will And now am I (vnhappy Messenger)

To plead for that, which I would not obtaine; To carry that, which I would haue refus'd, To praise his faith, which I would haue disprais'd, I am my Masters true confirmed Loue, But cannot be true seruant to my Master, Vnlesse I proue false traitor to my selfe.

Yet will I woe for him, but yet so coldly, As (heauen it knowes) I would not haue him speed Gentlewoman, good day. I pray you be my meane To bring me where to speake with Madam Silua.

Sil. What would you with her, if that I be she?

Iu. If you be she, I doe inreat your patience To heare me speake the message I am sent on

Sil. From whom?

Iu. From my Master, Sir Protheus, Madam.

Sil. Oh he sends you for a Picture?

Iu. I, Madam.

Sil. Virgula, bring my Picture there, Goe, giue your Master this - tell him from me, One Iulius, that his changing thoughts forget Would better sit his Chamber, then this Shadow

Iu. Madam, please you peruse this Letter; Pardon me (Madam) I haue vnaduis'd Deliu'd you a paper that I should not,

This is the Letter to your Ladiship.

Sil. I pray thee let me looke on that againe.

Iu. It may not be: good Madam pardon me.

Sil. There, hold:

I will not looke vpon your Masters lines. I know they are stuf with protestations, And full of new-found oathes, which he will breake As easily as I doe teare his paper.

Iu. Madam, he sends your Ladiship this Ring.

Sil. The more shame for him, that he sends it me; For I haue heard him say a thousand times, His Iulius gaue it him, at his departure Though his false finger haue prophan'd the Ring, Mine shall not doe his Iulius so much wrong.

Iu. She thanks you.

Sil. What said'st thou?

Iu. I thanke you Madam, that you tender her. Poore Gentlewoman, my Master wrongs her much.

Sil. Do'st thou know her?

Iu. Almost as well as I doe know my selfe. To thinke vpon her woes, I doe protest That I haue wept a hundred severall times.

Sil. Belike she thinks that Protheus hath forsook her?

Iu. I thinke she doth. and that's her cause of sorrow.

Sil. Is she not passing faire?

Iu. She hath bin fairer (Madam) then she is, When she did thinke my Master lou'd her well; She, in my iudgement, was as faire as you. But since she did neglect her looking-glasse, And threw her Sun-expelling Masque away, The ayre hath staru'd the roses in her cheekes, And pinch'd the lilly-tincture of her face, That now she is become as blacke as I.

Sil. How tall was she?

Iu. About my stature; for at Pentecost, When all our Pageants of delight were plaid, Our youth got me to play the womans part, And I was trim'd in Madam Iulias gowne, Which serued me as fit, by all mens iudgements, As if the garment had bin made for me Therefore I know she is about my height, And at that time I made her weepe a good,

For I did play a lamentable part.
(Madam) 'twas Ariadne, passioning
For Theseus periury, and vnjust flight;
Which I so liuely acted with my teares:
That my poore Mistris moued therewithall,
Wept bitterly and would I might be dead,
If I in thought felt not her very sorrow.

Sil. She is beholding to thee (gentle youth)
Alas (poore Lady) desolate, and left;
I weepe my selfe to thinke vpon thy words:
Here youth: there is my purle; I giue thee this (well.
For thy sweet Mistris sake, because thou lou'dst her. Fare-

Int. And she shall thanke you for't, if ere you know
A vertuous gentlewoman, milde, and beautifull. (her.
I hope my Masters suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my Mistris loue so much.
Alas, how loue can trifle with it selfe.
Here is her Picture let me see, I thinke
If I had such a Tyre, this face of mine
Were full as louely, as is this of hers;
And yet the Painter flatter'd her a little,
Vnlesse I flatter with my selfe too much.
Her haire is Abur, mine is perfect Yellow,
If that be all the difference in his loue,
He get me such a coulour'd Perrywig:
Her eyes are grey as glasse, and so are mine.
I, but her fore-head's low, and mine's as high
What should it be that he respects in her,
But I can make respectiue in my selfe?
If this fond Loue, were not a blinded god.
Come shadow, come, and take this shadow vp,
For'tis thy riuall. O thou sencelesse forme,
Thou shalt be worship'd, kiss'd, lou'd, and ador'd;
And were there sence in his Idolatry,
My substance should be statue in thy stead.
He vse thee kindly, for thy Mistris sake
That vs'd me so. or else by Ioue, I vow,
I should haue scratch'd out your vnseeing eyes,
To make my Master out of loue with thee. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Eglamoure, Siluia.

Egl. The Sun begins to guild the western skie,
And now it is about the very houre
That Silvia, at Fryer Patrick's Cell should meet me,
She will not faile, for Lovers breake not houres,
Vnlesse it be to come before their time,
So much they spur their expedition.
See where she comes Lady a happy euening.

Sil. Amen, Amen - goe on (good Eglamoure)
Out at the Posterne by the Abbey wall,
I feare I am attended by some Spies.

Egl. Feare not - the Forrest is not three leagues off,
If we recouer that, we are sure enough. Exeunt.

Scœna Secunda.

Enter Thurio, Prothelus, Iulia, Duke.

Th. Sir Prothelus, what saies Silvia to my suit?

Pro. Oh Sir, I finde her milder then she was,
And yet she takes exceptions at your person.

Thm. What? that my leg is too long?

Pro. No, that it is too little. (der

Thm. He weare a Boote, to make it somewhat roun-

Pro. But loue will not be spurd to what it loathes.

Thm. What saies she to my face?

Pro. She saies it is a faire one.

Thm. Nay then the wanton lyes: my face is blacke.

Pro. But Pearles are faire; and the old saying is,
Blacke men are Pearles, in beauteous Ladies eyes.

Thm. 'Tis true, such Pearles as put out Ladies eyes,
For I had rather winke, then looke on them.

Thm. How likes she my discourse?

Pro. Ill, when you talke of war.

Thm. But well, when I discourse of loue and peace.

Iul. But better indeede, when you hold you peace.

Thm. What saies she to my valour?

Pro. Oh Sir, she makes no doubt of that.

Iul. She needs not, when she knowes it cowardize.

Thm. What saies she to my birth?

Pro. That you are well deriu'd.

Iul. True. from a Gentleman, to a foole.

Thm. Considers she my Possessions?

Pro. Oh, I: and pitties them.

Thm. Wherefore?

Iul. That such an Ass should owe them.

Pro. That they are out by Lease.

Iul. Here comes the Duke.

Du. How now Sir Prothelus; how now Thurio?

Which of you saw Eglamoure of late?

Thm. Not I.

Pro. Not I.

Du. Saw you my daughter?

Pro. Neither.

Du. Why then

She's fled into that pezzant, Valentine;

And Eglamoure is in her Company.

'Tis true. for Fryer Laurence met them both
As he, in pennance wander'd through the Forrest.
Him he knew well: and guerd that it was she,
But being mask'd, he was not sure of it.

Besides she did intend Confession
At Patrick's Cell this euen, and there she was not.
These likelihoods confirme her flight from hence;
Therefore I pray you stand, not to discourse,
But mount you presently, and meeete with me
Vpon the rising of the Mountaine foote
That leads toward Mantua, whether they are fled:
Dispatch (sweet Gentlemen) and follow me.

Thm. Why this it is, to be a peeuish Girle,
That flies her fortune when it followes her:
He after; more to be reueng'd on Eglamoure,
Then for the loue of reck-lesse Silvia.

Pro. And I will follow, more for Silvia's loue
Then hate of Eglamoure that goes with her.

Iul. And I will follow, more to crosse that loue
Then hate for Silvia, that is gone for loue. Exeunt.

Scœna Tertia.

Silvia, On-Lawes.

1. On-L. Come, come be patient:

We

We must bring you to our Captaine.

Sil. A thousand more mischances then this one
Haue learn'd me how to brooke this patiently.

2 Ont. Come, bring her away.

3 Ont. Where is the Gentleman that was with her?

3 Ont. Being nimble footed, he hath out-run vs.
But Moyse and Valerius follow him.

Goe thou with her to the West end of the wood,
There is our Captaine. Wee'll follow him that's fled,
The Thicket is beset, he cannot scape.

1 Ont. Come, I must bring you to our Captains caue.
Feare not: he beares an honourable minde,
And will not use a woman lawlesly.

Sil. O Valentine. this I endure for thee.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Valentine, Prothens, Silua, Julia, Duke, Thurio,
Ont ladies.

Val. How we doth breed a habit in a man?
This shadowy desert, vnfrequented woods
I better brooke then flourishing peopled Townes:
Here can I sit alone, vn-seene of any,
And to the Nightingales complaining Notes
Tune my distresses, and record my woes.
O thou that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leaue not the Mansion so long Tenantlesse,
Left growing ruinous, the building fall,
And leaue no memory of what it was,
Repaire me, with thy presence, Silua.
Thou gentle Nymph, cherish thy forlorne swaine.
What hallowing, and what stir is this to day?
These are my mates, that make their wills their Law,
Haue some vnhappy passenger in chace;
They loue me well: yet I haue much to doe
To keepe them from vnauill outrages.
Withdraw thee Valentine who's this comes heere?

Pro. Madam, this seruice I haue done for you (Though you respect not aught your seruant doth)
To hazard life, and reskew you from him,
That would haue forc'd your honour, and your loue,
Vouchsafe me for my meed, but one faire looke.
(A smaller boone then this I cannot beg,
And lesse then this, I am sure you cannot giue.)

Val. How like a dreame is this? I see, and heare!
Loue, lend me patience to forbear a while.

Sil. O miserable, vnhappy that I am,

Pro. Vnhappy were you (Madam) ere I came -
But by my coming, I haue made you happy

Sil. By thy approach thou mak'st me most vnhappy.

Jul. And me, when he approacheth to your presence,

Sil. Had I beene ceazed by a hungry Lion,
I would haue beene a break-fast to the Beast,
Rather then haue false Prothens reskue me -
Oh heauen be iudge how I loue Valentine,
Whose life's as tender to me as my soule,
And full as much (for more there cannot be)
I doe detest false perur'd Prothens:
Therefore be gone, sollicit me no more.

Pro. What dangerous action, stood it next to death
Would I not vndergoe, for one calme looke:
Oh 'tis the curse in Loue, and still approu'd

When women cannot loue, where they're belou'd.

Sil. When Prothens cannot loue, where he's belou'd.

Read ouer Julia's heart, (thy first best Loue)
For whose deare sake, thou didst then rend thy faith
Into a thousand oathes; and all those oathes,
Descended into perury, to loue me,
Thou hast no faith left now, vnlesse thou'dst two
And that's farre worse then none - better haue none
Then plurall faith, which is too much by one:
Thou Counterfeyt, to thy true friend.

Pro. In Loue,
Who respects friend?

Sil. All men but Prothens.

Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of mouing words
Can no way change you to a milder forme -
He wooe you like a Souldier, at armes end,
And loue you 'gainst the nature of Loue. force ye.

Sil. Oh heauen,

Pro. He force thee yeeld to my desire.

Val. Ruffian; let goe that rude vnauill touch,
Thou friend of an ill fashion.

Pro. Valentine.

Val. Thou comon friend, that's without faith or loue,
For such is a friend now: treacherous man,
Thou hast beguild my hopes; nought but mine eye
Could haue perswaded me: now I dare not say
I haue one friend aloue; thou wouldst disproue me:
Who should be trusted, when ones right hand
Is perur'd to the bosome? Prothens
I am sorry I must neuer trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake -
The priuate wound is deepest: oh time, most accurst:
'Mongst all foes that a friend should be the worst?

Pro. My shame and guilt confounds me:
Forgiue me Valentine if hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient Ransome for offence,
I tender't heere: I doe as truly suffer,
As ere I did commit.

Val. Then I am paid:
And once againe, I doe receiue thee honest;
Who by Repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heauen, nor earth, for these are pleas'd
By Penitence th'Externalls wrath's appeas'd.
And that my loue may appeare plaine and free,
All that was mine, in Silua, I giue thee.

Jul. Oh me vnhappy.

Pro. Look to the Boy.

Val. Why, Boy?

Why wag how now? what's the matter? look vp. speak.

Jul. O good sir, my master charg'd me to deliuer a ring to Madam Silua, w<sup>ch</sup> (out of my neglect) was neuer done.

Pro. Where is that ring? boy?

Jul. Heere 'tis. this is it.

Pro. How? let me see.

Why this is the ring I gaue to Julia.

Jul. Oh, cry you mercy sir, I haue mistooke.
This is the ring you sent to Silua

Pro. But how cam'st thou by this ring? at my depart
I gaue this vnto Julia.

Jul. And Julia her selfe did giue it me,
And Julia her selfe hath brought it hither.

Pro. How? Julia?

Jul. Behold her, that gaue ayme to all thy oathes,
And entertain'd 'em deeply in her heart.
How oft hast thou with perury cleft the roote?
Oh Prothens, let this habit make thee bluish.

D

Bethou ashaïn'd that I haue tooke vpon me,
Such an immodest rayment, if shame lue
In a disguise of loue?

It is the lesler blot modesty findes,
Women to change their shapes, then men their minds.

Pro. Then men their minds? tis true: oh heuen, were man
But Constant, he were perfect; that one error
Fils him with faults: makes him run through all th' sins:
Inconstancy falls-off, ere it begins:

What is in Silvia's face, but I may spie
More fresh in Julia's, with a constant eye?

Val. Come, come: a hand from either:
Let me be blest to make this happy close:

'Twere pittie, two such friends should be long foes.

Pro. Beare witnes (heauen) I haue my wish for euer.

Jul. And I mine.

Out-l. A prize: a prize: a prize.

Val. Forbeare, forbeare I say. It is my Lord the Duke.
Your Grace is welcome to a man disgrac'd,
Banished Valentine.

Duke. Sir Valentine?

Thur. Yonder is Silvia and Silvia's mine

Val. Thurio giue backe; or else embrace thy death:
Come not within the measure of my wrath:

Doe not name Silvia thine: if once againe,
Verona shall not hold thee: heere she stands,
Take but possession of her, with a Touch:
I dare thee, but to breath vpon my Loue.

Thur. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I.
I hold him but a foole that endanger
His Body, for a Girle that loues him not:
I claime her not, and therefore she is thine.

Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou
To make such meanes for her, as thou hast done,
And leaue her on such slight conditions.

Now, by the honor of my Ancestry,

I doe applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And thinke thee worthy of an Emperesse loue:
Know then, I heere forget all former griefes,
Cancell all grudge, repeale thee home againe,
Plead a new state in thy vn-rival'd merit,
To which I thus subscribe: Sir Valentine,
Thou art a Gentleman, and well deriu'd,
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou hast deseru'd her.

Val. I thank your Grace, & gift hath made me happy:
I now beseech you (for your daughters sake)

To grant one Boone that I shall aske of you.

Duke. I grant it (for thine owne) what ere it be.

Val. These banish'd men, that I haue kept withall,
Are men endu'd with worthy qualities:

Forgiue them what they haue committed here,
And let them be recall'd from their Exile:

They are reformed, ciuill, full of good,
And fit for great employment (worthy Lord.)

Duke. Thou hast preuaild, I pardon them and thee:
Dispoſe of them, as thou know'st their deserts.

Come, let vs goe, we will include all iarres,
With Triumphes, Mirth, and rare solemnity.

Val. And as we walke along, I dare be bold
With our discourse, to make your Grace to smile.
What thinke you of this Page (my Lord?)

Duke. I thinke the Boy hath grace in him, he blushes.

Val. I warrant ydu (my Lord) more grace, then Boy.

Duke. What meane you by that saying?

Val. Please you, I tell you, as we passe along,
That you will wonder what hath fortun'd:

Come Protheus, 'tis your pennance, but to heare
The story of your Loues discouered.

That done, our day of marriage shall be yours,
One Feast, one house, one mutuall happinesse. Exeunt.

Shal. The Luse is the fresh fish, the salt-fish, is an old Coate.

Slender. I may quarter (Coz).

Shal. You may, by marrying.

Evans. It is marring indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Evans. Yes per-lady : if he ha's a quarter of your coat, there is but three Skirts for your selfe, in my simple conceits, but that is all one : if Sir John Falstoffs haue committed disparagements vnto you, I am of the Church and will be glad to do my beneuolence, to make atonements and compromises betweene you.

Shal. The Councell shall heare it, it is a Riot.

Evans. It is not meer the Councell heare a Riot : there is no feare of Got in a Riot The Councell (looke you) shall desire to heare the feare of Got, and not to heare a Riot : take your viza-ments in that.

Shal. Ha ; o'ny life, if I were yong againe, the sword should end it.

Evans. It is petter that friends' is the sword and end it : and there is also another deuice in my prime, which peradventure brings good discretions with it. There is Anne Page, which is daughter to Master Thomas Page, which is pretty virginity.

Slender. Mistris Anne Page? she has browne haire, and speakes small like a woman.

Evans. It is that ferry person for all the orld, as iust as you will desire, and seuen hundred pounds of Moneyes, and Gold. and Silver, is her Grand-fire vpon his death-bed, (Got deliuer to a ioyfull resurrection) giue, when she is able to ouertake seuentene yeeres old. M. Pa. I am glad to see you, good Master Slender.

Slender. How do's your fallow Greyhound, Sir, I heard say he was out-run on Cotfall.

M. Pa. It could not be iudg'd, Sir:

Slender. You'll not confesse : you'll not confesse.

Shal. That he will not, 'tis your fault, 'tis your fault : 'tis a good dogge.

M. Pa. A Cur, Sir.

Shal. Sir hee's a good dog, and a faire dog, can there be more said? he is good, and faire. Is Sir John Falstoffs heere?

Sha 1

Shal. If it be confessed, it is not redressed; is not that so (Mr. Page)? he hath wrong'd me, indeed he hath, at a word he hath: beleue me, Robert Shallow Esquire, saith he is wronged.

Ala. Pa. Here comes Sir John.

Fal. Now, Master Shallow, you'll complaine of me to the King?

Shal. Knight, you haue beaten my men, kill'd my deere, and broke open my lodge.

Fal. But not kill'd your Keepers daughter?

Shal. Tut, a pin: this shall be answer'd.

Fal. I will answer it strait, I haue done all this.

That is now answer'd.

Shal. The Councell shall know this.

Fal. 'Twere better for you if it were known in counsell: you'll be laugh'd at.

En. Pauca verba; (Sir John) good words.

Fal. Good words? good Cabidge; Slender, I broke your head: what matter haue you against me?

Slen. Marry sir, I haue matter in my head against you, and against your cony-catching Rascalls, Barcliff, Nym, and Pistol.

Bar. You Banbery Cheefe.

Slen. I, it is no matter.

Pist. How now, Alephosphorion?

Slen. I, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I say; pance pance Slice, that's my humor.

Slen. Where's Simple my nian? can you tell, Cofen?

En. Peace, I pray you: now let vs understand, there is three Vmpires in this matter, as I vnderstand; that is, Master Page (fidelicet Master Page), & there is my selfe, (fidelicet my selfe) and the three party is (lastly, and finally) mine Host of the Garter.

Ala. Pa. We three to hear it, & end it between them.

En. Ferry good, I will make a priefe of it in my note-booke, and we wil afterwards orke vpon the cause, with as great discreetly as we can.

Fal. Pistol.

Pist. He heares with eares.

En. The Teuill and his Tam: what phrase is this? he heares with eare? why, it is affectations.

Fal. Pistol, did you picke Mr. Slender purse?

Slen. I, by these gloues did hee, or I would I might neuer come in mine owne great chamber againe else, of seauen groates in mill-sixpences, and two Edward Shouel boards, that cost me two shilling and two pence a peece of Tead Miller: by these gloues.

Fal. Is this true, Pistol?

En. No, it is false, if it is a picke-purse.

Pist. Ha, thou mountaine Gotreyner: Sir John, and Master mine, I combat challenge of this Latine Bilboe: word of denall in thy labras here; word of denall; froth, and scum thou liest.

Slen. By these gloues, then 'twas he.

Nym. Beautis'd sir, and passe good humours: I will say marry trap with you, if you runne the nut-hooks humor on me, that is the very note of it.

Slen. By this hat, then he in the red face had it: for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunke, yet I am not altogether an asse.

Fal. What say you Scarlet, and John?

Bar. Why sir, (for my part) I say the Gentleman had drunke himselfe out of his five sentences.

En. It is his five sences: sic, what the ignorance is.

Bar. And being sap, sir, was (as they say) casheerd: and so conclusions past the Car-cires.

Slen. I, you spake in Latten then for but 'tis no matter; He here be drunke whilst I lue againe, but in honest; ciuill, godly company for this trick: if I be drunke, He be drunke with those that haue the feare of God, and not with drunken knaues.

En. So got-udge me, that is a vertuous minde.

Fal. You heare all these matters dem'd, Gentlemen; you heare it.

Mr. Page. Nay daughter, carry the wine in, wee'll drinke within.

Slen. Oh heauen. This is Mistresse Anne Page.

Mr. Page. How now Mistress Ford?

Fal. Mistress Ford, by my troth you are very wel met: by your leaue good Mistress.

Mr. Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome: come, we haue a hot Venisen patty to dinner; Come gentlemen, I hope we shall drinke downe all vnkindnesse.

Slen. I had rather then forty shillings I had my booke of Songs and Sonnets heere: How now Simple, where haue you beene? I must wate on my selfe, must I? you haue not the booke of Riddles about you, haue you?

Sim. Booke of Riddles? why did you not lend it to Alice Shrewsbury vpon Alhallowmas last, a fortnight afore Michaelis?

Shal. Come Coz, come Coz, we sit; for you: a word with you Coz: marry this, Coz: there is as 'twere a tender, a kinde of tender, made a farr-off by Sir Hugh here: doe you vnderstand me?

Slen. I Sir, you shall finde me reasonable; if it be so, I shall doe that that is reason.

Shal. Nay, but vnderstand me.

Slen. So I doe Sir.

En. Giue eue to his motions; (Mr. Slender) I will description the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Slen. Nay, I will doe as my Cozen Shallow saies: I pray you pardon me, he's a sultier of Peace in his Countie, simple though I stand here.

En. But that is not the question: the question is concerning your marriage.

Shal. I, there's the point Sir.

En. Marry is it: the very point of it, to Mr. Anne Page.

Slen. Why if it be so, I will marry her vpon any reasonable demands.

En. But can you affection the 'o-man, let vs comma'd to know that of your mouth, or of your lips: for diuers Philosophers hold, that the lips is parcell of the mouth: therefore precisely, can you carry your good wil to my maid?

Sh. Cofen Abraham Slender, can you loue her?

Slen. I hope sir, I will do as it shall become one that would doe reason.

En. Nay, got's Lords, and his Ladies, you must speake possitable, if you can carry her your desires towards her.

Shal. That you must:

Will you, (vpon good dowry) marry her?

Slen. I will doe a greater thing then that, vpon your request (Cofen) in any reason.

Shal. Nay conceiue me, conceiue mee, (sweet Coz): what I doe is to pleasure you (Coz): can you loue the maid?

Slen. I will marry her (Sir) at your request; but if there bee no great loue in the beginning, yet Heauen may decrease it vpon better acquaintance, when wee are married, and haue more occasion to know one another: I hope vpon familiarity will grow more content: but if you say marry-her, I will marry-her, that I am freely dissolued, and dissolutely.

En. It

En. It is a fery discretion-answer; saue the fall is in the'ord, dissolately: the ort is (according to our meaning) resolutely: his meaning is good.

Sb. I: I thinke my Cosen meant well.

Sl. I, or else I would I might be hang'd (la.)

Sb. Here comes faire Mistris Anne; would I were young for your sake, Mistris Anne.

An. The dinner is on the Table, my Father desires your worships company.

Sb. I will wait on him, (saie Mistris Anne)

En. Od's plessed-wil. I wil not be abſce at the grace.

An. Wil't please your worship to come in, Sir?

Sl. No, I thank you forsooth, hartely, I am very well.

An. The dinner attends you, Sir.

Sl. I am not a-hungry, I thank you, forsooth: goe, Sirha, for all you are my man, goe wait vpon my Cosen Shallow a Iustice of peace sometime may be beholding to his friend, for a Man; I keepe but three Men, and a Boy yet, till my Mother be dead: but what though, yet I lue like a poore Gentleman borne.

An. I may not goe in without your worship: they will not sit till you come.

Actus Secundus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Mistress Page, Mistress Ford, Master Page, Master Ford, Pistol, Nim, Quickly, Holt, Shallow.

Mist Page. What, haue scap'd Loue-letters in the holly-day-time of my beauty, and am I now a subiect for them? let me see?

Aske me no reason why I loue you, for though Lone use Reason for his precisian, bee admits him not for his Connsailour. you are not yong, no more am I goe to then, there's simpatbie you are merry, so am I ha, ha, then there's more simpatbie. yo i loue sacke, and so do I. would you desire better simpatbie? Let it suffice thee (Mistress Page) at the least if the Lone of Soldier can suffice, that I loue thee I will not say pity mee, 'tis not a Souldier-like phrase, but I say, loue me.

By me, thine owre true Knight, by day or night:

Or any kinde of light, with all his might,

For thee to fight. John Falstaffe.

What a Herod of Iurie is this? O wicked, wicked world: One that is well-nye worne to peeces with age To show himselfe a yong Gallant? What an vnwaied Behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard pickt (with The Devils name) out of my conuersation, that he dares In this manner assay me? why, hee hath not beene thrice In my Company: what should I say to him? I was then Frugall of my nirth (heauen forgue mee.) why Ile Exhibit a Bill in the Parliament for the putting downe of men how shall I be reueng'd on him? for reueng'd I will be? as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Mist Ford. Mistress Page, trust me, I was going to your house

Mist Page. And trust me, I was comming to you you looke very ill.

Mist Ford. Nay, Ile nere beleee that, I haue to shew to the contrary

Mist Page. Faith but you doe in my minde.

Mist Ford. Well I doe then yet I say, I could shew you to the contrary O Mistress Page, giue mee some counsaile.

Mist Page. What's the matter, woman?

Mist Ford. O woman - if it were not for one trifling respect, I could come to such honour.

Mist Page. Hang the trifle (woman) take the honour what is it? dispenche with trifles - what is it?

Mist Ford. If I would but goe to hell, for an eternall moment, or so. I could be knighted.

Mist Page. What thou liest? Sir Alice Ford > these Knights will hacke, and so thou shouldst not alter the article of thy Gentry

Mist Ford. Wee burne day-light. heere, read, read: perceiue how I might bee knighted, I shall thinke the worse of fat men. as long as I haue an eye to make difference of mens liking. and yet hee would not sweare.

praise

praise womens modesty: and gaue such orderly and well-behaued reproofe to al vncomelinesse, that I would haue sworne his disposition would haue gone to the truth of his words: but they doe no more adhere and keep place together, then the hundred Psalms to the tune of Greensleeues: What tempest (I troe) threw this Whale, (with so many Tuns of oyle in his belly) 't'hoare at Windsor? How shall I bee reuenged on him? I thinke the best way were, to entertaine him with hope, till the wicked fire of lust haue melted him in his owne greace: Did you euer heare the like?

Mis. Page. Letter for letter; but that the name of Page and Ford differs. to thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, heere's the twyn-brother of thy Letter: but let thine inherit first, for I protest mine neuer shall: I warrant he hath a thousand of these Letters, writ with blanke-space for different names (sure more) and these are of the second edition: hee will print them out of doubt: for he cares not what hee puts into the presse, when he would put vs two. I had rather be a Giantesse, and lye vnder Mount Pelion. Well, I will find you twentie lasciuious Turtles ere one chaste man.

Mis. Ford. Why this is the very same the very hand: the very words: what doth he thinke of vs?

Mis. Page. Nay I know not: it makes me almost ready to wrangle with mine owne honesty. He entertaine my selfe like one that I am not acquainted withall. for sure vnlesse hee know some straine in mee, that I know not my selfe, hee would neuer haue boarded me in this furie.

Ms. Ford. Boording, call you it? Hee bee sure to keepe him aboue decke.

Ms. Page. So will I. if hee come vnder my hatches. He neuer to Sea againe. Let's bee reueng'd on him: let's appoint him a meeting. giue him a show of comfort in his Suit, and lead him on with a fine baited delay, till hee hath pawn'd his horses to mine Host of the Garter.

Ms. Ford. Nay, I wil consent to act any villany against him, that may not fully the charnesse of our honesty. oh that my husband saw this Letter: it would giue eternall food to his ialousie.

Mis. Page. Why look where he comes; and my good man too: hee's as farre from ialousie, as I am from giuing him cause, and that (I hope) is an vnmeasurable distance.

Mis. Ford. You are the happier woman.

Mis. Page. Let's consult together against this greasie Knight: Come hither.

Ford. Well I hope, it be not so

Pist. Hope is a curtall-dog in some affaires: Sir John affects thy wife.

Ford. Why sir, my wife is not young.

Pist. He wooes both high and low, both rich & poor, both yong and old, one with another (Ford) he loues the Gally-mawfry (Ford) perpend.

Ford. Loue my wife?

Pist. With liuer, burning hot - preuent: Or goe thou like Sir Alceon he, with Ring-wood at thy heeles: O, odious is the name.

Ford. What name Sir?

Pist. The horne I say: Farewell.

Take heed, haue open eye, for theeues doe foot by night, Take heed, ere sommer comes, or Cuckoo-birds do sing, Away sir Corporall Nim:

Beleeue it (Page) he speakes sence.

Ford. I will be patient. I will find out this.

Nim. And this is true: I like not the humor of lying: hee hath wronged mee in some humors: I should haue borne the humor'd Letter to her: but I haue a sword: and it shall bite vpon my needfullie: he loues your wife; There's the short and the long: My name is Corporall Nim: I speak, and I auouch: 'tis true: my name is Nim: and Falstaffe loues your wife: adieu, I loue not the humor of bread and cheefe: adieu.

Page. The humor of it (quoth'a?) heere's a fellow frights English out of his wits.

Ford. I will seeke out Falstaffe.

Page. I neuer heard such a drawling-affecting rogue.

Ford. If I doe finde it: well.

Page. I will not beleeue such a Cataian, though the Prielt o' th' Towne commended him for a true man.

Ford. 'Twas a good sensible fellow: well.

Page. How now Meg?

Mis. Page. Whether goe you (Georget) harke you.

Mis. Ford. How now (sweet Frank) why art thou melancholy?

Ford. I melancholy? I am not melancholy: Get you home: goe.

Mis. Ford. Faith, thou hast some crochets in thy head, Now. will you goe, Mistress Page?

Mis. Page. Haue with you: you'll come to dinner George: Looke who comes yonder: shee shall bee our Messenger to this palme Knight.

Mis. Ford. Trust me, I thought on her: shee'll fit it.

Mis. Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne? Qu. If soooth: and I pray how do's good Mistresse Anne?

Mis. Page. Go in with vs and see: we haue an houres talke with you.

Page. How now Master Ford?

Ford. You heard what this knaue told me, did you not?

Page. Yes, and you heard what the other told me?

Ford. Doe you thinke there is truth in them?

Page. Hang 'em slaues: I doe not thinke the Knight would offer it. But thefe that accuse him in his intent towards our wiues, are a yocke of his discarded men: very rogues, now they be out of seruice.

Ford. Were they his men?

Page. Marry were they.

Ford. I like it neuer the beter for that, Do's he lye at the Garter?

Page. I marry do's he: if hee should intend this voyage toward my wife, I would turne her loose to him; and what hee gets more of her, then sharpe words, let it lye on my head.

Ford. I doe not misdoubt my wife: but I would bee loath to turne them together: a man may be too confident. I would haue nothing lye on my head: I cannot be thus satisfied.

Page. Looke where my ranting-Host of the Garter comes: there is eyther liquor in his pate, or mony in his purse, when hee lookes so merrily: How now mine Host?

Host. How now Bully-Rooke. thou'rt a Gentleman Cauellero Iustice, I say.

Shal. I follow, (mine Host) I follow: Good-even, and twenty (good Master Page) Master Page, wil you go with vs? we haue sport in hand.

Host. Tell him Cauellero-Iustice: tell him Bully-Rooke.

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought, betweene Sir Hugh the Welch Priest, and Carr the French Doctor.

Ford. Good

Ford. Good mine Host a'th' Garter a word with you.

Hof. What faist thou, my Bully-Rooke?

Sbal. Will you goe with vs to behold it? My merry Host hath had the measuring of their weapons; and (I thinke) hath appointed them contrary places: for (beleeue mee) I heare the Parson is no Iester: harke, I will tell you what our sport shall be.

Hof. Hast thou no suit against my Knight? my guest-Caualeire?

Sbal. None, I protest. but Ile giue you a pottle of burn'd sacke, to giue me recourse to him, and tell him my name is Broome onely for a iest.

Hof. My hand, (Bully.) thou shalt haue egressse and regresse, (said I well?) and thy name shall be Broome. It is a merry Knight. will you goe An-heire?

Sbal. Haue with you mine Host.

Page. I haue heard the French-man hath good skill in his Rapier.

Sbal. Tut sir: I could haue told you more. In these times you stand on distance. your Passes, Stoccard's, and I know not what 'tis the heart (Master Page) 'tis heere, 'tis heere: I haue seene the time with my long-sword, I would haue made you foure tall fellowes skippelike Rattes.

Hof. Heere boyes, heere, heere. shall we wag?

Page. Haue with you: I had ratner heare them scold, then fight.

Ford. Though Page be a secure foole, and stands so firmly on his wifes frailty; yet, I cannot rutt-off my opinion so easily: she was in his company at Page's riu'e. and what they made there, I know not. Well, I will looke further into't, and I haue a disguise, to sound Falstaffe, if I finde her honest, I loofe not my labor: if she be otherwise, 'tis labour well bestowed. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Falstaffe, Pistoll, Robin, Quickly, Bardolffe, Ford.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.

Pist. Why then the world's mine Oyster, which I, with sword will open.

Fal. Not a penny: I haue beene content (Sir,) you should lay my countenance to pawne. I haue grated vpon my good friends for three Repreuees for you, and your Coach-fellow Nim, or else you had look'd through the grate, like a Geminy of Baboones. I am damn'd in hell, for swearing to Gentlemen my friends, you were good Souldiers, and tall-fellowes. And when Mistresse Braget lost the handle of her Fan, I took't vpon mine honour thou hadst it not.

Pist. Didst not thou share? hadst thou not fiftene pence?

Fal. Reason, you rogue, reason. thinkst thou Ile endanger my soule, gratis? at a word, hang no more about mee, I am no gibbet for you. goe, a short knife, and a throng, to your Mannor of Picket-hatch goe, you'll not beare a Letter for mee you rogue? you stand vpon your honor. why, (thou vnconfinable baseness) it is as much as I can doe to keepe the termes of my honor precise: I, I, I my selfe sometimes, leauing the feare of heauen on the left hand, and hiding mine honor in my necessity, am faine to shuffle: to hedge, and to lurch, and yet, you Rogue, will en-sconce your raggs; your Cat-a-Mountain-lookes, your red-tattice phrases, and your bold-beating-oathes, vnder the shelter of your honor? you will not doe it? you?

Pist. I doe relent: what would thou more of man?

Rebir. Sir, here's a woman would speake with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Qui. Giue your worship good morrow.

Fal. Good-morrow, good-wife.

Qui. Not so and't please your worship.

Fal. Good maid then.

Qui. Ile be sworne,

As my mother was the first houre I was borne.

Fal. I doe beleeue the swearer, what with me?

Qui. Shall I vouch-safe your worship a word, or two?

Fal. Two thousand (faire woman) and ile vouchsafe thee the hearing.

Qui. There is one Mistresse Ford, (Sir) I pray come a little neerer this waies: I my selfe dwell with M. Doctor Caius.

Fal. Well, on; Mistresse Ford, you say.

Qui. Your worship saies very true: I pray your worship, come a little neerer this waies.

Fal. I warrant thee, no-bodie heares: mine owne people, mine owne people.

Qui. Are they so? heauen-bleffe them, and make them his Seruants.

Fal. Well; Mistresse Ford, what of her?

Qui. Why, Sir, shee's a good-creature, Lord, Lord, your Worship's a wanton well: heauen forgie you, and all of vs, I pray——.

Fal. Mistresse Ford: come, Mistresse Ford.

Qui. Marry this is the short, and the long of it: you haue brought her into such a Canaries, as 'tis wonderfull the best Courtier of them all (when the Court lay at Windsor) could neuer haue brought her to such a Canarie. yet there has beene Knights, and Lords, and Gentlemen, with their Coaches; I warrant you Coach after Coach, letter after letter, gift after gift, smelling so sweetly, all Muske, and so rushing, I warrant you, in silk and golde, and in such alligant termes, and in such wine and sugar of the best, and the fairest, that would haue wonne any womans heart and I warrant you, they could neuer get an eye-winke of her. I had my selfe twentie Angels giuen me this morning, but I desie all Angels (in any such sort, as they say) but in the way of honesty. and I warrant you, they could neuer get her so much as sippe on a cup with the prowdest of them all, and yet there has beene Earles nay, (which is more) Pensioners, but I warrant you all is one with her.

Fal. But what saies shee to mee? be briefe my good shee-Mistresse.

Qui. Marry, she hath receiu'd your Letter: for the which she thanks you a thousand times; and she giues you to notifie, that her husband will be absence from his house, betweene ten and eleuen.

Fal. Ten, and eleuen.

Qui. I, forsooth and then you may come and see the picture (she sayes) that you wor of. Master Ford her husband will be from home: alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: hee's a very iealousie-man; she leads a very frampold life with him, (good hart.)

Fal. Ten, and eleuen.

Woman

Woman, commend me to her, I will not faile her.

Qui. Why, you say well. But I haue another messenger to your worship: Mistresse Page hath her heartie commendations to you to. and let mee tell you in your care, shee's as fatuous a ciuill modest wife, and one (I tell you) that will not misse you morning nor euening prayer, as any is in Windsor, who ere bee the other: and shee bade me tell your worship, that her husband is seldom from home, but she hopes there will come a time. I neuer knew a woman so doate vpon a man, surely I thinke you haue charmes, la. yes in truth.

Fal. Not I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I haue no other charmes.

Qui. Blessing on your heart for't.

Fal. But I pray thee tell me this: has Ford's wife, and Pages wife acquainted each other, how they loue me?

Qui. That were a iest indeed: they haue not so little grace I hope, that were a trick indeed. But Mistress Page would desire you to send her your little Page of 'il loues': her husband has a maruellous infection to the little Page: and truly Master Page is an honest man, neuer a wife in Windsor leads a better life then she do's. doe what shee will, say what she will, take all, pay all, goe to bed v when she list, rise when she list, all is as she will: and truly she deserues it; for if there be a kinde woman in Windsor, she is one: you must send her your Page, no remedie.

Fal. Why, I will.

Qui. Nay, but doe so then, and looke you, hee may come and goe betweene you both: and in any case haue a nay-word, that you may know one anothers minde, and the Boy neuer neede to vnderstand any thing; for 'tis not good that children should know any wickednes: olde folkes you know, haue discretion, as they say, and know the world.

Fal. Farethee well, commend mee to them both: there's my purse, I am yet thy debter: Boy, goe along with this woman, this newes distracts me.

Pist. This Puncke is one of Cupid's Carriers, Clap on more sailes, pursue vp with your fights: Giue fire: she is my prize, or Ocean whelme them all.

Fal. Saist thou so (old Lacke) go thy waies: Ile make more of thy olde body then I haue done: will they yet looke after thee? wilt thou after the expence of so much money, be now a gainer? good Body, I thanke thee: let them say 'tis giuiously done, so it bee fairely done, no matter.

Bar. Sir John, there's one Master Broome below would faine speake with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent your worship a mornings draught of Sacke.

Fal. Broome is his name?

Bar. I Sir.

Fal. Call him in: such Broomes are welcome to mee, that ore flowes such liquor: ah ha, Mistresse Ford and Mistresse Page, haue I encompass'd you? goe to, viva.

Ford. Bless'e you sir.

Fal. And you sir, would you speake with me?

Ford. I make bold, to presse, with so little preparation vpon you.

Fal. You'r welcome, what's your will? giue vs leaue Drawer.

Ford. Sir, I am a Gentleman that haue spent much, my name is Broome.

Fal. Good Master Broome, I desire more acquaintance of you.

Ford. Good Sir John, I sue for yours: not to charge you, for I must let you vnderstand, I thinke my selfe in better plight for a Lender, then you are: the which hath something emboldned me to this vnseason'd intrusion: for they say, if money goe before, all waies doe lyc open.

Fal. Money is a good Souldier (Sir) and will on,

Ford. Troth, and I haue a bag of money heere troubles me: if you will helpe to beare it (Sir John) take all, or halfe, for easing me of the carriage.

Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deserue to bee your Porter.

Ford. I will tell you sir, if you will giue mee the hearing.

Fal. Speake (good Master Broome) I shall be glad to be your Seruant.

Ford. Sir, I heare you are a Scholler: (I will be briefe with you) and you haue been a man long knowne to me, though I had neuer so good means as desire, to make my selfe acquainted with you. I shall discover a thing to you, wherein I must very much lay open mine owne imperfection: but (good Sir John) as you haue one eye vpon my follies, as you heare them vnfolded, turne another into the Register of your owne, that I may passe with a reproofe the easier, fith you your selfe know how easie it is to be such an offender.

Fal. Very well Sir, proceed.

Ford. There is a Gentlewoman in this Towne, her husbands name is Ford.

Fal. Well Sir.

Ford. I haue long lou'd her, and I protest to you, bestowed much on her: followed her with a doating obseruance: Ingross'd opportunities to meete her: se'd every slight occasion that could but nigardly giue mee sight of her: not only bought many presents to giue her, but haue giuen largely to many, to know what shee would haue giuen: briefly, I haue pursu'd her, as Loue hath pursued mee, which hath beene on the wing of all occasions: but whatlocuer I haue merited, either in my minde, or in my meares, meede I am sure I haue receiued none, vnlesse experience be a Jewell, that I haue purchased at an infinite rate, and that hath taught mee to say this,

"*Loue like a shadow flies, when substance Loue pursues, Pursuing that that flies, and flying what pursues.*"

Fal. Haue you receiued no promise of satisfaction at her hands?

Ford. Neuer.

Fal. Haue you importun'd her to such a purpose?

Ford. Neuer.

Fal. Of what qualitie was your loue then?

Ford. Like a fair house, built on another mans ground, so that I haue lost my edifice, by mistaking the place, where I erected it.

Fal. To what purpose haue you vnfolded this to me?

Ford. When I haue told you that, I haue told you all. Some say, that though she appeare honest to mee, yet in other places shee enlargeth her mirth so farre, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Now (Sir John) here is the heart of my purpose: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discourse, of great admittance, authenticke in your place and person, generally allow'd for your many warlike, court-like, and learned preparations.

Fal. O Sir.

Ford. Beleue it, for you know it: there is money, spend it, spend it, spend more; spend all I haue, onely giue

giue me so much of your time in enchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife : vse your Art of wooing ; win her to consent to you : if any man may, you may as soone as any.

Fal. Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection that I should win what you would enioy ? Methinks you prescribe to your selfe very preposterously.

Ford. O, vnderstand my drift : she dwells so securely on the excellency of her honor, that the folly of my soule dares not present it selfe : shee is too bright to be look'd against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand , my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves , I could driue her then from the ward of her purity, her reputation, her marriage-vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too-too strongly embattaild against me : what say you too't, Sir Iohn ?

Fal. Master Broome, I will first make bold with your money : next, giue mee your hand : and last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enioy Foras wife.

Ford. O good Sir.

Fal. I say you shall.

Ford. Want no money (Sir Iohn) you shall want none.

Fal. Want no Mistresse Ford (Master Broome) you shall want none I shall be with her (I may tell you) by her owne appointment, euen as you came in to me, her assistant, or goe-betweene, parted from me I say I shall be with her betweene ten and eleven for at that time the zealous-rascally-knaue her husband will be forth come you to me at night, you shall know how I speed.

Ford. I am blest in your acquaintance. do you know Ford Sir ?

Fal. Hang him (poore Cuckoldly knaue) I know him not : yet I wrong him to call him poore : They lay the zealous wittolly-knaue hath masses of money, for the which his wife seemes to me well-fauourd : I will vse her as the key of the Cuckoldly-rogues Coffer, & ther's my haruest-home.

Ford. I would you knew Ford, sir, that you might auoid him, if you saw him

Fal. Hang him, mechanically-salt-butter rogue, I will stare him out of his wits I will awe him with my cudgell it shall hang like a Meteor ore the Cuckold's nois Master Broome, thou shalt know, I will predominate ouer the pezzant, and thou shalt lye with his wife Come to me soone at night. Ford's a knaue, and I will aggravate his stile : thou (Master Broome) shalt know him for knaue, and Cuckold. Come to me soone at night.

Ford. What a damn'd Epicurian-Rascall is this ? my heart is ready to cracke with impatience : who saies this is improuident zealousie & my wife hath sent to him, the howre is fixt, the match is made. would any man haue thought this ? see the hell of hauing a false woman. my bed shall be abus'd, my Coffers ranack'd, my reputation gnawed at, and I shall not onely receive this villanous wrong, but stand vnder the adoption of abhominable termes, and by him that does mee this wrong. Termes, names : Ananiam sounds well : Lucifer, well. Barbasan, well : yet they are Diuels additions, the names of fiends : But Cuckold, Wittoll, Cuckold : the Duell himselfe hath not such a name Page is an Ass, a secure Ass, hee will trust his wife, hee will not be zealous : I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, Parson Hugh the Welshman with my Cheese, an Irishman with my Aqua-vitæ bottle, or a Theefe to walke my ambling gelding, then my wife with her selfe. Then shee plots, then shee rumi-uates, then shee deuises : and what they thinke in their hearts they may effect ; they will breake their hearts but they will effect. Heauen bee prais'd for my zealousie : eleuen o' clocke the howre, I will prevent this, detect my wife, bee reueng'd on Falstaffe and laugh at Page. I will about it, better three houres too soone, then a my-nute too late : fie, fie, fie : Cuckold, Cuckold, Cuckold.

Page. Not by my consent I promise you. The Gentleman is of no hauing, hee kept companie with the vild Prince, and Pointz. he is of too high a Region, he knows too much: no, hee shall not knit a knot in his fortunes, with the finger of my substance: if he take her, let him take her simply. the wealth I haue waits on my consent, and my consent goes not that way.

period of my ambition. O this blessed houre.

Mist. Ford. O sweet Sir Iohn.

Fal. Mist. Ford, I cannot cog, I cannot prate (*Mist.
Ford*) now shall I sin in my wish; I would thy Husband were dead, Ile speake it before the best Lord, I would make thee my Lady.

Mist. Ford. I your Lady Sir Iohn? Alas, I should bee a pittifull Lady.

Fal. Let the Court of France shew me such another:
I see how thine eye would emulate the Diamond: Thou hast the right arch'd-beauty of the brow, that becomes the Ship-tyre, the Tyre-valiant, or any Tyre of Venetian admittance.

Mist. Ford. A plaine Kerchiefe, Sir Iohn:

My browes become nothing else, nor that well neither.

Fal. Thou art a tyrant to say so: thou wouldst make an absolute Courtier, and the firme fixture of thy foote, would giue an excellent motion to thy gate, in a semi-circled Farthingale. I see what thou wert if Fortune thy foe, were not Nature thy friend: Come, thou canst not hide it.

Mist. Ford. Beleeue me, ther's no such thing in me.

Fal. What made me loue thee? Let that perswade thee. Ther's something extraordinary in thee. Come, I cannot cog, and say thou art this and that, like a-manie of these slipping-hauthorne buds, that come like women in mens apparrell, and smell like Bucklers-berry in simple time: I cannot, but I loue thee, none but thee; and thou deseru'st it.

M. Ford. Do not betray me sir, I fear you loue M. Page.

Fal. Thou mightst as well say, I loue to walke by the Counter-gate, which is as hatefull to me, as the reeke of a Lime-kill;

Mist. Ford. Well, heauen knowes how I loue you,
And you shall one day finde it.

Fal. Keepe in that minde, Ile deserue it.

Mist. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you doe;
Or else I could not be in that minde.

Rob. Mistris Ford, Mistris Ford: heere's Mistris Page at the doore, sweating, and blowing, and looking wildely,
and would needs speake with you presently.

Fal. She shall not see me, I will enscornee behind the Arras.

M. Ford. Pray you do so, she's a very tailing woman.
Whats the matter? How now?

Mist. Page. O mistress Ford what haue you done?

You'r sham'd, yare ouertrowne, yare vndone for euer.

M. Ford. What's the matter, good mistress Page?

M. Page. O weladay, mist. Ford, hauing an honest man to your husband, to giue him such cause of suspicion.

M. Ford. What cause of suspicion?

M. Page. What cause of suspicion? Out vpon you:
How am I mistooke in you?

M. Ford. Why (alas) what's the matter?

M. Page. Your husband's comming hether (Woman) with all the Officers in Windsor, to search for a Gentleman, that he sayes is heere now in the house; by your consent to take an ill aduantage of his absence: you are vndone.

M. Ford. 'Tis not so, I hope.

M. Page. Pray heauen it be not so, that you haue such a man heere: but 'tis most certaine your husband's com-ming, with halfe Windsor at his heeles, to serch for such a one, I come before to tell you: If you know your selfe cleere, why I am glad of it: but if you haue a friend here, conuey, conuey him out. Benot amaz'd, call all your senses to you, defend your reputation, or bid farwell to your good life for euer.

M. Ford. What shall I do? There is a Gentleman my deere friend: and I feare not mine owne shame so much, as his perill. I had rather then a thousand pound he were out of the house.

M. Page. For shame, neuer stand (you had rather, and you had rather:) your husband's heere at hand, bethinke you of some conueyance: in the house you cannot hide him. Oh, how haue you deceiu'd me? Looke, heere is a basket, if he be of any reasonable stature, he may creepe in heere, and throw fowle linnen vpon him, as if it were going to bucking: Or it is whitting time, send him by your two men to Datchet-Meade.

M. Ford. He's too big to go in there: what shall I do?

Fal. Let me see't, let me see't, O let me see't:

Ile in, Ile in: Follow your friends counsell, Ile in.

M. Page. What Sir Iohn Faststaffe? Are these your Letters, Knight?

Fal. I loue thee, helpe mee away: let me creepe in heere. Ile neuer—

M. Page. Helpe to couer your master (Boy): Call your men (Mist. Ford) You dissembling Knight.

M. Ford. What Iohn, Robert, Iohn; Go, take vp these cloathes heere, quickly: Wher's the Cowle-staffer? Look how you drumble? Carry them to the Landresse in Dat-chet mead: quickly, come.

Ford. Pray you come nerer: if I suspect without cause,
Why then make sport at me, then let me be your iest,
I deserue it: How now? Whether beare you this?

Ser. To the Landresse forsooth?

M. Ford. Why, what haue you to doe whether they beare it? You were best meddle with buck-washing.

Ford. Bucke! I would I could wash my selfe of ſ Buck:
Bucke, bucke, bucke, I bucke: I warrant you Bucke,
And of the season too; it shall appeare.

Gentlemen, I haue dream'd to night, Ile tell you my dreme: heere, heere, heere bee my keyes, ascend my Chambers, search, seeke, finde out: Ile warrant wee'll vnkennell the Fox. Let me stop this way first: so, now vncape.

Page. Good master Ford, be contented:
You wrong your selfe too much.

Ford. True (master Page) vp Gentlemen,
You shall see sport anon:

Follow

Follow me Gentlemen.

Euans. This is fery fantastick humors and ieaiousies.

Cas. By gar, 'tis no-the fashion of France :
It is not ieaious in France.

Page. Nay follow him (Gentlemen) see the yssue of his search.

Mist. Page. Is there not a double excellency in this ?

Mist. Ford. I know not which pleases me better,
That my husband is deceiued, or Sir Iohn.

Mist. Page. What a taking was hee in, when your husband askt who was in the basket ?

Mist. Ford. I am halfe affraid he will haue neede of washing : so throwing him into the water, will doe him a benefite.

Mist. Page. Hang h m dishonest rascall : I would all of the same straine, were in the same distresse

Mist. Ford. I thinke my husband hath some speciall suspicion of Falstaffs being heere : for I neuer saw him so grosse in his ieaousie till now.

Mist. Page. I will lay a plot to try that, and wee will yet haue more trickes with Falstaffe, his dissolute disease will scarce obey this medicine

Mist. Ford. Shall we lend that foolishson Carion, Mist Quickly to him, and excuse his throwing into the water, and giue him another hope, to betray him to another punishment ?

Mist. Page. We will do it : let him be sent for to morrow eight a clocke to haue amends.

Ford. I cannot finde him : may be the knaue bragg'd of that he could not compasse.

Mist. Page. Heard you that ?

Mist. Ford. You vse me well, M. Ford ? Do you ?

Ford. I, I do so.

M. Ford. Heauer make you better then your thought

Ford. Amen !

Mist. Page. You do your selfe mighty wrong (M. Ford)

Ford. I, I : I must beare it.

Eu. If there be any pody in the house, & in the chambers, and in the coffers, and in the presses - heauen forgive my sins at the day of iudgement.

Cas. Be gar, nor I too. there is no-bodies.

Page. Fy, fy, M. Ford, are you not ashem'd ? What spirit, what diuell suggests this imagination ? I wold not ha your distemper in this kind, for the wealth of Windsor castle.

Ford. 'Tis my fault (M. Page) I suffer for it

Euans. You suffer for a pad conscience : your wife is as honest a, o'mans, as I will desire among five thousand, and five hundred too.

Cas. By gar, I see 'tis an honest woman

Ford. Well, I promis'd you a dinner come, come, walk in the Parke, I pray you pardon me : I wil hereafter make knowne to you why I haue done this. Come wife, come Mist. Page, I pray you pardon me Pray hartly pardon me.

Page. Let's go in Gentlemen, but (trust me) we'll mock him. I doe inuite you to morrow morning to my house to breakfast after we'll a Birding together, I haue a fine Hawke for the bush. Shall it be so :

Ford. Any thing.

Eu. If there is one, I shall make two in the Companie

Cas. If there be one, or two, I shall make a-theturd

Ford. Pray you go, M. Page.

Euans. I pray you now remembrance to morrow on the lowlie knaue, mine Host.

Cas. Dat is good by gar, withall my heart.

Euans. A lowlie knaue, to haue his gibes, and his mockeries.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Fenton, Anne, Page, Shallow, Slender, Quickly, Page, Mist. Page.

Fen. I see I cannot get thy Fathers loue,
Therefore no more turne me to him (sweet Nam.)

Anne. Alas, how then ?

Fen. Why thou must be thy selfe.
He doth obiekt, I am too great of birth,
And that my state being gall'd with my expence,
I seeke to heale it onely by his wealth.

Besides these, other barres he layes before me,
My Riots past, my wilde Societies,
And tels me 'tis a thing impossible
I should loue thee, but as a property.

An. May be he tels you true

No, heauen so speed me in my time to come,
Albeit I will confesse, thy Fathers wealth
Was the first moue that I woo'd thee (Anne)
Yet wooing thee, I found thee of more valew
Then stamper in Gold, or summes in sealed bagges :
And 'tis the very riches of thy selfe,
That now I aime at.

An. Gentle M. Fenton,

Yet seeke my Fathers loue, still seeke it sir,
If opportunity and humblest suite
Cannot attaine it, why then haake you hither.

Shal. Breake their talke Mist. Quickly,
My Kinsman shall speake for himselfe.

Slender. He make a shaft or a bolt on't, and, tis but ventu-
Shal. Be not dismayd. (ring

Slender. No, she shall not dismay me :

I care not for that, but that I am affeard.

Quickly. Hark ye, M. Slender would speake a word with you
An. I come to him. This is my Fathers choise :

O what a world of vilde ill-fauour'd faults
Lookes handsome in three hundred pounds a yeere ?

Quickly. And how do's good Master Fenton ?

Pray you a word with you.

Shal. Shee's comming ; to her Coz :

O boy, thou hadst a father.

Slender. I had a father (M. Anne) my vnckle can tel you good rests of him - pray you Vnckle, tel Mist. Anne the rest how my Father stole two Geese out of a Pen, good Vnckle.

Shal. Mist. Anne, my Cozen loues you.

Slender. I that I do, as well as I loue any woman in Glocestershire.

Shal. He will maintaine you like a Gentlewoman.

Slender. I that I will, come cut and long-taile, vnder the degree of a Squire.

Shal. He will make you a hundred and fiftie pounds iointure.

Anne. Good Master Shallow let him woo for himselfe.

Shal. Mist. Anne I thanke you for it : I thanke you for that good comfort she cals you (Coz) He leaue you.

Anne. Now Master Slender.

Slender. Now good Mist. Anne,

Anne. What is your will ?

Slender. My will ? Odd's-hart-linge, that's a prettie rest indeede : I ne're made my Will yet (I thanke Heauen-) I am not such a sickely creature, I giue Heauen
praise,

Anne. I meane (M. Slender) what wold you with me?
Slen. Truly, for mine owne part, I would little or nothing with you: your father and my vncler hatin made motions if it be my lucke, so; if not, happy man bee his dole, they can tell you how things go, better then I can. you may aske your father, heere he comes.

Page. Now Mr. Slender, Loue him daughter Anne.
 Why how now? What does Mr. Fenton here?
 You wrong me Sir, thus still to haunt my house.
 I told you Sir, my daughter is disposd of.

Fen. Nay Mr. Page, be not impatient.

Mist. Page. Good M. Fenton, come not to my child.

Page. She is no match for you.

Fen. Sir, will you heare me?

Page. No, good M. Fenton.

Come M. Shallow. Come sonne Slender, in;
 Knowing my minde, you wrong me (M. Fenton.)

Qui. Speake to Mistis Page.

Fen. Good Mist. Page, for that I loue your daughter
 In such a righteous fashion as I do,
 Perforce, against all checkes, rebukes, and manners,
 I must aduance the colours of my loue,
 And not retire. Let me haue your good will

An. Good mother, do not marry me to yond foole.

Mist. Page. I meane it not, I seeke you a better husband.

Qui. That's my master, M. Doctor.

An. Alas I had rather be fet quick i'th earth,
 And bowld to death with Turnips.

Mist. Page. Come, trouble not your selfe good M. Fenton, I will not be your friend, nor enemy:
 My daughter will I question how she loues you,
 And as I finde her, so am I affected:
 Till then, farewell Sir, she must needs go in,
 Her father will be angry.

Fen. Farewell gentle Mistis: farewell Nan.

Qui. This is my doing now. Nay, saide I, will you cast away your childe on a Foole, and a Physitian:
 Looke on M. Fenton, this is my doing.

Fen. I thanke thee and I pray thee once to night,
 Giue my sweet Nan this Ring: there's for thy paines

Qui. Now heauen send thee good fortune, a kinde heart he hath: a woman would run through fire & water for such a kinde heart. But yet, I would my Maister had Mistis Anne, or I would M. Slender had her: or (in sooth) I would M. Fenton had her, I will do what I can for them all three, for so I haue promised, and Ile bee as good as my word, but speciously for M. Fenton. Well, I must of another errand to Sir John Falstaffe from my two Mistresses: what a beast am I to slacke it. Exeunt

Scena Quinta.

Enter Falstaffe, Bardolfe, Quickly, Ford.

Fal. Bardolfe I say.

Bar. Heere Sir.

Fal. Go, fetch me a quart of Sacke, put a tost in't.
 Haue I liu'd to be carried in a Basket like a barrow of butchers Offall? and to be throwne in the Thames? Wel, if I be seru'd such another trick, Ile haue my braines tane out and butter'd, and giue them to a dogge for a New-yeares gift. The rogues slighted me into the ruer with as little remorse, as they would haue drown'd a blinde bitches Puppies, fiftene i'th litter: and you may know by my size, that I haue a kinde of alacrity in sinking: if the bottome were as deepe as hell, I shold down.

 I had beene drown'd, but that the shore was sheluy and shallow: a death that I abhorre: for the water swelles a man, and what a thing should I haue beene, when I had beene swel'd? I should haue beene a Mountaine of Mummie.

Bar. Here's M. Quickly Sir to speake with you,

Fal. Come, let me poure in some Sack to the Thames water: for my bellies as cold as if I had swallow'd snow-bails, for pills to coole the reines. Call her in

Bar. Come in woman.

Qui. By your leaue: I cry you mercy?

Giue your worship good morrow,

Fal. Take away these Challeses:

Go, brew me a pottle of Sacke finely.

Bard. With Egges, Sir?

Fal. Simple of it selfe: Ile no Pullet-Sperme in my brewage. How now?

Qui. Marry Sir, I come to your worship from M. Ford.

Fal. Mist. Ford? I haue had Ford enough I was thrown into the Ford; I haue my belly full of Ford.

Qui. Alas the day, (good-heart) that was not her fault: she do's so take on with her men; they mistooke their erection. (promise.)

Fal. So did I mine, to build vpon a foolish Womans

Qui. Well, she laments Sir for it, that it would yern your heart to see it: her husband goes this morning a birding; she desires you once more to come to her, betweene eight and nine: I must carry her word quickly, she'll make you amends I warrant you.

Fal. Well, I will visit her, tell her so: and bidde her thinke what a man is: Let her consider his frailty, and then iudge of my merit.

Qui. I will tell her.

Fal. Do so. Betweene nine and ten saist thou?

Qui. Eight and nine Sir

Fal. Well, be gone I will not misse her.

Qui. Peace be with you Sir.

Fal. I meruaile I heare not of Mr. Broome: he sent me word to stay within: I like his money well.
 Oh, heere be comes.

Ford. Blesse you Sir.

Fal. Now M. Broome, you come to know
 What hath past betweene me, and Ford's wife.

Ford. That indeed (Sir Iohn) is my businesse

Fal. M. Broome I will not lye to you,
 I was at her house the houre she appointed me.

Ford. And sped you Sir?

Fal. very ill-fauouredly M. Broome.

Ford. How so sir, did she change her determination?

Fal. No (M. Broome) but the peaking Curnuto her husband (M. Broome) dwelling in a continual larm of ielousie, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embrast, kist, protested, & (as it were) spoke the prologue of our Comedy and at his heeles, a rabble of his companions, thither prouoked and instigated by his distemper, and (forsooth) to serch his house for his wiues Loue.

Ford. What? While you were there?

Fal. While I was there.

Ford. And did he search for you, & could not find you?

Fal. You shall heare. As good lucke would haue it, comes in one Mist. Page, giues intelligence of Ford's ap-proch: and in her inuention, and Ford's wiues distraction, they conuey'd me into a bucke-basket.

Ford

Ford. A Buck-basket?

Fal. Yes: a Buck-basket ram'd mee in with foule Shirts and Smockes, Socks, foule Stockings, greasie Napkins, that (Master Broome) there was the rankest compound of villanous smell, that euer offended nostrill.

Ford. And how long lay you there?

Fal. Nay, you shall heare (Master Broome) what I haue sufferd, to bring this woman to cull, for your good Being thus cram'd in the Basket, a couple of Fords knaues, his Hindes, were cald forth by their Mistris, to carry mee in the name of foule Cloathes to Datchet-lane they tooke me on their shoulders: met the iealous knaue their Master in the doore; who ask'd them once or twice what they had in their Basket? I quak'd for feare least the Lunatique Knaue would haue search'd it. but Fate (ordaining he should be a Cuckold) held his hand well, on went hee, for a search, and away went I for foule Cloathes. But marke the sequell (Master Broome) I sufferd the pangs of three feuerall deaths: First, an intollerable fright, to be detected with a iealous rotten Bell-weather. Next to be compas'd like a good Bilbo in the circumference of a Pecke, hilt to point, heele to head. And then to be stop't in like a strong distillation with stinking Cloathes, that fretted in their owne grease: thinke of that, a man of my Kidney; thinke of that, that am as subiect to heate as butter; a man of continuall dissolution, and thaw. it was a miracle to scape suffocation. And in the height of this Bath (when I was more then halfe stew'd in grease (like a Dutchish) to be throwne into the Thames, and coold, glowing-hot, in that ferge like a Horfshoo, thinke of that; hissing hot: thinke of that (Master Broome.)

Ford. In good sadnesse Sir, I am sorry, that for my sake you haue sufferd all this.

My suite then is desperate: You'll vndertake her no more?

Fal. Master Broome I will be throwne into Etna, as I haue bene into Thames, ere I will leaue her thus; her Husband in this morning gone a Birding I haue receiued from her another ambassie of meeting 'twixt eight and nine is the houre (Master Broome)

Ford. 'Tis past eight already Sir.

Fal. Is it? I will then addresse mee to my appointment: Come to mee at your conuenient leisure, and you shall know how I speede and the conclusion shall be crown'd with your enioying her adieu: you shall haue her (Master Broome) Master Broome, you shall cuckold Ford

Ford. Hum: ha? Is this a vision? Is this a dreame? doe I sleepe? Master Ford awake, awake Master Ford: ther's a hole made in your best coate (Master Ford) this 'tis to be married, this 'tis to haue Lynnen, and Buck-baskets. Well, I will proclaime my selfe what I am. I will now take the Leacher: hee is at my house: hee cannot scape me: 'tis impossible hee should. hee cannot creepe into a halfe-penny purse, nor into a Pepper-Boxe. But least the Diuell that guides him, should aide him; I will search impossible places though what I am, I cannot auoide; yet to be what I would not, shall not make me tame: If I haue hornes, to make one mad, let the prouerbe goe with me, He be horne-mad.

Exeunt

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Mistris Page, Quickly, William, Evans.

Mistris Pag. Is he at M Fords already thinke'st thou?

Qui. Sure he is by this; or will be presently, but truly he is very couragious mad, about his throwing into the water. Mistris Ford desires you to come so-dainely

Mistris Pag. He be with her by and by: He but bring my yong-man here to Schoole, looke where his Master comes, 'tis a playing day I see. how now Sir Hugh, no Schoole to day?

Eua. Ne Master Slender is let the Boyes leaue to play.

Qui. Blessing of his heart

Mistris Pag. Sir Hugh, my husband saies my sonne profits nothing in the world at his Booke. I pray you aske him some questions in his Accidence.

Eua. Come hither William, hold vp your head, come

Mistris Pag. Come-on Sirha; hold vp your head, answer your Master, be not afraid

Eua. William, how many Numbers is in Nownes?

Will. Two.

Qui. Truly, I thought there had bin one Number more, because they say od's-Nownes Eua. Peace, your ratlings. What is (Fair) William?

Will. Pulcher

Qui. Powlcats? there are fairer things then Powlcats, sure.

Eua. You are a very simplicity o'man; I pray you peace. What is (Lap) William?

Will. A Stone.

Eua. And what is a Stone (William)?

Will. A Peeble

Eua. No; it is Lapis: I pray you remeuber in your praine

Will. Lapis.

Eua. That is a good William: what is he (William) that do's lend Articles.

Will. Articles are borrowed of the Pronoun, and be thus declined. Singulariter nominatio hic hoc, hoc.

Eua. Nominatio hic, hoc, hoc pray you marke gentimobius Well what is your Accusative case?

Will. Accusatio hinc

Eua. I pray you haue your remembrance (childe) Accusatio hinc, hang, hog

Qui. Hang-hog, is latten for Bacon, I warrant you

Eua. Leau your prables (o'man) What is the Forstime case (William)?

Will. O, Vocativo, O.

Eua. Remember William, Forstine, is caret.

Qui. And that's a good roote.

Eua. O'man, forbear.

Mistris Pag. Peace

Eua. What is your Gentitive case plurall (William)?

Will. Gentitive case?

Eua. I

Will. Gentitive horum, harum, horum.

Qui. Vengeance of Ginyes case, fie on her, neuer name her (childe) if she be a whore

Eua. For shame o'man

Qui. You doe ill to teach the childe such words: hee teaches him to hic, and to hac, which they'll doe fast enough of themselves, and to call be-him, fie vpon you.

E 3

Eua. O'man

Euans. O man, art thou Lunatic? Hast thou no vnderstandings for thy Cafes, & the numbers of the Genders? Thou art as foolish Christian creatures, as I would desires.

Mis. Page. Pre thee hold thy peace.

Eu. Shew me now (William) some declensions of your Pronouns.

Will. Forsooth, I haue forgot.

Eu. It is Qui, que, quod; if you forget your *Qui*es, your *Que*s, and your *Quod*s, you must be preeches: Goe your waies and play, go.

M. Pag. He is a better scholler then I thought he was.

Eu. He is a good sprag-memory: Farewel Mis. Page.

Mis. Page. Adieu good Sir Hugh:
Get you home boy, Come we stay too long. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Falstaffe, Mis. Ford, Mis. Page, Seruants, Ford, Page, Cassio, Euans, Shallow.

Fal. Mis. Ford, Your sorrow hath eaten vp my sufferance; I see you are obsequious in your loue, and I profess requitall to a haire bredth, not onely Mis. Ford, in the simple office of loue, but in all the accustrement, complement, and ceremony of it. But are you sure of your husband now?

Mis. Ford. Hee's a birding (sweet Sir Iohn)

Mis. Page. What hoa, gossip Ford: what hoa.

Mis. Ford. Step into th' chamber, Sir Iohn.

Mis. Page. How now (sweet heart) whose at home besides your selfe?

Mis. Ford. Why none but mine owne people.

Mis. Page. Indeed?

Mis. Ford. No certainly: Speake louder.

Mis. Pag. Truly, I am so glad you haue no body here.

Mis. Ford. Why?

Mis. Page. Why woman, your husband is in his olde lines agaloe: he so takes on yonder with my husband, so railles against all married mankind; so curses all Eues daughters, of what complexion soeuer; and so buffettes himselfe on the forehead: crying peere-out, peere-out, that any madnesse I euer yet beheld, seem'd but tame-nesse, ciuility, and patience to this his distemper he is in now: I am glad the fat Knight is not heere.

Mis. Ford. Why, do's he talke of him?

Mis. Page. Of none but him, and swears he was carried out the last time hee search'd for him, in a Basket: Protests to my husband he is now heere, & hath drawne him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his suspicion: But I am glad the Knight is not heere; now he shall see his owne foolisherie.

Mis. Ford. How neere is he Mistris Page?

Mis. Pag. Hard by, at street end; he wil be here anon.

Mis. Ford. I am vndone, the Knight is heere.

Mis. Page. Why then you are vterly sham'd, & hee's but a dead man. What a woman are you? Away with him, away with him - Better shame, then murder.

Mis. Ford. Which way should he go? How should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket againe?

Fal. No, Ile come no more i'th Basket:

May I not go out ere he come?

Mis. Page. Alas: three of *Mr. Ford*s brothers watch the doore with Pistols, that none shall issue out: otherwise you might slip away ere hee came: But what make you heere?

Fal. What shall I do? Ile creepe vp into the chimney.

Mis. Ford. There they alwaies vs to discharge their Birding-peeeces: creepe into the Kill-hole.

Fal. Where is it?

Mis. Ford. He will seeke there on my word: Neyther Presse, Coffe, Chest, Trunke, Well, Vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his Note. There is no hiding you in the house.

Fal. Ile go out then.

Mis. Ford. If you goe out in your owne semblance, you die Sir Iohn, vnlesse you go out disguis'd.

Mis. Ford. How might we disguise him?

Mis. Page. Alas the day I know not, there is no womans gowne bigge enough for him: otherwise he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchiefe, and so escape.

Fal. Good heesters, deuise something: any extremitie, rather then a mischiefe.

Mis. Ford. My Maids Aunt the fat woman of Brainford, has a gowne aboute.

Mis. Page. On my word it will serue him: shee's as big as he is: and there's her thrum'd hat, and her muffler too: run vp Sir Iohn.

Mis. Ford. Go, go, sweet Sir Iohn: Mistris Page and I will looke some linnen for your head.

Mis. Page. Quicke, quicke, wee'll come dresse you straight: put on the gowne the while.

Mis. Ford. I would my husband would meete him in this shape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brainford; he swears she's a witch, forbad her my house, and hath threatned to beate her.

Mis. Page. Heauen guide him to thy husbands cudgell: and the diuell guide his cudgell afterwards.

Mis. Ford. But is my husband coming?

Mis. Page. I in good sadnesse is he, and talkes of the basket too, howsoeuer he hath had intelligence.

Mis. Ford. Wee'll try that: for Ile appoint my men to carry the basket againe, to meete him at the doore with it, as they did last time.

Mis. Page. Nay, but hee'll be heere presently. let's go dresse him like the witch of Brainford.

Mis. Ford. Ile first direct direct my men, what they shall doe with the basket: Goe vp, Ile bring linnen for him straight.

Mis. Page. Hang him dishonest Varlet, We cannot misuse enough.

We'll leaue a prooffe by that which we will doo,

Wiues may be merry, and yet honest too:

We do not acte that often, iest, and laugh,

'Tis old, but true, Still Swine eats all the draugh.

Mis. Ford. Go Sirs, take the basket againe on your shoulders: your Master is hard at doore: if hee bid you set it downe, obey him: quickly, dispatch.

1 Ser. Come, come, take it vp.

2 Ser. Pray heauen it be not full of Knight againe.

1 Ser. I hope not, I had lief as beare so much lead.

Ford. I, but if it proue true (M. Page) haue you any way then to vnfoole me againe. Set downe the basket villaine: some body call my wife: Youth in a basket: Oh you Pandery Rascals, there's a knot: a gin, a packe, a conspiracie against me. Now shall the diuel be sham'd. What wife I say: Come, come forth: behold what honest next cloathes you lend forth to bleaching.

Page. Why, this passes M. Ford. you are not to goe looke any longer, you must be pinnion'd.

Enans. Why, this is Lunaticks: this is madde, as a mad dogge.

Shall. Indeed M. Ford, this is not well indeed.

Ford. So say I too Sir, come hither Mistress Ford, Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous foole to her husband. I suspect without cause (Mistress) do I?

Mist Ford. Heaven be my witness you doe, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Ford. Well said Brazon-face, hold it out Come forth hirrah

Page This passes.

Mist Ford. Are you not asham'd, let the cloths alone.

Ford. I shall finde you anon

Eua 'Tis vnreasonable, will you take vp your wiues cloathes? Come, away.

Ford Emptie the basket I say.

M. Ford. Why man, why?

Ford Master Page, as I am a man, there was one conuay'd out of my house yesterday in this basket: why may not he be there againe, in my house I am sure he is. my Intelligence is true, my ialousie is reasonable, pluck me out all the linnen.

Mist. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall dye a Fleas death.

Page. Heer's no man.

Shal By my fidelity this is not well Mr. Ford. This wrongs you.

Enans. Mr Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your owne heart: this is ialousies.

Ford Well, hee's not heere I seeke for.

Page. No, nor no where else but in your braine.

Ford. Helpe to search my house this one time. if I find not what I seeke, shew no colour for my extremity: Let me for euer be your Table-sport: Let them say of me, as jealous as Ford, that searh'd a hollow Wall-nut for his wiues Lemman. Satisfie me once more, once more serch with me.

M. Ford. What hoa (Mistress Page,) come you and the old woman downe: my husband will come into the Chamber

Ford Old woman? what old womans that?

M Ford Why it is my maids Aunt of Braimford,

Ford. A witch, a Queane, an olde couzening queane. Hauē I not forbid her my house. She comes of errands do's she? We are simple men, wee doe not know what's brought to passe vnder the profession of Fortune-telling. She workes by Charms, by Spels, by th'Figure, & such dawbry as this is, beyond our Element: wee know nothing. Come downe you Witch, you Hagge you, come downe I say.

Mist. Ford Nay, good sweet husband, good Gentlemen, let him strike the old woman

Mist. Page. Come mother Prat, Come giue me your hand

Ford. Ile Prat-her Out of my doore, you Witch, you Ragge, you Baggage, you Poulcat, you Runnion, out, out: Ile conuere you, Ile fortune-tell you

Mist Page Are you not asham'd?

I thinke you haue kill'd the poore woman.

Mist. Ford. Nay he will do it, 'tis a goodly credite for you.

Ford. Hang her witch.

Eua. By yea, and no, I thinke the o'man is a witch indeede: I like not when a o'man has a great peard; I spee a great peard vnder his muffler

Ford. Will you follow Gentlemen, I beseech you follow. see but the issue of my ialousie: If I cry out thus vpon no traile, neuer trust me when I open againe.

Mist Page Trust me he beate him most pittifully.

Mist. Ford. Nay by th' Masse that he did not. he beate him most vn pittifully, me thought.

Mist. Page. Ile haue the cudgell hallow'd, and hung ore the Altar, it hath done meritorious seruice.

Mist Ford What thinke you? May we with the warrant of woman hood, and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further reuenge?

M. Page The spirit of wantonnesse is sure scar'd out of him, it the diuell haue him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will neuer (I thinke) in the way of waste, attempt vs againe.

Mist Ford Shall we tell our husbands how wee haue seru'd him?

Mist. Page. Yes, by all meanes: if it be but to scrape the figures out of your husbands braines. if they can find in their hearts, the poore vnuertuous fat Knight shall be any further afflicted, wee two will still bee the ministers.

Mist. Ford Ile warrant, they'l haue him publicquely sham'd, and methinks there would be no period to the rest, should he not be publicly sham'd.

Mist Page. Come, to the Forge with it, then shape it: I would not haue things coole. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Host and Bardolfe.

Bar Sir, the Germane desires to haue three of your horses: the Duke himselfe will be to morrow at Court, and they are going to meet him.

Host. What Duke should that be comes so secretly? I heare not of him in the Court. let mee speake with the Gentlemen, they speake English?

Bar. I Sir? Ile call him to you.

Host They shall haue my horses, but Ile make them pay. Ile sauce them, they haue had my houses a week at command I haue turn'd away my other guests, they must come off, Ile sauce them, come. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Page, Ford, Mistress Page, Mistress Ford, and Enans.

Eua. 'Tis one of the best discretions of a o'man as euer I did looke vpon

Page. And did he send you both these Letters at an instant?

Mist Page VVithin a quarter of an houre.

Ford. Pardon me (wife) henceforth do what y wilt: I rather will suspect the Sunne with gold, Than thee with wantonnes: Now doth thy honor stand (In

(In him that was of late an Heretike)
As firme as faith

Page. 'Tis well, 'tis well, no more.

Be not as extreme in submission, as in offence,
But let our plot go forward. Let our wiues
Yet once againe (to make vs publike sport)
Appoint a meeting with this old fat-fellow,
Where we may take him, and disgrace him for it.

Ford. There is no better way then that they spoke of.

Page. How? to send him word they'll meete him in the Parke at midnight? Fie, fie, he'll neuer come.

En. You say he has bin throwne in the Riuers - and has bin greuously peaten, as an old o'man: me-thinkes
there should be terrors in him, that he should not come Me-thinkes his flesh is punish'd, hee shall haue no desires

Page. So thinke I too.

M Ford. Deuise but how you'll vse him whē he comes,
- And let vs two deuise to bring him thether.

Mist Page. There is an old tale goes, that Herne the Hunter (sometime a keeper heere in Windsor Forrest)
Doth all the winter time, at still midnight
Walke round about an Oake, with great rag'd-hornes,
And there he blasts the tree, and takes the cattle,
And make milch-kine yeeld blood, and shakes a chaine
In a most hideous and dreadfull manner.
You haue heard of such a Spirit, and well you know
The superstitious idle-headed-Eld
Receiu'd, and did deliuer to our age
This tale of Herne the Hunter, for a truth.

Page. Why yet there want not many that do feare
In deepe of night to walke by this Hernes Oake:
But what of this?

Mist Ford. Marry this is our deuise,
That Falstaffe at that Oake shall meete with vs.

Page. Well, let it not be doubted but he'll come,
And in this shape, when you haue brought him thether,
What shall be done with him? What is your plot?

Mist Pa. That likewise haue we thought vpon & thus:
Nan Page (my daughter) and my little sonne,
And three or foure more of their growth, wee'll dresse
Like Vrchins, Ouphes, and Fairies, Greene and white,
With roundes of waxen Tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands; vpon a sodaine,
As Falstaffe, she, and I, are newly met,
Let them from forth a saw-pit rush at once
With some diffused song. Vpon their sight
Werwo, in great amazednesse will flye.
Then let them all encircle him about,
And Fairy-like to pinch the vnclere Knight;
And aske him why that houre of Fairy Reuell,
In their so sacred pathes, he dares to tread
In shape prophane.

Ford. And till he tell the truth,
Let the supposed Fairies pinch him, sound,
And burne him with their Tapers.

Mist Page. The truth being knowne,
We'll all present our selues; dis horne the spirit,
And mocke him home to Windsor.

Ford. The children must
Be practis'd well to this, or they'll neu'r doo't.

Ena. I will teach the children their behaviours: and I will be like a lacke-an-Apes also, to burne the Knight with my Taber.

Ford. That will be excellent,
He go buy them vizards.

Mist Page. My Nan shall be the Queene of all the Fairies, finely attired in a robe of white.

Page. That filke will I go buy, and in that time
Shall M. Slender steale my Nan away,
And marry her at Eaton - go, send to Falstaffe straight.

Ford. Nay, Ile to him againe in name of Broome, Hee'll tell me all his purpose. sure hee'll come.

Mist Page. Feare not you that: Go get vs properties
And tricking for our Payries

Enans. Let vs about it,

It is admirable pleasures, and ferry honest knaueries.

Mist Page Go Mist Ford,
Send quickly to Sir John, to know his minde:
Ile to the Doctor, he hath my good will,
And none but he to marry with Nan Page.
That Slender (though well landed) is an Ideor
And he, my husband best of all affects:
The Doctor is well monied, and his friends
Potent at Court: he, none but he shall haue her,
Though twenty thousand worthier come to craue her.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Host, Simple, Falstaffe, Bardolfe, Enans, Cain, Quickly.

Host. What wouldst thou haue? (Boore) what? (thick skin) speake, breathe discusse: breefe, short, quicke, snap.

Simp. Marry Sir, I come to speake with Sir John Fal-staffe from M. Slender.

Host. There's his Chamber, his House, his Castle, his standing-bed and truckle-bed: 'tis painted about with the story of the Prodigall, fresh and new: go, knock and call - hee'll speake like an Anthropophaginian vnto thee - Knocke I say.

Simp. There's an olde woman, a fat woman gone vp into his chamber - Ile be so bold as stay Sir till she come downe - I come to speake with her indee.

Host. Ha? A fat woman? The Knight may be robb'd.
Ile call. Bully-Knight, Bully Sir John speake from thy Lungs Military: Art thou there? It is thine Host, thine Ephesian calls.

Fal. How now, mine Host?

Host. Heere's a Bohemian-Tartar carries the coming downe of thy fat-woman - Let her descend (Bully) let her descend: my Chambers are honourable Fie, priua;
cy? Fie.

Fal. There was (mine Host) an old-fat-woman euen
now with me, but she's gone.

Simp. Pray you Sir, was't not the Wise-woman of Bransford?

Fal. I marry was it (Mussel, shell) what would you with her?

Simp. My Master (Sir) my master Slender, sent to her seeing her go thorough the streets, to know (Sir) whether one Nim (Sir) that beguil'd him of a chaine, had the chaine, or no.

Fal. I spake with the old woman about it.

Simp. And what sayes she, I pray Sir?

Fal. Marry shee sayes, that the very same man that beguil'd Master Slender of his Chaine, cozon'd him of his

Simp. I would I could haue spoken with the Woman her

her selfe, I had other things to haue spoken with her too, from him.

Fal. What are they? let vs know.

Hof. I. come: quicke.

Fal. I may not conceale them (Sir)

Hof. Conceale them, or thou di'st.

Sim. Why sir, they were nothing but about Mistris Anne Page, to know if it were my Masters fortune to haue her, or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sim. What Sir?

Fal. To haue her, or no: goe; say the woman told me so.

Sim. May I be bold to say so Sir?

Fal. I Sir like who more bold.

Sim. I thanke you: worship! I shall make my Master glad with these tydings

Hof. Thou art clearkly thou art clearkly (Sir John) was there a wise woman with thee?

Fal. I that there was (mine Hof) one that hath taught me more wit, then euer I learn'd before in my life. and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning

Bar. Out alas (Sir) cozonage: meere cozonage.

Hof. Where be my horses? speake well of them varletto.

Bar. Run away with the cozoners. for so soone as I came beyond Eaton, they threw me off, from behinde one of them, in a slough of myre, and set spurres, and away, like three Germane-diuels; three Doctor Faustus.

Hof. They are gone but to meete the Duke (villaine) doe not say they bested Germanes are honest men,

Euan. Where is mine Hof?

Hof. What is the matter Sir?

Euan. Haue a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to Towne, tels mee there is three Cozen-Iermans, that has cozend all the Hofs of Readins, of Maidenhead; of Cole-brooke, of horses and money: I tell you for good will (looke you) you are wise, and full of gibes, and vliouing-stocks: and 'tis not conuenient you should be cozoned Fare you well.

Car. Ver's mine Hof de lartiere?

Hof. Here (Master Doctor) in perplexitie, and doubtfull delemma.

Car. I cannot tell vat is dat. but it is tell-a-me, dat you make grand preparation for a Duke de Iamane: by my trot- der is no Duke that the Court is know, to come: I tell you for good will - adieu.

Hof. Huy and cry, (villaine) goe. assist me Knight, I am vndone. fly, run. huy, and cry (villaine) I am vndone.

Fal. I would all the world might be cozond, for I haue beene cozond and beaten too: if it should come to the eare of the Court, how I haue beene transformed; and how my transformation hath beene washd, and cudgeld, they would melt mee out of my fat drop by drop, and liquor Fishermens-boots with me: I warrant they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as crest-falne as a dyde-peare: I neuer prosper'd, since I foffwore my selfe at Primers: well, if my wunde were but long enough; I would repent: Now? Whence come you?

Qui. From the two parties forsooth.

Fal. The Diuell take one parue, and his Dam the other and so they shall be both bestowd; I haue suf-fer'd more for their sakes; more then the villanous inconstancy of mans disposition is able to beare.

Qui. And haue not they suffer'd? Yes, I warrant, speciously one of them; Mistris Ford (good heart) is beaten blacke and blew, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Fal. What tell'st thou mee of blacke, and blew? I was beaten my selfe into all the colours of the Raine-bow and I was hit ere be apprehended for the Witch of Bramford, but that my admirable dexteritie of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman deliuer'd me, the knaue Constable had set me ith' Stocks ith' common Stocks, for a Witch.

Qui. Sir: let me speake with you in your Chamber, you shall heare how things goe, and (I warrant) to your content: here is a Letter will say somewhat: (good-hearts) what a-doe here is to bring you together? Sure, one of you do's not serue heauen well, that you are so cross'd.

Fal. Come vp into my Chamber.

Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Fenton, Hof

Hof. Master Fenton, talke not to mee, my minde is heauy: I will giue ouer all.

Fen. Yet heare me speake: assist me in my purpose, And (as I am a gentleman) ile giue thee A hundred pound in gold, more then your losse.

Hof. I will heare you (Master Fenton) and I will (at the least) keepe your counsell

Fen. From time to time, I haue acquainted you With the deare loue I beare to faire Anne Page, Who, mutually, hath answer'd my affection, (So farre forth, as her selfe might be her chooser) Euen to my wish, I haue a letter from her Of such contents, as you will wonder at; The mirth whereof, so larded with my matter, That neither (singly) can be manifested Without the shew of both: fat Felstiffe Hath a great Scene, the image of the iest Ile show you here at large (harke good mine Hof): To night at Hernes-Oke, iust twixt twelue and one, Must my sweet Nan present the Faerie-Queen: The purpose why, is here: in which disguise While other iests are something ranke on foote, Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender, and with him, at Eaton Immediately to Marry: She hath consented: Now Sir, Her Mother, (euen strong against that match And firme for Doctor Caius) hath appointed That he shall likewise shuffle her away, While other sports are tasking of their mindes, And at the Deary, where a Priest attends Strait marry her: to this her Mothers plot She seemingly obedient likewise hath Made promise to the Doctor: Now, thus it rests, Her Father meanes she shall be all in white, And in that habit, when Slender sees his time To take her by the hand, and bid her goe, She shall goe with him. her Mother hath intended (The better to deuote her to the Doctor, For they must all be mask'd, and vizarded)

That

That quaint in greene, she shall be loose en-roab'd,
With Ribonds-pendant, staring 'bout her head;
And when the Doctor spies his vantage ripe,
To pinch her by the hand, and on that token,
The maid hath giuen consent to go with him.

Hof. Which meanes she to deceiue? Father, or Mother.

Fen. Both (my good Hof.) to go along with me:
And heere it rests, that you'll procure the Vicar
To stay for me at Church, 'twixt twelue, and one,
And in the lawfull name of marrying,
To giue our hearts vnted ceremony.

Hof. Well, husband your deuiſe; Ile to the Vicar,
Bring you the Maid, you shall not lacke a Priest.

Fen. So shall I euermore be bound to thee;
Besides, Ile make a present recompence Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Falstoffs, Quickly, and Ford.

Fal. Pre'thee no more prating - go, Ile hold, this is the third time: I hope good lucke lies in odde numbers Away, go, they say there is Diuinity in odde Numbers, either in natiuity, chance, or death. away.

Qas. Ile prouide you a chaine, and Ile do what I can to get you a paire of hornes.

Fal. Away I say, time weares, hold vp your head & mince. How now M. Broome? Master Broome, the matter will be knowne to night, or neuer. Bee you in the Parke about midnight, at Hernes-Oake, and you shall see wonders.

Ford. Went you not to her yesterday (Sir) as you told me you had appointed?

Fal. I went to her (Master Broome) as you see, like a poore-old-man, but I came from her (Master Broome) like a poore-old-woman; that same knaue (Ford his husband) hath the finest mad diuell of iſealousie in him (Master Broome) that euer gouern'd Frenſie. I will tell you, he beate me greuously, in the ſhape of a woman; (for in the ſhape of Man (Master Broome) I feare) not Goliath with a Weauers beaine, becauſe I know alſo, life is a Shuttel) I am in haſt, go along with mee, Ile tell you all (Master Broome) ſince I pluckt Geefe, plaide Trewant, and whipt Top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten, till lately. Follow mee, Ile tell you ſtrange things of this knaue Ford, on whom to night I will be reuenged, and I will deliuer his wife into your hand. Follow, ſtrange things in hand (M Broome) follow. Exeunt.

Page. Come, come - wee'll couch i'th Caſtle-ditch, till we ſee the light of our Fairies. Remember ſon Slender, my

Slen. I forſooth, I haue ſpoke with her, & we haue a nay-word, how to know one another I come to her in white, and cry Mum, ſhe cries Budget, and by that we know one another.

Shal. That's good too: But what needes either your Mum, or her Budget? The white will decipher her well enough. It hath ſtrooketen a'clocke.

Page. Thenight is darke, Light and Spirits will become it wel: Heauen proſper our ſport. No man means euill but the deuill, and we ſhall know him by his hornes. Lets away: follow me. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Miſt. Page, Miſt. Ford, Caius.

Miſt. Page. Mr Doctor, my daughter is in green, when you ſee your time, take her by the hand, away with her to the Deanerie, and diſpatch it quickly: go before into the Parke: we two muſt go together.

Cai. I know not I haue to do, adieu.

Miſt. Page. Fare you well (Sir.) my husband will not reioyce ſo much at the abuſe of Falſtaffe, as he will chafe at the Doctors marrying my daughter: But 'tis no matter; better a little chiding, then a great deale of heart-breake.

Miſt. Ford. Where is Nan now? and her troop of Fairies? and the Welch-deuill Herne?

Miſt. Page. They are all couch'd in a pitchard by Hernes Oake, with obſcur'd Lights; which at the very inſtant of I alſtaffes and our meeting, they will at once diſplay to the night.

Miſt. Ford. That cannot chooſe but amaze him.

Miſt. Page. If he be not amaz'd he will be mock'd: If he be amaz'd, he will euery way be mock'd.

Miſt. Ford. Wee'll betray him finely.

Miſt. Page. Againſt ſuch Lewdſters, and their lechery, Thoſe that betray them, do no treachery.

Miſt. Ford. The houre drawes-on: to the Oake, to the Oake. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Euans and Fairies.

Euans. Trib, trib Fairies: Come, and remember your parts. be bold (I pray you) follow me into the pit, and when I giue the watch-ords, do as I bid you: Come, come, trib, trib. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Fal. The Windſor-bell hath ſtroke twelue: the Minute drawes-on: Now the hor-bloodied-Gods aſſiſt me: Remember loue, thou waſt a Bull for thy Europa, Loue ſer on thy hornes. O powerfull Loue, that in ſome reſpects makes a Beaſt a Man: in ſom other, a Man a beaſt. You were alſo (Iupiter) a Swan, for the loue of Leda: O omnipotent omnipotent Loue, how nere the God drew to the complexion of a Goose: a fault done first in the forme of a beast, (O Ioue, a beastly fault:) and then another fault, in the semblance of a Fowle, thinke on't (Ioue) a fowle-fault. When Gods haue hot backs, what shall poore men do? For me, I am heere a Windsor Stagge, and the fastest (I thinke) i'th Forrest. Send me a coole rut-time (Ioue) or who can blame me to pisse my Tallow? Who comes heere? my Doe?

M. Ford. Sir Iohn? Art thou there (my Deere?) My male-Deere?

Fal. My Doe, with the blacke Scut? Let the skie raine Potatoes: let it thunder, to the tune of Greene-sleeues, haile-kissing Conits, and snow Eringoes: Let there come a tempest of prouocation, I will shelter mee heere.

M. Ford. Mistris Page is come with me (sweet hart)

Fal. Diuide me like a brib'd Bucke, each a Haunch I will keepe my sides to my selfe, my shoulders for the fellow of this walke, and my hornes I bequeath your husbands. Am I a Woodman, ha? Speake I like Herne the Hunter? Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience, he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome.

M. Page. Alas, what noise?

M. Ford. Heauen forgive our sinnes.

Fal. What should this be?

M. Ford, M. Page. Away, away.

Fal. I thinke the diuell wil not haue me damn'd, Least the oyle that's in me should set hell on fire, He would neuer else crosse me thus.

Enter Fairies.

Qui. Fairies blacke, gray, Greene, and white, You Moone shine reuelers, and shades of night. You Orphan heires of fixed destiny, Attend your office, and your quality. Crier Hob-goblyn, make the Fairy Oyes

Pist. Elues, list your names: Silence you aery toyes. Cricker, to Windsor-chimnies shalt thou leape, Where fires thou find'st vnrak'd, and hearths vnswep't, There pinch the Maids as blew as Bill-berry, Our radiant Queene, hates Slurs, and Sluttary.

Fal. They are Fairies, he that speaks to them shall die, Ile winke, and cough No man their workes must eie.

Eu. Wher's Bede? Go you, and where you find a ma d That crie the sleepe has thrice her prayers said, Raise vp the Organs of her fantasie, Sleepe she as sound as carelesse infancie, But those as sleepe, and thinke not on their sinns, Pinch them armes, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, & shins.

Qui. About, about, Search Windsor Castle (Elues) within, and out. Strew good lucke (Ouphes) on euery sacred roome, That it may stand till the perpetuall doome, In state as wholesome, as in state 'tis fit, Worthy the Owner, and the Owner it. The feuerall Chaires of Order, looke you scowre With iuyce of Balme, and euery precious flowre, Each faire Instalment, Coate, and seu'ral Crest, With loyall Blazon, cuermore be blest. And Nightly-meadow-Fairies, looke you sing Like to the Garters-Compassse; In a ring, Th'expreffure that it beares: Greene let it be, Mote fertile-fresh then all the Field to see: And, Hony Soit Qui Mal-y-Pence, write In Emrold-tuffes, Flowres purple, blew, and white, Like Saphire-pearle, and rich embroiderie, Buckled below faire Knight-hoods bending kilec; Fairies vse Flowres for their character, Away, disperse: But till 'tis once a clocke, Our Dance of Custome, round about the Oke Of Herne the Hunter, let vs not forget.

(ser.

Euan. Pray you lock hand in hand your selues in order And twenty glow-wormes shall our Lanthornes bee To guide our Measure round about the Tree.

But stay, I smell a man of middle earth.

Fal. Heauens defend me from that Welsh Fairy, Least he transforme me to a peece of Cheese.

Pist. Vilde worme, thou wast ore-look'd euen in thy birth.

Qui. With Triall-fire touch me his finger end: If he be chaste, the flame will backe descend And turne him to no paine: but if he start, It is the flesh of a corrupted hart.

Pist. A triall, come.

Eua. Come: will this wood take fire?

Fal. Oh, oh, oh.

Qui. Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire, About him (Fairies) sing a scornfull rime, And as you trip, still pinch him to your time.

The Song.

Fie on sinnefull phantasie: Fie on Lust, and Luxurie:
Lust is but a blondy fire, kindled with vnchaste desire,

Fed in heart whose flames aspire,

As thoughts do blow them higher and higher.

Pinch him (Fairies) mutually Pinch him for his villanie.

Pinch him, and burne him, and turne him about,

Tell Candles, & Star-light, & Moone shine be out

Page. Nay do not flye, I thinke we haue watcht you now: VVill none but Herne the Hunter serue your turne?

M. Page. I pray you come, hold vp the iest no higher. Now (good Sir Iohn) how like you Windsor wiues? See you these husband? Do not these faire yoakes Become the Forrest better then the Towne?

Ford. Now Sir, whose a Cuckold now?

Mr Broome, Falstaff a Knaue, a Cuckoldly knaue, Heere are his hornes Master Broome:

And Master Broome, he hath enioyed nothing of Fords, but his Buck-basket, his cudgell, and twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to Mr Broome, his horses are arrested for it, Mr Broome.

M. Ford. Sir Iohn, we haue had ill lucke: wee could neuer meete: I will neuer take you for my Loue againe, but I will alwayes count you my Deere

Fal. I do begin to perceiue that I am made an Ass.

Ford. I, and an Oxetoo. both the proofes are extant.

Fal. And these are not Fairies:

I was three or foure times in the thought they were not Fairies, and yet the guiltinesse of my minde, the sodaine surprize of my powers, droue the grossenesse of the foppery into a recent'd beleefe, in despight of the teeth of all time and reason, that they were Fairies. See now how wit may be made a Iacke-a-Lent, when 'tis vpon ill employment.

Euan. Sir Iohn Falstaff, serue Got, and leaue your desires, and Fairies will not pinse you.

Ford. VVell said Fairy Hagb.

Euan. And leaue you your realouzies too, I pray you.

Ford.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife againe, till thou art able to woo her in good English.

Fal. Have I laid my braine in the Sun, and dride it, that it wants matter to prevent so grosse ore-reaching as this? Am I ridden with a Welch Goate too? Shall I have a Coxcombe of Prize? Tis time I were choak'd with a peece of roasted Cheefe.

En. Seefe is not good to giue nutter; your belly is al putter.

Fal. Seefe, and Putter? Have I hui'd to stand at the caunt of one that makes Fitters of English? This is enough to be the decay of lust and late-walking through the Realme.

Mist. Page. Why Sir John, do you thinke though wee would haue thrust vertue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and haue giuen our selues without scruple to hell, that euer the deuill could haue made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hodge-pudding? A bag of flux?

Mist. Page. A puffed man?

Page. Old, cold, wither'd, and of intollerable entailes?

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Sathan?

Page. And as poore as Iob?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Enam. And giuen to Fornications, and to Tauernes, and Sacke, and Wyne, and Metheglins, and to drinkings and swearings, and starings? Pribles and prables?

Fal. Well, I am your Theame: you haue the start of me, I am deiested: I am not able to answer the Welch Flannell, I Ignorance it selfe is a plummet ore me, vse me as you will.

Ford. Marry Sir, wee'll bring you to Windsor to one Mr. Broome, that you haue cozon'd of money, to whom you should haue bin a Pander: ouer and aboue that you haue suffer'd, I thinke, to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

Page. Yet be cheerefull Knight: thou shalt eat a posset to night at my house, wher I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee: Tell her Mr. Slender hath married her daughter.

Mist. Page. Doctors doubt that; If Anne Page be my daughter, she is (by this) Doctor Caus wife.

Slen. Whoa ho, hoe, Father Page.

Page. Sonne? How now? How now Sonne, Haue you dispatch'd?

Slen. Dispatch'd? Ile make the best in 'Glostershire know on'e: would I were hang'd la, elfe!

Slen. I came yonder at Eaton to marry Mistress Anne Page, and she's a great lubberly boy. If it had not bene i'th Church, I would haue swing'd him, or hee should haue swing'd me. If I did not thinke it had bene Anne Page, would I might neuer stirre, and 'tis a Post-masters Boy.

Page. Vpon my life then, you rooke the wrong.
Slen. What neede you tell me that? I thinke so, when I rooke a Boy for a Girl: If I had bene married to him, (for all he was in womans apparell) I would not haue had him.

Page. Why this is your owne folly, Did not I tell you how you should know my daughter, By her garments?

Slen. I went to her in greene, and cried Mum, and she cride budget, as Anne and I had appointed, and yet it was not Anne, but a Post-masters boy.

Mist. Page. Good George, be not angry, I knew of your purpose: turn'd my daughter into white, and madee she is now with the Doctor at the Deannie, and there married.

Car. Veris Mistress Page: by gar I am cozoned, I ha married onn Garsoon, a boy; oon peasant, by gar. A boy, it is not An Page, by gar, I am cozened.

M Page. VVhy? did you take her in white?

Car. I bee gar, and 'tis a boy: be gar, Ile raise all Windsor.

Ford. This is strange: Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart misgives me, here comes Mr. Ferris. How now Mr. Ferris?

Anne. Pardon good father, good my mother pardon

Page. Now Mistress:

How chance you went not with Mr. Slender?

M. Page. Why went you not with Mr. Doctor, maid?

Fen. You do amaze her: heare the truth of it, You would haue married her most shamefully, Wl ere there was no proportion held in loue: The truth is, she and I (long since contracted) Are now so sure that nothing can dissolve vs: Th'offence is holy, that she hath committed, And this decent looses the name of craft, Of disobedience, or vndutious title, Since therein she d theuicate and shun A thousand irreligious cursed houres Which forced marriage would haue brought vpon her.

Ford. Stand not amaz'd, here is no remedie: In Loue, the heauens themselves do guide the fate, Money buyes Lands, and viues are sold by fate.

Fal. I'm glad, though you haue rane a special stand to strike at me, that your Arrow hath glanc'd.

Page. Well, what remedy? Ferris, heauen giue thee ioy, what cannot be eschew'd, must be embrac'd.

Fal. When night-dogges run, all sorts of Deere are chac'd.

Mist. Page. Well, I will muse no further: Mr. Ferris, Heauen giue you many, many merry dayes: Good husband, let vs euery one go home, And laugh this sport ore by a Countre fire, Sir Iob and all.

Ford. Let it be so (Sir John.)

To Master Broome, you yet shall hold your word, For he, to night, shall lye with Mistress Ford. Exeunt.

FINIS.

MEASURE,

For Measure.

Actus primus, Scena prima.

Enter Duke, Escalus, Lords.

Duke.

Escalus.

Ese. My Lord.

(fold,

*Duk. Of Government, the properties to va-
Would seeme in me t'office, I speech & discourse,
Since I am put to know, that your owne Science
Exceedes (in that) the lists of all aduice
My strength can giue you. Then no more remains
But that, to your sufficiency, as your worth is able,
And let them worke. The nature of our People,
Our Cities Inhabitants, and the Termes
For Common Justice, y<sup>e</sup> are as pregnant in
As Art, and practise, hath enriched any
That we remember. There is our Commission,
From which, we would not haue you warpe, call hither,
I say, bid come before vs Angelo
What figure of vs thinke you, he will beare.
For you must know, we haue vth speciall soule
I lected him our absence to supply;
Lent him our terror, dreft him with our loue,
And giuen his Deputation all the Organs
Of our owne powre. What thinke you of it?
*Ese. If any in f<sup>r</sup>ma be of worth
To vndergoe such ample grace, and honour,
It is Lord Angelo.

Enter Angelo.

Duk. I looke where he comes.

*Ang. Alwayes obedient to your Graces will,
I come to know your pleasure.*

Duke. Angelo.

There is a kinde of Character in thy life,
That to th'obseruer, doth thy history
Fully vnfold: Thy selfe, and thy belongings
Are not thine owne so proper, as to waste
Thy selfe vpon thy vertues; they on't<sup>e</sup>ce:
Heauen doth with vs, as we, with Torchet doe,
Not light them for themselves: For if our vertues
Did not goe forth of vs, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not: Spirits are not firely touch'd
Put to fire issues: nor nature neuer lends
The smallest seruile ofl' excellence,
But like a stony goddesse, she deterns not
Her selfe to giue of herd to vs,
Both thanks, and due; but I do end my speech

To one that can my part in him aduertise;
Hold therefore Angelo

In our remoue, be thou as full, our selfe:

Mortalline and Mercie in f<sup>r</sup>ma

I vse in thy tongue, and heare: Old Escalus

Though still in question, is thy secondary.

Take thy Commission.

Ang. Now good my Lord

Let there be some more test, made of my mettle,
Before so noble, and to great a figure
Be stamp't vpon it.

Duk. No more eushio:

We haue with a leauen'd, and prepared choice
Proceeded to you; therefore take your honors:
Our haste from hence is of so quicke condit<sup>o</sup>n,
That it prefers it selfe, and leaues vnquestion'd
Matters of needfull value. We shall write to you
As time, and our concernings shall importune,
How it goes vth vs, and doe looke to know
What doth befall you here. So fare you well:
To th' hopefull execution doe I leave you,
Of your Commissions.

Ang. Yet giue leave (my Lord.)

That we may bring you something on the way.

Duk. My haste may not admit it,

Nor neede you (our mire honor) haue to doe
With any scruple: your scope is as mine owne,
So to enforce, or qualifie the Lawes
As to your soule seemes good: Giue me your hand,
Hepruily away. I loue the people,
But doe not like to stage me to their eyes:
Though it doe well, I doe not rellish well
Their lowd appl'ause, and Auerrehen<sup>ce</sup>
Nor doe I thinke the man of safe discretion
That do's affect it. Once more fare you well.

Ang. The heauen giue safety to your purposes.

Ese. Lead forth, and bring you backe in happy resse. Exit.

Duk. I thank you, fare you well.

*Ese. I shall desire you, Sir, to giue me leave
To haue free speech with you; and it concerns me
To looke into the bottome of my place
A power I haue, but of what strength and course,
I am not yet instructed.*

*Ang. To so with me: Let vs then draw together,
And we may see our sinfull sinnes
Touching that point.*

Ese. It was my very purpose.

Enter.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lucio, and two other Gentlemen.

Luc. If the Duke, with the other Dukes, come not to composition with the King of Hungary, why then all the Dukes fall vpon the King.

1. Gent. Heauen grant vs its peace, but not the King of Hungaryes.

2. Gent. Amen.

Luc. Thou conclud'st like the Sanctimonious Pirat, that went to sea with the ten Commandements, but scrap'd one out of the Table.

2. Gent. Thou shalt not Steale?

Luc. I, that he raz'd.

1. Gent. Why? 'twas a commandement, to command the Captaine and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steale: There's not a Souldier of vs all, that in the thank-giuing before meate, do rallish the petition well, that praises for peace.

2. Gent. I neuer heard any Souldier dislike it.

Luc. I beleue thee: for I thinke thou neuer was't where Grace was said.

3. Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

1. Gent. What? In meeter?

Luc. In any proportion or in any language

1. Gent. I thinke, or in any Religion.

Luc. I, why not? Grace, is Grace, despight of all conuersion: as for example; Thou thy selfe art a wicked villaine, despight of all Grace.

1. Gent. Well: there went but a paire of sheeres betweene vs.

Luc. I grant: as there may betweene the Lists, and the Veluet. Thou art the List.

1. Gent. And thou the Veluet; thou art good veluet; thou'rt a three pild-peece I warrant thee: I had as lief be a Lyft of an English Kersey, as be pild, as thou art pild, for a French Veluet. Do I speake feelingly now?

Luc. I thinke thou do'st: and indeed with most painfull feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine owne confession, learne to begin thy health; but, whilst I liue forget to drinke after thee.

1. Gent. I think I haue done my selfe wrong, haue I not?

3. Gent. Yes, that thou hast, whether thou art tainted, or free.

Enter Bawd.

Luc. Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation comes. I haue purchas'd as many diseases vnder her Roofe, As come to

2. Gent. To what, I pray?

Luc. Iudge.

2. Gent. To three thousand Dollours a yeare.

1. Gent. I, and more.

Luc. A French crowne more.

1. Gent. Thou art alwayes figuring diseases in me; but thou art full of error, I am sound.

Luc. Nay, not (as one would say) healthy: but so sound, as things that are hollow; thy bones are hollow; Impiety has made a feast of thee.

1. Gent. How now, which of your hips has the most profound Citica?

Bawd. Well, well: there's one yonder arrested, and carried to prison, was worth fise thousand of you all.

2. Gent. Who's that I pray thee?

Bawd. Marry Sir, that's Claudio, Signior Claudio.

1. Gent. Claudio to prison? 'tis not so.

Bawd. Nay, but I know 'tis so: I saw him arrested: saw him carried away: and which is more, within these three daies his head to be chop'd off.

Luc. But, after all this fooling, I would not haue it so: Art thou sure of this?

Bawd. I am too sure of it: and it is for getting Madam Julietta a vnx childe.

Luc. Beleue me this may be the promis'd to meete the two howres since, and he was euer precise in promise keeping.

2. Gent. Besides you know, it drawes something neere to the speech we had to such a purpose.

1. Gent. But most of all agreeing with the proclamation.

Luc. Away: let's goe learne the truth of it. Exit.

Bawd. Thus, what with the war; what with the sweat, what with the gallowes, and what with pouerty, I am Custom-shrunke. How now? what's the newes with you.

Enter Clowne.

Clo. Yonder man is carried to prison.

Baw. Well: what has he done?

Clo. A Woman.

Baw. But what's his offence?

Clo. Groping for Trowts, in a peculiar Riuer.

Baw. What? is there a maid with child by him?

Clo. No: but there's a woman with maid by him: you haue not heard of the proclamation, haue you?

Baw. What proclamation, man?

Clo. All howses in the Suburbs of Vienna must bee pluck'd downe.

Bawd. And what shall become of those in the Citie?

Clo. They shall stand for seed: they had gon down to, but that a wise Burger put in for them.

Bawd. But shall all our houses of resort in the Suburbs be puld downe?

Clo. To the ground, Mistris.

Bawd. Why heere's a change indeed in the Common-wealth: what shall become of me?

Clo. Come: feare not you: good Counsellors lacke no Clients: though you change your place, you neede not change your Trade: Ile bee your Tapster still; courage, there will be pittie taken on you; you that haue worne your eyes almost out in the seruice, you will bee considered.

Bawd. What's to doe heere, Thomas Tapster? let's withdraw?

Clo. Here comes Signior Claudio, led by the Prouost to prison: and there's Madam Juliet. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Prouost, Claudio, Juliet, Officers, Lucio, & 2 Gent.

Cla. Fellow, why do'st thou show me thus to th' world? Beare me to prison, where I am committed.

Pro. I do it not in euill disposition, But from Lord Angelo by speciall charge.

Cla. Thus can the demy-god (Authority) Make vs pay downe, for our offence, by waight The words of heauen; on whom it will, it will, On whom it will not (foe) yet still 'tis iust. (Strait.

Luc. Why how now Claudio? whence comes this re-

Cla. From too much liberty, (my Lucio) Liberty As surfet is the father of much fast, So euery Scope by the immoderate vse Turnes to restraint: Our Natures doe pursue

Like

Like Rats that rauyn downe their proper Bane,
A thirstie euill, and when we drinke, we die.

Luc. If I could speake so wisely vnder an arrest, I would send for certaine of my Creditors: and yet, to say the truth, I had as lief haue the foppery of freedome, as the mortality of imprisonment what's thy offence,
Claudio?

Cla. What (but to speake of) would offend againe.

Luc. What, is't murder?

Cla. No.

Luc. Lecherie?

Cla. Call it so.

Pro. Away, Sir, you must goe.

Cla. One word, good friend:

Lucio, a word with you

Luc. A hundred:

If they'll doe you any good Is Lechery so look'd after?

Cla. Thus stands it with me vpon a true contract
I got possession of Iulietas bed,
You know the Lady, she is fast my wife,
Sawe that we doe the denunciation lacke
Of outward Order. This we came not to,
Onely for propogation of a Dowre
Remaining in the Coffer of her friends,
From whom we thought it meet to hide our Loue
Till Time had made them for vs. But it chanches
The stealth of our most mutuall entertainment
With Character too grosse, is writ on Iuliet.

Luc. With childe, perhaps?

Cla. Vnbappely, euen so.

And the new Deputie, now for the Duke,
Whether it be the fault and glimpse of newnes,
Or whether that the body publique, be
A horse whereon the Gouernor doth ride,
Who newly in the Seate, that it may know
He can command, lets it strait feele the spur:
Whether the Tyranny be in his place,
Or in his Emigence that fills it vp
I stagger in, but this new Gouernor
Awakes me all the inrolled penalties
Which haue (like vn-scower'd Armour) hung by th' wall
So long, that nineteene Zodiacs haue gone round,
And none of them beene worne, and for a name
Now puts the drowisie and neglected Act
Freshly on me 'tis surely for a time

Luc. I warrant it is And thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milke-maid, if she be in loue, may sigh it off. Send after the Duke, and appeale to him.

Cla. I haue done so, but hee's not to be found

I pre'thee (Lucio) doe me this kinde seruice:
This day; my sister should the Cloyster enter,
And there receiue her approbation.

Acquaint her with the danger of my state,
Implore her, in my name, what she makes friends
To the strict deputation. bid her selfe assay him,
I haue great hope in that: for an her youth
There is a prone and speechlesse dialect,
Such as moue men: beside she hath prosperous Art
When she will play with reason, and discourse;
And will she comperswade.

Luc. I pray thee may; as well for the encouragement of the like, which also would stabill vnder groeuus imposition as for the enioying of thy life, which I would be sorry should bee thus foolishly lost, at a game of tick-tack: Ile to her.

Cla. I thinke you good friend Lucio.

Luc. Within two houres.

Cla. Come Officer, away.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Duke and Friar Thomas.

Duk. No holy Father throw away that thought,
Beleeue not that the dribling dart of Loue
Can pierce a compleat bosome: why, I desire thee
To giue me secret harbour, hath a purpose
More graue, and wrinkled, then the aimes, and ends
Of burning youth.

Fri. May your Grace speake of it?

Duk. My holy Sir, none better knowes then you
How I haue euer lou'd the life remoued
And held in idle price, to haunt assemblies
Where youth, and cost, wastlesse brauery keeps.
I haue deliuerd to Lora Angelo
(A man of stricture and firme abstinence)
My absolute power, and place here in Vienna,
And he supposes me trauaild to Poland,
(For so I haue strewd it in the common eare)
And so it is recei'd. Now (pious Sir)
You will demand of me, why I do this.

Fri. Gladly, my Lord.

Duk. We haue strict Statutes, and most biting Laws,
(The needfull bits and curbes to headstrong weedes,) Which for this fouereene yeares, we haue let slip,
Euen like an ore-growne Lyon in a Caue
That goes not out to prey: Now, as fond Fathers,
Hauing bound vp the threatning twigs of birch,
Onely to sticke it in their childrens sight,
For terror, not to vse in time the rod
More mock'd, then fear'd: so our Decrees,
Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead,
And libertie, plucks Iustice by the nose,
The Baby beates the Nurse, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum.

Fri. It rested in your Grace

To vnloose this tyde-vp Iustice, when you pleas'd.
And it in you more dreadfull would haue seem'd
Then in Lord Angelo.

Duk. I doe care too dreadfull
Sith 'twas my fault, to giue the people scope,
'T would be my tyranny to strike and gall them,
For what I bid them doe: For, we bid this be done
When euill deedes make their permissiue passe,
And not the punishment therefore indeede (my father)
I haue on Angelo impos'd the office,
Who may in th' ambush of any name, strike home,
And yet, my nature neuer in the fight
To do in slander. And to behold his sway
I will, as 'twere a brother of your Order,
Visit both Prince, and People: Therefore I pre'thee
Supply me with the habit, and instruct me
How I may formally in person beare
Like a true Friar: Moe reasons, for this action
At our more leysure, shall I render you;
Onely, this one: Lord Angelo is precise,
Stands at a guard with Enuie: scarce confesses
That his blood flows: or that his appetite
Is more to bread then stone: hence shall we see
If power change purpose: what our Seemers be.

F 2

Exit Scen

Scena Quinta.

Enter Isabell and Franciske & Nuns.Isa. And haue you Nuns no farther priuiledges?Nun. Are not these large enough?Isa. Yes truly; I speake not as desiring more,
But rather wishing a more strict restraint
Vpon the Sisterhood, the Votarists of Saint Clare.Lucio within.Luc. Hoa? peace be in this place.Isa. Who's that which calls?Nun. It is a mans voice: gentle Isabella
Turne you the key, and know his businesse of him;
You may; I may not: you are yet vnsworne.
When you haue vowd, you must not speake with men,
But in the presence of the Prioresse;
Then if you speake, you must not show your face;
Or if you show your face, you must not speake:
He calls againe I pray you answere him.Isa. Peace and prosperitie. who is't that calls?Luc. Haile Virgin, (if you be) as those cheekes-Roses
Proclaime you are no lesse can you so need me,
As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A Nounce of this place, and the faire Sister
To her vnhappy brother Claudio?Isa. Why her vnhappy Brother? Let me aske,
The rather for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella, and his Sister.Luc. Gentle & faire your Brother kindly greets you;
Not to be weary with you; he's in prison.Isa. Woe me; for what?Luc. For that, which if my selfe might be his Iudge,
He should receiue his punishment, in thanks
He hath got his friend with childe.Isa. Sir, make me not your storie.Luc. 'Tis true, I would not, though 'tis my familiar sin,
With Maids to seeme the Lapwing, and to rest
Tongue, far from heart: play with all Virgins so:
I hold you as a thing en-skied, and fainted,
By your renoucement, an immortall spirit
And to be talk'd with in sincerity,
As with a Saint.Isa. You doe blaspheme the good, in mocking me.Luc. Doe not beleeue it fewnes, and truth; 'tis thus,
Your brother, and his louer haue embrac'd;
As those that feed, grow full as blossoming Time
That from the seednes, the bare fallow brings
To teeming foynson euen so her plenteous wombe
Expresseth his full Tilth, and husbandry.Isa. Some one with childe by him? why Joseph Miller?Luc. Is she your cosen?Isa. Adoptedly, as schoole-maids change their names
By vaine, though apt affection.Luc. She it is.Isa. Oh, let him marry her.Luc. This is the point.The Duke is very strangely gone from hence;
Bore many gentlemen (my selfe being one)
In hand, and hope of action. But we doe learne,
By those that know the very Nerues of State,
His going-out, were of an infinite distance
From his true meant designe: vpon his place,

(And with full line of his authority)

Gouernes Lord Angelo; A man, whose blood
Is very snow-broth: one, who neuer feels
The wanton stings, and motions of the sence;
But doth rebate, and blunt his naturall edge
With profits of the minde: Studie, and fast
He (to giue feare to vs, and libertie,
Which haue, for long, run-by the hideous law,
As Myce, by Lyons) hath pickt out an Act,
Vnder whole heavy sence, your brothers life
Falls into forfeit. he arrests him on it,
And followes close the rigor of the Statute
To make him an example: all hope is gone,
Vnlesse you haue the grace, by your faire praiere
To soften Angelo: And that's my pith of businesse
'Twixt you, and your poore brother.Isa. Doth he so,
Seeke his life?Luc. Has censur'd him already;
And as I heare, the Prouost hath a warrant
For his execution.Isa. Alas: what poore
Abilitie's in me, to doe him good.Luc. Assay the powre you haue.Isa. My power? alas, I doubt.Luc. Our doubts are traitors
And makes vs loose the good we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt: Goe to Lord Angelo
And let him learne to know, when Maidens sue
Men giue like gods. but when they weepe and kneele,
All their petitions, are as freely theirs
As they themselues would owe them.Isa. Ile see what I can doe.Luc. But speedily.Isa. I will about it strait;
No longer staying, but to giue the Mother
Notice of my affaire. I humbly thanke you:
Commend me to my brother: soone at night
Ile send him certaine word of my successe,Luc. I take my leaue of you.Isa. Good sir, adieu.Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Angelo, Escalus, and seruants, Iustices.Ang. We must not make a scar-crow of the Law,
Setting it vp to feare the Birds of prey,
And let it keepe one shape, till custome make it
Their perarch, and not their terror.Ese. I, but yetLet vs be keene, and rather cut a little
Then fall, and bruisse to death: alas, this gentle man
Whom I would saue, had a most noble father,
Let but your honour know
(Whom I beleeue to be most strait in vertue)
That in the working of your owne affections,
Had time coheard with Place, or place with wishing,
Or that the resolute acting of our blood
Could haue atrand the effect of your owne purpose,
Whether you had not sometime in your life
Er'd in this point, which now you chafure him,
And puld the Law vpon you.Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted (Esealus)

Another

Another thing to fall: I not deny
The Iury passing on the Prisoners life
May in the sworne-twelve haue a thiefe, or two Guiltier then him they try; what's open made to Iustice,
That Iustice ceizes; What knowes the Lawes
That theeues do passe on theeues? 'Tis very pregnant,
The Iewell that we finde, we stoope, and take't,
Because we see it; but what we doe not see,
We tread vpon, and neuer thinke of it
You may not to extenuate his offence,
For I haue had such faultes, but rather tell me
When I, that censure him, do so offend
Let mine owne Iudgement patterne out my death,
And nothing come in partiall. Sir, he must dye.

Enter Pronost

Esc. Be it as your wisdoms will.

Ang. Where is the Pronost?

Pro. Here is it like your honour.

Ang. See that Claudio

Be executed by nine to morrow morning,
Bring him his Confessor, let him be prepar'd,
For that's the vtmost of his pilgrimage.

Efc. Well heauen forgive him, and foigie vs all
Some rise by sinne, and some by vertue fall
Some run from braikes of Ice, and answere none,
And some condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbow, Froth, Clowne, Officers.

Elb. Come, bring them away if thele be good people in a Common-weale, that doe nothing but vse their abuses in common houses, I know no law bring them away.

Ang. How now Sir, what's your name? And what's the matter?

Elb. If it please your honour, I am the poore Dukes Constable, and my name is Elbow, I doe leane vpon Iustice Sir, and doe bring in here before your good honor, two notorious Benefactors

Ang. Benefactors? Well What Benefactors are they?
Are they not Malefactors?

Elb. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are But precise villaines they are, that I am sure of and void of all prophination in the world, that good Christians ought to haue.

Efc. This comes off well - here's a wise Officer

Ang. Go to. What quality are they of? Elbow is your name?

Why do'st thou not speake Elbow?

Clo. He cannot Sir - he's out at Elbow.

Ang. What are you Sir?

Elb. He Sir, a Tapster Sir parcell Baud. one that serues a bad woman. whose house Sir was (as they say) plucked down in the Suborbs. and now thee professes a hot-house, which, I thinke is a very ill house too.

Efc. How know you that?

Elb. My wife Sir whom I detest before heauen, and your honour.

Efc. How? thy wife?

Elb. I Sir: whom I thanke heauen is an honest woman.

Efc. Do'st thou detest her therefore?

Elb. I say sir, I will detest my selfe also, as well as she,
that this house, if it be not a Bauds house, it is pittie of her life, for it is a naughty house

Efc. How do'st thou know that, Constable?

Elb. Marry sir, by my wife, who, if she had bin a woman Cardinally giuen, might haue bin accus'd in fornication, adultery, and all vncleanlinesse there.

Efc. By the womans meanes?

Elb. I sir, by Mistris Ouer-dons meanes but as she spit in his face, so she defide him.

Clo. Sir, if it please your honor, this is not so.

Elb. Proue it before these varlets here, thou honorable man, proue it.

Efc. Doe you heare how he misplaces?

Clo. Sir, she came in great with childe: and longing (sauing your honors reuerence) for stewd prewyns, sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were in a fruit dish (a dish of some three pence, your honours haue scene such dishes) they are not China-dishes, but very good dishes.

Efc. Go too - go too no matter for the fish sir.

Clo. No indeede sir not of a pin, you are therein in the right but, to the point - As I say, this Mistris Elbow, being (as I say) with childe, and being great bellied, and longing (as I said) for prewyns and hauing but two in the dish (as I said) Master Froth here, this very man, hauing eaten the rest (as I said) & (as I say) paying for them very honestly - for, as you know Master Froth, I could not giue you three pence againe.

Fro. No indeede.

Clo. Very well. you being then (if you be remem-bred) cracking the stones of the foresaid prewyns.

Fro. I, so I did indeede

Clo. Why, very well. I telling you then (if you be remembred) that such a one, and such a one, were past cure of the thing you wot of, vnlesse they kept very good diet, as I told you.

Fro. All this is true.

Clo. Why very well then.

Efc. Come. you are a tedious foole to the purpose:
what was done to Elbowes wife, that hee hath cause to complaine of? Come me to what was done to her.

Clo. Sir, your honor cannot come to that yet.

Efc. No sir, nor I meane it nor.

Clo. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honours leau. And I beseech you, looke into Master Froth here sir, a man of foune score pound a yeare; whose father died at Hallowmas Was't not at Hallowmas Master Froth?

Fro. All hallond - Eue

Clo. Why very well. I hope here be truthes he Sir, sitting (as I say) in a lower chaire, Sir, 'twas in the bunch of Grapes, where indeede you haue a delight to sit, haue you not?

Fro. I haue so, because it is an open roome, and good for winter

Clo. Why very well then - I hope here be truthes.

Ang. This will last out a night in Russia
When nights are longest there He take my leau,
And leau you to the hearing of the cause,
Hoping youle finde good cause to whip them all. Exit.

Efc. I thinke no lesse. good morrow to your Lordship. Now Sir, come on - What was done to Elbowes wife, once more?

Clo. Once Sir - there was nothing done to her once.

Elb. I beseech you Sir, aske him what this man did to my wife.

Clo. I beseech your honor, aske me.

Efc. Well sir, what did this Gentleman to her?

Clo. I beseech you sir, looke in this Gentlemans face good Master Froth looke vpon his honor; 'tis for a good purpose: doth your honor marke his face?

Efc. I fir, very well.

Clo. Nay, I beseech you marke it well.

Efc. Well, I doe so.

Clo. Doth your honor see any harme in his face?

Efc. Why no.

Clo. Ile besupposd vpon a booke, his face is the worst thing about him: good then: If his face be the worst thing about him, how could Master Froth doe the Constables wife any harme? I would know that of your honour.

Efc. He's in the right (Constable) what say you to us?

Elb. Firft, and it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his Mistris is a respected woman.

Clo. By this hand Sir his wife is a more respected person then any of vs all.

Elb. Varlet, thou lyest; thou lyest wicked varlet: the time is yet to come that shee was euer respected with man, woman, or childe.

Clo. Sir, she was respected with him, before he married with her.

Efc. Which is the wiser here; Iustice or Iniquitie? Is this true?

Elb. O thou caytiffe: O thou varlet: O thou wicked Hanniball; I respected with her, before I was married to her? If euer I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship thinke mee the poore Drkes Officer: proue this, thou wicked Hanniball, or ile haue mine action of battery on thee.

Efc. If he tooke you a box' oth'care, you might haue your action of slander too.

Elb. Marry I thanke your good worship for it: what is't your Worships pleasure I shall doe with this wicked Caytiffe?

Efc. Truly Officer, because he hath some offences in him, that thou wouldst discover, if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses, till thou knowst what they are.

Elb. Marry I thanke your worship for it: Thou seest thou wicked varlet now, what's come vpon thee. Thou art to continue now thou Varlet, thou art to continue.

Efc. Where were you borne, friend?

Froth. Here in Vienna, Sir.

Efc. Are you of fourescore pounds a yeere?

Froth. Yes, and 'b'please you sir.

Efc. So: what trade are you of, sir?

Clo. A Tapster, a poore widdowes Tapster.

Efc. Your Mistris name?

Clo. Mistris Ouer-don.

Efc. Hath she had any more then one husband?

Clo. Nine, sir: Ouer-don by the last.

Efc. Nine? come hether to me, Master Froth; Master Froth, I would not haue you acquainted with Tapsters; they will draw you Master Froth, and you wil hang them: get you gon, and let me heare no more of you.

Fro. I thanke your worship: for mine owne part, I neuer come into any roome in a Tap-house, but I am drawne in.

Efc. Well: no more of it Master Froth: farewell: Come you hether to me, Mr. Tapster: what's your name Mr. Tapster?

Clo. Pompey.

Efc. What else?

Clo. Bum, Sir.

Efc. Troth, and your bum is the greatest thing about you, so that in the beaustifull sence, you are Pompey the great; Pompey, you are partly a bawd, Pompey; howsoeuer you colour it in being a Tapster, are you not? come, tell me true, it shall be the better for you.

Clo. Truly sir, I am a poore fellow that would liue.

Efc. How would you liue Pompey? by being a bawd? what doe you thinke of the trade Pompey? is it a lawfull trade?

Clo. If the Law would allow it, sir.

Efc. But the Law will not allow it Pompey; nor it shall not be allowed in Vienna.

Clo. Do's your Worship meane to geld and splay all the youth of the City?

Efc. No, Pompey.

Clo. Truly Sir, in my poore opinion they will too: then if your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaues, you need not to feare the bawds.

Efc. There is pretty orders beginning I can tell you: It is but heading, and hanging.

Clo. If you head, and hang all that offend that way but for ten yeare together; you'll be glad to giue out a Commission for more heads: if this law hold in Vienna ten yeare, ile rent the fairest house in it after three pence a Bay: if you liue to see this come to passe, say Pompey told you so.

Efc. Thanke you good Pompey; and in requitall of your prophesie, harke you: I aduise you let me not finde you before me againe vpon any complaint whatsoever; no, not for dwelling where you doe: if I doe Pompey, I shall beat you to your Tent, and proue a shrewd Cesar to you: in plaine dealing Pompey, I shall haue you whipt: so for this time, Pompey, fare you well.

Clo. I thanke your Worship for your good counsell; but I shall follow it as the flesh and fortune shall better determine. Whip me? no, no, let Carman whip his Iade, The valiant heart's not whipt out of his trade. Exit.

Efc. Come hether to me, Master Elbow: come hither Master Constable: how long haue you bin in this place of Constable?

Elb. Seuen yeere, and a halfe sir.

Efc. I thought by the readinesse in the office, you had continued in it some time: you say seauen yeares together

Elb. And a halfe sir.

Efc. Alas, it hath beene great paines to you: they do you wrong to put you so oft vpon't. Are there not men in your Ward sufficient to serue it?

Elb. Faith sir, few of any wit in such matters: as they are chosen, they are glad to choofe me for them; I do it for some peece of money, and goe through with all.

Efc. Looke you bring mee in the names of some sixe or seuen, the most sufficient of your parish.

Elb. To your Worships house sir?

Efc. To my house: fare you well: what's a clocke, thinke you?

Iust. Eleuen, Sir.

Efc. I pray you home to dinner with me.

Iust. I humbly thanke you.

Efc. It grieues me for the death of Clandio But there's no remedie:

Iust. Lord Angelo is seuer.

Efc. It is but needfull.

Mercy is not it selfe, that oft lookes so,
Pardon is still the nurse of second woe:
But yet, poore Clandio; there is no remedie.
Come Sir.

*Exeunt.
Scena*

Scena Secunda.

Enter Pronost, Seruant

Ser. Hee's hearing of a Cause; he will come straight,
I'll tell him of you.

Pro. 'Pray you doe, Ile know
His pleasure, may be he will relent, alas
He hath but as offended in a dreame,
All Sects, all Ages smack of this vice, and he
To die for't?

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Now, what's the matter Pronost?

Pro. Is it your will Claudio shall die to morrow?

Ang. Did not I tell thee yea? hadst thou not order?
Why do'st thou aske againe?

Pro. Left I might be too rash.

Vnder your good correction, I haue scene
When after execution, Iudgement hath Repented ore his doome.

Ang. Goe to, let that be mine,
Doe you your office, or giue vp your Place,
And you shall well be spar'd

Pro. I craue your Honours pardon
What shall be done Sir, with the groaning Juliet?
Shee's very neere her howre.

Ang. Dispose of her
To some more fitter place, and that with speed

Ser. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd, Desires access to you.

Ang. Hath he a Sister?

Pro. I my good Lord, a very vertuous maid,
And to be shorlie of a Sister-hood,
If not alreadie.

Ang. Well let her be admitted,
See you the Fornicatresse be remou'd,
Let her haue needfull, but not lauish meanes,
There shall be order for't.

Enter Lucio and Isabella.

Pro. 'Saue your Honour. (will?)

Ang. Stay a little while y're welcome what's your

Isab. I am a wofull Sutor to your Honour,
'Pleafe but your Honor heare me.

Ang. Well what's your suite.

Isab. There is a vice that most I doe abhorre,
And most desire should meet the blow of Iustice;
For which I would not plead, but that I must,
For which I must not plead, but that I am
At warre, twixt will, and will not.

Ang. Well the matter?

Isab. I haue a brother is condemn'd to die,
I doe beseech you let it be his fault,
And not my brother.

Pro. Heauen giue thee mouing graces.

Ang. Condemne the fault, and not the actor of it,
Why euery fault's condemn'd ere it be done -
Mine were the verie Cipher of a Function
To fine the faults, whose fine stands in record,
And let goe by the Actor -

Isab. Oh iust, but seuer Law:

I had a brother then; heauen keepe your honour.

Luc. Giue't not ore so: to him againe, entreat him,
Kneele downe before him, hang vpon his gowne;
You are too cold: if you should need a pin,

You could not with more tame a tongue desire it
To him, I say.

Isab. Must he needs die?

Ang. Maiden, no remedie.

Isab. Yes - I doe thinke that you might pardon him,
And neither heauen, nor man grieue at the mercy.

Ang. I will not doe't.

Isab. But can you if you would?

Ang. Looke what I will not, that I cannot doe.

Isab. But might you doe't & do the world no wrong
If so your heart were touch'd with that remorse,
As mine is to him?

Ang. Hee's sentenc'd, tis too late.

Luc. You are too cold.

Isab. Too late? why no. I that doe speak a word
May call it againe: well, beleeue this
No ceremony that to great ones longs,
Nor the Kings Crowne, nor the deputed sword,
The Marshalls Truncheon, nor the Iudges Robe
Become them with one halfe so good a grace
As mercie does. If he had bin as you, and you as he,
You would haue slipt like him, but he like you
Would not haue beene so sterne.

Ang. Pray you be gone.

Isab. I would to heauen I had your potencie,
And you were Isabell should it then be thus?
No I would tell what 'twere to be a Iudge,
And what a prisoner,

Luc. I, touch him there's the vaine.

Ang. Your Brother is a forfeit of the Law,
And you but waste your words.

Isab. Alas, alas:

Why all the foules that were, were forfeit once,
And he that might the vantage best haue tooke,
Found out the remedie: how would you be,
If he, which is the top of Iudgement, should
But iudge you, as you are? Oh, thinke on that,
And mercie then will breathe within your lips
Like man new made.

Ang. Be you content, (faire Maid)

It is the Law, not I, condemne your brother,
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my sonne,
It should be thus with him: he must die to morrow.

Isab. To morrow? oh, that's so Iaine,
Spare him, spare him

Hee's not prepar'd for death; euen for our kitchens
We kill the fowle of season: shall we serue heauen
With lesse respect then we doe minister
To our grosse felues? good, good my Lord, bethink you,
Who is it that hath di'd for this offence?
There's many haue committed it.

Luc. I, well said

Ang. The Law hath not bin dead, though it hath slept
Those many had not dar'd to doe that euill
If the first, that did th' Edict infringe
Had answer'd for his deed. Now 'tis awake,
Takes note of what is done, and like a Prophet
Lookes in a glasse that shewes what future euils
Either now, or by remission, new concei'd,
And so in progresse to be hatc'd, and borne,
Are now to haue no succellue degrees,
But here they lue to end.

Isab. Yet shew some pittie,

Ang. I shew it most of all, when I shew Iustice;
For then I pittie those I doe not know,
Which a dismiss'd offence, would after gaulc

And

And doe him right, that answering one foule wrong
Liues not to act another. Be satisfied;

Your Brother dies to morrow; be content.

Isab. So you must be y first that giues this sentence,
And hee, that suffers: Oh, it is excellent
To haue a Giants strength but it is tyrannous
To vse it like a Giant.

Luc. That's well said.

Isab. Could great men thunder
As Ioue himselfe do's, Ioue would neuer be quiet,
For euery pelting petty Officer
Would vse his heauen for thunder;
Nothing but thunder. Mercifull heauen,
Thou rather with thy sharpe and sulphurous bolt
Splitst the vn-wedgable and gnarled Oke,
Then the soft Mercill. But man, proud man,
Drest in a little briefe authoritie,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
(His glasse Essence) like an angry Ape
Plaiues such phantastique tricks before high heauen,
As makes the Angels weep: who with our spleenes,
Would all themselves laugh mortall.

Luc. Oh, to him, to him wench. he will relent,
Hee's comming I perceiue't.

Pro. Pray heauen she win him.

Isab. We cannot weigh our brother with our selfe,
Great men may iest with Saints: tis wit in them,
But in the lesse fowle prophanation.

Luc. Thou'rt i'th right (Girle) more o' that.

Isab. That in the Captaine's but a chollericke word,
Which in the Souldier is flat blasphemie.

Luc. Art auis'd o' that? more on't.

Ang. Why doe you put these sayings vpon me?

Isab. Because Authoritie, though it erre like others,
Hath yet a kinde of medicine in it selfe
That skins the vice o'th top; goe to your bosome,
Knock there, and aske your heart what it doth know
That's like my brothers fault: if it confesse
A naturall guiltinesse, such as is his,
Let it not found a thought vpon your tongue
Against my brothers life

Ang. Shee speakes, and 'tis such sence
That my Sence breeds with it, fare you well.

Isab. Gentle my Lord, turne backe.

Ang. I will bethinke me: come againe to morrow.

Isa. Hark, how Ile bribe you. good my Lord turn back.

Ang. How? bribe me?

Isa. If I, with such gifts that heauen shall share with you.

Luc. You had mar'd all else.

Isab. Not with fond Sickles of the tested-gold,
Or Stones, whose rate are either rich, or poore
As fancie values them but with true prayers,
That shall be vp at heauen, and enter there
Ere Sunne rise. prayers from preferred foules,
From fasting Maides, whose mindes are dedicate
To nothing temporall.

Ang. Well: come to me to morrow.

Luc. Goe to 'tis well; away.

Isab. Heauen keepe your honour safe.

Ang. Amen.

For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers crosse.

Isab. At what hower to morrow,
Shall I attend your Lordship?

Ang. At any time fore-noone.

Isab. 'Saeue your Honour.

Ang. From thee: euen from thy vertue.
What's this? what's this? is this her fault, or mine?
The Tempter, or the Tempted, who sins most? ha?
Not she: nor doth she tempt: but it is I,
That, lying by the Violet in the Sunne,
Doe as the Carrion do's, not as the flowre,
Corrupt with vertuous season: Can it be,
That Modesty may more betray our Sence
Then womans lightnesse? hauing waste ground enough,
Shall we desire to raze the Sanctuary
And pitch our euils there? oh fie, fie, fie:
What dost thou? or what art thou Angelo?
Dost thou desire her fowly, for those things
That make her good? oh, let her brother liue:
Theeues for their robbery haue authority,
When Iudges steale themselves: what, doe I loue her,
That I desire to heare her speake againe?
And feast vpon her eyes? what is't I dreme on?
Oh cunning enemy, that to catch a Saint,
With Saints dost bait thy hooke: most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth good vs on:
To sinne, in louing vertue: neuer could the Strumpet
With all her double vigor, Art, and Nature
Once stir my temper: but this vertuous Maid
Subdues me quite: Euer till now
When men were fond, I smild, and wondred how. Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Duke and Prouost.

Duke. Haile to you, Prouost, so I thinke you are.

Pro. I am the Prouost: what's your will, good Frier?

Duke. Bound by my charity, and my blest order,
I come to visite the afflicted spirits

Here in the prison. doe me the common right

To let me see them and to make me know

The nature of their crimes, that I may minister

To them accordingly.

Pro. I would do more then that, if more were needfull

Enter Juliet.

Looke here comes one a Gentlewoman of mine,

Who falling in the flauies of her owne youth,

Hath blisterd her report She is with childe,

And he that got it, sentenc'd. a yong man,

More fit to doe another such offence,

Then dye for this.

Duk. When must he dye?

Pro. As I do thinke to morrow.

I haue provided for you, stay a while

And you shall be conducted.

Duk. Repent you (faire one) of the sin you carry?

Int. I doe; and beare the shame most patiently.

Du. Ile teach you how you shal araign your conscience
And try your penitence, if it be found,
Or hollowly put on.

Int. Ile gladly learne.

Duk. Loue you the man that wrong'd you?

Int. Yes, as I loue the woman that wrong'd him.

Duk. So then it seemes your most offence full &
Was mutually committed.

Int. Mutually.

Duk. Then was your sin of heauier kinde then his.

Int. I doe confesse it, and repent it (Father.)

Du. T<sup>15</sup>

Duke. 'Tis meet so (daughter) but least you do repent
As that the sin hath brought you to this shame,
Which sorrow is alwaies toward our felices, not heauen,
Showing we would not spare heauen, as we loue it,
But as we stand in feare.

Iul. I doe repent me, as it is an euill,
And take the shame with ioy.

Duke. There rest:
Your partner (as I heare) must die to morrow,
And I am going with instruction to him:
Grace goe with you, Benedicite Exit.

Iul. Must die to morrow? oh iniurious Loue
That respites me a life, whose very comfort
Is still a dying horror.

Pro. 'Tis pittie of him. Exunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Angelo.

An. When I would pray, & think, I thinke, and pray
To leuerall subiects. heauen hath my empty words,
Whilst my Inuention, hearing not my Tongue,
Anchors on Isabell. heauen in my mouth,
As if I did but onely chew his name,
And in my heart the strong and swelling euill
Of my conception the state whereon I studied
Is like a good thing, being often read
Growne feard, and tedious yea, my Gravitie
Wherein (let no man heare me) I take pride,
Could I, with boote, change for an idle plume
Which the ayre beats for vaine - oh place, oh forme,
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit
Wrench awe from fooles, and tye the wiser soules
To thy false seeming? Blood, thou art blood,
Let's write good Angell on the Devils horn
'Tis not the Devils Crest how now? who's there?

Enter Seruant.

Ser. One Isabell, a Sister, desires access to you

Ang. Teach her the way oh, heauens
Why does my blood thus muster to my heart
Making both it vnable for it selfe,
And dispossessing all my other parts
Of necessary fitnessse?

So play the foolish throngs with one that swounds,
Come all to help him, and so stop the ayre
By which hee should reuiue. and euen so
The generall subiect to a wel-wish King
Quit their owne part, and in obsequious fondnesse
Crowd to his presence, where their vn-taught loue
Must needs appear offence: how now faire Maid.

Enter Isabella

Isab. I am come to know your pleasure. (me,

An. That you might know it, wold much better please
Theu to demand what 'tis: your Brother cannot liue

Isab. Euen so: heauen-keepe your Honor.

Ang. Yet may he liue a while. and it may be
As long as you, or I. yet he must die.

Isab. Vnder your Sentence?

Ang. Yea.

Isab. When, I beseech you: that in his Repnewe (Longer, or shorter) he may be so fitted
That his soule sicken not.

Ang. Ha? sic, these filthy vices; It were as good

To pardon him, that liath from nature stolne
A man already made, as to remit
Their saucie sweetnes, that do coyne heauens Image
In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easie,
Falsely to take away a life true made,
As to put mettle in restrained meanes
To make a false one.

Isab. 'Tis set downe so in heauen, but not in earth,

Ang. Say you so then I shall poze you quickly.
Which had you rather, that the most iust Law
Now tooke your brothers life, and to redeeme him
Giue vp your body to such sweet vncleannesse
As she that he hath stamp'd?

Isab. Sir, beleue this,
I had rather giue my body, then my soule.

Ang. I talke not of your soule. our compel'd sins
Stand more for number, then for accompt.

Isab. How say you?

Ang. Nay Ile not warrant that - for I can speake Against the thing I say. Answer to this,
I (now the voyce of the recorded Law)
Pronounce a sentence on your Brothers life,
Might there not be a charitie in sinne,
To saue this Brothers life?

Isab. Please you to doe't,
Ile take it as a perill to my soule,
It is no sinne at all, but charitie.

Ang. Pleas'd you to doe't, at perill of your soule
Were equall poize of sinne, and charitie.

Isab. That I do beg his life, if it be sinne
Heauen let me beare it - you granting of my suit,
If that be sin, Ile make it my Morne-prayer,
To haue it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your answer.

Ang. Nay, but heare me,
Your sence pursues not mine - either you are ignorant,
Or seeme so crafty, and that's not good.

Isab. Let be ignorant, and in nothing good,
But graciously to know I am no better.

Ang. Thus wisdom wishes to appeare most bright,
When it doth taxe it selfe. As these blacke Masques
Proclaime an en-shield beauty ten times louder
Then beauty could displayd. But marke me,
To be receiued plaine, Ile speake more grosse.
You or Brother is to dye.

Isab. So.

Ang. And his offence is so, as it appeares,
Accountant to the Law, vpon that paine.

Isab. True

Ang. Admit no other way to saue his life
(As I subscribe not that, nor any other,
But in the losse of question) that you, his Sister,
Finding your selfe desir'd of such a person,
Whose credit with the Iudge, or owne great place,
Could fetch your Brother from the Manacles
Of the all-building-Law. and that there were
No earthly meane to saue him, but that either
You must lay downe the treasures of your body,
To this supposed, or else to let him suffer:
What would you doe?

Isab. As much for my poore Brother, as my selfe;
That is: were I vnder the rearmes of death,
Th'impression of keene whips, I'd weare as Rubies,
And strip my selfe to death, as to a bed,
That longing haue bin sicke for, ere I'd yeeld
My body vp to shame.

Ang. That

Ang. Then must your brother die.
Isa. And 'twere the cheaper way -
 Better it were a brother dide at once,
 Then that a sister, by redeeming him
 Should die for euer.

Ang. Were not you then as cruell as the Sentence,
 That you haue flander'd so?

Isa. Ignomie in rancome, and free pardon
 Are of two houses: lawfull mercie,
 Is nothing kin to fowle redemption.

Ang. You seem'd of late to make the Law a tyrant,
 And rather prou'd the sliding of your brother
 A meritment, then a vice.

Isa. Oh pardon me my Lord, it oft falls out
 To haue, what we would haue,
 We speake not what we meane:
 I something do excuse the thing I hate,
 For his aduantage that I dearly loue.

Ang. We are all fraile.

Isa. Else let my brother die,
 If not a sedarie but onely he
 Owe, and succeed thy weaknesse.

Ang. Nay, women are fraile too.

Isa. I, as the glasses where they view themselves,
 Which are as easie broke as they make formes:
 Women? Helpe heauen; men their creation mire
 In prostituting by them. Nay, call vs ten times fraile,
 For we are soft, as our complexions are,
 And credulous to false prints.

Ang. I thinke it well:
 And from this testimonie of your owne sex
 (Since I suppose we are made to be no stronger
 Then faults may shake our frames) let me be bold;
 I do arrest your words. Be that you are,
 That is a woman, if you be more, you'r none.
 If you be one (as you are well exprest
 By all externall variants) shee v it now,
 By putting on the destin'd Liuerie.

Isa. I haue no tongue but one; gentle my Lord,
 Let me entreate you speake the former language.

Ang. Plainlie conceiue. Loue you.

Isa. My brother did loue Iuliet,
 And you tell me that he shall die for't.

Ang. He shall not Isabell if you giue me loue.

Isa. I know your vertue hath a licence in't,
 Which seemes a little fouler then it is,
 To plucke on others.

Ang. Beleeue me on mine Honor,
 My words expresse my purpose.

Isa. Hæ Little honor, to be much beleeu'd,
 And most pernicious purpose. Seeming, seeming.
 I will proclaime thee Angelo, looke for't.
 Signe me a present pardon for my brother,
 Or with an out-stretcht throte He tell the world aloud
 What man thou art.

Ang. Who will beleeue thee Isabell?
 My vnsoild name, th'austrerence of my life,
 My vouch against you, and my place i'th State;
 Will so your accusation ouer-weigh,
 That you shall sisse in your owne report,
 And smell of calumnie. I haue begun,
 And now I giue my sensuall race, the reine;
 Fit thy consent to my sharpe appetito,
 Lay by all niceties, and prolixious blushes
 That banish what they see for - Redeeme thy brother,
 By yeelding vp thy bodie to my will,

Or else he must not onely die the death,
 But thy vnkindnesse shall his death draw out
 To lingring sufferance: Answer me to morrow,
 Or by the affection that now guides me most,
 He proue a Tyrant to him. As for you,
 Say what you can, my false, ore-weighs your true. Exit
Isa. To whom should I complaine? Did I tell this,
 Who would beleeue me? O perillous mouthes
 That beare in them, one and the selfesame tongue,
 Either of condemnation, or approofe,
 Bidding the Law make curtisie to their will,
 Hooking both right and wrong to th'appetite,
 To follow as it drawes. He to my brother,
 Though he hath false by prompture of the blood,
 Yet hath he in him such a minde of Honor,
 That had he twentie heads to tender downe
 On twentie bloodie blockes, hee'd yeeld them vp,
 Before his sister should her bodie sloop
 To such abhorrd pollution.
 Then Isabell liue chaste, and brother die;
 "More then our Brother, is our Chastitie
 He tell him yet of Angelo's request,
 And fit his minde to death, for his soules rest. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Duke, Claudio, and Prencesse.

Du So then you hope of pardon from Lord Angelo?
Cl The miserable haue no other medicine
 But onely hope: I haue hope to liue, and am prepar'd to die

Duke. Be absolute for death: either death or life
 Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life:
 If I do loose thee, I do loote a thing
 That none but foolles would keepe. a breath thou art,
 Seruile to all the thye-influences,
 That dost it is habitation where thou keepst
 Hourly afflict. Meere, thou art death's forle,
 For him thou labourst by thy flight to shun,
 And yet runst toward him still. Thou art not noble,
 For all th'accommodations that thou bearest,
 Are nurs'd by basenesse. Thou'rt by no meares valiant,
 For thou dost feare the soft and tender forke
 Of a poore worme: thy best of rest is sleepe,
 And that thou oft prouoakst, yet grosslie fearest
 Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thy selfe,
 For thou exists on manie a thousand graines
 That issue out of dust. Happie thou art not,
 For what thou hast not, still thou stru'st to get,
 And what thou hast forgetst. Thou art not certaine,
 For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,
 After the Moone: If thou art rich, thou'rt poore,
 For like an Asse, whose backe with Ingors bowes;
 Thou bearest thy heauie riches but a iourme,
 And death vnloads thee; Friend hast thou none.
 For thine owne bowels which do call thee, fire
 The meere effusion of thy proper loines
 Do curse the Gowr, Sapego, and the Rheume
 For ending thee no sooner. Thou hast nor youth, nor age
 But as it were an after-dinner sleepe
 Dreaming on both, for all thy blessed youth
 Becomes as aged, and doth begge the almes
 Of palsied-Eld: and when thou art old, and rich

Thou

Thou hast neither heate, affection, limbe, nor beautie
To make thy riches pleasant : what's yet in this
That beares the name of life ? Yet in this life
Lie hid moe thousand deaths ; yet death we feare
That makes these oddes, all euen.

Cl. I humblye thanke you.
To sue to liue, I finde I seeke to die,
And seeking death, finde life : Let it come on.

Enter Isabella.

Isab. What hoa ? Peace heere, Grace, and good com-panie.

Pro. Who's there ? Come in, the wish deserues a welcome.

Duke. Deere sir, ere long Ile visit you againe.

Cl. Most holie Sir, I thanke you

Isa. My businesse is a word or two with Claudio

Pro. And verie welcom. looke Signior, here's your sister.

Duke. Prouost, a word with you.

Pro. As manie as you please.

Duke. Bring them to heare me speak, where I may be conceal'd.

Cl. Now sister, w<sup>h</sup>at's the comfort ?

Isa. Why,

As all comforts are : most good, most good indeede,
Lord Angelo hauing affaires to heauen
Intends you for his swift Ambassador,
Where you shall be an euerlasting Leiger ;
Therefore your best appointment make with speed,
To Morrow you set on.

Cl. Is there no remedie ?

Isa. None ; but such remedie, as to saue a head
To cleaue a heart in twaine.

Cl. But is there anie ?

Isa. Yes brother, you may liue,
There is a diuellish mercie in the Iudge,
If you implore it, that will free your life,
But fetter you till death.

Cl. Perpetuall durance ?

Isa. I must, perpetuall durance, a restraint
Through all the worlds vastitie you had
To a determin'd scope.

Cl. But in what nature ?

Isa. In such a one, as you consenting too't,
Would barke your honor from that trunk you beare,
And leaue you naked.

Cl. Let me know the point.

Isa. Oh, I do feare thee Claudio, and I quake,
Least thou a feauorous life shouldst entertaine,
And fix or seuen winters more respect
Then a perpetuall Honor. Dar'st thou die ?
The sence of death is most in apprehension,
And the poore Beetle that we treade vpon
In corporall sufferance, finds a pang as great,
As when a Giant dies.

Cl. Why giue you me this shame ?

Thinke you I can a resolution fetch
From flowrie tenderesse ? If I must die,
I will encounter darknesse as a bride,
And hugge it in mine armes.

Isa. There spake my brother : there my fathers graue
Did utter forth a voice. Yes, thou must die.
Thou art too noble, to conserue a life
In base appliances. This outward fainted Deputie,
Whose seeld visage, and deliberate word
Nips youth in th' head, and follies doth emmew

As Falcon doth the Fowle, is yet a diuell :
His filth within being cast, he would appeare
A pond, as deepe as hell.

Cl. The prenzie, Angelo ?

Isa. Oh 'tis the cunning Luerie of hell,
The damnest bodie to inuict, and couer
In prenzie gardes ; dost thou thinke Claudio ?
If I would yeeld him my virginitie
Thou might'st be freed ?

Cl. Oh heauens, it cannot be.

Isa. Yes, he would giu'thee, from this rank offence
So to offend him still. I his night's the time
That I should do what I abhorre to name,
Or else thou diest to morrow.

Cl. Thou shalt not do't.

Isa. O, were it but my life,
I'de throw it downe for your deliuerance
As frankly as a pin

Cl. Thankes deere Isabell.

Isa. Be readie Claudio, for your death to morrow.

Cl. Yes. Has he affections in him,
That thus can make him bite the law by th' nose,
When he would force it ? Sure it is no sinne,
Or of the deadly seuen it is the least.

Isa. Which is the least ?

Cl. If it were damnable, he being so wise,
Why would he for the momentarie trick
Be perdurable fin'de ? Oh Isabell

Isa. What saies my brother ?

Cl. Death is a fearefull thing

Isa. And shamed life, a hatefull.

Cl. I, but to die, and go we know not where,
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot,
This sensible warme motion, to become
A kneaded clod, And the delighted spirit
To bath in fierie floods, or to recide
In thrilling Region of thicke-ribbed Ice,
To be imprison'd in the viewlesse windes
And blowne with restless violence round about
The pendant world - or to be worse then worst
Of those, that lawlesse and incertaine thought,
Imagine howling, 'tis too horrible
The weariest, and most loathed worldly life
That Age, Ache, periury, and imprisonment
Can lay on nature, is a Paradise
To what we feare of death.

Isa. Alas, alas

Cl. Sweet Sister, let me liue.

What sinne you do, to saue a brothers life,
Nature dispenses with the deede so farre,
That it becomes a vertue.

Isa. Oh you beast,
Oh faithlesse Coward, oh dishonest wretch,
Wilt thou be made a man, out of my vice ?
Is't not a kinde of Incest, to take life
From thine owne sisters shame ? What should I thinke, Heauen shield my Mother plaid my Father faire :
For such a warped slip of wildernesse
Nere issu'd from his blood. Take my defiance,
Die, perish - Might but my bending downe
Repreeue thee from thy fate, it should proceede.
Ile pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to saue thee.

Cl. Nay heare me Isabell.

Isa. Oh fie, fie, fie:
Thy sinne's not accidentall, but a Trade ;

Mercie

Mercy to thee would prone it selfe a Bawd,
'Tis best that thou diest quickly.

Clā. Oh heare me Isabella

Duk. Vouchsafe a word, yong sister, but one word.

Isa. What is your Will.

Duk. Might you dispenſe with your leysure, I would by and by haue ſome ſpeech with you: the ſatisfaction I would require, is likewiſe your owne benefit.

Isa. I haue no ſuperfluous leysure, my ſtay muſt be ſtolen out of other affaires: but I will attend you a while.

Duk. Son, I haue ouer-heard what hath paſt between you & your ſiſter. Angelo had neuer the purpoſe to corrupt her; only he hath made an aſſay of her vertue, to praſtiſe his iudgement with the diſpoſition of natures. She (hauing the truth of honour in her) hath made him that gracious deniall, which he is moſt glad to receiue. I am Confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true, therefore prepare your ſelfe to death: do not ſatiſfie your reſolution with hopes that are fallible, to morrow you muſt die, goe to your knees, and make ready.

Clā. Let me ask my ſiſter pardon: I am ſo out of loue with life, that I will ſue to be rid of it.

Duk. Hold you there. farewell. Pronoſt, a word with you.

Pro. What's your will (father?)

Duk. That now you are come, you wil be gone: leaue me a while with the Maid, my minde promiſes with my habit, no loſſe ſhall touch her by my company.

Pro. In good time.

Exit.

Duk. The hand that hath made you faire, hath made you good: the goodnes that is cheape in beauty, makes beauty briefe in goodnes; but grace being the ſoule of your complexion, ſhall keepe the body of it euer faire: the aſſault that Angelo hath made to you, Fortune hath conuaid to my vnderſtanding; and but that frailty hath examples for his falling, I ſhould wonder at Angelo how will you doe to content this Substitute, and to laue your Brother?

Isab. I am now going to reſolue him: I had rather my brother die by the Law, then my ſonne ſhould be vn-lawfullie borne. But (oh) how much is the good Duke deceiud in Angelo: if euer he returne, and I can ſpeake to him, I will open my lips in vaine, or diſcouer his gouernment.

Duk. That ſhall not be much amiſſe: yet, as the matter now ſtands, he will auoid your accuſation: he made triall of you onelie. Therefore faſten your care on my aduiſings, to the loue I haue in doing good; a remedie preſents it ſelfe. I doe make my ſelfe belecue that you may moſt vprighteouſly doe a poor wronged Lady a merited benefit; redeem your brother from the angry Law; doe no ſtaine to your owne gracious perſon, and much pleaſe the abſent Duke, if peraduenture he ſhall euer returne to haue hearing of this buſineſſe.

Isab. Let me heare you ſpeake farther; I haue ſpirit to do any thing that appeares not fowle in the truth of my ſpirit.

Duk. Vertue is bold, and goodnes neuer fearefull. Haue you not heard ſpeake of Mariana the ſiſter of Fredericke the great Souldier, who miſcarried at Sea?

Isa. I haue heard of the Lady, and good words went with her name.

Duk. Shee ſhould this Angelo haue married. was affianced to her oath, and the nuptiall appointed. between which time of the contract, and limit of the ſolemnitie, her brother Fredericke was wrackt at Sea, hauing in that perished veſſell, the dowry of his ſiſter: but make how heauily this befell to the poore Gentlewoman; there ſhe loſt a noble and renowned brother, in his loue toward her, euer moſt kinde and naturall: with him the portion and ſinew of her fortune, her marriage dowry: with both, her combynate-husband, this well-ſeeming Angelo.

Isab. Can this beſo? did Angelo to leaue her?

Duk. Left her in her teares, & dried not one of them with his comfort: ſwallowed his vowes whole, pretending in her, diſcoueries of diſhonor: in ſew, beſtow'd her on her owne lamentation, which ſhe yet wears for his ſake: and he, a marble to her teares, is waſhed with them, but relents not.

Isab. What a merit were it in death to take this poore maid from the world? what corruption in this life, that it will let this man liue? But how out of this can ſhee auaile?

Duk. It is a rupture that you may eaſily heale: and the cure of it not onely ſaues your brother, but keeps you from diſhonor in doing it.

Isab. Shew me how (good Father.)

Duk. This fore-named Maid hath yet in her the continuance of her firſt affection: his vnuiſt vnkindeneſſe (that in all reaſon ſhould haue quenched her loue) hath (like an impediment in the Current) made it more violent and vnruely: Goe you to Angelo, anſwere his requiring with a plauſible obedience, agree with his demands to the point: onely reſerre your ſelfe to this aduantage; firſt, that your ſtay with him may not be long: that the time may haue all ſhadow, and ſilence in it: and the place anſwer to conuenience. this being granted in courſe, and now followes all: wee ſhall aduiſe this wronged maid to ſceed vp your appointment, goe in your place: if the encounter acknowledge it ſelfe heereafter, it may compell him to her recompence; and heere, by this is your brother ſaued, your honor vntainted, the poore Mariana aduantaged, and the corrupt Deputy ſcaled. The Maid will I frame, and make fit for his attempt: if you thinke well to carry this as you may, the doublenes of the benefit defends the deceit from reproofe. What thinke you of it?

Isab. The image of it giues me content already, and I truſt it will grow to a moſt prosperous perfection.

Duk. It lies much in your holding vp: haſte you ſpeedily to Angelo, if for this night he intreat you to his bed, giue him promiſe of ſatiſfaction: I will preſently to S. Lukes; there at the moated-Grange recides this deſerted Mariana; at that place call vpon me, and diſpatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

Isab. I thank you for this comfort fare you well good father. Exit.

Enter Elbow, Clowne, Officers.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needes buy and ſell men and women like beaſts, we ſhall haue all the world drinke browne & white baſtard.

Duk. Oh heauens, what ſuffe is heere.

Clow. Twas neuer merrier world ſince of two vſuries the merriest was put downe, and the worſer allow'd by order of Law; a fur'd gowne to keepe him warme; and furd with Foxe and Lamb-skins too, to ſignifie, that craft being richer then Innocency, ſtands for the facing.

Elb. Come your way ſir: bleſſe you good Father Frier.

Duk. And you good Brother Father; what offence hath this man made you, Sir?

Elb. Marry

Elb. Marry Sir, he hath offended the Law, and Sir, we take him to be a Theefe too Sir for wee haue found vpon him Sir, a strange Pick-lock, which we haue sent to the Deputie.

Duke. Fie, sirrah, a Bawd, a wicked bawd, The euill that thou causest to be done, That is thy meane to liue Do thou but thinke What 'tis to cram a maw, or cloath a backe From such a filthy vice say to thy selfe, From their abhominable and beastly touches I drinke, I eate away my selfe, and liue. Canst thou beleue thy liuing is a lie, So stirkingly depending? Come it, go mend.

Clo. Indeed, it do's stinke in some sort, Sir But yet Sir I would proue

Duke. Nay, if the diuell haue giuen thee proofs for sin Thou wilt proue his Take him to prison Officer Correction, and Instruction must both worke Ere this rude beast will profit.

Elb. He must before the Deputy Sir, he ha's giuen him warning. the Deputy cannot abide a Whore-maister if he be a Whore monger, and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seeme to be From our faults, as faults from seeming free

Enter Lucio.

Elb. His necke will come to your waist, a Cord sir

Clo. I spy comfort, I cry baile here's a Gentleman, and a friend of mine

Luc. How now noble Pompey? What, at the wheels of Cesar? Art thou led in triumph? What is there none of Pigmilions Images newly made woman to bee had now, for putting the hand in the pocket, and extolling clatch'd? What reply? Ha? What saist thou to this Tune, Matter, and Method? Is't not drown'd with last raime? Ha? What saist thou Trot? Is the world as it was Man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words? Or how? The tricke of it?

Duke. Still thus, and thus still worse?

Luc. How doth my deere Morfell, thy Mistress Procures she still? Ha?

Clo. Troth sir, shee hath eaten vp all her beefe, and she is her selfe in the tub.

Luc. Why 'tis good It is the right of it, it must be so. Euer your fresh Whore, and your powder'd Bawd, an vnshun'd consequence, it must be so. Art going to prison Pompey?

Clo. Yes saith sir

Luc. Why 'tis not amiss Pompey farewell goe say I sent thee thither for debt, Pompey? Or how?

Elb. For being a bawd, for being a bawd

Luc. Well, then imprison him If imprisonment be the due of a bawd, why 'tis his right. Bawd is he doubtlesse, and of antiquity too; Bawd borne, Farwell good Pompey. Commend me to the prison Pompey, you will turne good husband now Pompey, you will keepe the house.

Clo. I hope Sir, your good Worship wil be my baile?

Luc. No indeed wil I not Pompey, it is not the wear. I will pray (Pompey) to encrease your bondage if you take it not patiently: Why, your mettle is the more. Adieu trustie Pompey.

Blesse you Friar.

Duke. And you.

Luc. Do's Brigget paint still, Pompey? Ha?

Elb. Come your waies sir, come.

Clo. You will not baile me then Sir?

Luc. Then Pompey, nor now what newes abroad Friar? What newes?

Elb. Come your waies sir, come.

Luc. Goe to kennell (Pompey) goe.

What newes Friar of the Duke?

Duke. I know none can you tell me of any?

Luc. Some say he is with the Emperour of Russia: other some, he is in Rome but where is he thinke you?

Duke. I know not where but wherefoeuer, I wish him well.

Luc. It was a mad fantastickallicke of him to steale from the State, and vsurpe the beggerie hee was neuer borne to Lord Argelo Dukes it well in his absence he puts transgression too

Duke. He do's well in't.

Luc. A little more lenitie to Lecherie would doe no harme in him Something too crabbed that way, Friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and feueritie must cure it.

Luc. Yes in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well allied, but it is impossible to extirpe it quite, Friar, till eating and drinking be put downe. They say this Argelo was not made by Man and Woman, after this downe-right way of Creation is it true, thinke you?

Duke. How should he be made then?

Luc. Some report, a Sea-maid spaw'd him, Some, that he was begot betwene two Stock-fishes. But it is certaine, that when he makes water, his Urine is congeal'd ice, that I know to be true: and he is a motion generatiue, that's insensible.

Duke. You are pleasant sir, and speake apace.

Luc. Why, what a rucklesse thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a Cod-piece, to take away the life of a man? Would the Duke that is absent haue done this? Ere he would haue hang'd a man for the getting a hundred Bastards, he would haue paide for the Nursing a thousand. He had some feeling of the sport, hee knew the seruice, and that instructed him to mercie.

Duke. I neuer heard the absent Duke much detected for Women, he was not inclin'd that way.

Luc. Oh Sir, you are deceu'd.

Duke. 'Tis not possible.

Luc. Who, not the Duke? Yes, your beggar of fifty: and his vse was, to put a duckett in her Clack-dish, the Duke had Crochets in him Hee would be drunk too, that let me informe you.

Duke. You do him wrong, surely.

Luc. Sir, I was an inward of his. a shie fellow was the Duke, and I beleue I know the cause of his withdrawing.

Duke. What (I prethee) might be the cause?

Luc. No, pardon. 'Tis a secret must be lockt within the teeth and the lippes: but this I can let you vnderstand, the greater file of the subiect held the Duke to be vnwise.

Duke. Wise? Why no question but he was.

Luc. A very superficiall, ignorant, vnweighing fellow

Duke. Either this is Enuie in you, Folly, or mistaking. The very streame of his life, and the businesse he hath helmed, must vpon a warrantied needle, giue him a better proclamation. Let him be but testimonied in his owne bringings forth, and hee shall appeare to the enuious, a Scholler, a Statesman, and a Soldier therefore you speake vnskillfully or, if your knowledge bee more, it is much darkned in your malice.

G

Luc.

She would sooner confesse, perchance publickly she'll be asham'd.

Enter Duke, Pronost, Isabella.

Esc. I will goe darkely to worke with her.

Luc. That's the way: for women are light at midnight.

Esc. Come on Mistris, here's a Gentlewoman, Denies all that you haue said.

Luc. My Lord, here comes the rascall I spoke of, Here, with the Pronost.

Esc. In very good time: speake not you to him, till we call vpon you.

Luc. Mum.

Esc. Come Sir, did you set these women on to slander Lord Angelo? they haue confes'd you did.

Duke. 'Tis false.

Esc. How? Know you where you are?

Duke. Respect to your great place, and let the diuell Be sometime honour'd, for his burning throne.

Where is the Duke? 'tis he should heare me speake.

Esc. The Duke's in vs: and we will heare you speake, Looke you speake iustly.

Duke. Boldly, at least. But oh poore soules, Come you to seeke the Lamb here of the Fox, Good night to your redresse. Is the Duke gone? Then is your cause gone too. The Duke's vnjust, Thus to retort your manifest Appeale, And put your triall in the villaines mouth, Which here you come to accuse.

Luc. This is the rascall. this is he I spoke of

Esc. Why thou vnreuerend, and vnhalloved Fryer: Is it not enough thou hast suborn'd these women, To accuse this worthy man? but in soule mouth, And in the witness of his proper eare, To call him villaine; and then to glance from him, To th' Duke himselfe, to taxe him with Injustice? Take him hence; to th' racke with him. we'll towze you Ioynt by Ioynt, but we will know his purpose. What? vnjust?

Duke. Be not so hot. the Duke dare No more stretch this finger of mine, then he Dare racke his owne. his Subiect am I nor, Nor here Prouinciall. My businesse in this State Made me a looker on here in Vienna, Where I haue seene corruption boyle and bubble, Till it ore-run the Stew. Lawes, for all faults, But faults so countenanc'd, that the strong Statutes Stand like the forfeites in a Barbers shop, As much in mocke, as marke.

Esc. Slander to th' State:

Away with him to prison.

Ang. What can you vouch against him Signior Lucio? Is this the man that you did tell vs of?

Luc. 'Tis he, my Lord: come hither goodman bald-pate, doe you know me?

Duke. I remember you Sir, by the sound of your voice, I met you at the Prison, in the absence of the Duke.

Luc. Oh, did you so? and do you remember what you said of the Duke.

Duke. Most notably Sir.

Luc. Do you so Sir. And was the Duke a flesh-monger, a foole, and a coward; as you then reported him to be?

Duke. You must (Sir) change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you indeed spoke so of him, and much more, much worse.

Luc. Oh thou damnable fellow: did not I plucke thee by the nose, for thy speeches?

Duke. I protest, I loue the Duke, as I loue my selfe.

Ang. Harke how the villaine would close now, after his treasonable abuses.

Esc. Such a fellow is not to be talk'd withall: Away with him to prison. Where is the Pronost? away with him to prison: lay bolts enough vpon him: let him speak no more. away with those Giglets too, and with the other confederate companion.

Duke. Stay Sir, stay a while.

Ang. What, resists he? helpe him Lucio.

Luc. Come sir, come sir, come sir: for sir, why you bald-pated lying rascall, you must be hooded must you? show your knaues visage with a poxe to you. show your sheepe-biting face, and be hang'd an houre: will't not off?

Duke. Thou art the first knaue, that ere mad'st a Duke. First Pronost, let me bayle these gentle three: Sneake not away Sir, for the Fryer, and you, Must haue a word anon. lay hold on him.

Luc. This may proue worse then hanging.

Duke. What you haue spoke, I pardon. sit you downe, We'll borrow place of him; Sir, by your leaue: Ha'st thou or word, or wit, or impudence, That yet can doe thee office? If thou ha'st Rely vpon it, till my tale be heard, And hold no longer out.

Ang. Oh, my dread Lord, I should be guiltier then my guiltinesse, To thinke I can be vndiscernable, When I perceiue your grace, like powre diuine, Hash look'd vpon my pases. Then good Prince, No longer Session hold vpon my shame, But let my Triall, be mine owne Confession: Immediate sentence then, and sequent death, Is all the grace I beg.

Duke. Come hither Mariana, Say. was't thou ere contracted to this woman?

Ang. I was my Lord.

Duke. Go take her hence, and marry her instantly. Doe you the office (Fryer) which consummate, Returne him here againe goe with him Pronost. Exit.

Esc. My Lord, I am more amaz'd at his dishonor, Then at the strangenesse of it.

Duke. Come hither Isabell,

Your Frier is now your Prince: As I was then Aduertysing, and holy to your businesse, (Not changing heart with habit) I am still, Attuned at your seruice.

Isab. Oh giue me pardon That I, your vassalle, haue imploid, and pain'd Your vnknowne Soueraigntie.

Duke. You are pardon'd Isabell:

And now, deere Maide, be you as free to vs. Your Brothers death I know sits at your heart: And you may maruaile, why I obscur'd my selfe, Labouring to saue his life: and would not rather Make rash remonstrance of my hidden powre, Then let him so be lost: oh most kinde Maid, It was the swift celeritie of his death, Which I did thinke, with slower foot came on, That brain'd my purpose: but peace be with him, That life is better life past feaung death, Then that which lues to feare: make it your comfort,

So happy is your Brother.

Enter Angelo, Mariana, Peter, Prouost.

Isab. I doe my Lord.

Duke. For this new-married man, approaching here,
Whose faine imagination, yet hath wrong'd
Your well defended honor you must pardon
For Mariana's sake But as he adu'd your Brother,
Being criminall, in double violation
Of sacred Chastitie, and of promise-breach,
Thereon dependant for your Brothers life,
The very mercy of the Law cries out
Most audible, euen from his proper tongue.
An Angelo for Claudio, death for death
Haste (still paces haste, and leasure, answers leasure;
Like doth quit like, and Measure still for Measure.
Then Angelo, thy fault's thus manifested;
Which though thou would'st deny, denies thee vantage.
We doe condemne thee to the very Blocke
Where Claudio stoop'd to death, and with like haste.
Away with him.

Mar. Oh my most gracious Lord,
I hope you will not mocke me with a husband?

Duke. It is your husband mock't you with a husband,
Consenting to the safe-guard of your honor,
I thought your marriage fit else Imputation,
For that he knew you might reproach your life,
And choake your good to come For his Possessions,
Although by confutation they are ours;
We doe en-state, and widow you with all,
To buy you a better husband.

Mar. Oh my deere Lord,
I craue no other, nor no better man.

Duke. Neuer craue him, we are definitiue.

Mar. Gentle my Liege.

Duke. You doe but loofe your labour.
Away with him to death Now Sir, to you
Mar. Oh my good Lord, sweet Isabell, take my part,
Lend me your knees, and all my life to come,
I'll lend you all my life to doe you seruice.

Duke. Against all fence you doe importune her,
Should the kneele downe, in mercie of this fact,
Her Brothers ghost, his pained bed would breake,
And take her hence in horror.

Mar. Isabell

Sweet Isabell, doe yet but kneele by me,
Hold vp your hands, say nothing: I'll speake all.
They say best men are moulded out of faults,
And for the most, become much more the better
For being a little bad So may my husband.
Oh Isabell will you not lend a knee?

Duke. He dies for Claudio's death.

Isab. Most bounteous Sir.

Looke if it please you, on this man condemn'd,
As if my Brother liu'd I partly thinke,
A due sinceritie gouerned his deedes,
Till he did looke on me Since it is so,
Let him not die: my Brother had but lustice,
In that he did the thing for which he dide.
For Angelo, his Act did not ore-take his bad intent,
And must be buried but as an intent
That perish'd by the way: thoughts are no subiects
Intents, but meerely thoughts.

Mar. Meerely my Lord.

Duke. Your suite's vnprofitable. Stand vp I say:
I haue bethought me of another fault
Prouost, how came Claudio was beheaded

At an vnusuall howre?

Pro. It was commanded so.

Duke. Had you a speciall warrant for the deed?

Pro. No my good Lord: it was by priuate messag.

Duke. For which I doe discharge you of your office,
Giue vp your keyes.

Pro. Pardon me, noble Lord,
I thought it was a fault, but knew it not,
Yet did repent me after more aduice,
For testimony whereof, one in the prison
That should by priuate order else haue dide,
I haue referu'd aliu.

Duke. What's he?

Pro. His name is Barnardine.

Duke. I would thou hadst done so by Claudio:
Go fetch him lither, let me looke vpon him.

Ese. I am sorry, one so learned, and so wise
As you Lord Angelo, haue stil appear'd,
Should slip so grosselie, both in the heat of bloud
And lacke of temper'd iudgement afterward.

Ang. I am forrie, that such sorrow I procure,
And so deepe sticks it in my penitent heart,
That I craue death more willingly then mercy,
'Tis my deseruing, and I doe entreat it

Enter Barnardine and Prouost, Claudio, Julietta.

Duke. Which is that Barnardine?

Pro. This my Lord.

Duke. There was a Friar told me of this man.
Sirha, thou art said to haue a stubborne soule
That apprehends no further then this world,
And squar'st thy life according Thou'rt condemn'd,
But for those earthly faults, I quit them all,
And pray thee take this mercie to prouide
For better times to come. Friar aduise him,
I leaue him to your hand. What muffled fellow's that

Pro. This is another prisoner that I sau'd,
Who should haue di'd when Claudio lost his head,
As like almost to Claudio, as himselfe.

Duke. If he be like your brother, for his sake
Is he pardon'd, and for your louelie sake
Giue me your hand, and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too But fitter time for that:
By this Lord Angelo perceiues he's safe,
Nethinks I see a quiskning in his eye:
Well Angelo, your euill quits you well.
Looke that you loue your wife. her worth, worth yours
I finde an apt remission in my selfe:
And yet heere's one in place I cannot pardon,
You sirha, that knew me for a foole, a Coward,
One all of Luxurie, an asse, a mad man
Wherein haue I so deler'd of you
That you extoll me thus?

Luc. Faith my Lord, I spoke it but according to the trick. if you will hang me for it you may. but I had rather it would please you, I might be whipt.

Duke. Whipt first, sir, and hang'd after.
Proclaime it Prouost round about the Citie;
If any woman wrong'd by this lewd fellow (As I haue heard him sweare himselfe there's one whom he begot with childe) let her appeare,
And he shall marry her: the nuptiall finish'd,
Let him be whipt and hang'd.

Luc. I beseech your Highnesse doe not marry me to a Whore: your Highnesse said euen now! I made you a Duke, good my Lord do not recompence me, in making me a Cuckold.

Duke. Vpon

Duke. Vpon mine honor thou shalt marrie her.
Thy slanders I forgiue, and therewithall
Remit thy other forfeits: take him to prison,
And see our pleasure herein executed.

Luc. Marrying a punke my Lord, is pressing to death,
Whipping and hanging.

Duke. Slandering a Prince deserues it.
She Claudio that you wrong'd, looke you restore.
Ioy to you Mariana, loue her Angelo.
I haue confes d her, and I know her vertue.
Thanks good friend, Escalus, for thy much goodnesse,

There's more behinde that is more gratefull.
Thanks Protest for thy care, and secrecie,
We shall imploy thee in a worthier place.
Forgiue him Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozine for Claudio's,
Th'offence pardons it selfe. Deere Isabell,
I haue a motion much imports your good,
Whereto if you'll a willing eare incline;
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine.
So bring vs to our Pallace, where wee'll show
What's yet behinde that meete you all should know.

The Comedie of Errors.

Actus primus, Scena prima.

Enter the Duke of Ephesus, with the Merchant of Sirachsa, Saylor, and other attendants.

Merchants.

Proceed Solimus to procure my fall,
And by the doome of death end woes and all.

Duke. Merchant of Sirachsa, plead no more.
I am not partiall to infringe our Lawes;

The enmity and discord which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your Duke,
To Merchants our well-dealing Countymen,
Who wanting gilders to redeeme their liues,
Haue seal'd his rigorous statutes with their blouds,

Excludes all pittie from our threatening lookes:
For since the mortall and intestine iarrres
Twixt thy seditious Countymen and vs,
It hath in solemne Synodes beene decreed,
Both by the Sirachsiens and our selues,

To admit no trafficke to our aduerser townes:
Nay more, if any borne at Ephesus

Beseene at any Sirachsiens Martes and Fayres:
Againe, if any Sirachsiens borne

Come to the Bay of Ephesus, he dies:
His goods confiscate to the Dukes dispose,

Vnlesse a thousand markes be leuied
To quit the penalty, and to ransom him:

Thy substance, valued at the highest rate,
Cannot amount vnto a hundred Markes,

Therefore by Law thou art condemn'd to die.
Mer. Yet this my comfort, when your words are done,

My woes end likewise with the euening Sonne.
Duk. Well Sirachsiens; say in brieft the cause

Why thou departedst from thy natiue home?
And for what cause thou cam'st to Ephesus.

Mer. A heauier task could not haue beene impos'd,
Then I to speake my griefes vnspokeable:

Yet that the world may witnesse that my end
Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence,

Ile vtter what my sorrow giues me leaue.
In Syrachsa was I borne, and wedde

Vnto a woman, happy but for me,
And by me; had not our hap beene bad:

With her I liu'd in ioy, our wealth increast
By prosperous voyages I often made

To Epidamium, till my factors death,
And he great care of goods at randome left,

Drew me from kinde embracements of my spouse;
From whom my absence was not sixe moneths olde,

Before her selfe (almost at fainting vnder

The pleasing punishment that women beare)
Had made prouision for her following me,
And soone, and safe, arriv'd where I was:
There had she not beene long, but she became
A ioyfull mother of two goodly sonnes.
And, which was strange, the one so like the other,
As could not be distinguish'd but by names.
I hat very howre, and in the selfe-same Inne,
A meane woman was deliuered
Of such a burthen Male, twins both alike.
Those, for their parents were exceeding poore,
I bought, and brought vp to attend my Ionnes
My wife, not meanelly prou'd of two such boyes,
Made daily motions for our home returne.
Vnwillling I agreed, alas, too soone wee came aboard.
A league from Epidamium had we saild
Before the alwaies winde-obeying deepe
Gave any Tragicke Instance of our harme.
But longer did we not retaine much hope;
For what obscured light the heauens did grant,
Did but conuay vnto our fearefull mindes
A doubtfull warrant of immediate death,
Which though my selfe would gladly haue imbrac'd,
Yet the incessant weepings of my wife,
Weeping before for what she saw must come,
And pitteous playnings of the prettie babes
That mourn'd for fashion, ignorant what to feare,
Forst me to seeke delays for them and me,
And this it was (for other meanes was none)
The Sailors sought for safety by our boate,
And left the ship then sinking ripe to vs.
My wife, more carefull for the latter borne,
Had fastned him vnto a small spare Mast,
Such as sea-faring men prouide for stormes:
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had beene like heedfull of the other.
The children thus dispos'd, my wife and I,
Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fixt,
Fastned our selues at eyther end the mast,
And floating straight, obedient to the stream;
Was carried towards Corinth, as we thought.
At length the sonne gazing vpon the earth,
Disperst those vapours that offended vs,
And by the benefit of his wished light
The seas waxt calme, and we discovered
Two shippes from farre, making amaine to vs:
Of Corinth that, of Epidamium this,
But ere they came, oh let me say no more,
Gather the sequell by that went before.

Duk. Nay forward old man, doe not breake off so,

H

For

For we may pity, though not pardon thee.

March. Oh had the gods done so, I had not now
Worthily rearm'd them merciesse to vs:
For ere the ships could meet by twice fift leagues,
We were encountred by a mighty rocke,
Which being violently bōnd vp,
Our helpefull ship was splitted in the midst,
So that in this vnus'd diuorce of vs,
Fortune had lete to both of vs alike,
What to delight in, what to sorrow for,
Her part, poore soule, seeming as burdened
With lesser waight, but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the winde,
And in our sight they three were taken vp
By Fishermen of Corinth, as we thought
At length another ship had seiz'd on vs,
And knowing whom it was their hap to saue,
Gave healthfull welcome to their ship-wreckt guests,
And would haue rest the Fishers of their prey,
Had not their backe bene very slow of saile;
And therefore homeward did they bend their course
Thus haue you heard me seuer'd from my blisse,
That by misfortunes was my life prolong'd,
To tell sad stories of my owne mishaps.

Duke. And for the sake of them thou sorrowest for,
Doe me the fauour to dilate at full,
What haue befallne of them and they till now.

March. My yongest boy, and yet my eldest care,
At eighteen yeeres became inquisiue
After his brother; and importun'd me
That his attendant, so his case was like,
Rest of his brother, but retain'd his name,
Might beare him company in the quest of him.
Whom whilst I laboured of a loue to see,
I hazarded the losse of whom I lou'd
Five Summers haue I spent in farthest Greece,
Roming cleane through the boundes of Asia,
And coasting homeward, came to Ephesus
Hopelesse to finde, yet loth to leaue vnought
Or that, or any place that harbours men
But heere must end the story of my life,
And happy were I in my timelie death,
Could all my trauels warrant me they liue.

Duke. Hopelesse Egeus whom the Gates haue mark'd
To beare the extremitie of dire mishap.
Now trust me, were it not against our Lawes,
Against my Crowne, my oath, my dignity,
Which Princes would they may not disaull,
My soule should sue as aduocate for thee:
But though thou art adiudged to the death,
And passed sentence may not be recal'd
But to our honours great disparagement
Yet will I fauour thee in what I can;
Therefore Marchant, Ile limit thee this day
To seeke thy helpe by benefisall helpe,
Try all thē friends thou hast in Ephesus,
Beg thou, or borrow, to make vp the summe,
And liue: if no, then thou art doom'd to die:
Taylor, take him to thy custodie

Taylor. I will my Lord.

March. Hopelesse and helpelesse doth Egeus wend,
But to procrastinate his huelesse end. Exeunt.

Enter Antipholus Erotes, a Marchant, and Dromio.

Mer. Therefore giue out you are of Epidaurum,
Lest that your goods too soone be confiscate:

This very day a Syrachian Marchant
Is apprehended for a riuall here,
And not being able to buy out his life,
According to the statute of the towne,
Dies ere the westie sunne sett in the West:
There is your monie that I had to keepe.

Ant. Goe beare it to the Centaure, where we host,
And stay there Dromio, till I come to thee;
Within this houre it will be dinner time,
Till that Ile view the manners of the towne,
Peruse the traders, gaze vpon the buildings,
And then returne and sleepe within mine iure,
For with long trauels I am stiff and wearie
Get thee away.

Dro. May a man would take you at your word,
And goe indeede, hauing so good a matter. Exit Dromio.

Ant. A trustie villaine this, that very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholly,
Lightens my humour with merry tailes:
What will you walke with me about the towne,
As I then goe to my lone and dine with me?

E. Mer. I am iudged first to certain Marchants,
Of whom I hope to make much benefit:
I crave your pardon, soonest I see a clocke,
Please you, Ile meete with you vpon the Mall,
And afterwaerd comfort you till bed time
My present businesse calles me from your now.

Ant. Farewell till then: I will goe loose my selfe,
And waite vpon you to doe as to view the Citie.

E. Mer. Sir, I commend you to your owne content
Exeunt.

Ant. He that commendeth me to me a discontent,
Commends me to the thing I cannot get:
I to the world am like a drop of water,
That in the Ocean seekes another drop,
Who falling thence to finde his fellow forth,
(Vnseene, inquisiue) confounds himselfe
So I, to finde a Mother and a Brother,
In quest of silents (vnhappy) loose my selfe.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Here comes the almanacke of my true date.
What now? How chance thou art return'd so soone.

E. Dro. Return'd so soone, rather approach too late:
The Capon burnes, the Pig falls from the spit;
The clocke hath stricken twelue vpon the bell:
My Mistresse made it one vpon my cheeke.
She is so hot because the meate is colde:
The meate is colde, because you come not home.
You come not home, because you haue no stomacke:
You haue no stomacke, hauing broke your fast:
But we that know what 'tis to fast and pray,
Are penitent for your default to day.

Ant. Stop in your winde sir, tell me this I pray?
Where haue you left the monie that I gaue you.

E. Dro. Oh sixe pence that I had a week day last,
To pay the Sadler for my Mistresses crupper:
The Sadler had it Sir, I kept it not.

Ant. I am not in a sportue humor now:
Tell me, and dally not, where is the monie?
We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust
So great a charge from thine owne custodie.

E. Dro. I pray you leaue sir as you sit at dinner.
I from my Mistresse come to you in post:
If I returne I shall be post indeede.

For

For he will scout your fault vpon my pate:
Me thinks your maw, like mine, should be your cooke,
And strike you home without a messenger.

Ant. Come Dromio, come, these iests are but of season,
Reserue them till a merrier houre then this.
Where is the gold I gaue in charge to thee?

E. Dro. To me sir? why you gaue no gold to me?

Ant. Come on sir knaue, haue done your foolishnes,
And tell me how thou hast dispos'd thy charge.

E. Dro. My charge was but to fetch you from the Mart
Home to your house; the Phoenix sir, to dinner;
My Mistris and her sister stales for you.

Ant. Now as I am a Christian answer me,
In what safe place you haue bestow'd my monie;
Or I shall breake that merrie scone of yours
That stands on tricks, when I am vndispos'd.
Where is the thousand Markes thou hadst of me?

E. Dro. I haue some markes of yours vpon my pate:
Some of my Mistris markes vpon my shoulders.
But not a thousand markes betwene you both.
If I should pay your worship those againe,
Perchance you will not beare them patiently.

Ant. Thy Mistris markes? what Mistris stalue hast thou?

E. Dro. Your worships wife, my Mistris at the Phoenix;
She that doth fast till you come home to dinner
And praies that you will hie you home to dinner.

Ant. What wilt thou flout me thus vnto my face
Being forbid? There take you that sir knaue.

E. Dro. What meane you sir, for God sake hold your Nay, and you will not sir, Ile take my heeles. (hands

Exeunt Dromio Ep

Ant. Vpon my life by some deuse or other,
The villaine is ore-wrought of all my monie
They say this towne is full of cofenage:
As nimble Iuglers that deceiue the eie
Darke working Sorcerers that change the minde
Soule-killing Witches, that deforme the bodie.
Disguised Cheaters, prating Mountebankes,
And manie such like liberties of sinne
If it proue so, I will be gone the sooner.
Ile to the Centaur to goe seeke this stalue,
I greatly feare my monie is not safe. Exit.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Adriana, wife to Antipholus Sereptus, with Luciana her Sister

Adr. Neither my husband nor the stalue return'd,
That in such haste I sent to seeke his Master?
Sure Luciana it is two a clocke.

Luc. Perhaps some Merchant hath inuited him,
And from the Mart he's somewhere gone to dinner:
Good Sister let vs dine, and neuer fret;
A man is Master of his libertie.

Time is their Master, and when they see time,
They'll goe of come; if so, be patient Sister.

Adr. Why should their libertie then ours be more?

Luc. Because their businesse still lies out adore.

Adr. Looke when I serue him so, he takes it thus.

Luc. Oh, know he is the bridle of your will.

Adr. There's none but asses will be bridled so.

Luc. Why, headstrong liberty is last with woe.
There's nothing situate vnder heauens eie,
But hath his bound in earth, in sea, in skie.
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowles
Are their males subiects, and at their controules:
Man more diuine, the Master of all these,
Lord of the wide world, and wilde watry seas,
Indued with intellectuall sence and soules,
Of more preheminnence then fish and fowles,
Are masters to their females, and their Lords:
I hen let your will attend on their accords.

Adr. This seruitude makes you to keepe vnwed.

Luc. Not this, but troubles of the marriage bed.

Adr. But were you wedded, you wold bear some sway

Luc. Ere I learne loue, Ile practise to obey.

Adr. How if your husband start some other where?

Luc. Till he come home againe, I wold forbear.

Adr. Patience vnus'd, no maruel though she pause,
They can be meeke, that haue no other cause

A wretched soule bruis'd with aduersitie,
We bid be quiet when we heare it crie.

But were we burdned with like waight of paine,
As much, or more, we should our selues complaine.

So thou that hast no vnkinde mate to greeue thee,
With vrging helpelesse patience wold releene me;

But if thou hie to see like right bereft,
This foole-beg'd patience in thee will be left.

Luc. Well, I will marry one day but to trie
Heere comes your man, now is your husband me.

Enter Dromio Eph

Adr. Say, is your tardie master now at hand?

E. Dro. Nay, hee's at too hands with mee, and that my two eares can witness.

Adr. Say, didst thou speake with him? knowst thou his minde?

E. Dro. I, I, he told his minde vpon mine eare, Beshrew his hand, I scarce could vnderstand it.

Luc. Spake hee so doubtfully, thou couldst not seele his meaning.

E. Dro. Nay, hee strooke so plainly, I could too well seele his blowes, and withall so doubtfully, that I could scarce vnderstand them.

Adr. But say, I prethee, is he comming home?
It seemes he hath great care to please his wife.

E. Dro. Why Mistresse, sure my Master is home mad.

Adr. Horne mad, thou villaine?

E. Dro. I meane not Cuckold mad,
But sure he is starke mad.

When I desir'd him to come home to dinner,
He ask'd me for a hundred markes in gold:

'Tis dinner time quoth I: my gold, quoth he.
Your meat doth burne, quoth I: my gold, quoth he.

Will you come, quoth I: my gold, quoth he;
Where is the thousand markes I gaue thee villaine?

The Pigge quoth I, is burn'd: my gold, quoth he.
My mistresse, sir, quoth I: hang up thy Mistresse:

I know not thy mistresse, out on thy mistresse.

Luc. Quoth who?

E. Dro. Quoth my Master, I know quoth he, no house, no wife, no mistresse: so that my arrant due vnto my tongue, I thanke him, I bare home vpon my shoulders:
for in conclusion, he did beat me there.

Adr. Go backe againe, thou stalue, & ferell him home.

Dro. Goe backe againe, and be new beaten home:
For Gods sake send some other messenger.

H 2

Adr. Backe

Adri. Backe slauo, or I will breake thy pawes a-crosse.
Dro. And he will-blesse y<sup>e</sup> crosse with other beating!
 Betweene you, I shall haue a holy head.

Adri. Hence prating, pefant, fetch thy Master home

Dro. Ah! I so round with you, as you with me,
 That like a foot-ball you doe spurne me thus:
 You spurne me hence, and he will spurne me hither,
 If I last in this seruice, you must case me in leather.

Luci. Fie how impatience lowreth in your face.

Adri. His company must do his mimions grace,
 Whilst I at home stand for a merrie looke
 Hath homelie age th<sup>e</sup> alluring beauty tooke
 From my poore cheekes? then he hath wasted it.
 Are my discourses dull? Barren my wit,
 If voluble and sharpe discourse he mar'd,
 Vnkindnesse blunts it more then marble hard.
 Doe their gay vestments his affections baite?
 That's not my fault, hee's master of my fate.
 What ruines are in me that can be found,
 By him not ruin'd? Then is he the ground
 Of my defeatures. My decayed faire,
 A sunnie looke of his, would soone reparaire.
 But, too vnruely Deere, he breakes the pale,
 And feeds from homie; poore I am but his tale.

Luci. Selfe-harming Icalousie; fie beat it hence.

Ad. Vnfeeling fools can with such wrongs dispence:
 I know his eye doth homage other-where,
 Or else, what lets it but he would be here?
 Sister, you know he promis'd me a chaine,
 Would that alone, a loue he would detaine,
 So he would keepe faire quarter with his bed.
 I see the Iewell best enamell'd
 Will loose his beautie. yet the gold bides still
 That others touch, and often touching will,
 Where gold and no man that hath a name,
 By falshood and corruption doth it shame:
 Since that my beautie cannot please his eie,
 He weepe (what's left away) and weeping die.

Luci. How manie fond fooles serue mad Icalousie?

Exit.

Enter Antipholus Errorus.

Ant. The gold I gaue to Dromio is laid vp Safe at the Centaur, and the heedfull slauo
 Is wandred forth in care to seeke me out
 By computation and mine hosts report.
 I could not speake with Dromio, since at first
 I sent him from the Mart? see here he comes.

Enter Dromio Syracuse.

How now sir, is your merrie humor alter'd?
 As you loue stroakes, so iest with me againe.
 You know no Centaur? you receiue'd no gold?
 Your Mistresse sent to haue me home to dinner?
 My house was at the Phoenix? Wast thou mad,
 That thus so madlie thou didst answer me?

S.Dro. What answer sir? when spake I such a word?

E.Ant. Euen now, euen here, not halfe an howre since.

S.Dro. I did not see you since you sent me hence
 Home to the Centaur with the gold you gaue me.

Ant. Villaine, thou didst denie the golds receipt,
 And toldst me of a Mistresse, and a dinner,
 For which I hope thou felist I was displeas'd.

S.Dro. I am glad to see you in this merrie vaine,
 What means this iest, I pray you Master tell me?

Ant. Yea, dost thou iere & flowt me in the teeth?
 Thinkst y<sup>e</sup> I iest? hold, take thou that, & that. Beats Dro.

S.Dr. Hold sir, for Gods sake, now your iest is earnest,

Vpon what bargaine do you giue it me?

Antiph. Because that I familiarlie sometimes
 Doe vse you for my foole, and chat with you,
 Your sawnesse will iest vpon my loue,
 And make a Common of my serious howres,
 When the sunne shines, let foolish gnats make sport,
 But creepe in crannies, when he hides his beames
 If you will iest with me, know my aspect,
 And fashion your demeanor to my lookes,
 Or I will beat this method in your sconce.

S.Dro. Sconce call you it? so you would lesuobatte-ring, I had rather haue it a head, and you vse these blows long. I must get a sconce for my head, and I must to, or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders, but I pray sir, why am I beaten?

Ant. Dost thou not know?

S.Dro. Nothing sir, but that I am beaten

Ant. Shall I tell you why?

S.Dro. I sir, and wherefore; for they say, euery why hath a wherefore.

Ant. Why first for flowing me, and then wherefore,
 for vrging it the second time to me.

S.Dro. Was there euer anie man thus beaten out of season, when in the why and the wherefore, is neither time nor reason Well sir, I thanke you.

Ant. Thanke me sir, for what?

S.Dro. Marry sir, for this something that you gaue me for nothing.

Ant. He make you amends next, to giue you nothing for something. But say sir, is it dinner time?

S.Dro. No sir, I thinke the meat wants that I haue.

Ant. In good time sir: what's that?

S.Dro. Basting

Ant. Well sir, then 'twill be drie.

S.Dro. If it be sir, I pray you eat none of it

Ant. Your reason?

S.Dro. Left it make you chollericke, and purchase me another drie basting

Ant. Well sir, learne to iest in good time, there's a time for all things

S.Dro. I durst haue denied that before you were so chollidacke.

Ant. By what rule sir?

S.Dro. Marry sir, a rule as plaine as the plaine bald
 pate of Father time himselfe.

Ant. Let's heare it.

S.Dro. There's no time for a man to recover his haire that growes bald by nature.

Ant. May he not doe it by fine and recouerie?

S.Dro. Yes, to pay a fine for a perewig, and recouer
 the lost haire of another man.

Ant. Why, is Time such a niggard of haire, being (as it is) so plentifull an excrement?

S.Dro. Because it is a blessing that hee bestowes on beasts, and what he hath scantes them in haire, hee hath giuen them in wit

Ant. Why, but theres manie a man hath more haire then wit.

S.Dro. Not a man of those but he hath the wit to lose his haire.

Ant. Why thou didst conclude hairy men plaine delers without wit.

S.Dro. The plainer dealer, the sooner lost; yet he looseth it in a kinde of rolltie.

Ant. For what reason.

S.Dro. For two, and sound ones to.

Ant. Nay

An Nay not sound I pray you

S Dro Sure ones then.

An Nay, not sure in a thing falling.

S Dro Certaine ones then.

An Name them.

S Dro The one to save the money that he spends in trying: the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porrage

An You would all this time haue prou'd, here is no time for all things

S Dro Marry and did sir. namely, in no time to recover haire lost by Nature

An But your reason was not substantiall, why there is no time to recouer

S Dro Thus I mend it Time himselfe is bald, and therefore to the worlds end, will haue bald followers

An I knew 'twould be a bald conclusion: but soft, who waits vs yonder

Enter Adriana and Luciana

Adri I, I, Antipholus, looke strange and frowne,
Some other Mistresse hath thy sweet aspects.

I am not Adriana, nor thy wife.

The time was once, when thou vn-vrg'd wouldst vow,

That neuer words were musicke to thine care,

That neuer object pleasing in thine eye,

That neuer touch well welcome to thy hand,

That neuer meat sweet-fauour'd in thy taste.

Vnlesse I spake, or look'd, or touch'd, or car'd to thee.

How comes it now, my Husband, oh how comes it,

That thou art then estranged from thy selfe?

Thy selfe I call it, being strange to me.

That vndiuidable Incorporate

Am better then thy deere selfe better part

Ah doe not teare away thy selfe from me;

Ere know my loue: as easie maist thou fall

A drop of water in the breaking gulf,

And take vnmingled thence that drop againe

Without addition or diminishing,

As take from me thy selfe, and not me too

How deere would it touch thee to the quicke,

Shouldst thou but heare I were licentious?

And that this body consecrate to thee,

By Ruffian Lust should be contaminate?

Wouldst thou not spit at me, and spurne at me,

And hurle the name of husband in my face,

And teare the stain'd skin of my Harlot brow,

And from my false hand cut the wedding ring,

And breake it with a deepe-divorcing vow?

I know thou canst, and therefore see thou doe it.

I am posselt with an adulterate blot,

My blood is mingled with the crime of lust.

For if we two be one, and thou play false,

I doe digest the poison of thy flesh,

Being trumpeted by thy contagion.

Keepe then faire league and truce with thy true bed,

I lue disdain'd, thou vndishonoured

Antip. Plead you to me faire dame? I know you not:

In Ephesus I am but two houres old.

As strange vnto your towne, as to your talke,

Who eery word by all my wjt being scan'd,

Wants wit in all, one word to vnderstand

Luci Fie brother, how the world is chang'd with you:

When were you wont to vse my sister thus?

She sent for you by Dromio home to dinner.

Ant. By Dromio? Drom By me.

Adr. By thee, and this thou didst retorne from him.

That he did buffet thee, and in his blowes,

Denied my house for his, me for his wife

Ant. Did you conuerse fir with this gentlewoman:

What is the course and drift of your compact?

S Dro. I fir? I neuer saw her till this time

Ant Villaine thou liest, for euen her verie words,

Didst thou deliuet to me on the Mart

S Dro. I neuer spake with her in all my life

Ant How can she thus then call vs by our names?

Vnlesse it be by inspiration

Adr. How ill agrees it with your grauntie,

To counterfent thus grosely with your slaue,

Abetting him to thwart me in my moode;

Be it my wrong, you are from me exempt,

But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt.

Come I will fasten on this sleeue of thine.

Thou art an Elme my husband, I a Vine.

Whose weaknesse married to thy stranger state,

Makes me with thy strength to communicate:

If ought possesse thee from me, it is droffe,

Vsurping Iuie, Briar, or idle Mosse,

Who all for want of pruning, with intrusion,

Infect thy sap, and lue on thy confusion

Ant To mee shee speaks, shee moues mee for her theame,

What, was I married to her in my dreame?

Or sleepe I now, and thinke I heare all this?

What error driues our eyes and eares amisse?

Vntill I know this sure vncertaine,

Ile entertaine the free'd fallacie.

Luc Dromio, goe bid the seruants spred for dinner.

S Dro Oh for my beads, I crosse me for a sinner.

This is the Fairie land, oh spight of spights,

We talke with Goblins, Owles and Sprights;

If we obay them not, this will insue.

They'll sucke out breath, or pinch vs blacke and blew.

Luc Why prat'st thou to thy selfe, and answer it not?

Dromio, thou Dromio, thou snail, thou slug, thou sor.

S Dro I am transformed Master, am I not?

Ant. I thinke thou art in minde, and so am I

S Dro. Nay Master, both in minde, and in my shape.

Ant Thou hast thine owne forme.

S Dro. No, I am an Ape.

Luc If thou art chang'd to ought, 'tis to an Asse.

S Dro 'Tis true she rides me, and I long for grasse.

'Tis so, I am an Asse, else it could neuer be,

But I should know her as well as she knowes me.

Adr. Come, come, no longer will I be a foole,

To put the finger in the ere and weepe;

Whil'st man and Master laughs my woes to scorne:

Come fir to dinner, Dromio keepe the gate:

Husband Ile dine aboue with you to day,

And shruue you of a thousand idle prankes:

Surra, if any aske you for your Master,

Say he dines forth, and let no creature enter:

Come sister, Dromio play the Porter well

Ant. Am I in earth, in heauen, or in hell?

Sleeping or waking, mad or well aduise:

Knowne vnto these, and to my selfe disguise:

Ile say as they say, and perseuer so:

And in this mist at all aduentures go.

S Dro Master, shall I be Porter at the gate?

Adr. I, and let none enter, least I breake your pate.

Luc. Come, come, Antipholus, we dine to late

H 3

Adri

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, his man Dromio, Angelo the Goldsmith, and Balthazar the Merchant.

E. Ants. Good signior Angelo you must excuse vs all,
My wife is shrewish when I keepe not howres;
Say that I lingerd with you at your shop
To see the making of her Carkanet,
And that to morrow you will bring it home.
But here's a villaine that would face me downe
He met me on the Mart, and that I beat him,
And charg'd him with a thousand markes in gold,
And that I did denie my wife and house;
Thou drunkard thou, what didst thou meane by this?

E. Dro. Say what you wil sir, but I know what I know,
That you beat me at the Mart I haue your hand to shew;
If my skin were parchment, & my blowes you gaue were ink,
Your owne hand-writing would tell you what I thinke.

E. Ant. I thinke thou art an asse.

E. Dro. Marry so it doth appeare
By the wrongs I suffer, and the blowes I beare,
I should kicke being kickt, and being at that passe,
You would keepe from my heels, and beare of an asse.

E. Ant. Yare sad signior Balthazar, pray God our cheer
May answer my good will, and your good welcom here.

Bal. I hold your dainties cheap sir, & your welcom deer.

E. Ant. Oh signior Balthazar, either at fish or fesh,
A table full of welcome, makes scarce one dainty dish.

Bal. Good meat sir is comon that euery churle affords.

Ants. And welcome more common, for that's nothing but words.

Bal. Small cheere and great welcome, makes a merrie feast.

Ants. I, to a niggardly Host, and more sparing guest
But though my cates be meane, take them in good part,
Better cheere may you haue, but not with better hart.
But soft, my doore is lockt; goe bid them ler vs in.

E. Dro. Maid, Briget, Marian, Cistey, Cullier, Ginn.

S. Dro. Mome, Malthorse, Capon, Coxcombe, Idiot, Patch,

Either get thee from the doore, or sit downe at the hatch
Dost thou conuise for venches, that I callt for tuchstone,
When one is one too many, goe get thee from the doore.

E. Dro. What patch is made our Porter? my Master stays in the street.

S. Dro. Let him walke from whence he came, lest hee catch cold on's feet

E. Ant. Who talks within there? ho, open the doore.

S. Dro. Right sir, Ile tell you when, and you'll tell me wherefore

Ant. Wherefore? for my dinner: I haue not din'd to day.

S. Dro. Nor to day here you must not come againe when you may.

Ants. What art thou that keep'st mee out from the howse I owe?

S. Dro. The Porter for this time Sir, and my name is Dromio.

E. Dro. O villaine, thou hast stolne both mine office and my name,

The one nere got me credit, the other mickle blame:
If thou hadst beene Dromio to day in my place,

Thou wouldst haue chang'd thy face for a name, or thy name for an asse.

Enter Lucie.

Lucie. What a colle is there Dromio? who are those at the gate?

E. Dro. Let my Master in Lucie.

Lucie. Faith no, hee comes too late, and so tell your Master.

E. Dro. O Lord I must laugh, haue at you with a Pro-uerbe,
Shall I set in my asse,

Lucie. Haue at you with another, that's when I can you tell?

S. Dro. If thy name be called Lucie, Lucie thou hast an-swer'd him well.

Ants. Doe you heare you minion, you'll let vs in I hope?

Lucie. I thought to haue askt you.

S. Dro. And you said no.

E. Dro. So come helpe, well strooke, there was blow for blow.

Ants. Thou baggage let me in.

Lucie. Can you tell for whose sake?

E. Dro. Master, knocke the doore hard.

Lucie. Let him knocke till it ake.

Ants. You'll crie for this misaion, if I beat the doore downe.

Lucie. What needs all that, and a paire of stocks in the towne?

Enter Adriana.

Alr. Who is that at the doore? keeps all this noise?
S. Dro. By my troth your towne is troubled with enruiy boies.

Ants. Are you there Wife? you might haue come before.

Ants. Your wife sir knaue? go get you from the doore,
E. Dro. If you went in paine Master, this knaue would goe sore.

Ants. Heere is neither cheere sir, nor welcome, we would faine haue either.

Balth. In debating which was best, wee shall part with neither.

E. Dro. They stand at the doore, Maister, bid them welcome hither.

Ants. There is something in the winde, that we cannot get in.

E. Dro. You would say so Master, if your garments were thin.

Your cake here is warme within: you stand here in the cold.

It would make a man mad as a Bucke to be so bought and sold.

Ant. Go fetch me something, Ile break ope the gate.

S. Dro. Breake any breaking here, and Ile breake your knaues pate.

E. Dro. A man may breake a word with your sir, and words are but winde:

I and breake it in your face, so he break it not behinde.

S. Dro. It seemes thou want'st breaking, out vpon thee hinde.

E. Dro. Here's too much out vpon thee, I pray thee let me in.

S. Dro. I, when fowles haue no feathers, and fish haue no fin

Ant. Well, Ile breake in go borrow me a crow.

E. Dro. A crow without feather, Master meane you so;
For

For a fish without a finne, ther's a fowle without a feather,
If a crow help vs an firra, we'll plucke a crow together.

Ant. Go; get thee gone, fetch me an iron Crow.

Balth. Have patience fir, oh let it not be so,
Hearren you warre against your reputation,
And draw within the compasse of suspect
Th'invuolated honor of your wife
Once this your long experience of your wisdomes,
Her sober vertues, yeares, and modestie,
Plead on your part some cause to you vnknowne;
And doubt not fir, but she will well excuse
Why at this time the dores are made against you.
Be rul'd by me; depart in patience,
And let vs see the Tyger at his dinner,
And about euenning come your selfe alone,
To know the reason of this strange restraint:
If by strong hand you offer to breake in
Now in the stirring passage of this day,
A vulgar comment will be made of it;
And that supposed by the common rowt
Against your yet vngalled estimation,
That may with foule intrusion enter in,
And dwell vpon your graue when you are dead;
For slander liues vpon succession,
For euer hows'd, where it gets possession.

Ant. You haue prevail'd, I will depart in quiet,
And in despite of mirth meane to be merrie
I know a wench of excellent discourse,
Prettie and wittie; wilde, and yet too gentle;
There will we dine this woman that I meane
My wife (but I protest without desert)
Hath oftentimes vpbraid me withall:
To her will we to dinner, get you home
And fetch the chaine, by this I know 'tis made,
Bring it I pray you to the Porpentine,
For there's the house That chaine will I bestow
(Be it for nothing but to spight my wife)
Vpon mine hostesse there, good fir make haste
Since mine owne doores refuse to entertaine me,
Ile knocke else-where, to see if they'll disdain me
Arg. Ile meet you at that place some houre hence.
Ant. Do so, this test shall cost me some expence

Exit

Enter Indiana, with Antipholus of Syracuse

Inda. And may it be that you haue quite forgot
A husbands office? shall Antipholus
Euen in the spring of Loue, thy Loue-springs rot?
Shall loue in buildings grow so ruinate?
If you did wed my sister for her wealth,
Then for her wealths-sake vse her with more kindnesse
Or if you like else-where doe it by stealth,
Muffle your false loue with some shew of blindnesse
Let not my sister read it in your eye.
Be not thy tongue thy owne shames Orator.
Looke sweet, speake faire, become disloyaltie:
Apparell vice like vertues harbenger.
Beare a faire presence, though your heart be tainted,
Teach sinne the carriage of a holy Saint,
Be secret false. what need she be acquainted?
What simple thefe brags of his owne attaine?
'Tis double wrong to truant with your bed,
And let her read it in thy looks at board:
Shame hath a bastard fame, well managed,
Ile deeds is doubled with an euill word:
Alas poore women, make vs not beleue
(Being compact of credit) that you loue vs,

Though others haue the arme, shew vs the sleue:
We in your motion turne, and you may moue vs.
Then gentle brother get you in againe;
Comfort my sister, cheere her, call her wife;
'Tis holy sport to be a little vaine,
When the sweet breath of flatterie conquers strife.

S. Ant. Sweete Mistris, what your name is else I know not;

Nor by what wonder you do hit of mine
Lesse in your knowledge, and your grace you show not,
Then our earths wonder, more then earth diuine.
Teach me deere creature how to thinke and speake:
Lay open to my earthe grosse conceit:
Smothred in errors, feeble, shallow, weake,
The foulded meaning of your words deceipt.
Against my soules pure truth, why labour you,
I o make it wander in an vknowne field?
Are you a god? would you create me new?
Transforme me then, and to your powre Ile yeeld
But if that I am I, then well I know,
Your weeping sister is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed no homage doe I owe.
Farre more, farre more, to you doe I decline.
Oh traine me not sweet Mermaide with thy note,
To drowne me in thy sister flood of teares.
Sing Siren for thy selfe, and I will dore.
Spread ore the siluer waue. by golden haire;
And as a bud Ile take thee, and there lie:
And in that glorious supposition thinke,
He gaires by death, that hath such meanes to die:
Let Loue, being light, be drowned if she sinke.

Luc. What are you mad, that you doe reason so?

Ant. Not mad, but mated, how I doe not know:

Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your ere

Ant. For gazing on your beames faire sun being by.

Luc. Gaze when you should, and that will cleere your sight

Ant. As good to winke sweet loue, as looke on night.

Luc. Why call you me loue? Call my sister so

Ant. Thy sisters sister.

Luc. That's my sister.

Ant. No it is thy selfe, mine owne selves better part:
Mine eyes cleere eye, my deere hearts deerer hearr,
My loode, my fortune, and my sweet hopes arme;
My sole earths heauen, and my heauens claime.

Luc. All this my sister is, or else should be

Ant. Call thy selfe sister sweet, for I am thee.
Thee will I loue, and with thee lead my life,
Thou hast no husband yet, nor I no wife:
Giue me thy hand.

Luc. Oh soft fir, hold you still:
Ile fetch my sister to get her good will.

Exit.

Enter Dromio, Syracuse

Ant. Why how now Dromio, where runst thou so fast?

S. Dro. Doe you know me fir? Am I Dromio? Am I your man? Am I my selfe?

Ant. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thy selfe.

Dro. I am an asse, I am a womans man, and besides my selfe

Ant. What womans man? and how besides thy selfe?

Dro. Marrie fir, besides my selfe, I am due to a woman
One that claimes me, one that haunts me, one that will haue me.

Ant. What

Anti. What claime layes she to thee?

Dro. Marry sir, such claime as you would lay to your horse, and she would haue me as a beast, not that I beeing a beast she would haue me, but that she being a verie beastly creature layes claime to me.

Anti. What is she?

Dro. A very reuerent body I such a one, as a man may not speake of, without he say sir reuerence, I haue but leane lucke in the match, and yet is she a wondrous fat marriage.

Anti. How dost thou meane a fat marriage?

Dro. Marry sir, she's the Kitchin wench, & al greafe, and I know not what vse to put her too, but to make a Lampe of her, and run from her by her owne light. I warrant, her ragges and the Tallow in them, will burne a Poland Winter: If she liues till doomesday, she'll burne a weeke longer then the whole World.

Anti. What complexion is she of?

Dro. Swart like my shoo, but her face nothing like so eleane kept: for why? she sweats a man may goe ouer-shoes in the grime of it.

Anti. That's a fault that water will mend.

Dro. No sir, 'tis in graine, No brs flood could not do it.

Anti. What's her name?

Dro. Nell Sir: but her name is three quarters, that's an Ell and three quarters, will not measure her from hip to hip.

Anti. Then she beares some bredth?

Dro. No longer from head to foot, then from hippe to hippe: she is spherically, like a globe. I could find out Countries in her.

Anti. In what part of her body stands Ireland?

Dro. Marry sir in her buttookes, I found it out by the bogges.

Anti. Where Scotland?

Dro. I found it by the barrenesse, hard in the palme of the hand.

Anti. Where France?

Dro. In her forehead, aim'd and reuerted, making warre against her heire.

Anti. Where England?

Dro. I look'd for the chalkie Cliffes, but I could find no whitenesse in them. But I guesse, it stood in her chin by the salt rheume that ranne betweene France, and it.

Anti. Where Spaine?

Dro. Faith I saw it not: but I felt it hot in her breth.

Anti. Where America, the Indies?

Dro. Oh sir, vpon her nose, all ore embellished with Rubies, Carbuncles, Saphires, declining their rich Aspect to the hot breath of Spaine, who sent whole Armadoes of Carreets to be ballast at her nose.

Anti. Where stood Belgiz, the Netherlands?

Dro. Oh sir, I did not looke so low. To conclude, this drudge or Diuiner layd claime to mee, call'd mee Dromio, swore I was assur'd to her, told me what priue markes I had about mee, as the marke of my shoulder, the Mole in my necke, the great Wart on my left arme, that I amaz'd ranne from her as a witch. And I thinke, if my breth had not beene made of faith, and my heart of Steele, she had transform'd me to a Curtull dog, & made me turne i'th wheele.

Anti. Go hie thee presently, post to the roade, And if the winde blow any way from store, I will not harbour in this Towne to night. If any Barks put forth, come to the Mart,

Where I will walke till thou returne to me: If euerie one knowes vs, and we know none,

'Tis time I thinke to trudge, packe, and be gone.

Dro. As from a Beare a man would run for life, So sue I from her that would be my wife. Exit

Anti. There's none but Witches do inhabit heere, And therefore 'tis hie time that I were hence: She that doth call me husband, euen my soule Doth for a wise abhorre. But her faire sister Possess with such a gentle soueraigne grace, Of such inchanting presence and discourse, Hath almost made me Traitor to my selfe: But least my selfe be guilty to selfe wrong, Ile stop mine eares against the Mermaids song.

Enter Angelo with the Chaîne.

Ang. Mr Antipholus,

Anti. I that's my name.

Ang. I know it well sir, loe here's the chaîne, I thought to haue tane you at the Perpetuine, The chaîne vofinish'd made me stay thus long.

Anti. What is your will that I shal do with this?

Ang. What please your selfe sir: I haue made it for you

Anti. Made it for me sir, I bespoke it not.

Ang. Not once, nor twice, but twentie times you haue:

Go home with it, and please your Wife withall, And soone at supper time Ile visit you, And then receiue my money for the chaîne.

Anti. I pray you sir receiue the money now, For feare you ne see chaîne, nor money more.

Ang. You are a merry man sir, fare you well. Exit.

Anti. What I should thinke of this, I cannot tell: But this I thinke, there's no man is so vaine, That would refuse so faire an offer'd Chaîne. I see a man heere needs not lue by shifts, When in the streets he meetes such Golden gifts: Ile to the Mart, and there for Dromio stay, If any ship put out, then straight away. Exit

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Merchant, Goldsmith, and an Officer.

Mar. You know since Pentecost the sum is due, And since I haue not much importun'd you, Nor now I had not, but that I am bound To Persia, and want Gilders for my voyage: Therefore make present satisfaction, Or Ile attach you by this Officer.

Gold. Euen iust the sum that I do owe to you, Is growing to me by Antipholus, And in the instant that I met with you, He had of me a Chaîne, at five a clocke I shall receiue the money for the same: Pleaseth you walke with me downe to his house, I will discharge my bond, and thanke you too.

Enter Antipholus Ephes Dromio from the Courtizans.

Offi. That labour may you saue. See whither he comes.

Anti. While I go to the Goldsmiths house, go thou.

And

And buy a ropes end, that will I bestow
Among my wife, and their confederates,
For locking me out of my doores by day.
But soft I see the Goldsmiths get three gone,
Buy thou a rope, and bring it home to me.

Dre. I buy a thousand pound a yeare, I buy a rope.

Exit Dremitio

Eph Am. Amm it well helpe vp that trusts to you,
I promised your presence, and the Chaine,
But neither Chaine nor Goldsmith came to me.
Belike you thought our love would last too long
If it were chain'd together, and therefore came not.

Gold. Sauling your merrie humbr - here's the note
How much your Chaine weighs to the utmost charest,
The fineness of the Gold, and chargefull fashion,
Which doth amount to three odde Duckets more
Then I stand debted to this Gentleman,
I pray you see him presently discharg'd,
For he is bound to Sea, and stayes but for it.

Anti. I am not turnish'd with the present monie:
Besides I haue some businesse in the towne,
Good Signior take the stranger to my house,
And with you take the Chaine, and bid my wife
Disburse the summe, on the receipt thereof,
Perhance I will be there as soone as you.

Gold. Then you will bring the Chaine to her your selfe.

Anti. No beare it with you, least I come not time enough

Gold. Well sir, I will? Haue you the Chaine about you?

Anti. And if I haue not sir, I hope you haue
Or else you may returne without your money.

Gold. Nay come I pray you sir, giue me the Chaine:
Both winde and tide stayes for this Gentleman,
And too blame haue held him heere too long

Anti. Good Lord, you vse this dalliance to excuse
Your breach of promise to the Porpentine,
I should haue chid you for not bringing it,
But like a shrew you first begin to brawle.

Mor. The houre steales on, I pray you sir dispatch.

Gold. You heare how he importunes me, the Chaine.

Anti. Why giue it to my wife, and fetch your mony.

Gold. Come, come, you know I gaue it you euen now.
Either send the Chaine, or send me by some token.

Anti. Fie, now you ruff this humor out of breath,
Come where's the Chaine, I pray you let me see it.

Mor. My businesse cannot brooke this dalliance,
Good sir say, whe'r you'll answer me, or no:

If not, Ile leaue him to the Officer.

Anti. I answer you? What should I answer you.

Gold. The monie that you owe me for the Chaine.

Anti. I owe you none, till I receive the Chaine.

Gold. You know I gaue it you halfe an houre since.

Anti. You gaue me none, you wrong mee much to say so.

Gold. You wrong me more sir in denying it.
Consider how it stands vpon my credit.

Mor. Well Officer, arrest him at my suite

Off. I do, and charge you in the Dukes name to obey me.

Gold. This touches me in reputation
Either consent to pay this sum for me,
Or I attach you by this Officer.

Anti. Consent to pay the debt I neuer had:
Arrest me foolish fellowe & thou dost

Gold. Heere is thy fee, arrest him Officer.

I would not spare my brother in this case,
If he should scorne me so apparantly.

Officer. I do arrest you sir, you heere the scite

Anti. I do obey thee, till I giue thee baile.

But firrah, you shall buy this sport as decree,
As all the mettall in your shop will answer.

Gold. Sir, sir, I shall haue Law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame, I doubt it not.

Enter Dremitio Sira from the Bay.

Dre. Master, there's a Barke of Epidaurum,
That staies but till her Owner comes aboard,
And then sir she beares away. Our fraughtage sir,
I haue conuer'd aboard, and I haue bought
The Oyle, the Balsamm, and Aqua-vitæ
The ship is in her trim, the merrie winde
Blowes faire from land they stay for nought at all,
But for their Owner, Master, and your selfe.

Anti. How now? a Madman? Why thou peeuishest sheep
What ship of Epidaurum staies for me

S. Dre. A ship you sent me too, to hier wastage.

Anti. Thou drunken slaue, I sent thee for a rope,
And told thee to what purpose, and what end.

S. Dre. You sent me for a ropes end as soone,
You sent me to the Bay sir, for a Barke.

Anti. I will debate this matter at more leisure
And teach your eares to list me with more heede:

To Adriana Villaine hie thee straight.

Giue her this key, and tell her in the Deske

That's couer'd o're with Turkish Tapistrie,

There is a purse of Duckets, let her send it:

Tell her, I am arrested in the streete,

And that shall baile me: hie thee slaue, be gone,

On Officer to prison, till it come.

Exeunt

S. Dremitio. To Adriana, that is where we din'd,
Where Dowsabell did claime me for her husband,

She is too bigge I hope for me to compass,

Thither I must, although against my will.

For seruantes must their Masters mindes fulfill.

Exit

Enter Adriana and Luciana

Adr. Ah Luciana, did he tempt thee so?

Might st thou perceiue austereely in his eye,

That he did plead earnestly, yea or no:

Look'd he or red or pale, or sad or merrily?

What obseruation mad'st thou in this case?

Oh, his hearts Meteors tilting in his face

Luc. First he deny'd you had in him no right.

Adr. He meant he did me none: the more my spite

Luc. Then swore he that he was a stranger heere.

Adr. And true he swore, though yet forsworne hee were.

Luc. Then pleaded I for you

Adr. And what said he?

Luc. That loue I begg'd for you, he begg'd of me.

Adr. With what perswasion did he tempt thy love?

Luc. With words, that in an honest suit might moue.
First, he did praise my beaune, then my speech.

Adr. Did'st speake him faire?

Luc. Haue patience I beseech.

Adr. I cannot, nor I will not hold me still,
My tongue, though not my heart, shall sue his will.
He is deformed, crooked, old, and fete,
Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, speechlesse every where.
Vicious, yngentle, foolish, blun, ynknde,

Stigma-

Stigmaticall in making worse in minde.

Luc. Who would be jealous then of such a one?
No euill lost is wail'd, when it is gone

Adr. Ah but I thinke him better then I say:
And yet would herein others eies were worse:
Farre from her nest the Lapwing cries away;
My heart praies for him, though my tongue doe curse.

Enter S. Dromio.

Dro. Here goe, the deske, the purse, sweet now make haste.

Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?

S. Dro. By running fast.

Adr. Where is thy Master Dromio? Is he well?

S. Dro. No, he's in Tartar limbo, worse then hell:
A duell in an euermlasting garment hath him;

On whose hard heart is button'd vp with Steele:

A Feind, a Fairie, pittlesse and ruffe.

A Wolfe, nay worse, a fellow all in buffe

A back friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that countermaills

The passages of allies, creekes, and narrow lands.

A hound that runs Counter, and yet draws driftoot well,
One that before the Iudgmēt carries poore soules to hel.

Adr. Why man, what is the matter?

S. Dro. I doe not know the matter, hee is restled on the case.

Adr. What is he arrested? tell me at whose suite?

S. Dro. I know not at whose suite he is arrested well;
but is in a suite of buffe which restled him, that can I tell,
will you send him Mistress redemption, the womie in his deske.

Adr. Go fetch it Sister: this I wonder at

Exit Luciana.

Thus he vnknowne to me should be in debt.

Tell me, was he arrested on a band?

S. Dro. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing.

A chaine, a chaine, doe you not here it ring.

Adria. What, the chaine?

S. Dro. No, no, the bell, tis time that I were gone:
It was two ere I left him, and now the clocke strikes one.

Adr. The houres come backe, that did I neuer here.

S. Dro. Oh yes, if any houre meete a Serieant, a turnes backe for verie feare

Adri. As if time were in debt how fondly do'st thou reason?

S. Dro. Time is a verie bankerout, and owes more then he's worth to season.

Nay, he's a thief: too: haue you not heard men say,

That time comes stealing on by night and day?

If I be in debt and theft, and a Serieant in the way,

Hath he not reason to turne backe an houre in a day?

Enter Luciana.

Adr. Go Dromio, there's the monie, beare it straight,
And bring thy Master home immediately.

Come sister, I am prest downe with conceit:

Conceit, my comfort and my iniurie.

Exit.

Enter Antipholus Syracuse.

There's not a man I meete but doth salute me

As if I were their well acquainted friend,

And euerie one doth call me by my name:

Some tender monie to me, some inuite me;

Some other giue me thanks for kindnesses;

Some offer me Commodities to buy.

Euen now a tailor call'd me in his shop,

And shew'd me Silkes that he had brought for me;
And therewithall tooke measure of my body
Sure these are busie magicians wiles,
And lapland Sorcerers inhabit here.

Enter Dromio Sr.

S. Dro. Master, here's the gold you sent me for: what haue you got the picture of old Adam new apparel'd?

Ant. What gold is this? What Adam do'st thou meane?

S. Dro. Not that Adam that kept the Paradise: but that Adam that keeps the prisons: hee that goes in iron calues-skin, that was kill'd for the Prodigall: hee that came behinde you sir, like an euill angel, and bid you feed like your libertie

Ant. I vnderstand thee not.

S. Dro. No? why 'tis a plaine case: he that went like a Base-Viole in a case of leather; the man sir, that when gentlemen are tired giues them a sob, and rests them.
he sir, that takes pittie on decayed men, and giues them
sutes of durance. he that sets vp his self to doe more exploits with his Mace, then a Monie Pike.

Ant. What thou mean'st an officer?

S. Dro. I sir, the Serieant of the Band: he that brings any man to answer it that breaks his Band: one that thinks a man alwaies going to bed, and saies, God giue you good rest.

Ant. Well sir, there rest in your foolerie.

Is there any ships put forth to night? may we be gone?

S. Dro. Why sir, I brought you word an houre since, that the Barke Expedition put forth to night, and then were you hindered by the Serieant to tarry for the Hay Delay. Here are the angels that you sent for to deliuer
you

Ant. The fellow is distract, and so am I,
And here we wander in illusions:
Some blessed power deliuer vs from hence.

Enter a Cyprian.

Cyp. Well met, well met, Master Antipholus:

I see sir you haue found the Gold-smith now.

Is that the chaine you promis'd me to day.

Ant. Sathan auoide, I charge thee tempt me not.

S. Dro. Master, is this Mistress Sathan?

Ant. It is the duell.

S. Dro. Nay, she is worse, she is the duels dam:
And here she comes in the habit of a light wench, and thereof comes, that the wenches say God dam me, That's as much to say, God make me a light wench: It is written, they appeare to men like angels of light, light is an effect of fire, and fire will burne: ergo, light wenches will burne, come not neere her.

Cyp. Your man and you are maruallous merrie sir.
Will you goe with me, we'll mend our dinner here?

S. Dro. Master, if do expect spoon-meate, or be spake a long spoone.

Ant. Why Dromio?

S. Dro. Marne he must haue a long spoone that must eate with the duell.

Ant. Auoid then fiend, what tell'st thou me of sup-
Thou art, as you are all a sorceresse: (ping?)

I coniure thee to leaue me, and be gon.

Cyp. Giue me the ring of mine you had at dinner,
Or for my Diamond the Chaine you promis'd,
And Ile be gone sir, and not trouble you.

S. Dro. Some diuils aske but the parings of ones nail, a rush, a haire, a drop of blood, a pin, a nut, a cherrie-stone: but she more couetous, wold haue a chaine: Master be wise, and if you giue it her, the diuell will shake her Chaine, and fright vs with it.

Cur. I pray you sir my Ring, or else the Chaine, I hope you do not meane to cheate me fo?

Ant. Auant thou witch. Come Dromio let vs go.

S Dro Flic pride saies the Pea-cocke, Mistris that you know. Exit

Cur. Now out of doubt Antipholus is mad, Else would he neuer so demean himselfe, A Ring he hath of mine worth fortie Duckets, And for the same he promis'd me a Chaine, Both one and other he denies me now: The reason that I gather he is mad, Besides this present instance of his rage, Is a mad tale he told to day at dinner, Of his owne doores being shut against his entrance. Belike his wife acquainted with his fits, On purpose shut the doores against his way. My way is now to hie home to his house, And tell his wife, that being Lunaticke, He rush'd into my house, and tooke perforce My Ring away. This course I fittest choofe, For fortie Duckets is too much to loofe

Enter Antipholus Ephes with a Sailor

An. Feare me not man, I will not breake away, Ile giue thee ere I leaue thee so much money To warrant thee as I am rested for. My wife is in a wayward moode to day, And will not lightly trust the Messenger, That I should be attach'd in Ephesus, I tell you 'twill sound harshly in her eares.

Enter Dromio Eph with a ropes end.

Heere comes my Man, I thinke he brings the monie. How now sir? Haue you that I sent you for?

E Dro Here's that I warrant you will pay them all.

Ant. But where's the Money?

E Dro. Why sir, I gaue the Monie for the Ropr.

Ant. Five hundred Duckets villaine for a rope?

E Dro Ile serue you sir five hundred at the rate.

Ant. To what end did I bid thee hie thee home?

E Dro. To a ropes end sir, and to that end am I return'd.

Ant. And to that end sir, I will welcome you

Off. Good sir be patient.

E Dro. Nay 'tis for me to be patient, I am in aduersitie.

Off. Good now hold thy tongue.

E Dro. Nay, rather perswade him to hold his hands

Ant. Thou whoreson senselesse Villaine

E Dro I would I were senselesse sir, that I might not feelee your blowes

Ant. Thou art sensible in nothing but blowes, and so is an Ass

E Dro I am an Ass indeede, you may prooue it by my long eares. I haue serued him from the houre of my Natuinitie to this instant, and haue nothing at his hands for my seruice but blowes. When I am cold, he heates me with beating: when I am warme, he cooles me with beating: I am wak'd with it when I sleepe, rais'd with it when I sit, driven out of doores with it when I goe from home, welcom'd home with it when I returne, nay

I beare it on my shoulders, as a begger woont her brat and I thinke when he hath lam'd me, I shall begge with it from doore to doore

Enter Adriana, Luciana, Conrtizan, and a Schoole-master, call d Pinch.

Ant Come goe along, my wife is comming yonder

E Dro. Mistris respice finem, respect your end, or rather the prophesie like the Parrat, beware the ropes end

Ant. Wilt thou still talke?

Beats Dro

Curt. How say you now? Is not your husband mad?

Adri. His inciuility confirms no lesse;

Good Doctor Pinch, you are a Coniurer,

Establish him in his true sence againe,

And I will please you what you will demand

Luc. Alas how fiery, and how sharpe he lookes

Curt. Marke, how he trembles in his extasie

Pinch. Giue me your hand, and let mee feelee your pulse.

Ant. There is my hand, and let it feelee your eare

Pinch I charge thee Satan, hous'd within this man,

To yeeld possession to my holie prayers,

And to thy state of darknesse hie thee straight,

I coniure thee by all the Saints in heauen.

Ant. Peace doting wizard, peace; I am not mad.

Adri Oh that thou wer't not, poore distressed soule

Ant. You Minion you, are these your Customers?

Did this Companion with the saffron face

Reuell and feast it at my house to day,

Whil'st vpon me the guiltie doores were shut,

And I denied to enter in my house.

Adri O husband, God doth know you din'd at home

Where would you had remain'd vntill this time,

Free from these slanders, and this open shame

Ant. Din'd at home? Thou Villaine, what sayest thou?

Dro Sir sooth to say, you did not dine at home.

Ant. Were not my doores lockt vp, and I shut out?

Dro. Perdie, your doores were lockt, and you shur out.

Ant. And did not she her selfe reuile me there?

Dro Sans Fable, she her selfe reuill'd you there,

Ant. Did not her Kitchen maide saile, taunt, and scorne me?

Dro. Certes she did, the kitchen veltall scorn'd you.

Ant. And did not I in rage depart from hence?

Dro In vertue you did, my bones beares witness, That since haue felt the vigor of his rage.

Adri Is't good to sooth him in these contraries?

Pinch. It is no shame, the fellow finds his vaine,

And yeelding to him, humors well his frensie.

Ant. Thou hast subborn'd the Goldsmith to arrest mee

Adri. Alas, I sent you Monie to redeeme you,

By Dromio heere, who came in hast for it.

Dro Monie by me? Heart and good will you might, But surely Master not a ragge of Monie.

Ant Wentst not thou to her for a purse of Duckets,

Adri He came to me, and I deliuer'd it

Luc. And I am witnessse with her that she did

Dro. God and the Rope-maker beare me witnessse, That I was sent for nothing but a rope.

Pinch Mistris, bo'h Man and Master is posselt, I know it by their pale and deadly lookes,

They

Therefore most gracious Duke with thy command,
Let him be brought forth, and borne hence for helpe.

Duke. Long since thy husband seru'd me in my wars
And I to thee ingag'd a Princes word,
When thou didst make him Master of thy bed,
To do him all the grace and good I could.
Go some of you, kiocke at the Abbey gate,
And bid the Lady Abbessse come to me
I will determine this before I stirre.

Enter a Messenger

Oh Mistris, Mistris, shute and saue your selfe,
My Master and his man are both broke loose,
Beaten the Maids a-row, and bound the Doctor,
Whose beard they haue sing'd off with brands of fire,
And euer as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pailles of puddled myre to quench the haire;
My M<sup>r</sup> preaches patience to him, and the while
His man with Cizers nicks him like a foole:
And sure (vnlesse you send some present helpe)
Betweene them they will kill the Coniurer.

Adr. Peace foole, thy Master and his man are here,
And that is false thou dost report to vs.

Mess. Mistris, vpon my life I tel you true,
I haue not breath'd almost since I did see it.
He cries for you, and vows if he can take you,
To scorch your face, and to disfigure you

Cry within.

Harke, harke, I heare him Mistris. He, be gone.

Duke. Come stand by me, feare nothing: guard with Halberds

Adr. Ayme, it is my husband witness you,
That he is borne about iustifible,
Euen now we hous'd him in the Abbey heere.
And now he's there, past thought of humane reason.

Enter Antipholus, and E. Drorrio of Ephesus

(Aside,

E. Ant. Iustice most gracious Duke, oh grant me re-
-uen for the seruice that long since I did thee,
When I bestrid thee in the warres, and tooke
Deepe scarres to saue thy life; euen for the blood
That then I lost for thee, now grant me iustice.

Mar. Fat. Vnlesse the feare of death doth make me dore, I see my sonne Antipholus and Drorrio.

E. Ant. Iustice (sweet Prince) against y<sup>e</sup> Woman there:
She whom thou gau'st to me to be my wife;
That hath abused and dishonored me,
Euen in the strength and height of iniurie
Beyond imagination is the wrong
That she this day hath shamelesse throwne on me

Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt finde me iust

E. Ant. This day (great Duke) she shut the doores vpon me,

While she with Harlots feasted in my house

Duke. A greuous fault. say woman, didst thou so?

Adr. No my good Lord. My selfe, he, and my sister,
To day did dine together. so befall my soule,
As this is false he burthens me withall.

Luc. Nere may I looke on day, nor sleepe on night,
But she tels to your Highnesse simple truth.

Gold. Operiur'd woman! They are both forsworne,
In this the Madman iustly chargeth them.

E. Ant. My Liege, I am aduised what I say,
Neither disturbed with the effect of Wine,
Nor headie-rash prouok'd with raging ire,
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad,

This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner;
That Goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her,
Could witness it. for he was with me then,
Who parted with me to go fetch a Chaine,
Promising to bring it to the Porpentine,
Where Balthazar and I did dine together.
Our dinner done, and he not coming thither,
I went to seeke him. In the street I met him,
And in his companie that Gentleman.
There did this perliur'd Goldsmith sweare me downe,
That I this day of him receiue'd the Chaine,
Which God he knowes, I saw not. For the which,
He did arrest me with an Officer.
I did obey, and sent my Pefant home
For certaine Duckets. he with none return'd
Then fairly I bespoke the Officer
To go in person with me to my house.
By th' way, we met my wife, her sister, and a rabble more
Of vilde Confederates: Along with them
They brought one Pime, a hungry leane-fac'd Villaine;
A meere Anatomie, a Mounrebanke,
A thred bare lugger, and a Fortune-teller,
A needy-hollow-ey'd-sharpe-looking-wretch;
A liuing dead man. This pernicious slave,
Forsooth tooke on him as a Coniurer:
And gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulse,
And with no-face (as 'twere) out-facing me,
Cries out, I was possesse. Then altogether
They fell vpon me, bound me, bore me thence,
And in a darke and dankish vault at home
There left me and my man, both bound together,
Till gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder,
I gain'd my freedome; and immediately
Ran hether to your Grace, whom I beseech
To giue me ample satisfaction
For these deepe shames, and great indignities.

Gold. My Lord, in truth, thus far I witness with him:
That he did not at home, but was lock'd out.

Duke. But had he such a Chaine of thee, or no?

Gold. He had my Lord, and when he ran in heere,
These people saw the Chaine about his necke.

Mar. Besides, I will be sworne these eares of mine,
Heard you confesse you had the Chaine of him,
After you first forswore it on the Marr,
And thereupon I drew my sword on you
And then you fled into this Abbey heere,
From whence I thinke you are come by Miracle.

E. Ant. I neuer came within these Abbey wals,
Nor euer didst thou draw thy sword on me.
I neuer saw the Chaine, so helpe me heauen.
And this is false you burthen me withall.

Duke. Why what an intricate impeach is this?
I thinke you all haue drunke of Cicero cup:
If heere you hous'd him, heere he would haue bin.
If he were mad, he would not pleade so coldly.
You say he din'd at home, the Goldsmith heere
Denies that saying. Sirra, what say you?

E. Dre. Sir he din'd with her there, at the Porpentine.

Cur. He did, and from my finger snatcht that Ring.

E. Ant. Tis true (my Liege) this Ring I had of her.

Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the Abbey heere?

Cur. As sure (my Liege) as I do see your Grace

Duke. Why this is straunge: Go call the Abbessse hie-
ther

I thinke you are all mated, or starke mad.

Exit

Exit one to the Abbesse

Fa. Most mighty Duke, vouchsafe me speak a word
Haply I see a friend will saue my life,
And pay the sum that may deliuer me.

Duke. Speake freely Siracusan what thou wilt

Faib. Is not your name sir call'd Antipholus?

And is not that your bondman Dromio?

E. Dro. Within this houre I was his bondman sir,

But he I thanke him gnaw'd in two my cords,

Now am I Dromio, and his man, vnbound

Faib. I am sure you both of you remember me.

Dro. Our selues we do remember sir by you

For lately we were bound as you are now.

You are not Paches patient, are you sir?

Father. Why looke you strange on me? you know me well

E. Ant. I neuer saw you in my life till now.

Fa. Oh! grieffe hath chang'd me since you saw me last,

And carefull houres with times deformed hand,

Haue written strange defeatures in my face.

But tell me yet, dost thou not know my voice?

Ant. Neither.

Fa. Dromio, nor thou?

Dro. No trust me sir, nor I.

Fa. I am sure thou dost?

E. Dromio. I sir, but I am sure I do not, and whatsoever a man denies, you are now bound to beleue him.

Faib. Not know my voice, oh times e tremity

Hast thou so crack'd and splitt'd my poore tongue

In seuen short yeares, that heere my onely sonne

Knowes not my feeble key of vntun'd cares?

Though now this grained face of mine behid

In sap-consuming Winters drizled snow,

And all the Conduits of my blood froze vp.

Yet hath my night of life some memorie

My waning lampes some fading glimmer left,

My dull deafe eares a little vs to heare.

All these old witnesses, I cannot erre.

Tell me, thou art my sonne Antipholus.

Ant. I neuer saw my Father in my life.

Fa. But seuen yeares since, in Siracusa boy

Thou know'st we parted, but perhaps my sonne,

Thou sham'st to acknowledge me in miserie.

Ant. The Duke, and all that know me in the City,

Can witness with me that it is not so.

I ne're saw Siracusa in my life.

Duke. I tell thee Siracusan, twentie yeares

Haue I bin Patron to Antipholus,

During which time, he ne're saw Siracusa:

I see thy age and dangers make thee dote.

Enter the Abbesse with Antipholus Siracusa, and Dromio Sir

Abbesse. Most mightie Duke, behold a man much wrong'd

All gather to see them

Adr. I see two husbands, or mine eyes deceiue me.

Duke. One of these men is gentle to the other.

And so of these, which is the naturall man,

And which the spirit? Who deciphereth them?

S. Dromio. I Sir am Dromio, command him away.

E. Dro. I Sir am Dromio, pray let me stay.

S. Ant. Egeon art thou not? or else his ghost.

S. Drom. Oh my olde Master, who hath bound ium heere?

Abb. Who euer bound him, I will lose his bonds,

And gaine a husband by his libertie.

Speake olde Egeon, if thou bee'st the man

That hadst a wife once call'd Emilia,

That bore thee at a burthen two faire sonnes?

Oh if thou bee'st the same Egeon, speake:

And speake vnto the same Emilia

Duke. Why heere begins his Morning storie right:

These two Antipholus, these two so like,

And these two Dromio's, one in semblance.

Besides her vrging of her wracke at sea,

These are the parents to these children,

Which accidentally are met together.

Fa. If I dreame not, thou art Emilia,

If thou art she, tell me, where is that sonne

That floated with thee on the fatall raste

Abb. By men of Epidamium, he, and I,

And the twin Dromio, all were taken vp;

But by and by, rude Fishermen of Corinth

By force tooke Dromio, and my sonne from them,

And me they left with those of Epidamium.

What then became of them, I cannot tell.

I, to this fortune that you see mee in

Duke. Antipholus thou can'st from Corinth first.

S. Ant. No sir, not I, I came from Siracuse

Duke. Stay, stand apart, I know not which is which.

E. Ant. I came from Corinth my most gracious Lord

E. Dro. And I with him

E. Ant. Brought to this Town by that most famous Warriour,

Duke. Menaphon, your most renowned Vnckle.

Adr. Which of you two did dine with me to day?

S. Ant. I, gentle Mistris

Adr. And are not you my husband?

E. Ant. No, I say nay to that.

S. Ant. And so do I, yet did she call me so:

And this faire Gentlewoman her sister heere

Did call me brother. What I told you then,

I hope I shall haue leisure to make good,

If this be not a dreame I see and heare.

Goldsmith. That is the Chaine sir, which you had of

mee.

S. Ant. I thinke it be sir, I denie it not.

E. Ant. And you sir for this Chaine arrested me.

Gold. I thinke I did sir, I deny it not.

Adr. I sent you monie sir to be your baile

By Dromio, but I thinke he brought it not.

E. Dro. No, none by me.

S. Ant. This purse of Duckets I receiu'd from you,

And Dromio my man did bring them me:

I see we still did meete each others man,

And I was tane for him, and he for me,

And thereupon these errors are arose.

E. Ant. These Duckets payne I for my father heere

Duke. It shall not neede, thy father hath his life

Cur. Sir I must haue that Diamond from you.

E. Ant. There take it, and much thanks for my good cheere

Abb. Renowned Duke, vouchsafe to take the paines

To go with vs into the Abbey heere,

And heare at large discouered all our fortunes,

And all that are assembled in this place:

That by this sympathized one daies error

Haue suffer'd wrong. Goe, keepe vs companie,

I 2

And

And we shall make full satisfaction.

Thirtie three yeares haue I but gone in trauaile
Of you my sonnes, and till this present houre
My heauie burthen are deliuered :
The Duke my husband, and my children both,
And you the Kalenders of their Natiuitie,
Go to a Gossips fea't, and go with mee,
After so long greefe such Natiuitie.

Duke. With all my heart, Ile Gossip at this feast.

Exeunt omnes. Mauet the two Dromio's and two Brothers

S.Dro. Maist. shall I fetch your stufte from shipbord?

E An Dromio, what stufte of mine hast thou imbarke

S Dro Your goods that lay at host fir in the Centaur.

S Ant. He speakes to me, I am your master Dromio.

Come go with vs, wee'l looke to that anon,
Embrace thy brother there, reioyce with him. Exit

S Dro. There is a fat friend at your maste's house,
That kitchin'd me for you to day at dinner.

She now shall be my sister, not my wife,

E D Me thinks you are my glasse, & not my brother :

I see by you, I am a sweet-fac'd youth,

Will you walke in to see their gossiping?

S.Dro Not I sir, you are my elder.

E.Dro. That's a question, how shall we trie it

S Dro. Wee'l draw Cuts for the Signior, till then, lead thou first.

E.Dro. Nay then thus :

We came into the world like brother and brother :

And now let's go hand in hand, not one before another

Exeunt.

FINIS.

Much ado about Nothing.

Actus primus, Scena prima.

Enter Leonato Governour of Messina, Innogen his wife, Hero his daughter, and Beatrice his Neece, with a messenger

Leon to.

Learne in this Letter, that Don Peter of Arragon, comes this night to Messine
Mess He is very neere by this he was not three Leagues off when I left him

Leon. How many Gentlemen haue you lost in this action?

Mess But few of any sort, and none of name.

Leon A victorie is twice it selfe, when the achieuer brings home full numbers: I finde heere, that Don Peter hath bestowed much honor on a yong Florentine, called Claudio

Mess. Much deseru'd on his part, and equally remembered by Don Pedro, he hath borne himselfe beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a Lambe, the feats of a Lion, he hath indeede better betted expectation, then you must expect of me to tell you how.

Leo He hath an Vnckle heere in Messina, will be very much glad of it.

Mess. I haue already deliuered him letters, and there appeares much ioy in him, euen so much, that ioy could not shew it selfe modest enough, without a bagd of bitterness.

Leo. Did he breake out into teares?

Mess In great measure

Leo. A kinde ouerflow of kindnesse, there are no faces truer, then those that are so wash'd, how much better is it to weepe at ioy, then to ioy at weeping?

Bea. I pray you, is Signior Montanto return'd from the warres, or no?

Mess I know none of that name, Lady, there was none such in the armie of any sort

Leon What is he that you aske for Neece?

Hero My cousin meanes Signior Benedicke of Padua

Mess. O he's return'd, and as pleasant as euer he was

Bea. He set vp his bills here in Messina, & challeng'd Cupid at the Flight and my Vnckles foole reading the Challenge, subscrib'd for Cupid, and challeng'd him at the Burbolt. I pray you, how many hath hee kil'd and eaten in these warres? But how many hath hee kil'd? for indeed, I promis'd to eate all of his killing.

Leon Faith Neece, you taxe Signior Benedicke too much, but hee'll be meet with you, I doubt it not

Mess He hath done good seruice Lady in these wars

Bea You had musty visuall, and he hath holpe to ease it. he's a very valiant Trencher-man, hee hath an excellent stomacke.

Mess And a good souldier too Lady.

Bea. And a good souldier to a Lady But what is he to a Lord?

Mess A Lord to a Lord, a man to a man, stuf with all honourable vertues

Leo. It is so indeed, he is no lesse then a stuf man. but for the stuffing well, we are all mortall

Leon You must not (sir) mistake my Neece, there is a kind of merry war betwixt Signior Benedicke, & her they neuer meet, but there's a skirmish of wit between them

Bea. Alas, he gets nothing by that In our last conflict, foure of his fine wits went halting off, and now is the whole man gouern'd with ore: so that if hee haue wit enough to keepe himselfe warme, let him beare it for a difference betweene himselfe and his horse For it is all the wealth that he hath left, to be knowne a reasonable creature. Who is his companion now? He hath euery month a new sworne brother

Mess It's possible?

Bea Very easily possible he weares his faith but as the fashion of his hat, it euer changes with y next block

Mess. I see (Lady) the Gentleman is not in your bookes

Bea No, and he were, I would burne my study But I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no young squarer now, that will make a voyage with him to the diuel?

Mess. He is most in the company of the right noble Claudio.

Bea. O Lord, he will hang vpon him like a disease he is tooner caught then the pestilence, and the taker runs presently mad God helpe the noble Claudio, if hee haue caught the Benedicke, it will cost him a thousand pound ere he be cur'd

Mess I will hold friends with you Lady.

Bea. Do good friend.

Leo You'ne're run mad Neece.

Bea No, not till a hot Ianuary

Mess Don Pedro is approach'd.

Enter don Pedro, Claudio, Benedicke, Balthasar, and Iohn the bastard

Pedro. Good Signior Leonato, you are come to meet your trouble the fashion of the world is to auoid cost, and you encounter it

Leon. Neuer came trouble to my house in the likenes of your Grace for trouble being gone, comfort should remaine. but when you depart from me, sorrow abides, and happinesse takes his leaue.

Pedro You embrace your charge too willingly: I thinke this is your daughter.

Leonato Her mother hath many times told me so

Bened Were you in doubt that you askt her?

Leonato Signior Benedicke, no, for then were you a childe

Pedro You haue it full Benedicke, we may ghesse by this, what you are, being a man, truly the Lady fathers her selfe be happie Lady, for you are like an honorable father.

Ben. If Signior Leonato be her father, she would not haue his head on her shoulders for al Messina, as like him as she is

Beat I wonder that you will still be talking, signior Benedicke, no body markes you.

Ben What my deere Ladie Disdaine! are you yet liuing?

Beat. Is it possible Disdaine should die, while shee hath such meete foode to feede it, as Signior Benedicke? Curtesie it selfe must conuert to Disdaine, if you come in her presence

Bene. Then is curtesie a turne-coate, but it is certaine I am loued of all Ladies, onely you excepted and I would I could finde in my heart that I had not a hard heart, for truly I loue none.

Beat A deere happinesse to women, they would els haue bene troubled with a pernicious Suer, I thanke God and my cold blood, I am of your humour for that, I had rather heare my Dog barke at a Crow, than a man sweare he loues me.

Bene. God keepe your Ladiship still in that munde, so some Gentleman or other shall scape a predestinate scratcht face,

Beat. Scratching could not make it worse, and 'twere such a face as yours were.

Bene Well, you are a rare Parrat teacher.

Beat. A bird of my tongue, is better than a beast of your.

Ben I would my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuer, but keepe your way a Gods name, I haue done.

Beat. You alwaies end with a lades tricke, I know you of old

Pedro This is the summe of all Leonato, signior Claudio, and signior Benedicke, my deere friend Leonato, hath inuited you all, I tell him we shall stay here, at the least a moneth, and he heartily praies some occasion may detain vs longer. I dare sweare hee is no hypocrite, but praies from his heart

Leon. If you sweare, my Lord, you shall not be forsworne, let mee bid you welcome, my Lord, being reconciled to the Prince your brother: I owe you all ductie,

John. I thanke you, I am not of many words, but I thanke you.

Leon Please it your grace leade on?

Pedro Your hand Leonato, we will goe together.

Exeunt. Manet Benedicke and Claudio

Claudio. Benedicke, didst thou note the daughter of signior Leonato?

Bene. I noted her not, but I lookt on her.

Claudio. Is she not a modest yong Ladie?

Bene Doe you question me as an honest man should doe, for my simple true iudgement? or would you haue me speake after my custome, as being a professed tyrant to their sexe?

Claudio. No, I pray thee speake in sober iudgement.

Bene. Why yfaith, me thinks, shee's too low for a hie praise, too browne for a faire praise, and too little for a great praise, onely this commendation I can afford her, that were shee other then she is, she were vnhandsome, and being no other, but as she is, I doe not like her.

Claudio. Thou think'st I am in sport, I pray thee tell me truly how thou lik'st her.

Bene. Would you buie her, that you enquire after her?

Claudio. Can the world buie such a rewel?

Bene. Yea, and a case to put it into, but speake you this with a sad brow? Or doe you play the flowing iacke, to tell vs Cupid is a good Hare-finder, and Vulcan a rare Carpenter. Come, in what key shall aman take you to goe in the song?

Claudio. In mine eie, she is the sweetest Ladie that euer I lookt on.

Bene I can see yet without spectacles, and I see no such matter. there's her cosin, and she were not possesst with a furie, exceeds her as much in beautie, as the first of Maie doth the last of December: but I hope you haue no intent to turne husband, haue you?

Claudio. I would scarce trust my selfe, though I had sworne the contrarie, if Hero would be my wife

Bene. Ist come to this? in faith hath not the world one man but he will weare his cap with suspicion? shall I neuer see a batcheller of three score againe? goe to yfaith, and thou wilt needes thrust thy necke into a yoke, weare the print of it, and sigh away fundaines. looke, don Pedro is returned to seeke you

Enter don Pedro, John the bastard.

Pedro. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonatoes?

Bened. I would your Grace would constrain me to tell

Pedro. I charge thee on thy allegiance.

Bene. You heare, Count Claudio, I can be secret as a dumbe man, I would haue you thinke so (but on my allegiance, marke you this, on my allegiance) hee is in loue, With who? now that is your Graces part. marke how short his answere is, with Hero, Leonatoes short daughter.

Claudio. If this were so, so were it vttered.

Bened. Like the old tale, my Lord, it is not so, nor 'twas not so. but indeede, God forbid it should be so

Claudio. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.

Pedro Amen, if you loue her, for the Ladie is verie well worthie

Claudio. You speake this to fetch me in, my Lord.

Pedro. By my troth I speake my thought.

Claudio. And in faith, my Lord, I spoke mine.

Bened. And by my two faiths and troths, my Lord, I speake mine.

Claudio. That I loue her, I feelee.

Pedro. That she is worthie, I know.

Bened. That I neither feelee how shee should be beloved, nor know how shee should be worthie, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me, I will die in it at the stake.

Pedro. Thou wast euer an obstinate heretique in the despite of Beautie.

Claudio. And neuer could maintaine his part, but in the force of his will.

Bene. That

Bene. That a woman conceived me, I thanke her that she brought mee vp, I likewise giue her most humble thanks: but that I will haue a rechte wound in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an inuisible baldricke, all women shall pardon me because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust any, I will doe my selfe the right to trust none: and the fine is, (for the which I may goe the finer) I will liue a Batchellor.

Pedro. I shall see thee ere I die, looke pale with loue.

Bene. With anger, with sicknesse, or with hunger, my Lord, not with loue: proue that euer I loose more blood with loue, then I will get againe with drinke, picke our mine eyes with a Ballet-makers penne, and hang me vp at the doore of a brothel-house for the signe of blinde Cupid.

Pedro. Well, if euer thou doost fall from this faith, thou wilt proue a notable argument.

Bene. If I do, hang me in a bottle like a Cat, & shoot at me, and he that hit's me, let him be clapt on the shoulder, and call'd Adam.

Pedro. Well, as time shall trie In time the sauage Bull doth beare the yoke.

Bene. The sauage bull may, but if euer the sensible Benedicke beare it, plucke out the bulles hornes, and set them in my forehead, and let me be vildely painted, and in such great Letters as they write, heere is good horse to hire: let them signifie vnder my signe, here you may see Benedicke the married man.

Clau. If this should euer happen, thou wouldst bee horne mad.

Pedro. Nay, if Cupid haue not spent all his Quiver in Venice, thou wilt quake for this shortly.

Bene. I looke for an earthquake too then.

Pedro. Well, you will topporize with the houres, in the meane time, good Signior Benedicke, repaire to Leonate, commend me to him, and tell him I will not faile him at supper, for indeede he hath made great preparation.

Bene. I haue almost matter enough in me for such an Embassage, and so I commit you.

Clau. To the tuition of God From my house, if I had it.

Pedro. The sixt of Iuly. Your louing friend, Benedicke.

Bene. Nay mocke not, mocke not: the body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments, and the guardes are but slightly basted on neither, ere you flout old ends any further, examine your conscience, and so I leave you. Exit

Clau. My Liege, your Highnesse now may doe mee good.

Pedro. My loue is thine to teach, teach it but how, And thou shalt see how apt it is to learne Any hard Lesson that may do thee good.

Clau. Hath Leonato any sonne my Lord?

Pedro. No childe but Hero, she's his onely heire, Doest thou affect her (Clau.)?

Clau. O my Lord, When you went onward on this ended action, I look'd vpon her with a souldiers eye, That lik'd, but had a rougher taske in hand, Than to drue liking to the name of loue: But now I am return'd, and that warre-thoughts Haue left their places vacant in their roomes, Come thronging soft and delicate desires, All prompting mee how faire yong Hero is, Saying I lik'd her ere I went to warres.

Pedro. Thou wilt be like a louer presently, And tire the hearer with a booke of words. If thou dost loue faire Hero, cherish it, And I will breake with her: wast not to this end, That thou beganst to twist so fine a story?

Clau. How sweetly doe you minister to loue, That know loues griefe by his complexion! But lest my liking might too sodaine seeme, I would haue salu'd it with a longer treatise.

Ped. What need'st bridge much broder then the flood? The fairest graunt is the necessitie.

Looke what will serue, is fit 'tis once, thou louest, And I will fit thee with the remedie, I know we shall haue reuelling to night, I will assume thy part in some disguise,

And tell faire Hero I am Claudio, And in her bosome Ile vnclasp my heart, And take her hearing prisoner with the force And strong incounter of my amorous tale: Then after, to her father will I breake, And the conclusion is, shee shall be thine, In practise let vs put it presently. Exeunt.

Enter Leonato and an old man, brother to Leonato.

Leo. How now brother, where is my cosen your son: hath he provided this musicke?

Old. He is very busie about it, but brother, I can tell you newes that you yet dreant not of.

Lo. Are they good?

Old. As the euents stamps them, but they haue a good couer: they shew well outwardly, the Prince and Count Claudio walking in a thick pleached alley in my orchard, were thus ouer-heard by a man of mine: the Prince discovered to Claudio that hee loued my niece your daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance, and if hee found her accordant, hee meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly breake with you of it.

Leo. Hath the fellow any wit that told you this?

Old. A good sharpe fellow, I will send for him, and question him your selfe.

Leo. No, no; wee will hold it as a dreame, till it appeare it selfe: but I will acquaint my daughter withall, that she may be the better prepared for an answer, if peraduenture this bee true: goe you and tell her of it: coo-sins, you know what you haue to doe, O I crie you mercie friend, goe you with mee and I will vse your skill, good cosin haue a care this busie time. Exeunt.

Enter Sir Iohn the Bastard, and Conrade his companion.

Con. What the good ycere my Lord, why are you thus out of measure sad?

Ioh. There is no measure in the occasion that breeds, therefore the sadnesse is without limit.

Con. You should heare reason.

Iohn. And when I haue heard it, what blessing bringeth it?

Con. If not a present remedy, yet a patient sufferance.

Ioh. I wonder that thou (being as thou saist thou art, borne vnder Saturne) goest about to apply a morall medicine, to a mortifying mischiefe: I cannot hide what I am: I must bee sad when I haue cause, and smile at no mans iests, eat when I haue stomacke, and wait for no mans leisure: sleepe when I am drowsie, and tend on no mans businesse, laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humor.

Con. Yea, but you must not make the full show of this, till you may doe it without controllment, you haue of late late stood out against your brother, and hee hath tane you newly into his grace, where it is impossible you should take root, but by the faire weather that you make your selfe, it is needful that you frame the season for your owne harvest.

John. I had rather be a canker in a hedge, then a rose in his grace, and it better fits my bloud to be disdain'd of all, then to fashion a carriage to rob loue from any in this (though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man) it must not be denied but I am a plaine dealing villaine, I am trusted with a muffelt, and enfranchis'd with a clog, therefore I haue decreed, not to sing in my cage: if I had my mouth, I would bite if I had my liberty, I would do my liking. in the meane time, let me be that I am, and seeke not to alter me.

Con. Can you make no vse of your discontent?

John. I will make all vse of it, for I vse it onely.

Who comes here? what newes Borachio?

Enter Borachio.

Bor. I came yonder from a great supper, the Prince your brother is royally entertained by Leonato, and I can giue you intelligence of an intended marriage.

John. Will it serue for any Modell to build mischief on? What is hee for a foole that betrothes-himselfe to vnquietnesse?

Bor. Mary it is your brothers right hand.

John. Who, the most exquisite Claudio?

Bor. Euen he.

John. A proper squier, and wno, and wnc, which way lookes he?

Bor. Mary on Hero, the daughter and Heire of Leonato.

John. A very forward March-chicke, how came you to this?

Bor. Being entertain'd for a perfumer, as I was smoaking a musty roome, comes me the Prince and Claudio, hand in hand in sad conference. I whipt behind the Arras, and there heard it agreed vpon, that the Prince should wooe Hero for himselfe, and hauing obtain'd her, giue her to Count Claudio.

John. Come, come, let vs thither, this may proue food to my displeasure, that young start-up hath all the glorie of my ouerthrow. if I can crosse him any way, I blesse my selfe every way, you are both sure, and will assist mee?

Conr. To the death my Lord.

John. Let vs to the great supper, their cheere is the greater than I am subdued, would the Cooke were of my minde shall we goe proue whats to be done?

Bor. Wee'll wait vpon your Lordship.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Leonato, his brother, his wife, Hero his daughter, and Beatrice his neece, and a kinsman.

Leonato. Was not Count John here at supper?

Brother. I saw him not.

Beatrice. How tartly that Gentleman lookes, I neuer can see him, but I am heart-burn'd an howre after.

Hero. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

Beatrice. Hee were an excellent man that were made iust in the mid-way betweene him and Benedicke, the one is too like an image and saies nothing, and the other too like my Ladies eldest sonne, euermore ratling.

Leon. Then halfe sighlor Benedicke's tongue in Count John's mouth, and halfe Count John's melancholy in Sighnor Benedicke's face.

Beat. With a good legge, and a good foot vnckle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would winne any woman in the world, if he could get her good will.

Leon. By my troth Neece, thou wilt neuer get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

Brother. Infanth shee's too curst.

Beat. Too curst is more then curst, I shall lessen Gods sending that way. for it is said, God sends a curst Cow short hornes, but to a Cow too curst he sends none.

Leon. So, by being too curst, God will send you no hornes.

Beat. Iust, if he send me no husband, for the which blessing, I am at him vpon my knees euery morning and euening: Lord, I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face, I had rather lie in the woollen.

Leonato. You may light vpon a husband that bath no beard.

Beatrice. What should I doe with him? dresse him in my apparell, and make him my waiting gentilewoman? he that hath a beard, is more then a youth. and he that hath no beard, is lesse then a man: and hee that is more then a youth, is not for mee, and he that is lesse then a man, I am not for him. therefore I will euen take sixepence in earnest of the Berrord, and leade his Apes into hell.

Leon. Well then, goe you into hell.

Beat. No, but to the gate, and there will the Deuill meete mee like an old Cuckold with hornes on his head, and say, get you to heauen Beatrice, get you to heauen, heere's no place for you maids, so deliuer I vp my Apes, and away to S Peter: for the heauens, hee shewes mee where the Batchellers sit, and there liue wee as merry as the day is long.

Brother. Well neece, I trust you will be rul'd by your father.

Beatrice. Yes faith, it is my cosens dutie to make curtsie, and say, as it please you. but yet for all that cosin, let him be a handsome fellow, or else make an other cursie, and say, father, as it please me.

Leonato. Well neece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beatrice. Not till God make men of some other metall then earth, would it not grieve a woman to be ouermastred with a peece of valiant dust? to make account of her life to a clod of walward marle? no vnckle, ile none. Adams sonnes are my brethren, and truly I hold it a sinne to match in my kinned.

Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you, if the Prince doe solicit you in that kinde, you know your answer.

Beatrice. The fault will be in the musicke, cosin, if you be not wooed in good time. if the Prince bee too important, tell him there is measure in euery thing, & so dance out the answer, for heare me Hero, wooing, wedding, & repenting, is as a Scotch ijgge, a measure, and a cinquepace: the first suite is hot and hasty like a Scotch ijgge (and full as fantastical) the wedding manerly moditt, (as a measure) full of state & aunchentry, and then comes repentance, and with his had legs falls into the cinquepace faster and faster, till he sinkes into his graue.

Leonato.

Leonata Cofin you apprehend paffing fhrewdly
Beatrice I haue a good eye vntle, I can fee a Church
 by daylight
Leon. The reuelers are entring brother, make good roomc.

Enter Prince, Pedro, Claudio, and Benedicke, and Balihafar,
or dumbe John, Maskers with a drum.

Pedro Lady, will you walke about with your friend?
Hero So you walke loftly, and looke sweetly, and fay nothing, I am yours for the walke, and epecially when I walke away.

Pedro With me in your company.

Hero. I may fay fo when I please

Pedro And when please you to fay fo?

Hero. When I like your fauour, for God defend the Lute fhould be like the cafe.

Pedro My vifor is Philemons rooffe, within the houfe is Loue.

Hero. Why then your vifor fhould be thatcht.

Pedro. Speake low if you fpeake Loue.

Ene. Well, I would you did like me

Mar. So would not I for your owne fake, for I haue manie ill qualities

Bene. Which is one?

Mar. I fay my prayers aloud.

Bene. I loue you the better, the hearers may cry Amen.

Mar. God natch me with a good dauncer.

Bolt. Amen

Mar. And God keepe him out of my fight when the daunce is done answer Clarke

Bolt. No more words the Clarke is answered.

Urfula. I know you well enough, you are Signior An- thonio

Anth. At a word, I am not.

Urfula. I know you by the wagling of your head.

Anth. To tell you true, I counterfet him.

Urfu. You could neuer doe him fo ill well, vnleffe
 you were the very man here s his dy hand vp & down, you are he, you are he

Anth. At a word I am not.

Urfula. Come, come, doe you thinke I doe not know you by your excellent wit? can vertue hide it felfe? goe to, mummie, you are he, graces will appeare, and there s an end.

Beat. Will you not tell me who told you fo?

Bene. No, you fhall pardon me.

Beat. Nor will you not tell me who you are?

Bened. Not now.

Beat. That I was disdainfull, and that I had my good wit out of the hundred merry tales: well, this was Signior Benedicke that faid fo.

Bene. What's he?

Beat. I am fure you know him well enough

Bene. Not I, belecue me.

Beat. Did he neuer make you laugh?

Bene. I pray you what is he?

Beat. Why he is the Princes seafter, a very dull foole, onely his guilt is, in deuifing impossible flanders, none but Libertines delight in him, and the commendation is not in his witte, but in his villanie, for hee both pleafeth men and angers them, and then they laugh at him, and beat him. I am fure he is in the Fleet, I would he had boorded me.

Bene. When I know the Gentleman, Ile tell him what you fay.

Beat. Do, do, hee'l but breake a comparifon or two on me, which peradenture (not markt, or not laugh'd at) strikes him into melancholly, and then there's a Partridge wing faued, for the foole will eate no fupper that night. We muft follow the Leaders.

Bene. In euery good thing.

Bea. Nay, if they leade to any ill, I will leaue them at the next turning. Exeunt

Muficke for the dance

John. Sure my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath withdrawne her rather to breake with him about it. the Ladies follow her, and but one vifor remaines

Borachio. And that is Claudio, I know him by his bearing

John. Are not you signior Benedicke?

Clau. You know me well, I am hee.

John. Signior, you are verie deere my Brother in his loue, he is enamor'd on Hero, I pray you difswade him from her, fhe is no equall for his birth you may do the part of an honeft man in it

Claudio. How know you he loues her?

John. I heard him fwear his affection,

For So did I too, and he swore he would marrie her to night.

John. Come, let vs to the banquet. Ex. manet Clau.

Clau. Thus anfwere I in name of Benedicke,
 But heare thefe ill newes with the cares of Claudio.

'Tis certaine fo, the Prince woes for himfelfe
 Friendship is conftant in all other things,
 Saue in the Office and affaires of loue
 Therefore all hearts in loue vfe their owne tongues.

Let euerie eye negotiate for it felfe,
 And truft no Agent for beautie is a witch,
 Againft whose charmes, faith melteth into blood :
 This is an accident of hourelly prooffe,
 Which I miftrufte not Farewell therefore Hero.

Enter Benedicke.

Bene. Count Claudio

Clau. Yea, t'is fime. d:

Bene. Come, will you go with me?

Clau. Whither?

Bene. Euen to the next Willow, about your own bu-finesse, Count What fafhion will you weare the Gara- land off? About your necke, like an Vlurers chaine? Or vnder your arme, like a Lieutenants fcarfe? You muft weare it one way, for the Prince hath got your Hero.

Clau. I wifh him ioy of her.

Bene. Why that's fpoken like an honeft Drouier, fo they fet Bullockes but did you thinke the Prince would haue ferued you thus?

Clau. I pray you leaue me.

Bene. Ho now you ftrike like the blindman, 'twas the boy that ftole your meate, and you'l beat the poft.

Clau. If it will not be, Ile leaue you

Exit.

Bene. Alas poore hurt fowle, now will he creepe into fedges. But that my Ladie Beatrice fhould know me, & not know me the Princes foole? Hal? It may be I goe vnder that title, becaufe I am merrie yea but fo I am apt to do my felfe wrong I am not fo reputed, 'tis the bafe (though bitter) difpofition of Beatrice, that putt's the world into her perfon, and fo giues me out. well, Ile be reuenged as I may.

Enter the Prince.

Pedro. Now Signior, where's the Count, did you fee him?

Bene

Bene. Froth my Lord, I haue played the part of Lady Fame, I found him heere as melancholy as a Lodge in a Warren, I told him, and I thinke, told him true, that your grace had got the will of this young Lady, and I offered him my company to a willow tree, either to make him a garland, as being forsaken, or to binde him a rod, as being worthy to be whipt.

Pedro. To be whipt, what's his fault?

Bene. The flat transgression of a Schoole-boy, who being ouer-ioyed with finding a birds nest, shewes it his companion, and he steals it.

Pedro. Wilt thou make a trust, a transgression? the transgression is in the stealer.

Bene. Yet it had not bene amisse the rod had bene made, and the garland too, for the garland he might haue worne himselfe, and the rod hee might haue bestowed on you, who (as I take it) haue stolne his birds nest.

Pedro. I will but teach them to sing, and restore them to the owner

Bene. If their singing answer your saying by my faith you say honestly.

Pedro. The Lady Beatrice hath a quarrell to you, the Gentleman that daunt with her, told her shier is much wrong'd by you.

Beat. O she misusde me past the indurance of a block. an oake but with one greene leafe on it, would haue answered her my very viior began to assume life, and scold with her: shee told mee, not thinking I had bene my selfe, that I was the Princes lefter, and that I was duller then a great thaw, huddling iest vpon iest, with such impossible conueiance vpon me, that I stood like a man at a marke, with a whole army shooting at me: shee speakes poynnyards, and euery word stabbes if her breath were as terrible as terminations, there were no liuing neere her, she would infect to the north starre I would not marry her, though she were indowed with all that Adams had left him before he transgreft, she would haue made Hercules haue turnd spit, yea, and haue cleft his club to make the fire too come like not of her, you shall finde her the infernall Are in good apparell I would to God some scholler would coniuere her, for certainly while she is heere, a man may liue as quiet in hell, as in a sanctuary, and people sinne vpon purpose, because they would goe thither, to indeed all disquiet, horror, and perturbation followes her.

Enter Claudio and Beatrice, Leonato, Hero

Pedro. Looke heere she comes

Bene. Will your Grace command mee any seruice to the worlds end? I will goe on the slightest errand now to the Antypodes that you can deuise to send me on. I will fetch you a tooth-picker now from the furthest inch of Asia. bring you the length of Prefter Johns foot fetch you a hayre off the great Chams beard doe you any embassage to the Pigmies, rather then hould three words conference, with this Harpy: you haue no employment for me?

Pedro. None, but to desire your good company.

Bene. O God sir, heeres a dish I loue not, I cannot indure this Lady tongue

Exit

Pedro. Come Lady, come, you haue lost the heart of Signior Benedicke

Beat. Indeed my Lord, hee lent it me a while, and I gaue him vse for it, a double heart for a single one, marry once before he won it of mee, with false dice, therefore your Grace may well say I haue lost it.

Pedro. You haue put him downe Lady, you haue put him downe.

Beat. So I would not he should do me, my Lord, lest I should prooue the mother of fooles: I haue brought Count Claudio, whom you sent me to seeke.

Pedro. Why how now Count, wherfore are you sad?

Claud. Not sad my Lord

Pedro. How then? sicke?

Claud. Neither, my Lord.

Beat. The Count is neither sad, nor sicke, nor merry, nor well but ciuill Count, ciuill as an Orange, and something of a iealous complexion

Pedro. Ifaith Lady, I thinke your blazon to be true, though Ile besworne, if hee be so, his conceit is false: heere Claudio, I haue wooed in thy name, and faire Hero is won, I haue broke with her father, and his good will obtained, name the day of marriage, and God giue thee ioy.

Leona. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes his grace hath made the match, & all grace say, Amen to it

Beat. Speake Count, tis your Qu.

Claud. Silence is the perfectest Herauld of ioy, I were but little happy if I could say, how much? Lady, as you are mine, I am yours, I giue away my selfe for you, and doat vpon the exchange.

Beat. Speake cofin, or (if you cannot) stop his mouth with a kisse, and let not him speake neither.

Pedro. Ifaith Lady you haue a merry heart.

Beat. Yea my Lord I thanke it, poore foole it keepest on the windy side of Care, my coosin tells him in his care that he is in my heart.

Claud. And so the dpth coosin

Beat. Good Lord for alliance: thus goes euery one to the world but I, and I am sun-burn'd, I may sit in a corner and cry, heigh ho for a husband.

Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

Beat. I would rather haue one of your fathers getting: hath your Grace ne're a brother like you? your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.

Prince. Will you haue me? Lady.

Beat. No, my Lord, vnlesse I might haue another for working-daies, your Grace is too costly to weare euery day but I beseech your Grace pardon mee, I was borne to speake all mirth, and no matter.

Prince. Your silence most offends me, and to be merry, best becomes you, for out of question, you were born in a merry howre.

Beat. No sure my Lord, my Mother cried, but then there was a starre daunt, and vnder that was I borne: co-fins God giue you ioy

Leonato. Neece, will you looke to those rhings I told you of?

Beat. I cry you mercy Vncle, by your Graces pardon.

Exit Beatrice.

Prince. By my troth a pleasant spirited Lady.

Leon. There's little of the melancholy element in her my Lord, she is neuer sad, but when she sleepes, and not euer sad then: for I haue heard my daughter say, she hath often dreamt of vnhappinesse, and wakt her selfe with laughing.

Pedro. Shee cannot indure to heare tell of a husband.

Leonato. O, by no meanes, she mocks all her wooers out of suite.

Prince. She were an excellent wife for Benedick,

Leonato. O Lord, my Lord, if they were but a weeke married,

married, they would take themselves madde

Prince. Counte Claudio, when meane you to goe to Church?

Claudio. To morrow my Lord, Time goes on cruciies, till Loue haue all his rites

Leonato. Not till monday, my deare sonne, which is hence a iust seuen night, and a time too briefe too, to haue all things answer minde.

Prince. Come, you shake the head at so long a breaching, but I warrant thee Claudio, the time shall not goe dully by vs, I will in the interim, vndertake one of Hercules labors, which is, to bring Signior Benedicke and the Lady Beatrice into a mountaine of affection, th'one with th'other, I would faine haue it a match, and I doubt not but to fashion it, if you three will but minister such assistance as I shall giue you direction

Leonato. My Lord, I am for you, though it cost mee ten nightes watching.

Claudio. And I my Lord.

Prince. And you to gentle Hero?

Hero. I will doe any modest office, my Lord, to helpe my cosin to a good husband.

Prince. And Benedicke is not the vnhopefullest husband that I know. thus farre can I praise him, hee is of a noble straine, of approued valour, and confirm'd honesty, I will teach you how to humour your cosin, that shee shall fall in loue with Benedicke, and I, with your two helpes, will so practise on Benedicke, that in despite of his quicke wit, and his queasie stomacke, hee shall fall in loue with Beatrice: if wee can doe this, Cupid is no longer an Archer, his glory shall be ours, for wee are the onely loue-gods, goe in with me, and I will tell you my drift. Exit.

Enter Iohn and Borachio.

Iohn. It is so, the Count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Borachio. Yea my Lord, but I can crosse it.

Iohn. Any barre, any crosse, any impediment, will be medicinable to me, I am sicke in displeasure to him, and whatsoeuer comes athwart his affection, ranges euently with mine, how canst thou crosse this marriage?

Borachio. Not honestly my Lord, but so couertly, that no dishonesty shall appeare in me.

Iohn. Shew me breefely how.

Borachio. I shew I told your Lordship a yere since, how much I am in the fauour of Margaret, the waiting gentlewoman to Hero.

Iohn. I remember.

Borachio. I can at any vnseasonable instant of the night, appoint her to look out at her Ladies chamber window.

Iohn. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Borachio. The payson of that lies in you to temper, goe you to the Prince your brother, spare not to tell him, that hee hath wronged his Honor in marrying the renowned Claudio, whose estimation do you mightily hold vp, to a contaminated stale, such a one as Hero.

Iohn. What prooffe shall I make of that?

Borachio. Prooffe enough, to misfise the Prince, to vex Claudio, to vndoe Hero, and kill Leonato, looke you for any other issue?

Iohn. Oncely to despight them, I will endeavour any thing.

Borachio. Goe then, finde me a sweete howrt, to draw on Pedro and the Count Claudio alone, tell them that you know that Hero loues me, intend a kinde of zeale both to the Prince and Claudio (as in a lout of your brothers honor who hath made this match) and his friends reputation, who is thus like to be cosen'd with the semblance of a maid, that you haue discover'd thus. they will scarcely beleue this without triall offer them instances which shall beare no lesse likelihood, than to see mee at her chamber window, heare me call Margaret, Hero; heare Margaret terme me Claudio, and bring them to see this the very night before the intended wedding, for in the meane time, I will so fashion the matter, that Hero shall be absent, and there shall appeare such seeming truths of Hero's disloyaltie, that ielousie shall be cal'd assurance, and all the preparation overthrowne.

Iohn. Grow this to what aduers effect it can, I will put it in practise be cunning in the working this, and thy fee is a thousand ducates

Borachio. Bethou constant in the accusation, and my cunning shall not shame me.

Iohn. I will presentlie goe learne their day of marriage. Exit.

Enter Benedicke alone.

Bene. Boy.

Boy Signior.

Bene. In my chamber window lies a booke, bring it hither to me in the orchard.

Boy. I am heere already sir.

Exit

Bene. I know that, but I would haue thee hence, and heere againe. I doe much wonder, that one man seeing how much another man is a foole, when hee dedicates his behauiours to loue, will after hee hath laugh't at such shallow follies in others, become the argument of his owne scorne, by falling in loue, & such a man is Claudio, I haue known when there was no musick with him but the drum and the fife, and now had hee rather heare the taber and the pipe: I haue knowne when he would haue walkt ten mile a foot, to see a good armor, and now will he lye ten nightes awake caruing the fashion of a new dublet: he was wont to speake plaine, & to the purpose (like an honest man & a souldier) and now is he cur'd orthography, his words are a very fantasticall banquet, iust so many strange dishes may I be so conuerted, & see vith these eyes? I can not tell, I thinke not: I will not bee sworne, but loue may transforme me to an oyster, but he take my oath on it, till he haue made an oyster of me, he shall neuer make me such a foole. one v oman is faire, yet I am well: another is wise, yet I am well: another vertuous, yet I am well: but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace: rich shee shall be, that's certaine: wise, or she none: vertuous, or she neuer cheapen her faire, or she neuer looke on her: milde, or come not neere me: Noble, or not for an Angell: of good discourse: an excellent Musitian, and her haire shall be of what colour it please God, hah! the Prince and Monsieur Loue, I will hide me in the Arbor.

Enter Prince, Leonato, Claudio, and Iachimo.

Prince. Come, shall we heare this musicke?

Claudio. Yea my good Lord: how still the turning is, As hush't on purpose to grace harmonie

Prince. See you where Benedicke hath hid himselfe:

Claudio. O very well my Lord: the musick ended, Wee'll sit the lide-fox with a penny worth.

Prince. Come Balthasar, wee'll heare that song againe

Balthasar. O good my Lord, take not so bad a voyce, To slander musick any more then once.

Prince. It is the witness still of excellency,

To slander Musicke any more then once.

Prince. It is the witnesse still of excellencie,
To put a strange face on his owne perfection,
I pray thee sing, and let me wooe no more

Balth. Because you talke of wooing, I will sing,
Since many a wooer doth commence his suit,
To her he thinks not worthy, yet he wooes,
Yet will he sweare he loues.

Prince. Nay pray thee come,
Or if thou wilt hold longer argument,
Doe it in notes.

Balth. Note this before my notes,
Theres not a note of mine that's worth the noting.

Prince. Why these are very crotchets that he speaks,
Note notes forfooth, and nothing

Bene. Now diuine arie, now is his soule rauisht, is it not strange that sheepes guts should hale soules out of mens bodies? well, a hoine for my money when all's done.

The Song

*Sigh no more Ladies, sigh no more,
Men were deceiuers euer,
One foot in Sea, and one on Shore,
To one thing constant neuer,
Then sigh not so, but let them goe,
And be you blithe and bonnie,
Conuerting all your sounds of woe,
Into hey nonny nonny.*

*Sing no more ditties, sing no moe,
Of dumps so dull and heavy,
The fraud of men were euer so,
Since summer first was leauy,
Then sigh not so, &c.*

Prince. By my troin a good song.

Balth. And an ill singer, my Lord

Prince. Ha, no, no faith, thou singst well enough for a shute.

Ben. And he had been a dog that should haue howld thus, they would haue hang'd him, and I pray God his bad voyce bode no mischief, I had as lief haue heard the night-rauen, come what plague could haue come after it.

Prince. Yea marry, dost thou heare Balthasar? I pray thee get vs some excellent musick for to-morrow night
we would haue it at the Lady Heroes chamber window.

Balth. The best I can, my Lord. Exit Balthasar

Prince. Do so, farewell Come hither Leonato, what was it you told me of to day, that your Niece Beatrice was in loue with signior Benedicke?

Clau. O I, stalker on, stalker on, the foule fits I did neuer thinke that Lady would haue loued any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither, but most wonderful, that she should so dote on Signior Benedicke, whom shee hath in all outward behauiours seemed euer to abhorre.

Bene. Is't possible? fits the winde in that corner?

Leo. By my troth my Lord, I cannot tell what to thinke of it, but that she loues him with an intraged affection, it is past the infinite of thought.

Prince. May be she doth but counterfeit.

Clau. Faith like enough.

Leon. O God! counterfeit? there was neuer counterfeit of passion came so neere the life of passion as she dis-couers it

Prince. Why what effects of passion shewes she?

Clau. Bait the hooke well, this fish will bite.

Leon. What effects my Lord? shee will sit you, you heard my daughter tell you how.

Clau. She did indeed.

Prim. How, how I pray you? you amaze me, I would haue thought her spirit had beene inuincible against all assaults of affection.

Leo. I would haue sworne it had, my Lord, especially against Benedicke.

Bene. I should thinke this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it - knauery cannot sure hide himselfe in such reuerence.

Clau. He hath tane th' infection, hold it vp.

Prince. Hath shee made her affection known to Benedicke?

Leonato. No, and sweares she neuer will, that's her torment.

Clau. 'Tis true indeed, so your daughter saies. shall
I, saies shee, that haue so oft encountred him with scorne, write to him that I loue him?

Leo. This saies shee now when shee is beginning to write to him, for shee'll be vp twenty times a night, and there will she sit in her mocke, till she haue writ a sheet of paper my daughter tells vs all.

Clau. Now you talke of a sheet of paper, I remember a pretty iest your daughter told vs of.

Leon. O when she had writ it, & was reading it ouer,
she found Benedicke and Beatrice betweene the sheete.

Clau. That

Leon. O she tore the letter into a thousand halfpence, raild at her self that she should be so immodest to write,
to one that shee knew would flout her - I measure him,
saies she, by my owne spirit, for I should flout him if hee writ to mee, yea though I loue him, I should.

Clau. Then downe vpon her knees she falls, weepes, sobs, beates her heart, teares her hayre, praies, curses, O
sweet Benedicke, God giue me patience.

Leon. She doth indeed, my daughter saies so, and the extasie hath so much ouerborne her, that my daughter is sometime asfeard she will doe a desperate out-rage to her selfe, it is very true.

Prim. It were good that Benedicke knew of it by some other, if she will not discover it

Clau. To what end? he would but make a sport of it, and torment the poore Lady worse.

Prim. And he should, it were an almes to hang him, shee's an excellent sweet Lady, and (out of all suspicion,)
she is vertuous

Claudio. And she is exceeding wise.

Prince. In euery thing, but in louing Benedicke.

Leon. O my Lord, wiledome and bloud combating in so tender a body, we haue ten proofes to one, that bloud hath the victory, I am sorry for her, as I haue iust cause, being her Vncle, and her Guardian.

Prince. I would shee had bestowed this dotage on mee, I would haue daft all other respects, and made her halfe my selfe I pray you tell Benedicke of it, and heare what he will say.

Leon. Were it good thinke you?

Clau. Hero thinks surely she wil die, for she saies she will die, if hee loue her not, and shee will die ere shee make her loue knowne, and she will die if hee wooe her, rather than shee will bate one breath of her accustomed crossienesse.

Prim. She doth well, if she should make tender of her
loue,

loue, 'tis very possible hee'l scorne it, for the man (as you know all) hath a contemptible spirit.

Clau. He is a very proper man

Prim. He hath indeed a good outward happines

Clau. Fore God, and in my minde very wise.

Prim. He doth indeed shew some sparkes that are like wit.

Leon. And I take him to be valiant.

Prim. As Hektor, I assure you, and in the managing of quarrels you may see hee is wise, for either hee auoydes them with great discretion, or vndertakes them with a Christian-like feare.

Leon. If hee doe feare God, a must necessarilie keepe peace, if hee breake the peace, hee ought to enter into a quarrell with feare and trembling

Prim. And so will he doe, for the man doth fear God, howsoeuer it seemes not in him, by some large ieafts hee will make well, I am sorry for your niece, shall we goe see Benedicke, and tell him of her loue.

Clau. Neuer tell him, my Lord, let her weare it out with good counsell

Leon. Nay that s impossible, she may weare her heart out first.

Prim. Well, we will heare further of it by your daughter, let it coole the while, I loue Benedicke well, and I could wish he would modestly examme himselfe, to see how much he is vnworthy to haue so good a Lady.

Leon. My Lord, will you walke dinner is ready.

Clau. If he do not doat on her vpon this, I wil neuer trust my expectation.

Prim. Let there be the same Net spread for her, and that must your daughter and her gentlewoman carry, the sport will be, when they hold one an opinion of anothers dotage, and no such matter, that's the Scene that I would see, which will be meereley a dumbe shew. let vs send her to call him into dinner. Exeunt.

Bene. This can be no trick, the conference was sadly borne, they haue the truth of this from Hero, they seeme to pittie the Lady. it seemes her affections haue the full bent loue me? why it must be requited I heare how I am censur'd, they say I will beare my selfe proudly, if I perceiue the loue come from her they say too, that she will rather die than giue any signe of affection I did neuer thinke to marry, I must not seeme proud, happy are they that heare their detractions, and can put them to mending. they say the Lady is faire, 'tis a truth, I can beare them witnesse and vertuous, tis so, I cannot reprocue it, and wise, but for louing me, by my troth it is no addition to her witte, nor no great argument of her folly; for I wil be horribly in loue with her, I may chance haue some odde quirkes and remnants of witte broken on mee, because I haue rail'd so long against marriage. but doth not the appetite alter? a man loues the meat in his youth, that he cannot indure in his age Shall quips and sentences, and these paper bullets of the braine awe a man from the careere of his humour? No, the world must be peopled When I said I would die a batcheler, I did not think I should liue till I were married, here comes Beatrice. by this day, shee's a faire Lady, I doe spie some markes of loue in her.

Enter Beatrice

Beat. Against my wil I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

Bene. Faire Beatrice, I thanke you for your paines.

Beat. I tooke no more paines for those thankes, then you take paines to thanke me, if it had been painefull, I would not haue come.

Bene. You take pleasure then in the message

Beat. Yea iust so much as you may take vpon a kniues point, and choake a daw withall: you haue no stomacke signior, fare you well. Exit

Bene. Ha, against my will I am sent to bid you come into dinner there's a double meaning in that I tooke no more paines for those thankes then you tooke paines to thanke me, that's as much as to say, any paines that I take for you is as easie as thankes if I do not take pittie of her I am a villaine, if I doe not loue her I am a Jew, I will goe get her picture. Exit.

Actus Tertius.

Enter Hero and two Gentlemen, Margaret, and Vrfula.

Hero. Good Margaret runne thee to the parlour, There shalt thou finde my Colin Beatrice, Proposing with the Prince and Claudio, Whisper her eare, and tell her I and Vrfula, Walke in the Orchard, and our whole discourse Is all of her, say that thou over-heardst vs, And bid her steale into the pleached bower, Where hony-suckles ripened by the sunne, Forbid the sunne to enter like fauourites, Made proud by Princes, that aduance their pride, Against that power that bred it, there will she hide her, To listen our purpose, this is thy office, Beare thee well in it, and leaue vs alone.

Marg. Ile make her come I warrant you presently.

Hero. Now Vrfula, when Beatrice doth come, As we do trace this alley vp and downe, Our talke must onely be of Benedicke, When I doe name him, let it be thy part, To praise him more then euer man did merit, My talke to thee must be how Benedicke Is sicke in loue with Beatrice of this master, Is little Cupids crafty arrow made, That onely wounds by heare-say now begin,

Enter Beatrice

For looke where Beatrice like a Lapwing runs Close by the ground, to heare our conference.

Vrs. The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish Cut with her golden ores the silver streame, And greedily deuoure the treacherous baite: So angle we for Beatrice, who euen now, Is couched in the wood-bine courtiure, Feare you not my part of the Dialogue.

Her. Then go we neare her that her eare loofe nothing, Of the false sweete baite that we lay for it.

No truly Vrfula, she is too disdainfull, I know her spirits are as coy and wilde, As Haggards of the rocke

Vrfula. But are you sure, That Benedicke loues Beatrice so intirely?

Her. So saies the Prince, and my new trothed Lord.

Vrs. And did they bid you tell her of it, Madam?

Her. They did intreate me to acquaint her of it, But I perswaded them, if they lou'd Benedicke,

K

To

To wish him wrastle with affection,
And neuer to let Beatrice know of it.

Viola. Why did you so, doth not the Gentleman
Deserue as full as fortunate a bed,
As euer Beatrice shall couch vpon?

Hero. O God of loue! I know he doth deserue,
As much as may be yeelded to a man
But Nature neuer fram'd a womans heart,
Ot powder stufte then that of Beatrice:
Disdaine and Scorne ride sparkling in her eyes,
Mis-prizing what they looke on, and her wit
Values it selfe so highly, that to her
All matter else seemes weake she cannot loue,
Nor take no shape nor proiect of affection,
Shée is so selfe indeared

Viola. Sure I thinke so,
And therefore certainly it were not good
She knew his loue, lest she make sport at it.

Hero. Why you speake true h, I neuer yet saw man,
How wise, how noble, yong, how rarely featur'd.
But she would spell him backe ward if taire fic'd,
She would sweare the gentleman should be her sister
If blacke, why Nature drawing of an iticke,
Made a foule blot, it tall, a launce ill headed:
If low, an agot very villdike cur.

If speaking, why a vane blowne with all windes
If silent, why a blocke moued with none
So turnes she euery man the wrong side out,
And neuer giues to Truth and Vertue, that
Which simplenesse and merit purchaseth.

Viola. Sure, sure, such carping is not commendable.

Hero. No, not to be so odde, and from all fashions,
As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable,
But who dare tell her so? if I should speake,
She would mocke me into ayre, O she would laugh me
Out of my selfe, presse me to death with wit,
Therefore let Benedicke like couered fire,
Consume away in sighes, waste inwardly:
It were a better death, to die with mockes,
Which is as bad as die with tickling.

Viola. Yet tell her of it heere what she will say.

Hero. No, rather I will goe to Benedicke,
And counsaile him to fight against his passion,
And truly he deuise some honest slanders,
To staine my cosin with, one doth not know,
How much an ill word may impposon liking.

Viola. O doe not doe your cosin such a wrong,
She cannot be so much without true iudgement,
Hauing so swift and excellent a wit
As she is priske to haue, as to refuse
So rare a Gentleman as signior Benedicke.

Hero. He is the onely man of Italy,
Alwaies excepted, my deere  Claudio.

Viola. I pry you be not angry with me, Madame,
Speaking my fancy signior Benedicke,
For shipe, for bearing argument and valour,
Goes for most in report through Italy

Hero. Indeed he hath an excellent good name.

Viola. His excellencie did earne it ere he had it:
When are you married Madame?

Hero. Why euerie day to morrow, come goe in,
He shew thee some attires, and haue thy counsell,
Which is the best to furnish me to morrow.

Viola. Shée's tane I warrant you,
We haue caught her Madame?

Hero. If it proue so, then louing goes by haps,

Some Cupid kills with arrowes, some with traps Exit
Beat. What fire is in mine eares? can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorne so much?
Contempt, farewell, and maiden pride, adieu,
No glory liues behinde the backe of such.
And Benedicke, loue on, I will requite thee,
Taming my wilde heart to thy louing hand:
If thou dost loue, my kindenesse shall incite thee
To binde our loues vp in a holy band.
For others say thou dost deserue, and I
Beleeue it better then reportingly. Exit.

Enter Prince, Claudio, Benedicke, and Leonato.

Prince. I doe but stay till your marriage be consummate, and then go I toward Arragon.

Claudio. He bring you thither my Lord, if you I vouchsafe me.

Prince. Nay, that would be as great a soyle in the new glosse of your marriage, as to shew a childe his new coat and forbid him to weare it, I will onely bee bold with Benedicke for his companie, for from the crowne of his head, to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth, he hath twice or thrice cut Cupids bow-string, and the little hang-man dare not shoot at him, he hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper, for what his heart thinks,
his tongue speakes

Benedicke. Gallants, I am not as I haue bin.

Leonato. So say I, methinks you are sadder.

Claudio. I hope he be in loue

Prince. Hang him in truant, there's no true drop of blood in him to be truly toucht with loue if he be sad, he wants money.

Benedicke. I haue the tooth-ach.

Prince. Draw it.

Benedicke. Hang it

Claudio. You must hang it first and draw it afterwards.

Prince. What? sigh for the tooth-ach.

Leonato. Where is but a humour or a worme

Benedicke. Well, euery one cannot master a griefe, but hee that has it

Claudio. Yet say I, he is in loue.

Prince. There is no appearence of fancie in him, vnlesse it be a fancy that he hath no strange disguises, as to bee a Dutchman to day, a Frenchman to morrow vnlesse hee haue a fancy to this foolery, as it appeares hee hath, hee is no foole for fancy, as you would haue it to appeare he is.

Claudio. If he be not in loue with some woman, there is no beleeuing old signes, a brushes his hat a mornning.
What should that bode?

Prince. Hath any man seene him at the Barbers?

Claudio. No, but the Barbers man hath beene seene with him, and the olde ornament of his cheeke hath alreadie
stufte tennis balls

Leonato. Indeed he lookes yonger than hee did, by the losse of a beard.

Prince. Nay a rubs himselfe with Ciuit, can you smell him out by that?

Claudio. That's as much as to say, the sweet youth's in
loue.

Prince. The gretest note of it is his melancholy

Claudio. And when was he wont to wash his face?

Prince. Yea, or to paint himselfe? for the which I heare what they say of him.

Claudio. Nay, but his iesting spirit, which is now crept into a lute-string, and now govern'd by stops.

Prince.

Prin. Indeed that tels a heauy tale for him: conclude, he is in loue.

Clau. Nay, but I know who loues him.

Prince That would I know too, I warrant one that knowes him not.

Clau. Yes, and his ill conditions, and in despite of all, dies for him.

Prin. Shee shall be buried with her face vpwards.

Bene Yet is this no charme for the tooth-ake, old signior, walke aside with mee, I haue studied eight or nine wise words to speake to you, which these hobby-horses must not heare.

Prin. For my life to breake with him about Beatrice.

Clau. 'Tis euen so, Hero and Margaret haue by this played their parts with Beatrice, and then the two Beares will not bite one another when they meete

Enter John the Bastard.

Bast. My Lord and brother, God saue you.

Prin. Good den brother

Bast. If your leasure seru'd, I would speake with you

Prin. In priuate?

Bast. If it please you, yet Count Claudio may heare, for what I would speake of, concerns him

Prin. What's the matter?

Bast. Meanes your Lordship to be married to morrow?

Prin. You know he does.

Bast. I know not that when he knowes what I know

Clau. If there be any impediment, I pray you discover it.

Bast. You may thinke I loue you not, let that appeare hereafter, and ayne better at me by that I now will manifest, for my brother (I thinke, he holds you well, and in dearenesse of heart) hath holpe to effect your ensuing marriage: surely sure ill spent, and labour ill bestowed.

Prin. Why, what's the matter?

Bastard I came hither to tell you, and circumstances shortned, (for she hath beene too long a talking of) the Lady is disloyall.

Clau. Who Hero?

Bast. Euen shee, Leonatoes Hero, your Hero, every mans Hero.

Clau. Disloyall?

Bast. The word is too good to paint out her wickednesse, I could say she were worse, thinke you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it. wonder not till further warrant: goe but with mee to night, you shall see her chamber window entred, euen the night before her wedding day, if you loue her, then to morrow wed her. But it would better fit your honour to change your minde.

Clau. May this be so?

Prin. I will not thinke it.

Bast. If you dare not trust that you see, confesse not that you know: if you will follow mee, I will shew you enough, and when you haue seene more, & heard more, proceed accordingly.

Clau. If I see any thing to night, why I should not marry her to morrow in the congregation, where I shold wedde, there will I shame her.

Prin. And as I wooed for thee to obtaine her, I will ioyne with thee to disgrace her.

Bast. I will disparage her no farther, till you are my witnesses, beare it coldly but till night, and let the issue shew it selfe.

Prin. O day vnwardly turned!

Clau. O mischiefe strangelic thwarting!

Bastard O plague right well preuented! so will you say, when you haue seene the sequelle

Exit.

Enter Dogbery and his comparterres with the watch.

Dog. Are you good men and true?

Verg. Yea, or else it were pittie but they should suffer saluation body and soule.

Dogb. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should haue any allegiance in them, being chosen for the Princes watch

Verges. Well, giue them their charge, neighbour Dogbery

Dog. First, who thinke you the most desartlesse man to be Constable?

Watch 1. Hugh Ote-cake sir, or George Sea-coale, for they can write and reade.

Dogb. Come hither neighbour Sea-coale, God hath blest you with a good name. to be a wel-fauoured man, is the gift of Fortune, but to write and reade, comes by Nature.

Watch 2. Both which Master Constable

Dogb. You haue I knew it would be your answer: well, for your fauour sir, why giue God thanks, & make no boast of it, and for your writing and reading, let that appeare when there is no need of such vanity, you are thought heere to be the most senslesse and fit man for the Constable of the watch: therefore beare you the lanthorne: this is your charge: You shall comprehend all vagrom men, you are to bid any man stand in the Princes name.

Watch 2. How if a will not stand?

Dogb. Why then take no note of him, but let him go, and presently call the rest of the Watch together, and thanke God you are ridde of a knaue.

Verges. If he will not stand when he is bidden, hee is none of the Princes subiects.

Dogb. True, and they are to meddle with none but the Princes subiects: you shall also make no noise in the streetes: for, for the Watch to babble and talke, is most tollerable, and not to be indured.

Watch. We will rather sleepe than talke, wee know what belongs to a Watch.

Dog. Why you speake like an ancient and most quiet watchman, for I cannot see how sleeping should offend. only haue a care that your bills be not stolne: well, you are to call at all the Alehouses, and bid them that are drunke get them to bed.

Watch. How if they will not?

Dogb. Why then let them alone till they are sober, if they make you not then the better answer, you may say, they are not the men you tooke them for.

Watch. Well sir.

Dogb. If you meet a theefe, you may suspect him, by vertue of your office, to be no true man: and for such kinde of men, the lesse you meddle or make with them, why the more is for your honesty

Watch. If wee know him to be a theefe, shall we not lay hands on him

Dogb. Truly by your office you may, but I thinke they that touch pitch will be defil'd: the most peaceable way for you, if you doe take a theefe, is, to let him shew himselfe what he is, and steale out of your company

Verg. You haue bin alwaies call'd a mercifull partner.

Dog. Truly I would not hang a dog by my will, much more a man who hath any honestie in him.

Verges If you heare a child crie in the night you must call to the nurse, and bid her still it.

Watch. How if the nurse be asleepe and will not heare vs?

Dog. Why then depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying, for the ewe that will not heare her Lambe when it baes, will neuer answere a calfe when he bleates.

Verges. 'Tis verie true

Dog. This is the end of the charge. you constable are to present the Princes owne person, if you meete the Prince in the night, you may staie him.

Verges. Nay birladie that I thinke a cannot

Dog. Five shillings to one on't with anie man that knowes the Statues, he may staie him, marrie not without the prince be willing, for indeede the watch ought to offend no man, and it is an offence to stay a man against his will.

Verges. Birladie I thinke it be so.

Dog. Ha, ha, ha, well masters good night, and there be anie matter of weight chances, call vp me, keepe your fellows counsailes, and your owne, and good night, coine neighbour

Watch. Well masters, we heare our charge, let vs go sit here vpon the Church bench till two, and then all to bed.

Dog. One word more, honest neighbors I pray you watch about signior Leunatoers doore, for the wedding being there to morrow, there is a great coyle to night, adiew, be vigilant I beseech you Exeunt.

Enter Borachio and Conrade.

Bor. What, Conrade?

Watch. Peace, stir not.

Bor. Conrade I say.

Con. Here man, I am at thy elbow.

Bor. Mas and my elbow itcht, I thought there would a scabbe follow.

Con. I will owe thee an answere for that, and now forward with thy tale

Bor. Stand thee close then vnder this penthouse, for it drissels raine, and I will, like a true drunkard, vtter all to thee.

Watch. Some treason masters, yet stand close

Bor. Therefore know, I haue earned of Don Iohn a thousand Ducates.

Con. Is it possible that anie villanie should be so deare?

Bor. Thou should'st rather aske if it were possible anie villanie should be so rich? for when rich villains haue neede of poore ones, poore ones may make what price they will.

Con. I wonder at it

Bor. That shewes thou art vnconfirm'd, thou knowest that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloake, is nothing to a man

Con. Yes, it is apparell

Bor. I meane the fashion

Con. Yes the fashion is the fashion

Bor. Tush, I may as well say the foole's the foole, but see'st thou not what a deformed theefe this fashion is?

Watch. I know that deformed, a has bin a vile theefe, this vii. yeares, a goes vp and downe like a gentle man - I remember his name.

Bor. Did'st thou not heare some bodie?

Con. No, 'twas the vaine on the house

Bor. See'st thou not (I say) what a deformed theefe this fashion is, how giddily a turnes about all the Hotblouds, betweene foureteene & fūe & thirtie, sometimes fashioning them like Pharaees souldiours in the rechie painting, sometime like god Bels priests in the old Church window, sometime like the shauen Hercules in the smircht worme eaten tapestrie, where his cod-peece seemes as massie as his club.

Con. All this I see, and see that the fashion weares out more apparrell then the man, but art not thou thy selfe giddie with the fashion too that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bor. Not so neither, but know that I haue to night wooed Margaret the Lady Heroes gentle-woman, by the name of Hero, she leanes me out at her mistris chamber-vwindow, bids me a thousand times good night: I tell this tale vildly. I should first tell thee how the Prince Claudio and my Master planted, and placed, and possessed by my Master Don Iohn, saw a far off in the Orchard this amiable incounter.

Con. And thought thy Margaret was Hero?

Bor. Two of them did, the Prince and Claudio, but the diuell my Master knew she was Margaret and partly by his oathes, which first posselt them, partly by the darke night which did deceiue them, but chietely, by my villanie, which did confirme any slander that Don Iohn had made, away went Claudio enraged, i wore hee would meete her as he was appointed next mornning at the Temple, and there, before the whole congregation shame her with vvhath he saw o're night, and send her home againe vwithout a husbaud

Watch. 1 We charge you in the Princes name stand.

Watch. 2 Call vp the night master Constable, vve haue here recourred the most d. igerous peeces of lechery, that euer vvas knowne in the Common-wealth.

Watch. 1. And o. 2 Deformed is one of them, I know him, a vveares alocke.

Conr. Masters, inasters.

Watch. 2. Youle be made bring deformed forth I warrant you,

Conr. Masters, neuer speake, vve charge you, let vs obey you to goe vvith vs

Bor. We are like to proue a goodly commoditie, being taken vp of these mens bils

Conr. A commoditie in question I warrant you, come vveele obey you. Exeunt.

Enter Hero, and Margaret, and Ursula

Hero. Good Ursula wake my cosin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.

Ursu. I will Lady.

Her. And bid her come hither.

Urs. Well.

Mar. Troth I thinke your other rebato were better.

Bero. No pray thee good Meg, Ile vveare this.

Marg. By my troth's not so good, and I warrant your cosin vwill say so.

Bero. My cosin's a foole, and thou art another, ile vveare none but this.

Mar. I like the new ture vwithn excellently, if the haire vvere a thought browner - and your gown's a most rare fashion yfaith, I saw the Dutchesse of Milaines gowne that they praise so.

Bero. O that exceeds they say.

Mar. By my troth's but a night-gowne in respect of yours, cloth a gold and cuts, and lac'd with siluer, set with pearles, downe sleeves, side sleeves, and skirts, round vnderborn with a blewish tinsel, but for a fine queint gracefull and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on't.

Bero. God

Hero God giue mee ioy to weare it, for my heart is exceeding heauy.

Marga. 'Twill be heauier soone, by the waight of a man.

Hero. Fie vpon thee, art not asham'd?

Marg. Of what Lady? of speaking honourably? is not marriage honourable in a beggar? is not your Lord honourable without marriage? I thinke you would haue me say, sauing your reuerence a husband. and bad thin-king doe not wrest true speaking, Ile offend no body, is there any harme in the heauier for a husband? none I thinke, and it be the right husband, and the right wife, otherwife 'tis light and not heauy, aske my Lady Beatrice else, here she comes.

Enter Beatrice.

Hero Good morrow Coze.

Beat. Good morrow sweet Hero.

Hero. Why how now? do you speake in the sick tune?

Beat. I am out of all other tune, me thinkes

Mar. Claps into Light a loue, (that goes without a burden,) do you sing it and Ile dance it

Beat. Ye Light aloue with your heeles, then if your husband haue stables enough, you'll looke he shall lacke no barnes.

Mar. O illegitimate construction I I scorne that with my heeles

Beat. 'Tis almost siue a clocke cosin. 'tis time you were ready, by my troth I am exceeding ill, hey ho.

Mar. For a hauke, a horse, or a husband?

Beat. For the letter that begins them all, H.

Mar. Well, and you be not turn'd Turke, there's no more saying by the starre.

Beat. What means the foole trow?

Mar. Nothing I, but God send euery one their harts desire.

Hero. These gloues the Count sent mee, they are an excellent perfume.

Beat. I am stuf cosin, I cannot smell

Mar. A maid and stuf! there's goodly catching of colde

Beat. O God help me, God help me, how long haue you profest apprehension?

Mar. Euer since you left it, doth not my wit become me rarely?

Beat. It is not seene enough, you should weare it in your cap, by my troth I am sicke.

Mar. Get you some of this distill'd carduus benedictus and lay it to your heart, it is the onely thing for a qualm

Hero There thou prickst her with a thissell.

Beat. Benedictus, why benedictus? you haue some morall in this benedictus

Mar. Morall? no by my troth, I haue no morall meaning, I meant plaine holy thissell, you may thinke per-chance that I thinke you are in loue, nay burlady I am not such a foole to thinke what I list, nor I list not to thinke what I can, nor indeed I cannot thinke, if I would thinke my hart out of thinking, that you are in loue, or that you will be in loue, or that you can be in loue. yet Benedicke was such another, and now is he become a man, he swore hee would neuer marry, and yet now in despite of his heart he eateth his meat without grudging, and how you may be conuerted I know not, but me thinkes you looke with your eyes as other women doe.

Beat. What pace is this that thy tongue keeps.

Mar. Not a false gallop.

Enter Vrsula.

Vrsula. Madam, withdraw, the Prince, the Count, sig-nior Benedicke, Don Iohn, and all the gallants of the towne are come to fetch you to Church.

Hero. Helpe to dresse mee good coze, good Meg, good Vrsula.

Enter Leonato, and the Constable, and the Headborough.

Leonato. What would you with mee, honest neigh-bour?

Const Dog. Mary sir I would haue some confidence with you, that decernes you nearely.

Leon. Brieue I pray you, for you see it is a busie time with me

Const Dog. Mary this it is sir.

Headb. Yes in truth it is sir.

Leon. What is it my good friends?

Con. Do Goodman Verges sir speakes a little of the matter, an old man sir, and his wits are not so blunt, as God helpe I would desire they were, but in faith honest as the skin betweene his browes.

Head. Yes I thank God, I am as honest as any man li-ving, that is an old man, and no honefter then I.

Con Dog. Compassions are odorous, palabras, neigh-bour Verges

Leon. Neighbours, you are tedious

Con Dog. It pleases your worship to say so, but were the poore Dukes officers, but truly for mine owne part, if I were as tedious as a King I could finde in my heart to bestow it all of your worship.

Leon. All thy tediousnesse on me, ah?

Const Dog. Yea, and 'twere a thousand times more than 'tis, for I heere as good exclamation on your Wor-ship as of any man in the Citie, and though I bee but a poore man, I am glad to heare it.

Head. And so am I.

Leon. I would faine know what you haue to say.

Head. Marry sir our watch to night, excepting your worships preface, haue tane a couple of as arrant knaues as any in Messina.

Con. Dog. A good old man sir, hee will be talking as they say, when the age is in the wit is out, God helpe vs, it is a world to see: a well said yfaith neighbour Verges, well, God's a good man, and two men ride of a horse, one must ride behinde, an honest soule yfaith sir, by my troth he is, as euer broke bread, but God is to bee wor-shippt, all men are not alike, alas good neighbour.

Leon. Indeed neighbour he comes too short of you.

Con Do. Gifts that God giues.

Leon. I must leave you.

Con Dog. One word sir, our watch sir haue indeede comprehended two aspiring persons, & we would haue them this morning examined before your worship.

Leon. Take their examination your selfe, and bring it me, I am now in great haste, as may appeare vnto you.

Const. It shall be suffigance

(Exit.)

Leon. Drinke some wine ere you goe: fare you well.

Messenger. My Lord, they stay for you to giue your daughter to her husband

Leon. Ile wait vpon them, I am ready.

Dogb. Goe good partner, goe get you to Francus Sea-coale, bid him bring his pen and inke horn to the Gaole: we are now to examine those men.

Verges. And we must doe it wisely.

Dogb. Wee will spare for no witte I warrant you:

K 3

heere,

heere's that shall drue some of them to a non-come, only get the learned writer to set downe our excommunication, and meet me at the Iaile. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Prince, Bassard, Leonato, Frier, Claudio, Benedicke, Hero, and Beatrice.

Leonato. Come Frier Francis, be briefe, onely to the plaine forme of marriage, and you shal recount their particular duties afterwards.

Fran. You come hither, my Lord, to marry this Lady.

Claudio. No.

Leo. To be married to her Frier, you come to marrie her

Frier. Lady, you come hither to be married to this Count.

Hero. I doe.

Frier. If either of you know any inward impediment why you should not be conioyned, I charge you on your soules to vtter it.

Claudio. Know you anie, Hero?

Hero. None my Lord.

Frier. Know you anie, Count?

Leon. I dare make his answer, None

Claudio. O what men dare do! what men may do! what men daily do!

Bene. How now! interiections? why then, some be of laughing, as ha, ha, he.

Claudio. Stand thee by Frier, father, by your leaue,
Will you with free and vnconstrained loule
Giue me this maid your daughter?

Leon. As freely sonne as God did giue her me.

Claudio. And what haue I to giue you back, whose worth
May counterpoise this rich and precious gift?

Prin. Nothing, vnlesse you render her againe.

Claudio. Sweet Prince, you learn me noble thankfulness.
There Leonato, take her backe againe.

Giue not this rotten Orenge to your friend,
Shee's but the signe and semblance of her honour
Behold how like a maid she blushes heere!

O what authoritie and shew of truth
Can cunning sinne couer it selfe withall!
Comes not that bloud, as modest euidence,
To witnesse simple Vertue? would you not sweare
All you that see her, that she were a maide,
By these exterior shewes? But she is none:
She knowes the heat of a luxurious bed:
Her blush is guiltinesse, not modestie.

Leonato. What doe you meane, my Lord?

Claudio. Not to be married,
Not to knit my soule to an approued wanton.

Leon. Deere my Lord, if you in your owne prooffe,
Haue vanquisht the resistance of her youth,
And made defeat of her virginitye.

(her,
Claudio. I know what you would say. if I haue knowne
You will say, she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the forehead sinne No Leonato,
Ineuer tempted her with word too large,
But as a brother to his sister, shewed
Bashfull sinceritie and comely loue.

Hero. And seem'd I euer otherwise to you?

Claudio. Out on thee seeming, I will write against it,
You seeme to me as Diane in her Orbe,
As chaste as is the budde ere it be blowne:
But you are more intemperate in your blood,
Than Venus, or those pampred animals,
That rage in sauage sensualitye.

Hero. Is my Lord well, that he doth speake so wide?

Leon. Sweete Prince, why speake not you?

Prin. What should I speake?

I stand dishonour'd that haue gone about,
To linke my deare friend to a common stale

Leon. Are these things spoken, or doe I but dresseme?

Bass. Sir, they are spoken, and these things are true.

Bene. This lookes not like a nuptiall.

Hero. True, O God!

Claudio. Leonato, stand I here?

Is this the Prince? is this the Princes brother?

Is this face Hero's? are our eyes our owne?

Leon. All this is so, but what of this my Lord?

Claudio. Let me but moue one question to your daugh-
And by that fatherly and kindly power, (ter,
That you haue in her, bid her answer truly.

Leo. I charge thee doe, as thou art my childe.

Hero. O God defend me how am I beset;
What kinde of catechizing call you this?

Claudio. To make you answer truly to your name.

Hero. Is it not Hero? who can blot that name
With any iust reproach?

Claudio. Marry that can Hero,
Hero it is 't' can blot out Hero's vertue.

What man was he, talke with you yesternight,
Out at your window betwixt twelue and one?
Now if you are a maid, answer to this.

Hero. I talke with no man at that howre my Lord.

Prin. Why then you are no maiden Leonato,
I am sorry you must heare. vpon mine honor,
My felie, my brother, and thus grieved Count
Did see her, heare her, at that howre last night,
Talke with a ruffian at her chamber window,
Who hath indeed most like a liberall villaine,
Confest the vile encounters they haue had
A thousand times in secret.

Leon. Fic, fic, they are not to be named my Lord,
Not to be spoken of,

There is not chastitie enough in language,
Without offence to vtter them thus pretty Lady
I am sorry for thy much misgouernment.

Claudio. O Hero! w' at a Hero hadst thou bene
If halfe thy outward graces had bene placed
About thy thoughts and counsailes of thy heart?
But fare thee well, most foule, mo't faire, farewell
Thou pure impiety, and impious puritie,
For thee Ile locke vp all the gates of Loue,
And on my eye-lids shall Coniecture hang,
To turne all beauty into thoughts of harme,
And neuer shall it more be gracious.

Leon. Hath no mans dagger here a point for me?

Beat. Why how now colin, wherfore sink you down?

Bass. Come, let vs go: these things come thus to light,
Smoother her spirits vp.

Bene. How doth the Lady?

Beat. Dead I thinke, helpe vnle,

Hero. why Hero, Vncle, Signor Benedicke, Frier.

Leonato. O Fate! take not away thy heavy hand,
Death is the fairest couer for her shame
That may be wisht for.

Beat. How

Beatr. How now cousin Hero?

Fri. Have comfort Ladie.

Leon. Dost thou looke vp?

Frier. Yea, wherefore should she not?

Leon. Wherefore? Why doth not euery earthly thing
Cry shame vpon her? Could she heere denie
The storie that is printed in her blood?
Do not liue Hero, do not open thine eyes:
For did I thinke thou wouldst not quickly die,
Thought I thy spirits were stronger then thy shames,
My selfe would on the reward of reproaches
Strike at thy life. Grieved I, I had but one?
Child I, for that at frugal Natures frame?
O one too much by thee. why had I one?
Why euer was't thou louelic in mine eyes?
Why had I not with charitable hand
Tooke vp a beggars issue at my gates,
Who smeared thus, and mir'd with infamie,
I might haue said, no part of it is mine.
This shame deriues it selfe from vnknowne loines,
But mine, and mine I lou'd, and mine I prais'd,
And mine that I was proud on mine so much,
That I my selfe, was to my selfe not mine:
Valewing of her, why she, O she is false
Into a pit of Inke, that the wide sea
Hath drops too few to wash her cleane againe,
And salt too little, which may season giue
To her foule tainted flesh

Ben. Sir, sir, be patient. for my part, I am so attired in wonder, I know not what to say.

Bea. O on my foule my cousin is belied.

Ben. Ladie, were you her bedfellow last night?

Bea. Not truly not although vntill last night,
I haue this tweluemonth bin her bedfellow

Leon. Confirm'd, confirm'd, O that is stronger made
Which was before barr'd vp with ribs of iron.
Would the Princes lie, and Claudio lie,
Who lou'd her so, that speaking of her foulness,
Wash'd it with teares? Hence from her, let her die

Fri. Heare me a little, for I haue onely bene silent so long, and giuen way vnto this course of fortune, by noting of the Ladie, I haue markt.

A thousand blushing apparitions,
To start into her face, a thousand innocent shames,
In Angel whiteneesse beare away those blushes,
And in her eie there hath appear'd a fire
To burne the errors that these Princes hold
Against her maiden truth. Call me a foole,
Trust not my reading, nor my obseruations,
Which with experimental scale doth warrant
The tenure of my booke. trust not my age,
My reuerence, calling, nor diuinitie,
If this sweet Ladie lye not guiltlesse heere,
Vnder some biting error.

Leo. Frier, it cannot be.

Thou seest that all the Grace that she hath left,
Is, that she wil not adde to her damnation,
A signe of perjury, she not denies it.
Why seek'st thou then to couer with excuse,
That which appeares in proper nakednesse?

Fri. Ladie, what man is he you are accus'd of?

Hero. They know that do accuse me, I know none:
If I know more of any man aloue
Then that which maiden modestie doth warrant,
Let all my sinnes lacke mercy. O my Father,
Proue you that any man with me conuers't,

At houres vnmeeete, or that I yesternight
Maintain'd the change of words with any creature,
Refuse me, hate me, torture me to death

Fri. There is some strange misprision in the Princes.

Ben. Two of them haue the verie bent of honor,
And if their wisdomes be mislead in this:
The praise of it liues in John the bastard,
Whose spirits toile in frame of villanies.

Leo. I know not if they speake but truth of her,
These hands shall reare her: If they wrong her honour,
The proudest of them shall wel heare of it.
Time hath not yet so dried this blood of mine,
Nor age so eate vp my inuention,
Nor Fortune made such hauocke of my meanes,
Nor my bad life rest me so much of friends,
But they shall finde, awak'd in such a kinde,
Both strength of limbe, and policie of minde,
Ability in meanes, and choise of friends,
To quit me of them thoroughly

Fri. Pause awhile.

And let my counsell sway you in this case,
Your daughter heere the Princess (left for dead)
Let her awhile be secretly kept in,
And publish it, that she is dead indeed.
Maintaine a mourning ostentation,
And on your Families old monument,
Hang mournfull Epitaphes, and do all rites,
That appertaine vnto a buriall

Leon. What shall become of this? What wil this do?

Fri. Marry this vnto I haue carried, I all on her behalfe,
Change slander to remorse, that is some good,
But not for that dreame I on this strange course,
But on this trauaile looke for greater birth:
She dying, as it must be so maintain'd,
Vpon the instant that she was accus'd,
Shall be lamented, pittied, and excus'd
Of euery hearer for it so falls out,
That what we haue, we prize not to the worth,
Whiles we enioy it, but being lack'd and lost,
Why then we racke the value, then we finde
The vertue that possession would not shew vs
Whiles it was ours, so will it fare with Claudio.
When he shal heare she dyed vpon his words,
Th Idea of her life shal sweetly creepe
Into his study of imagination
And euery louely Organ of her life,
Shall come apparell'd in more precious habite.
More mouing delicate, and full of life,
Into the eye and prospect of his foule
Then when she liu'd indeed then shal he mourne,
If euer Loue had interest in his liuer,
And wish he had not so accus'd her
No, though he thought his accusation true.
Let this be so, and doubt not but successe
Wil fashion the euent in better shape,
Then I can lay it downe in likelihood.
But if all ayme but this be leueild false,
The supposition of the Ladies death,
Will quench the wonder of her infamie.
And if it fort not well, you may conceale her,
As best befits her wounded reputation,
In some reclusiue and religious life,
Out of all eyes, tongues, mindes and iniuries.
Bene. Signior Leonato, let the Frier aduise you,
And though you know my inwardnesse and loue
Is very much vnto the Prince and Claudio.

Yet

Yet, by mine honor, I will deale in this,
As secretly and iustlie, as your soule
Should with your bodie

Leon. Being that I flow in greefe,
The smallest twine may lead me

Erier. 'Tis well consented, presently away,
For to strange forces, strangely they straine the cure,
Come Lady, die to live, this wedding day
Perhaps is but prolong'd, haue patience & endure Exit.

Bene. Lady Beatrice, haue you wept all this while?

Beat. Yea, and I will weepe a while longer.

Bene. I will not desire that.

Beat. You haue no reason, I doe it freely.

Bene. Surelie I do beleuee your fair cosin is wrong'd.

Beat. Ah, how much might the man deserue of mee that would right her!

Bene. Is there any way to shew such friendship?

Beat. A verie euen way, but no such friend.

Bene. May a man doe it?

Beat. It is a mans office, but not yours.

Bene. I doe loue nothing in the world so well as you,
is not that strange?

Beat. As strange as the thing I know not, it were as possible for me to say, I loued nothing so well as you, but beleuee me not, and yet I lie not, I confesse nothing, nor
I deny nothing, I am sorry for my cosin

Bene. By my sword Beatrice thou lou'st me.

Beat. Doe not sweare by it and eat it.

Bene. I will sweare by it that you loue mee, and I will make him eat it that sayes I loue not you.

Beat. Will you not eat your word?

Bene. With no sawce that can be deu sed to it, I protest I loue thee.

Beat. Why then God forgieue me.

Bene. What offence sweet Beatrice?

Beat. You haue stayed me in a happy howre, I was about to protest I loued you.

Bene. And doe it with all thy heart.

Beat. I loue you with so much of my heart, that none is left to protest.

Bened. Come, bid me doe any thung for thee.

Beat. Kill Claudio

Bene. Ha, not for the wide world

Beat. You kill me to denie, farewell.

Bene. Tarrie sweet Beatrice.

Beat. I am gone, though I am heere, there is no loue in you, nay I pray you let me goe.

Bene. Beatrice.

Beat. Infaith I will goe.

Bene. Wee'll be friends first.

Beat. You dare easie be friends with mee, than fight with mine enemy.

Bene. Is Claudio thine enemy?

Beat. Is a not approued in the height a villaine, that hath slandered, scorred, dishonoured my kinswoman? O that I were a man! what, beare her in hand vntill they come to take hands, and then with publike accusation vncouered slander, vnmittigated rancour? O God that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.

Bene. Heare me Beatrice.

Beat. Talke with a man out at a window, a proper saying

Bene. Nay but Beatrice.

Beat. Sweet Hero, she is wrong'd, she is slandered,
she is vndone.

Bene. Beat?

Beat. Princes and Counties! surelie a Princely testi-monie, a goodly Count, Comfekt, a sweet Gallant sure-lie, O that I were a man for his sake! or that I had any friend would be a man for my sake! But manhood is melted into cursies, valour into complement, and men are onlie turned into tongue, and trim ones too: he is now as valiant as Hercules, that only tells a lie, and sweares it:
I cannot be a man with wishing, therefore I will die a woman with grieuing.

Bene. Tarry good Beatrice, by this hand I loue thee.

Beat. Vse it for my loue some other way then swearing by it.

Bened. Thinke you in your soule the Count Claudio
hath wrong'd Hero?

Beat. Yea, as sure as I haue a thought, or a soule.

Bene. Enough, I am engagde, I will challenge him, I will kisse your hand, and so leaue you: by this hand Claudio shall render me a deere account: as you heare of me, so thinke of me: goe comfort your cosin, I must say she is dead, and so farewell

Enter the Constable, Berachis, and the Towne Clerke in gawnes

Keeper. Is our whole dissembly appeard?

Conley. O a stoole and a cushion for the Sexton.

Sexton. Which be the malefactors?

Andrew. Marry that am I, and my partner.

Conley. Nay that's certaine, wee haue the exhibition to examine.

Sexton. But which are the offenders that are to be examined, let them come before master Constable.

Kemp. Yea marry, let them come before mee, what is your name, friend?

Ber Berachis.

Kemp. Pray write downe Berachis. Yours first.

Con. I am a Gentleman sir, and my name is Conrade

Kemp. Write downe Master gentleman Conrade. mal-lsters, doe you serue God's mallsters, it is proued already that you are little better than false knowers, and it will goe neere to let thought so shortly, how answer you for your selues?

Con. Marry sir, we say we are none

Kemp. A maruellous witty fellow. I assure you, but I will goe about with him: come you hither first: a word in your eare sir, I say to you, it is thought you are false knowers

Ber. Sir, I say to you, we are none.

Kemp. Well, stand aside, 'fore God they are both in a tale: haue you writ downe that they are none?

Sext. Master Constable, you goe not the way to examine, you must call forth the watch that are their accusers.

Kemp. Yea marry, that's the easiest way, let the watch
come forth: masters, I charge you in the Princes name, accuse these men.

Watch 1. This man said sir, that Don Iohn the Princes brother was a villaine.

Kemp. Write downe, Prince Iohn a villaine: why this is flat perurie, to call a Princes brother villaine.

Bora. Master Constable

Kemp. Pray thee fellow peace, I do not like thy looke
I promise thee.

Sexton. What heard you him say else?

Watch 2. Marry that he had receiued a thousand Dukates of Don Iohn, for accusing the Lady Hero wrongfully.

Kemp.

Kemp. Flat Burglarie as ever was committed,

Conf. Yea by th'masse that it is.

Sexton. What else fellow?

Watch 1. And that Count Claudio did meane vpon his words, to disgrace Hero before the whole assembly, and not marry her.

Kemp. O villaine! thou wilt be condemn'd into everlasting redemption for this.

Sexton. What else?

Watch. This is all.

Sexton. And this is more masters then you can deny, Prince John is this morning secretly stolne away: Hero was in this manner accus'd, in this very manner refus'd, and vpon the griefe of this sodainly died. Master Constable, let these men be bound, and brought to Leonato, I will goe before, and shew him their examination.

Conf. Come, let them be opinion'd.

Sext. Let them be in the hands of Coxcombe.

Kemp. Gods my life, where's the Sexton? let him write downe the Princes Officer Coxcombe come, binde them thou naughty varlet.

Couley. Away, you are an asse, you are an asse.

Kemp. Dost thou not suspect my place? dost thou not suspect my yeeres? O that hee were heere to write mee downe an asse! but masters, remember that I am an asse though it be not written down, yet forget not y I am an asse! No thou villaine, y art full of piety as shall be prou'd vpon thee by good witness, I am a wise fellow, and which is more, an officer, and which is more, a houshoulder, and which is more, as pretty a peece of flesh as any in Messina, and one that knowes the Law, goe to, & a rich fellow enough, goe to, and a fellow that hath had losses, and ore that hath two gownes. and euery thing handsome about him bring him away O that I had been writt downe an asse!

Exit

Actus Quintus.

Enter Leonato and his brother.

Brother. If you goe on thus, you will kill your selfe, And 'tis not wisdoms thus to second griefe, Against your selfe.

Leon. I pray thee cease thy counsaile, Which falls into mine eares as profitlesse, As water in a sieue giue not me counsaile, Nor let no comfort delight mine care, But such a one whose wrongs doth sute with mine. Bring me a father that so lou'd his childe, Whose ioy of her is ouerwhelmed like mine, And bid him speake of patience, Measure his woe the length and bredth of mine, And let it answere euery straine for straine, As thus for thus, and such a griefe for such, In euery lineament, branch, shape, and forme: If such a one will smile and stroke his beard, And sorrow, wagge, crie hem, when he should grone, Patch griefe with prouerbs; make misfortune drunke, With candle-waters: bring him yet to me, And I of him will gather patience: But there is no such man, soe brother, men Can counsaile, and speake comfort to that griefe, Which they themselves nor feele, but tasting it, Their counsaile turnes to passion, which before,

Would giue preceptiall medicine to rage, Fetter strong madnesse in a silken thred, Charme ache with ayre, and agony with words, No, no, 'tis all mens office, to speake patience To those that wring vnder the load of sorrow: But no mans vertue nor sufficiencie To be so morall, when he shall endure The like himselfe: therefore giue me no counsaile, My griefs cry lowder then aduertisement.

Broth. Therein do men from children nothing differ.

Leonato. I pray thee peace, I will be flesh and bloud, For there was neuer yet Philosopher, That could endure the tooth-ake patiently, How euer they haue writ the stile of gods, And made a pulch at chance and sufferance.

Brother. Yet bend not all the harme vpon your selfe, Make those that doe offend you, suffer too.

Leon. There thou speak'st reason, nay I will doe so, My soule doth tell me, Hero is belied, And that shall Claudio know, so shall the Prince, And all of them that thus dishonour her.

Enter Prince and Claudio.

Broth. Here comes the Prince and Claudio hastily.

Prim. Good den, good den

Claudio. Good day to both of you.

Leon. Heare you my Lords?

Prim. We haue some haste Leonato

Leo. Some haste my Lord! wel, fare you wel my Lord, Are you so hasty now? well, all is one.

Prim. Nay, do not quarrell with vs, good old man

Broth. If he could rite himselfe with quarrelling, Some of vs would lie low.

Claudio. Who wrongs him?

Leon. Marry y dost wrong me, thou dissembler, thou Nay, neuer lay thy hand vpon thy sword, I feare thee not

Claudio. Marry beshrew my hand, If it should giue your age such cause of feare, Infaint my hand meant nothing to my sword.

Leonato. Tush, tush, man, neuer feere and rest at me, I speake not like a dotard, nor a foole, As vnder priuiledge of age to bragge, What I haue done being yong, or what would doe, Were I not old, know Claudio to thy head, Thou hast so wrong'd my innocent childe and me, That I am forc'd to lay my reuerence by, And with grey haire and bruis of many daies, Doe challenge thee to triall of a man, I say thou hast belied mine innocent childe. Thy slander hath gone through and through her heart, And she lies buried with her ancestors: O in a tombe where neuer scandall slept, Saue this of hers, fram'd by thy villanie.

Claudio. My villany?

Leonato. Thine Claudio, thine I say

Prim. You say not right old man.

Leon. My Lord, my Lord,

He proue it on his body if he dare, Despight his nice fence, and his actiue practise, His Maie of youth, and bloome of Iusthood

Claudio. Away, I will not haue to do with you

Leo. Canst thou so daffe me? thou hast kild my child, If thou kilst me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

Bro. He shall kill twb of vs, and men indeed. But that's no matter, let him kill one first:

Win

Win me and weare me, let him answere me,
Come follow me boy, come sir boy, come follow me
Sir boy, ile whip you from your foyning fence,
Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will

Leon. Brother.

Bro. Content your self, God knows I lou'd my neece,
And she is dead, slander'd to death by villaines,
That dare as well answer a man indeede,
As I dare take a serpent by the tongue,
Boyes apes, braggarts, laches, milke-sops

Leon. Brother Anthony.

Bro. Hold you content, what man? I know them, yea
And what they weigh, euen to the vtmost scruple,
Scambling, out-facing, fashion-monging boyes,
That lye, and cog, and flout, depraue, and slander,
Goe antequely, and show outward hidiousnesse,
And speake of halfe a dozen dang'rous words,
How they might hurt their enemies, if they durst.
And this is all.

Leon. But brother Anthony.

Ant. Come, 'tis no matter,
Do not you meddle, let me deale in this.

Pr. Gentlemen both, we will not wake your patience
My heart is sorry for your daughters death.
But on my honour she was charg'd with nothing
But what was true, and very full of prooffe.

Leon. My Lord, my Lord.

Prim. I will not heare you

Enter Benedicke.

Leo. No come brother, away, I will be heard.

Exeunt ambo.

Bro. And shall, or some of vs will smart for it

Prim. See, see, here comes the man we went to seeke

Clau. Now signior, what newes?

Ben. Good day my Lord.

Prim. Welcome signior, you are almost come to part almost a fray.

Clau. Wee had likt to haue had our two noses snap off with two old men without teeth.

Prim. Leonato and his brother, what think st thou? had wee fought, I doubt we should haue beene too yong for them.

Ben. In a false quarrell there is no true valour, I came to seeke you both

Clau. We haue beene vp and downe to seeke thee, for we are high prooffe melancholly, and would faine haue it beaten away, wilt thou vse thy wit?

Ben. It is in my scabberd, shall I draw it?

Prim. Doe st thou weare thy wit by thy side?

Clau. Neuer any did so, though verie many haue been beside their wit, I will bid thee drawe, as we do the minstrels, draw to pleasure vs.

Prim. As I am an honest man he lookes pale, art thou sicke, or angrie?

Clau. What, courage man. what though care kil'd a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.

Ben. Sir, I shall meete your wit in the careere, and you charge it against me, I pray you chuse another subiect.

Clau. Nay then giue him another staffe, this last was broke crosse.

Prim. By this light, he changes more and more, I thinke
he be angrie indeede.

Clau. If he be, he knowes how to turne his girdle,

Ben. Shall I speake a word in your eare?

Clau. God blisse me from a challenge.

Ben. You are a villaine, I test not, I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare:
do me right, or I will protest your cowardise: you haue kill'd a sweete Ladie, and her death shall fall heauie on you, let me heare from you.

Clau. Well, I will meete you, so I may haue good cheare.

Prim. What, a feast, a feast?

Clau. I faith I thanke him, he hath bid me to a calues head and a Capon, the which if I do not carue most curiously, say my knife's naught, shall I not finde a woodcocke too?

Ben. Sir, your wit ambles well, it goes easly.

Prim. Ile tell thee how Beatrice prais'd thy wit the other day: I said thou hadst a fine wit true saies she, a fine little one: no said I, a great wit. right saies shee, a great grosse one. nay said I, a good wit: iust said she, it hurts no body. nay said I, the gentleman is wise. certain said she, a wise gentleman. nay said I, he hath the tongues:
that I beleue said shee, for hee swore a thing to me on munday night, which he forswore on tuesday morning:
there's a double tongue, there's two tongues: thus did shee an howre together trans-shape thy particular ver-ues, yet at last she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the proprest man in Italie.

Clau. For the which she wept heartily, and said shee car'd not.

Prim. Yea that she did, but yet for all that, and if shee did not hate him deadlie, shee would loue him dearly,
the old mans daughter told vs all.

Clau. All, all, and moreover, God saw him vwhen he was hid in the garden

Prim. But when shall we set the sauage Bulls hornes on the sensible Benedicke head?

Clau. Yea and text vnderneath, heere dwells Benedicke the married man.

Ben. Fare you well, Boy, you know my minde, I will leauue you now to your gossip-like humor, you breake iests as braggards do their blades, which God be thanked hurt not my Lord, for your manie courtesies I thank you, I must discontinue your companie, your brother
the Bastard is fled from Messina. you haue among you, kill'd a sweet and innocent Ladie. for my Lord Lackeheard there, he and I shall meete, and till then peace be with him.

Prim. He is in earnest

Clau. In most profound earnest, and Ile warrant you, for the loue of Beatrice

Prim. And hath challeng'd thee

Clau. Most sincerely.

Prim. What a prettie thing man is, when he goes in his doubler and hose, and leauues off his wit.

Enter Constable, Conrade, and Borachio.

Clau. He is then a Giant to an Ape, but then is an Ape
a Doctor to such a man.

Prim. But soft you, let me be, plucke vp my heart, and be sad, did he not say my brother was fled?

Const. Come you sir, if iustice cannot tame you, shee shall nere weigh more reasons in her ballance, nay, and you be a cursing hypocrite once, you must be lookt to.

Prim. How now, two of my brothers men bound? Borachio one.

Clau. Harke after their offence my Lord,

Prim. Officers, what offence haue these men done?

Con. Marrie

Const. Marrie sir, they haue committed false report, moreover they haue spoken vntruths, secondarily, they are slanderers, sixth and lastly, they haue belyed a Ladie, thirdly, they haue verified vnjust things, and to conclude they are lying knaues

Prim. First, I aske thee what they haue done, thirdlie I aske thee what's their offence, sixth and lastlie why they are committed, and to conclude what you lay to their charge.

Clau. Rightlie reasoned, and in his owne diuision, and by my troth these's one meaning, well suited.

Prim. Who haue you offended masters, that you are thus bound to your answer? this learned Constable is too cunning to be vnderstood, vvhats your offence?

Bar. Sweete Prince, let me go no farther to mine answer do you heare me, and let this Count kill mee I haue deceived euen your vnder eyes: vvhats your wisdomes could not discouery, these shallow fooles haue brought to light, vvhos in the night ouerheard me confessing to this man, how Don Iohn your brother incensed me to slander the Ladie Hero, how you were brought into the Orchard, and saw me count Margaret, in His garments, how you disgraced her vvhhen you should marrie her my villanie they haue vpon record, vvhich I had rather seale vvvith my death, then repeate ouer to my shame the Ladie is dead vpon mine and my masters false accusation: and briefelic, I desire nothing but the reward of a villaine.

Prim. Runs not this speech like yron through your blood?

Clau. I haue drunke poison whiles he vtter d it

Prim. But did my Brother set thee on to this?

Bar. Yea, and paid me richly for the practise of it.

Prim. He is compos'd and fram'd of treacherie, And fled he is vpon this villanie

Clau. Sweet Hero, now thy image doth appeare In the rare semblance that I lou'd it first

Const. Come bring away the plintiffes, by this time our Sexton hath reformed Signior Leonato of the matter and masters, do not forget to specifie vvhhen time & place shall serue, that I am an Ass

Con 2. Here, here comes master Signior Leonato, and the Sexton too

Enter Leonato.

Leon. Which is the villaine? let me see his eyes, That when I note another man like him, I may auoide him: vvhich of these is he?

Bar. If you would know your wronger, looke on me.

Leon. Art thou the slaue that with thy breath hastild mine innocent childe?

Bar. Yea, euen I alone.

Leo. No, not so villaine, thou beliest thy selfe, Here stand a paire of honourable men,

A third is fled that had a hand in it

I thanke you Princes for my daughters death, Record it with your high and worthie deedes,

'Twas brauely done, if you bethinke you of it

Clau. I know not how to pray your patience, Yet I must speake, choose your reuenge your selfe, Impose me to what penance your inuention Can lay vpon my sinne, yet sinn'd I not, But in mistaking.

Prim. By my soule no I, And yet to satisfie this good old man,

I vvvould bend vnder anie heauie vvaight, That heele enioyne me to

Leon. I cannot bid you bid my daughter iure, That were impossible, but I praise you both,

Possesse the people in Messina here,

How innocent she died, and if your loue Can labour aught in sad inuention,

Hang her an epitaph vpon her toomb,

And sing it to her bones, sing it to night

To morrow morning come you to my house,

And since you could not be my sonne in law, Be yet my Nephew: my brother hath a daughter,

Almost the copie of my childe that's dead,

And she alone is here to both of vs,

Giue her the right you should haue giuen her cosin, And so dies my reuenge

Clau. O noble sir!

Your ouerkindnesse doth wring teares from me, I do embrace your offer, and dispose

For henceforth of poore Claudio.

Leon. To morrow then I will expect your coming, To night I take my leave, this naughtie man

Shall face to face be brought to Margaret,

Who I belecue was packt in all this wrong, -

Hired to it by your brother.

Bar. No by my soule she was not, Nor knew not what she did when she spoke to me,

But alwaies hath bin iust and vertuous,

In anie thing that I do know by her

Const. Moreover sir, which indeede is not vnder white and black, this plaintiffe here, the offendour did call mee

asse, I beseech you let it be remembered in his punishment, and also the vtcher heard them talke of one *Dis*form'd, they say he weares a key in his eare and a lock hanging by it, and borrowes monie in Gods name, the which he hath vs'd so long, and neuer paid, that now men grow hard-hearted and will lend nothing for Gods sake praise you examine him vpon that point.

Leon. I thanke thee for thy care and honest paines

Const. Your vvorship speakes like a most thankfull and reuerend youth, and I praise God for you

Leon. There's for thy paines

Const. God saue the foundation

Leon. Goe, I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I thanke thee.

Const. I leaue an arrant knaue vvvith your vvorship, which I beseech your vvorship to correct your selfe, for the example of others: God, keepe your vvorship, I wish your vvorship vvell, God restore you to health,

I humbly giue you leaue to depart, and if a merrie meeting may be wisht, God prohibite it: come neighbour

Leon. Vntill to morrow morning, Lords, farewell

Exeunt.

Bro. Farewell my Lords, vve looke for you to morrow.

Prim. We will not faile.

Clau. To night ile mourne with Hero.

Leon. Bring you thele fellowes on, weel talke vvith Margaret, how her acquaintance grew vvvith this lewd fellow.

Exeunt.

Enter Benedicke and Margaret.

Ben. Praise thee sweete Mistress Margaret, deserue vvell at my hands, by helping mee to the speech of Benedicke.

Mar. Will

Mar. Will you then write me a Sonnet in praise of my beauty?

Bene. In so high a stile Margaret, that no man living shall come over it, for in most comely truth thou defest it.

Mar. To have no man come over me, why, shall I still waies keepe below staires?

Bene. Thy wit is as quicke as the grey-hounds mouth, it catches.

Mar. And yours, as blunne as the Fencers foiles, which hit, but hurt not.

Bene. A most manly wit Margaret, it will not hurt a woman: and so I pray thee call Beatrice, I give thee the bucklers.

Mar. Give vs the swords, wee have bucklers of our owne.

Bene. If you vse them Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice, and they are dangerous weapons for Maides.

Mar. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who I thinke hath legges.

Exit Margaret.

Bene. And therefore will come. The God of loue that sits above, and knowes me, and knowes me, how pittifull I deferue. I meane in singing, but in louing, Leander the good swimmer, Troilus the first imploier of pandars, and a whole booke full of these quondam carpet-mongers, whose name yet runne smoothly in the euen rode of a blanke verse, why they were neuer so truly turned ouer and ouer as my poore selfe in loue: marriage I cannot shew it rime, I haue tried, I can finde out no rime to Ladie but babie, an innocent rime for scorne, home, a hard time for schoole foole a babbling time verie ominous endings, no, I was not borne vnder a riming Plannet, for I cannot wooe in festiuall teames.

Enter Beatrice

sweete Beatrice would'st thou come when I call'd thee?

Beat. Yea Signior, and depart when you bid me.

Bene. O stay but till then.

Beat. Then, is spoken fare you well now, and yet ere I goe, let me goe with that I came, which is, with knowing what hath past betweene you and Clandio.

Bene. Onely foule words, and thereupon I will kisse thee.

Beat. Foule words is but foule wind, and foule wind is but foule breath, and foule breath is noisome, therefore I will depart vnkist.

Bene. Thou hast frighted the word out of his right fence, so forcible is thy wit, but I must tell thee plainly, Clandio vndergoes my challenge, and either I must shortly heare from him, or I will subscribe him a coward, and I pray thee now tell me, for which of my bad parts didst thou first fall in loue with me?

Beat. For them all together, which maintain'd so politique a state of euill, that they will not admit any good part to intermingle with them: but for which of my good parts did you first suffer leue for me?

Bene. Suffer loue! a good epithite, I do suffer loue indeede, for I loue thee against my will.

Beat. In spite of your heart I thinke, alas poore heart, if you spight it for my sake, I will spight it for yours, for I will neuer loue that which my friend hates

Bened. Thou and I are too wise to wooe peaceably.

Beat. It appeares not in this confession, there's not one wise man among twentie that will praise himselfe.

Bene. An old, in old instance Beatrice, that liu'd in the time of goodneighbours, if a man doe not ere & in this age his owne tombe ere he dies, hee shall liue no longer in monuments, then the Bels ring, & the Widdow weepes.

Beat. And how long is that thinke you?

Bene. Question, why in hower in clamour and a quarter in shewme, ther'soft as is most expedient for the wife, if Don worrne (his conscience) finde no impediment to the contrarie, to be the trumpet of his owne vertues, as I am to my selfe so much for praising my selfe, who I my selfe will beare witnesse is praise worthie, and now tell me, how doth your cosin?

Beat. Verie ill.

Bene. And how doe you?

Beat. Verie ill too.

Enter Ursula.

Bene. Serue God, loue me, and mend, there will I leaue you too, for here comes one in haste.

Urs. Madam, you must come to your Vncle, yonders old coile at home, it is prouoed my Ladie Hero hath bin falselie accus'd, the Prince and Clandio mightie abus'd, and Don Iohn is the author of all, who is fled and gone: will you come presentlie?

Beat. Will you go heare this newes Signior?

Bene. I will lue in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes: and moreover, I will goe with thee to thy Vncles.

Exeunt.

Enter Clandio, Prince, and three or foure with Tapers

Cland. Is this the monument of Lionato?

Lord. It is my Lord.

Epitaph.

Done to death by slanderous tongues,
Was the Hero that herelies:

Death in querdon of her wrongs,

Gives her fame which neuer dies:

So the life that dyed with shame,

Lives in death with glorious fame.

Hang thou there upon the tombs,

Praising her when I am dead.

Cland. Now musick sound & sing your solemn hymne

Song.

Pardon goddesse of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight,
For the which with songs of woe,
Round about her tombe they go:
Midnight assist our moone, helpe vs to sigh and grieve.
Heauily, heauily.
Graves yawne and yeelde you dead,
Till death be uttered,
Heauily, heauily.

(thus right.

Lo. Now vnto thy bones good night, yeerely will I do

Prin. Good morrow masters, put your Torches out, The wolues haue preyed, and looke, the gentle day Before the wheelles of Phœbus, round about Dapples the drowlie East with spots of grey: Thanks to you all, and leaue vs, fare you well.

Cland. Good morrow masters, each his seuerall way.

Prin. Come let vs hence, and put on other weedes, And then to Lematoes we will goe.

Cland. And Hymen now with luckier issue speeds,

Then

Then this for whom we rendred vp this woe Exeunt.

Enter Leonato, Bene, Marg Ursula, oldman, Friar, Hero.

Friar Did I not tell you she was innocent?

Leo. So are the Prince and Claudio who accus'd her,
Upon the error that you heard debated:

But Margaret was in some fault for this,

Although against her will as it appears,

In the true course of all the question

Old Well, I am glad that aſſthing tort ſo well.

Bene. And ſo am I, being elſe by fatthenforc'd

To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it

Leo Well daughter, and you gentlewomen all,

Withdraw into a chamber by your ſelues,

And when I ſend for you, come hither maſk'd.

The Prince and Claudio promis'd by this howre

To viſit me, you know your office Brother,

You muſt be father to your brothers daughter,

And giue her to young Claudio. Exeunt Ladies.

Old Which I will doe with confirm'd countenance

Bene Friar, I muſt intreat your paines, I thinke e.

Friar. To doe what Signior?

Bene. To binde me, or vndoe me, one of them.

Signior Leonato, truth it is good Signior,

Your neece regards me with an eye of fauour.

Leo. That eye my daughter lent her, 'tis moſt true

Bene. And I doe with an eye of loue requite her.

Leo. The ſight whereof I thinke you had from me,
From Claudio, and the Prince, but what's your will?

Bened. Your answer fir is Enigmaticall,

But for my will, my will is, your good will

May ſtand with ours, this day to be conſoynd,

In the ſtate of honourable marriage,

In which (good Friar) I ſhall deſire your helpe.

Leon My heart is with your liking

Friar. And my help?

Enter Prince and Claudio, with attendants

Prin Good morrow to this faire aſſembly.

Leo. Good morrow Prince, good morrow Claudio

We heere attend you, are you yet determin'd,

To day to marry with my brothers daughter?

Claud Ile hold my minde were ſhe an Ethiope.

Leo Call her forth brother, heres the Friar ready

Prin Good morrow Benedicke, why what's the matter?

That you haue ſuch a Februarie face,

So full of froſt, of ſtorme, and cloudineſſe

Claud I thinke he thinks vpon the ſauage bull

Tuſh, feare not man, wee'll tip thy hornes with gold,

And all Europa ſhall reioyce at thee,

As once Europa did at luſty Ioue,

When he would play the noble beaſt in Ioue

Bene. Bull Ioue fir, had an amiable low,

And ſome ſuch ſtrange bull leapt your fathers Cow,

A got a Calfe in that ſame noble feat,

Much like to you, for you haue iuſt his bleat.

Enter brother, Hero, Beatrice, Margaret, Ursula

Cl For this I owe you here comes other reckonings.

Which is the Lady I muſt ſeize vpon?

Leo This ſame is ſhe, and I doe giue you her

Cl. Why then ſhe's mine, ſweet let me ſee your face.

Leon No that you ſhal not, till you take her hand,

Before this Friar, and ſweate to marry her

Cla Giue me your hand before this holy Friar,

I am your husband if you like of me.

Hero. And when I ha'd I was your other wiſe,

And when you lou'd, you were my other husband.

Cla. Another Hero?

Hero Nothing certainer.

One Hero died, but I doe liue,

And ſurely as I liue, I am a maid.

Prin. The former Hero, Hero that is dead

Leon. Shee died my Lord, but whiles her ſlander liu'd

Friar All this amazement can I qualifie,

When after that the holy rites are ended,

Ile tell you largely of faire Heroes death:

Meanwhiles let wonder ſeeme familiar.

And to the chappell let vs preſently.

Bene. Soft and faire Friar, which is Beatrice?

Beat. I anſwer to that name, what is your will?

Bene. Doe not you loue me?

Beat Why no, no more then reaſon.

Bene. Why then your Vncle, and the Prince, & Claudio, haue beene deceiu'd, they ſwore you did.

Beat Doe not you loue mee?

Bene. Troth no, no more then reaſon

Beat Why then my Coſin Margaret and Ursula
Are much deceiu'd, for they did ſweare you did

Bene They ſwore you were almoſt ſicke for me.

Beat. They ſwore you were wel-nye dead for me.

Bene. 'Tis no matter, then you doe not loue me?

Beat No truly, but in friendly recompence

Leon Come Coſin, I am ſure you loue the gentlema

Cla And Ile be ſworne vpon't, that he loues her,

For heres a paper written in his hand,

A halting ſonnet of his owne pure braine,

Faſhion'd to Beatrice.

Hero. And heeres another,

Writ in my coſins hand, ſtole from her pocket,

Containing her affection vnto Benedicke.

Bene A miracle, heres our owne hands againſt our hearts come I will haue thee, but by this light I take thee for pittie.

Beat I would not denie you, but by this good day, I yeeld vpon great perſwaſion, & partly to ſaue your life,
for I was told, you were in a conſumption.

Leon Peace I will ſtop your mouth.

Prin. How doſt thou Benedicke the married man?

Bene Ile tell thee what Prince. a Colledge of write-crackers cannot ſtout mee out of my humour, doſt thou think I care for a Satyre or an Epigram? no, if a man will be beaten with braines, a ſhall weare nothing handſome about him in briefe, ſince I do purpoſe to marry, I will thinke nothing to any purpoſe that the world can ſay a-gainſt it, and therefore neuer ſtout at me, for I haue ſaid againſt it for man is a giddy thing, and this is my con-cluſion for thy part Claudio, I did thinke to haue beaten thee, but in that thou art like to be my kiſmah, liue vn-bruis'd, and loue my coſin.

Cl I had well hop'd I wouldſt hau't dem'd Beatrice, y
I might haue cudgel'd thee out of thy ſingle life, to make thee a double dealer, which out of queſtion thou wilt be,
if my Coſin do not looke exceeding narrowly to thee

Bene. Come, come, we are friends, let's haue a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts,
and our wiues heeles.

Leon Wee'll haue dancing afterwa'd

Bene. Firſt, of my vword, therefore play muſick. Prin.
thou art ſad, get thee a wiſe, get thee a wiſe, there is no
haſt more reuerend then one tip with horn. Enter Meſ

Meſſen. My Lord, your brother Iohn is tane in ſight,
And brought with armed men backe to Meſſina.

Bene. Thinke not on him till to morrow, ile denie thee braue puniſhments for him ſtrike vp Pipers Dance.

Actus primus.

Enter Ferdinand King of Nauarre, Berowne, Longuill, and Dumaine.

Ferdinand.

Et Fame, that all hunt after in their liues,
 Liue registred vpon our brazen Tombes,
 And then grace vs in the disgrace of death
 when spight of cormorant deuouring Time,
 In' enueuour of this present breath may buy.
 That honour which shall bate his sythes keene edge,
 And make vs heyres of all eternitie
 Therefore braue Conquerour, for so you are,
 That warre against your owne affections,
 And the huge Arme of the worlds desires.
 Our late edict shall strongly stand in force,
Nauar shall be the wonder of the world
 Our Court shall be a little Achademe,
 Still and contemplatiue in liuing Art
 You three, Berowne, Dumaine, and Longuill,
 Haue sworne for three yeeres terme, to liue with me:
 My fellow Schollers, and to keepe those statutes
 That are recorded in this scedule heere.
 Your oathes are past, and now subscribe your names:
 That his owne hand may strike his honour downe,
 That violates the smallest branch heerein:
 If you are arm'd to doe, as sworne to do,
 Subscribe to your deepe oathes, and keepe it to.

Longuill. I am resolu'd, 'tis but a three yeeres fast.
 The minde shall banquet, though the body pine,
 Fat paunches haue leane pates, and dainty bits,
 Make rich the ribs, but bankerout the wits

Dumaine. My louing Lord, Dumaine is mortified,
 The grosser manner of these worlds delights,
 He throwes vpon the grosse worlds baser slaues:
 To loue, to wealth, to pompe, I pine and die,
 With all these liuing in Philosophie.

Berowne. I can but say their protestation ouer,
 So much, deare Liege, I haue already sworne,
 That is, to liue and study heere three yeeres.
 But there are other strict obseruances.
 As not to see a woman in that terme,
 Which I hope well is not enrolled there.
 And one day in a weeke to touch no foode:
 And but one meale on euery day beside:
 The which I hope is not enrolled there
 And then to sleepe but three houres in the night,
 And not be seene to winke of all the day.
 When I was wont to thinke no harme all night,
 And make a darke night too of halfe the day:

Which I hope well is not enrolled there.
 O, these are barren tasks, too hard to keepe,
 Not to see Ladies, study, fast, nor sleepe.

Ferd. Your oath is past, to passe away from these.

Berow. Let me say no my Liedge, and if you please,
 I onely swore to study with your grace,
 And stay heere in your Court for three yeeres space.

Longa. You swore to that Berowne, and to the rest.

Berow. By yea and nay sir, than I swore in rest.
 What is the end of study, let me know?

Fer. Why that to know which else wee should not know.

Ber. Things hid & bard (you meane) frō cōmon sēse.

Ferd. I, that is studies god-like recompence.

Berow. Come on then, I will sweare to studie so,
 To know the thing I am forbid to know:
 As thus, to study where I well may dine,
 When I to fast expressly am forbid.

Or studie where to meet some Mistresse fine,
 Wher Mistresses from cōmon sēse are hid.

Or hauing sworne too hard a keeping oath,
 Studie to breake it, and not breake my troth.

If studies gaine be thus, and this be so,
 Studie knowes that which yet it doth not know,
 Sweare me to this, and I will nere say no.

Ferd. These be the stops that hinder studie quite,
 And traine our intellects to vaine delight.

Berow. Why? all delights are vaine, and that most vaine
 Which with paine purchas'd, doth inherit paine,
 As painefully to poare vpon a Booke,
 To seeke the light of truth, while truth the while
 Doth falsely blinde the eye-sight of his looke:
 Light seeking light, doth light of light beguile:
 So ere you finde where light in darkenesse lies,
 Your light growes darke by losing of your eyes.
 Studie me how to please the eye indeede,
 By fixing it vpon a fairer eye,
 Who dazling so, that eye shall be his heed,
 And glue him light that it was blinded by.
 Studie is like the heauens glorious Sunne,
 That will not be deepe search'd with sawcy lookes:
 Small haue continuall plodders euer wonne,
 Saue base authoritie from others Bookes.
 These earthly Godfathers of heauens lights,
 That giue a name to euery fixed Starre,
 Haue no more profit of their shining nights,
 Then those that walke and wor not what they are.
 Too much to know, is to know nought bus fame:
 And euery Godfather can giue a name.

Fer. How well hee's read, to reason against reading.

Dum

Dum. Proceeded well, to stop all good proceeding.

Lon. Hee weedes the corne, and still lets grow the weeding.

Ber. The Spring is neare when greene geesse are a breeding.

Dum. How followes that?

Ber. Fit in his place and time.

Dum. In reason nothing.

Ber. Something then in rime

Ferd. Berowne is like an envious sneaping Frost,
That bites the first borne infants of the Spring.

Ber. Wel, say I am, why should proud Summer boast,
Before the Birds haue any cause to sing?

Why should I toy in any abortiue birth?

At Christmas I no more desire a Role,

Then with a Snow in Mayes new fangled shoves

But like of each thing that in season growes.

So you to studie now it is too late,

That were to clymb ore the house to vnlocke the gate.

Fer. Well, sit you out: go home Berowne. adue

Ber. No my good Lord, I haue sworn to stay with you
And though I haue for barbarisme spoke more,

Then for that Angell knowledge you can say,

Yet confident Ile keepe what I haue sworne,

And bide the pennance of each three yeares day

Giue me the paper, let me read the same,

And to the strictest decrees Ile write my name

Fer. How well this yeelding rescues thee from shame.

Ber. Item, That no woman shall come within a mile of my Court

Hath this bin proclaimed?

Lon. Foure dayes agoe.

Ber. Let's see the penaltie

On paine of loosing her tongue.

Who deuis'd this penaltie?

Lon. Marry that did I

Ber. Sweete Lord, and why?

Lon. To fright them hence with that dread penaltie,
A dangerous law against gentilitie.

Item, If any man be seene to talke with a woman within the tearme of three yeares, hee shall indure such publique shame as the rest of the Court shall possibly desire.

Ber. This Article my Liedge your selfe must breake,

For well you know here comes in Embassie

The French Kings daughter, with your selfe to speake

A Maide of grace and compleate maiestie,

About surrender vp of Aquitaine.

To her decrepit, sicke, and bed-rid Father

Therefore this Article is made in vaine,

Or vainly comes th'admir'd Princeesse hither.

Fer. What say you Lords?

Why, this was quite forgot

Ber. So Studie euermore is ouershot,

While it doth study to haue what it would,

It doth forget to doe the thing it should

And when it hath the thing it hunteth most,

It won as townes with fire, so won, so lost

Fer. We must of force dispenche with this Decree,

She must lye here on meere necessitie.

Ber. Necessity will make vs all forsworne

Three thousand times within this three yeeres space:

For euery man with his affects is borne,

Not by might mastered, but by speciall grace.

If I breake faith, this word shall breake for me,

I am forsworne on meere necessitie.

So to the Lawes at large I write my name,
And he that breakes them in the least degree,
Stands in attainder of eternall shame.

Suggestions are to others as to me:

But I belecue although I seeme so loth,

I am the last that will last keepe his oth.

But is there no quicke recreation granted?

Fer. I that there is, our Court you know is hanted

With a refined trausiler of Spaine,

A man in all the worlds new fashion planted,

That hath a mint of phraes in his braine

One, who the musicke of his owne vaine tongue,

Doth rauish like inchanting harmonie.

A man of complements whom right and wrong

Haue chose as vmpire of their mutinie

This childe of fancie that Armado hight,

For interim to our studies shall relate,

In high-borne words the worth of many a Knight.

From tawne Spaine lost in the worlds debate.

How you delight my Lords, I know not I,

But I protest I loue to heare him lie,

And I will vse him for my Minstrellie

Ber. Armado is a most illustrious wight,

A man of fire, new words, fashions owne Knight.

Lon. Costard the swaine and he, shall be our sport,

And so to studie, three yeeres is but short

Enter a Constable with Costard with a Letter.

Const. Which is the Dukes owne person.

Ber. This fellow, What would'st?

Con. I my selfe reprehend his owne person, for I am his graces This borough But I would see his own person in flesh and blood.

Ber. This is he

Con. Signior Arme, Arme commends you.

Thier villanie abroad, this letter will tell you more.

Clo. Sir the Contempts thereof are as touching
mee.

Fer. A letter from the magnificent Armado

Ber. How low to cuer the matter, I hope in God for high words.

Lon. A high hope for a low heauen, God grant vs patience.

Ber. To heare, or forbear hearing.

Lon. To heare meekely sir, and to laugh moderately,
or to forbear both.

Ber. Well sir, be it as the stile shall giue vs cause to clime in the merrinesse.

Clo. The matter is to me sir, as concerning laquettess.
The manner of it is, I was taken with the manner.

Ber. In what manner?

Clo. In manner and forme following sir all those three
I was scene with her in the Mannor house, sitting with her vpon the Forme, and taken following her into the Parke which put to gether, is in manner and forme following Now sir for the manner; It is the manner of a man to speake to a woman, for the forme in some forme.

Ber. For the following sir.

Clo. As it shall follow in thy correction, and God defend the right

Fer. Will you heare this Letter with attention?

Ber. As we would heare an Oracle.

Clo. Such is the simplicitie of man to haiken after the flesh.

Ferdinand

Great Deputie, the Welkins Vicegerent, and sole dam-nator of Nauar, my soules earthis God, and bodies so string patrons:

Cost. Not a vvord of Costard yet.

Ferd. So it is

Cost. It may be so: but if he say it is so, he is in telling true: but so.

Ferd. Peace,

Clow. Be to me, and euery man that dares not fight.

Ferd. No vvords,

Clow. Of other mens secrets I beseech you

Ferd. So it is besieged with sable coloured melancholie, I did commend the blacke oppressing humour to the most wholesome Physicke of thy health-giving ayre. And as I am a Gentleman, betooke my selfe to walke the time when? about the sixt houre, when beasts most graze, birds best pecke, and men sit downe to that nourishment which is called supper. So much for the time when. Now for the ground which? which I meane I walkt upon, it is ycliped, Thy Parke. Then for the place where? where I meane I did encounter that obscene and most preposterous euent that draweth from my snow-white pen
the ebon coloured Inke, which here thou viewest, behold-st, suruayest, or seest. But to the place where? It standeth North North east and by East from the West corner of thy curious knotted garden; There did I see that low spirited Swaine, that base Minow of thy myrth, (Clown mee?)
that unlettered small knowing soule, (Clow mee?) that shallow vassall (Clow Still mee?) which as I remember, high Co-rard, (Clow O mee?) sorted and comforted contrary to thy established proclaimed Edict and Continet, Cannon: Which with, & with, but with this I passion to say wherewith.

Clow. With a Wench

Ferd. With a childe of our Grandmother Eve, a female; or for thy more sweet understanding a woman him, I (as my ever esteemed dutie prickes me on) haue sent to thee, to receive the meed of punishment by thy sweet Graces Officer Anthony Dull, a man of good repute, carriage, bearing, & estimation.

Anth. Me, an't shall please you? I am Anthony Dull.

Ferd. For Iaquenetta (so is the weaker vessell called) which I apprehended with the aforesaid Swaine, I keepe her as a vessell of thy Lawes firre, and shall at the least of thy sweet notice, bring her to triall. Thine in all complements of denoted and heart-burning heat of dutie.

Don Adriana de Armado.

Ber. This is not so well as I looked for, but the best that euer I heard.

Fer. I the best, for the worst. But sirra, What say you to this?

Clow. Sir I confesse the Wench.

Fer. Did you heare the Proclamation?

Clow. I doe confesse much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.

Fer. It was proclaimed a yeeres impriloment to bee taken with a Wench

Clow. I was taken with none sir, I was taken vvith a Damofell.

Fer. Well, it was proclaimed Damofell

Clow. This was no Damofell neyther sir, shee was a Virgin

Fer. It is so varried to, for it was proclaimed Virgin

Clow. If it were, I denie her Virginitie. I was taken with a Maide.

Fer. This Maide will not serue your turne sir.

Clow. This Maide will serue my turne sir

Kim. Sir I will pronounce your sentence: You shall fast a Week, with Branne and water.

Clow. I had rather pray a Moneth with Mutton and Porridge.

Kim. And Don Armado shall be your keeper.

My Lord Berowne, see him deliuer'd ore,
And goe we Lords to put in practice that,
Which each to other hath so strongly sworne.

Bero. Ile lay my head to any good mans hat,
These oathes and lawes will proue an idle scoorne.
Sirra, come on.

Clow. I suffer for the truth sir: for true it is, I was taken with Iaquenetta, and Iaquenetta is a true girle, and therefore welcome the fowre cup of prosperitie, afflicty, on any one day smile againe, and vtill then sit downe sorrow.

Exit.

Enter Armado and Moth his Page.

Arma. Boy, What signe is it when a man of great spirit growes melancholy?

Boy. A great signe sir, that he will looke sad.

Brag. Why? sadnesse is one and the selfe-same thing
deare impe

Boy. No no, O Lord sir no.

Brag. How canst thou part sadnesse and melancholy my tender Imenall?

Boy. Py a familiar demonstration of the working, my tough signeur.

Brag. Why tough signeur? Why tough signeur?

Boy. Why tender Imenall? Why tender Imenall?

Brag. I spoke it tender Imenall, as a congruent apathaton, appertaining to thy young daies, which we may nominate tender.

Boy. And I tough signeur, as an appertinent title to your olde time, which we may name tough.

Brag. Pretty and apt.

Boy. How meane you sir, I pretty, and my say ng apt?
or I apt, and my saying prettie?

Brag. Thou prett'y because little.

Boy. Little pretty, because little, wherefore apt?

Brag. And therefore apt, because quicke.

Boy. Speake you this in my praise Master?

Brag. In thy condigne praisie.

Boy. I will praise an Ecle with the same praise

Brag. What? that an Ecle is ingenuous.

Boy. That an Ecle is quicke.

Brag. I doe say thou art quicke in answers. Thou heat'st my bloud.

Boy. I am answer'd sir.

Brag. I loue not to be crost.

Boy. He speakes the meere contrary, crosses loue not
Br. I haue promis'd to study ny yerres with the Duke.

Boy. You may doe it in an houre sir.

Brag. Impossible.

Boy. How many is one thrice told?

Bra. I am ill at reckning, it fits the spirit of a Tapster.

Boy. You are a gentleman and a gamester sir

Brag. I confesse both, they are both the varnish of a compleat man.

Boy. Then I am sure you know how much the grosse summe of deus-see amounts to.

Brag. It doth amount to one more then two.

Boy. Which the base vulgar call three.

Br True Boy. Why sir is this such a peece of study?
Now here's three studied, ere you'll thrice wink, & how easse it is to put yerres to the word three, and study three yeeres in two words, the dancing horse will tell you

Brag. A most fine Figure.

Boy. To proue you a Cypher.

Brag. I will heereupon confesse I am in loue : and as it is bale for a Souldier to loue ; so am I in loue with a base wench If drawing my sword against the humour of affection, would deliuer mee from the reprobate thought of it, I would take Desire prisoner, and ranfome him to any French Courtier for a new deuise'd Turtie. I thinke scorne to sigh, me thinkes I should out-sweare Cupid. Comfort me Boy, What great men haue beene in loue?

Boy. Hercules Master.

Brag. Most sweete Hercules : more authority deare Boy, name more; and sweet my childe let them be men of good repute and carriage.

Boy. Sampson Master, he was a man of good carriage, great carriage for hee carried the Towne-gates on his backe like a Porter and he was in loue

Brag. O well-knit Sampson, strong ioynted Sampson; I doe excell thee in my rapier, as much as thou didst mee in carrying gates. I am in loue too. Who was Sampsons loue my deare Moth?

Boy. A Woman, Master.

Brag. Of what complexion?

Boy. Of all the foure, or the three, or the two, or one of the foure

Brag. Tell me precisely of what complexion?

Boy. Of the sea-water Greene sir

Brag. Is that one of the foure complexions?

Boy. As I haue read sir, and the best of them too.

Brag. Greene indeed is the colour of Lovers : but to haue a Loue of that colour, methinkes Sampson had small reason for it. He surely affected her for her wit.

Boy. It was so sir, for she had a Greene wit.

Brag. My Loue is most immaculate white and red

Boy. Most immaculate thoughts Master, are mask'd vnder such colours

Brag. Define, define, well educated infant.

Boy. My fathers witte, and my mothers tongue assist mee.

Brag. Sweet inuocation of a childe, most pretty and pathetically.

Boy. If shee be made of white and red,

Her faults will nere be knowne :

For blush-in cheekes by faults are bred.

And feares by pale white showne :

Then if she feare, or be to blame,

By this you shall not know,

For still her cheekes possesse the same,

Which nature she doth owe

A dangerous rime master against the reason of white and redde.

Brag. Is there not a ballet Boy, of the King and the Begger?

Boy. The world was very guilty of such a Ballet some three ages since, but I thinke now tis not to be found. or if it were, it would neither serue for the writing, nor the tune.

Brag. I will haue that subiect newly writ ore, that I may example my digression by some mighty president. Boy, I doe loue that Countrey gyle that I tooke in the Parke with the rationall binde Cosbard: shee deserues well.

Boy. To bee whip'd : and yet a better loue then my Master.

Brag. Sing Boy, my spirit grows heavy in ioue.

Boy. And that's great maruell, louing a light wench.

Brag. I say sing

Boy. Forbeare till this company be past.

Enter Clowne, Constable, and Wench.

Const. Sir, the Dukes pleasure, is that you keepe Cosbard safe, and you must let him take no delight, nor no penance, but hee must fast three daies a weeke. for this Damsell, I must keepe her at the Parke, shee is alowd for the Day-woman Fare you well Exit.

Brag. I do betray my selfe with blushing-Maide.

Maid. Man.

Brag. I wil visit thee at the Lodge.

Maid. That's here by

Brag. I know where it is situate.

Maid. Lord how wise you are!

Brag. I will tell thee wonders.

Maid. With what face?

Brag. I loue thee.

Maid. So I heard you say.

Brag. And so farewell

Maid. Faire weather after you

Clow. Come Iaquenetta, away

Exit.

Brag. Villaine, thou shalt fast for thy offences ere thou be pardoned.

Clow. Well sir, I hope when I doe it, I shall doe it on a full stomacke

Brag. Thou shalt be heauily punished.

Clow. I am more bound to you then your fellowes, for they are but lightly rewarded

Clow. Take away this villaine, shur him vp.

Boy. Come you transgressing slaue, away.

Clow. Let mee not bee pent vp sir, I will fast being loose.

Boy. No sir, that were fast and loose : thou shalt to prison

Clow. Well, if euer I do see the merry dayes of desolation that I haue seene, some shall see

Boy. What shall some see?

Clow. Nay nothing, Master Moth, but what they looke vpon It is not for prisoners to be silent in their words, and therefore I will say nothing I thanke God, I haue as little patience as another man, and therefore I can be quiet Exit.

Brag. I doe affect the very ground (which is base) where her shoe (which is baser) guided by her foote (which is basest) doth tread. I shall be forworn (which is a great argument of falshood) if I loue And how can that be true loue, which is falsly attempted? Loue is a familiar, Loue is a Duell There is no euill Angell but Loue, yet Sampson was so tempted, and he had an excellent strength Yet was Salomon so seduced, and hee had a very good witte. Cupids Butshaft is too hard for Hercules Clubbe, and therefore too much ods for a Spaniards Rapier The first and second cause will not serue my turne. the Passado hee respects not, the Duello he regards not ; his disgrace is to be called Boy, but his glorie is to subdue men Aduce Valour, rust Rapier, bee still Drum, for your manager is in loue ; yea hee loueth. Assist me some extemporall god of Rime, for I am sure I shall turne Sonnet. Deuise Wit, write Pen, for I am for whole volumes in folio. Exit.

Finis Alim Primum.

Her I know you did.

Rosa. How needlesse was it then to ask the question?

Her. You must not be so quicke.

Rosa. 'Tis long of you y<sup>e</sup> spur me with such questions.

Her. Your wit's too hot, it speeds too fast, 'twill tire.

Rosa. Not till it leaue the Rider in the mire.

Her. What time a day?

Rosa. The howre that fooles should aske.

Her. Now faire befall your maske.

Rosa. Faire fall the face it couers.

Her. And tend you many louers.

Rosa. Amch, so you benone

Her. Nay then will I be gone.

Kim. Madame, your father heere doth intimate,

The payment of a hundred thousand Crownes,

Being but th one halfe, of an intire summe,

Disburfed by my father in his warres.

But say that he, or we, as neither haue

Receiu'd that summe; yet there remaines vnpaid

A hundred thousand more. in surety of the which,

One part of Aquitaine is bound to vs,

Although not valued to the moneys worth.

If then the King your father will restore

But that one halfe which is vn satisfied,

We will giue vp our right in Aquitaine,

And hold faire friendship with his Maiestie

But that it seemes he little purposeth,

For here he doth demand to haue repaire,

An hundred thousand Crownes, and not demands

One payment of a hundred thousand Crownes,

To haue his title liue in Aquitaine

Which we much rather had depart withall,

And haue the money by our father lent,

Then Aquitaine, so guelded as it is.

Deare Princeesse, were not his requests so farre

From reasons yeelding, your faire selfe should make

A yeelding 'gainst some reason in my brest,

And goe well satisfied to France againe.

Prin. You doe the King my Father too much wrong,

And wrong the reputation of your name,

In so vnseeming to confesse receyt

Of that which hath so faithfully beene paid.

Kim. I doe protest I neuer heard of it,

And if you proue it, Ile repay it backe,

Or yeeld vp Aquitaine.

Prin. We arrest your word

Boyet, you can produce acquitances

For such a summe, from speciall Officers,

Of Charles his Father.

Kim. Satisfie me so.

Boyet So please your Grace, the packet is not come

Where that and other specialties are bound

To morrow you shall haue a sight of them

Kim. It shall suffice me; at which interview,

All liberall reason would I yeeld vnto:

Meane time, receiue such welcome at my hand,

As Honour, without breach of Honour may

Make tender of, to thy true worthinesse.

You may not come faire Princeesse in my gates,

But heere without you shall be so receiu'd,

As you shall deeme your selfe lodg'd in my house,

Though so dem'd farther harbour in my house:

Your owne good thoughts excuse me, and farewell,

To morrow we shall visit you againe.

Prin. Sweet health & faire desires conserue your grace.

Kim. Thy own wish wish I thee in every place. Exit.

Boy. Lady, I will commend you to my owne heart.

La Ro. Pray you doe my commendations,
I would be glad to see it.

Boy. I would you heard it grone.

La Ro. Is the soule sicke?

Boy. Sicke at the heart

La Ro. Alacke, let it bloud.

Boy. Would that doe it good?

La Ro. My Physicke saies I.

Boy. Will you prick't with your eye

La Ro. No point, with my knife.

Boy. Now God saue thy life

La Ro. And yours from long liuing.

Her. I cannot stay thanki-giuing.

Exit.

Enter Dumane

Dum. Sir, I pry you a word What Lady is that same?

Boy. The heire of Alanson, Rosalin her name

Dum. A gallant Lady, Mounfier saie you well

Long. I beseech you a word what is she in the white?

Boy. A woman sometimes, if you saw her in the light

Long. Perchance light in the light I desire her name

Boy. Shee hath but one for her selfe,

To desire that were a shame.

Long. Pray you sir, whole daughter?

Boy. Her Mothers, I haue heard.

Long. Gods blessing v your beard.

Boy. Good sir be not offended,

Shee is an heyre of Faulconbridge.

Long. Nay, my choller is ended.

Shee is a most sweet Lady.

Exit Long.

Boy. Not vnlike sir, that may be.

Enter Beroune.

Her. What's her name in the cap.

Boy. Katherine by good hap

Her. Is she wedded, or no

Boy. To her will sir, or so.

Her. You are welcome sir, adiew

Boy. Fare well to me sir, and welcome to you. Exit.

La Ma. That last is Beroune, the merry mad-cap Lord,
Not a word with him, but a self

Boy. And euery self but a word.

Prin. It was well done of you to take him at his word

Boy. I was as willing to grapple, as he was to boord.

La Ma. Two hot Sheepes marie

And wherefore not Ships? (lips.)

Boy. No Sheep (sweet Lamb) vnlesse we feed on your

La. You Sheep & I pasture shall that finishe the self?

Boy. So you grant pasture for me.

La. Not so gentle beast.

My lips are no Common, though seuerall they be.

Bo. Belonging to whom?

La. To my fortunes and me.

Prin. Good wits will be angling, but gentles agree.

This ciuill warre of wits were much better vsed

On Namar and his bookemen, for heere 'tis abus'd.

Bo. If my obseruation (which very seldom lies

By the hearts still rhetoricke, disclosed with eyes)

Deceiue me not now, Namar is infected!

Prin. With what?

Bo. With that which we Louers intide affected.

Prin. Your reason.

Bo. Why all his behauiours doe make their roare,

To the court of his eye, peeping through desire.

His hart like an Agot With your print impressed,

Proud

Loves Labour's lost.

Proud with his forme, in his eie pride expressed.
 His tongue all impatient to speake and not see,
 Did tumble with haste in his eie-sight to be,
 All fences to that fence did make their repaire,
 To feele onely looking on fairest of faire:
 Me thought all his fences were lockt in his eye,
 As Jewels in Christall for some Prince to buy. (glasse,
 Who tending their own worth from whence they were
 Did point out to buy them along as you past
 That all eyes saw his eies enchanted with gazes,
 His faces owne margent did coate such amazes,
 Ile give you Aquitaine, and all that is his,
 And you give him for my sake, but one louing Kisse.
Prim. Come to our Pavillion, Boyet is disposed.
Bra. But to speak that in words, which his eie hath dif-
 I onelie haue made a mouth of his eie, (clos'd.
 By adding a tongue, which I know will not lie
Lad. Ro. Thou art an old Loue-monger, and speakest skilfully.
Lad Ma He is Cupid's Grandfather, and learns news
 of him
Lad 2. Then was Venus like her mother, for her father is but grim.
Boy. Do you heare my mad wenches?
Lad. 1. No
Boy. What then, do you see?
Lad 2. I, our way to be gone.
Boy. You are too hard for me.

Actus Tertius.

Enter Broggart and Boy.
Song.

Bra. Warble childe, make passionate my sense of hear-
 ring.
Boy. Concolinel.

Brag. Sweete Ayer, go tenderesse of yeares take this Key, give enlargement to the swaine, bring him fe-stinaty hither: I must imploy him in a letter to my Loue.

Boy. Will you win your loue with a French braule?
Bra. How meanest thou, brauling in French?

Boy. No my compleat master, but to ligge off a tune at the tongues end, canarie to it with the feete, humour
 it with turning vp your eie sigh a note and sing a note, sometime through the throte. if you swallowed loue with singing, loue sometime through nose as if you snuft vp loue by smelling loue with your hat penthouselike ore the shop of your eies, with your armes crost on your thinbellie doublet, like a Rabbet on a spit, or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting, and keepe not too long in one tune, but a snip and away.
 these are complements, these are humours, these be traie nice wenches that would be betrayed without these, and make them men of note do you note men that most are affected to these?

Brag. How hast thou purchased this experience?
Boy. By my penne of obseruation.

Brag. But O, but O.

Boy. The Hobbie-horse is forgot

Bra. Cal'st thou my loue Hobbie-horse.

Boy. No Master, the Hobbie-horse is but a Colt, and and your Loue perhaps, a Hacknie

But haue you forgot your Loue?
Brag. Almost I had.

Boy. Negligent student, learne her by heart.
Brag. By heart, and in heart Boy.

Boy. And out of heart Master: all those three I will proue.

Brag. What wilt thou proue?

Boy. A man, if I lue (and this) by, in, and without, vpon on the instant: by heare you loue her, because your heart cannot come by her: in heart you loue her, because your heart is in loue with her: and out of heart you loue her,
 being out of heart that you cannot enioy her.

Brag. I am all these three.

Boy. And three times as much more, and yet nothing at all.

Brag. Fetch hither the Swaine, he must carrie mee a letter.

Boy. A messaga well simpatis'd, a Horse to be em-bassadour for an Ass.

Brag. Ha, ha, What saiest thou?

Boy. Marrie sir, you must send the Ass vpon the Horse for he is verie slow gated: but I goe

Brag. The way is but short, away.
Boy. As swift as Lead sir.

Brag. Thy meaning prettie ingenious, is not Lead a mettall heauie, dull, and slow?

Boy. Minnime honest Master, or rather Master no.

Brag. I say Lead is slow.

Boy. You are too swift sir to say so.

Brag. Sweete smoke of Rhetorike,
 Is that Lead slow which a fir'd from a Gunne?

He reputes for a Cannon, and the Buller that's he:
 I shoore thee at the Swaine.

Boy. Thump then, and I see.
Bra. A most acute iuuenall, voluble and free of grace,
 By thy fauour sweet Welkin, I must sigh in thy face.
 Most rude melancholie, Walour-glues thee place.
 My Herald is return'd.

Enter Page and Clowne.

Page. A wonder-Master, here's a Coffard broken in a shin.

Ar. Some enigma, some riddle, come, thy Lenny begin.

Cl. No eg na, no riddle, no Lenny, no salue in thee male sir. Or sir, Plantan, a plaine Plantan. Ar. Lenny, no
Lenny, no Salue sir, but a Plantan.

Ar. By verue thou inforcest laughter, thy sillie thought, my spleene, the heauing of my lunge prouokes me to ridiculous smyling: O pardon me my stars, doth the inconsiderate take salue for Lenny, and the word len- salue for a salue?

Page. Doe the wise thinke them other, is not Lenny a
salue?
Ar. No Page, it is an epilogue or discourse to make
 Some obscure precedence that hath tofore bin salue.
 Now will I begin your morrall, and do you follow with my Lenny.

The Foxe, the Ape, and the Humble-Bee,
 Were still at oddes, being but three.

Arm. Vntill the Goose came out of doore,
 Staying the oddes by adding foure.

Page. A good Lenny, ending in the Goose: would you desire more?

Cl. The Boy hath sold him a bargaine, a Goose, that's flat

Sir, your penny-worth is good, and your Goose be fat
To sell a bargain well is as cunning as fast and loose:
Let me see a fat Lenny, that's a fat Goose.

Ar. Come hither, come hither:

How did this argument begin?

Boy By saying that a Coffard was broken in a shin.

Then call'd you for the Lenny.

Clow. True, and I for a Plantan:

Thus came your argument in.

Then the Boyes sat Lenny, the Goose that you bought,
And he ended the market.

Ar. But tell me How was there a Coffard broken in a shin?

Pag. I will tell you senciably.

Clow. Thou hast no feeling of it Moth,
I will speake that Lenny.

I Coffard running out, that was safely within,
Fell ouer the threshold, and broke my shin.

Arm We will talke no more of this matter.

Clow Till there be more matter in the shin.

Arm. Sirra Coffard, I will infranchise thee.

Clow O, marrie me to one Francis, I smell some Lenny, some Goose in this.

Arm. By my sweete soule, I meane, setting thee at libertie.
Entredoming thy person: thou wast emured, restrained, captiuized, bound.

Clow. True, true, and now you will be my purgation,
and let me loose.

Arm I giue thee thy libertie, set thee from durance, and in lieu thereof, impose on thee nothing but this Beare this significant to the countrey Maide Inguenetta:
there is remuneration, for the best ward of mine honour
is rewarding my dependants Moth, follow.

Pag. Like the sequell I

Signeur Coffard adew

Exit.

Clow. My sweete ounce of mans flesh, my in-conis
Iew Now will I looke to his remuneration.
Remuneration. O, that's the Latine word for three-farthings: Three-farthings remu-er-ation, What's the price of this yncle? I, d. no, Ile giue you a remuneration. Why?
It carries it remuneration. Why? It is a fairer name then a French-Crowne I will neuer buy and sell out of this word.

Enter Berowne.

Ber. O my good knaue Coffard, exceedingly well met

Clow Pray you sir, How much Carnation Ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration?

Ber. What is a remuneration?

Coff. Marrie sir, halfe pennie farthing

Ber O, Why then threefarthings worth of Silke.

Coff. I thanke your worship, God be wy you.

Ber. O stay slaue, I must employ thee.

As thou wilt win my fayour, good my knaue,
Doe one thing for me that I shall intreate.

Clow. What would you haue it done sir?

Ber. O this after-noon.

Clow. Well, I will doe it sir. Fare you well

Ber. O thou knowest not what it is.

Clow. I shall know sir, when I haue done it.

Ber. Why willaue thou must know first.

Clow I wil come to your worship to morrow morning.

Ber. It must be done this after-noon.

Marke slaue, it is but this:

The Princessse comes to haue here in the Park,

And in her traine there is a gentle Ladie:
When tongues speak sweetly, then they name her name,
And Rosaline they call her, aske for her:

And to her white hand see thou do commend

This seal'd-up counsaile. Ther's thy guerdon: goe

Clow. Gardon, O sweete gardon, better then remuneration, a leuenpence-farthing better: most sweete gar-don I will doe it sir in print. gardon, remuneration.

Exit.

Ber O, and I forsooth in loue,

I that haue beene loues whip?

A verie Beadle to a humerous sigh: A Criticke,

Nay, a right-watch Constable.

A domineering pedant ore the Boy,

Then whom no mortall so magnificent,

This wimpled, whyning, purblinde waiward Boy,

This signior Iunio gyant drawfe, don Cupid,

Regent of Loue-rimes, Lord of folded armes,

Th'annointed soueraigne of fishes and groanes.

Liedge of all loyterers and malecontents.

Dread Prince of Placcats, King of Codpeeces

Sole Emperor and great generall

Of trotting Parrators (O my little heart)

And I to be a Corporall of his field,

And weare his colours like a Tumblers hoope

What? I loue, I sue, I seeke a wife,

A woman that is like a Germane Cloake,

Still a repairing euer out of frame,

And neuer going a right, being a Watch.

But being watcht, that it may still goe right.

Nay, to be persurde, which is worst of all

And among three, to loue the worst of all,

A whittly wanton, with a veluet brow.

With two pitch bals stucke in her face for eyes.

I, and by heauen, one that will doe the deede,

Though Argus were her Eunuch and her garde

And I to sigh for her, to watch for her,

To pray for her, go to it is a plague

That Cupid will impose for my neglect,

Of his almighty dreadfull little might

Well, I will loue, write, sigh, pray, sue, giue,

Some men must loue my Lady, and some lone

Actus Quartus.

Enter the Princessse, a Forrester, her Ladies, and her Lords

Qu. Was that the King that spur'd his horse so hard,
Against the steepe vprising of the hill?

Boy. I know not, but I thinke it was not he

Qu. Who ere a was, a shew'd a mounting mind.

Well Lords, to day we shall haue our dispatch,

On Satcday we will returne to FRANCE.

Then Forrester my friend, Where is the Bush

That we must stand and play the murtherer in?

For. Hereby vpon the edge of yonder Coppice,

Around where you may make the fairest shoote.

Qu. I thanke my beautie, I am faire that shoote,

And thereupon thou speakest the fairest shoote

For. Pardon me Madam, for I meant not so.

Qu. What, what? First praise me, & then again say no.
O shoot his pride. Not faire? alacke for woe.

For Yes

For. Yes Madam faire

Qu. Nay, neuer paint me now,
Where faire is not, praise cannot mend the brow.
Here (good my glasse) take this for telling true:
Faire paiement for foule words, is more then due.

For. Nothing but faire is that which you inherit.

Qu. See, see, my beautie will be sau'd by merit.
O heresie in faire, fit for these dayes,
A giuing hand, though foule, shall haue faire praise.
But come, the Bow Now Mercie goes to kill,
And shooting well, is then accounted ill
Thus will I saue my credit in the shoote,
Not wounding, pittie would not let me do't
If wounding, then it was to shew my skill,
That more for praie, then purpose meant to kill.
And out of question, so it is sometimes:
Glory growes guiltie of detested crimes,
When for Fancies sake, for praise an outward part,
We bend to that, the working of the hart.
As I for praise alone now teeke to spill
The poore Deeres blood that my heart meanes no ill.

Boy. Do not curst wibes hold that selfe-soueraigntie Onely for praise sake, when they strue to be Lords ore their Lords?

Qu. Onely for praise, and praise we may afford,
To any Lady that subdewes a Lord.

Enter Clowne

Boy. Here comes a member of the common-wealth.

Clo. God dig-you denall, pray you which is the head
Lady?

Qu. Thou shalt know her fellow, by the rest that haue
no heads

Clo. Which is the greatest Lady, the highest?

Qu. The thickest, and the tallest.

Clo. The thickest, & the tallest. it is so, truth is truth.
And your waste Mistis, were as slender as my wit,
One a these Maides girdles for your waste should be fit.
Are not you the chiefe womā? You are the thickest here?

Qu. What's your will fir? What's your will?

Clo. I haue a Letter from Monsier Berowne,
To one I ady Rosaline

Qu. O thy letter, thy letter! He's a good friend of mine.
Stand a side good bearer.

Boyet, you can carue,
Breake vp this Capon.

Boyet. I am bound to serue.
This Letter is mistooke: it importeth none here
It is writ to Isabellina.

Qu. We will reade it, I sweare.
Breake the necke of the Waxe, and euery one giue eare.

Boyet reads.

the King (for so stands the comparison) thou the Beg-ger, for so witnesseth thy lowlinesse. Shall I command thy loue? I may. Shall I enforce thy loue? I could.
Shall I entreate thy loue? I will. What, shalt thou exchange for ragges, robes. for titles titles, for thy selfe
mee. Thus expecting thy reply, I prophane my lips on thy foote, my eyes on thy picture, and my heart on thy euerie part.

Thine in the dearest designe of industrie;

Don Adriana de Armatho.

Thus dost thou heare the Nemean Lion roare,
Gainst thee thou Lambe, that standest as his pray:
Submissiue fall his princely feete before,
And he from forrage will incline to play.
But if thou strue (poore foule) what art thou then?
Foode for his rage, repasture for his den

Qu. What plume of feathers is hee that indited this Letter? What veine? What Wethercocke? Did you euer heare better?

Boy. I am much deceiued, but I remember the stile.

Qu. Else your memorie is bad, going ore it erewhile.

Boy. This Armado is a Spirand that keeps here in court
A Phantasmie, a Monarcho, and one that makes sport
To the Prince and his Booke-mates.

Qu. Thou fellow, a word
Who gaue thee this Letter?

Clow. I told you, my Lord.

Qu. To whom should'st thou giue it?

Clo. From my Lord to my Lady

Qu. From which Lord, to which Lady?

Clo. From my Lord Berowne, a good master of mine,
To a Lady of France, that he call'd Rosaline.

Qu. Thou hast mistaken his letter. Come Lords away.
Here I weete, put vp this, 'twill be thine another day.

Exeunt.

Boy. Who is the shooter? Who is the shooter?

Rosa. Shall I teach you to know.

Boy. I may content of beautie

Rosa. Why she that beares the Bow Finely put off.

Boy. My Lady goes to kill hornes, but if thou marrie,
Hang me by the necke, if hornes that yeare miscarrie.
Finely put on

Rosa. Well then, I am the shooter.

Boy. And who is your Deare?

Rosa. If we choose by the hornes, your selfe come not neare. Finely put on indeede.

Maria. You still wrangle with her Boyet, and shee strikes at the brow.

Boyet. But she her selfe is hit lower:
Haue I hit her now.

Rosa. Shall I come vpon thee with an old saying, that was a man when King Pippin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it.

Boyet. So I may answere thee with one as old that was a woman when Queene Ginouer of Brittaine was a little wench, as touching the hit it.

Rosa. Thou

Rafa. Thou canst not hit it, hit it, hit it,
Thou canst not hit it my good man.

Boy. I cannot, cannot, cannot:

And I cannot, another can. Exit.

Clo. By my troth most pleasant, how both did fit it.

Mar. A marke marvellous well shot, for they both did hit.

Boy. A mark, O marke but that marke: a marke saies my Lady.

Let the mark haue a pricke in't, to meat at, if it may be.

Mar. Wide a'th bow hand, yfaith your hand is out.

Clo. Indeepe a'must shoote nearer, or heele nere hit the clout.

Boy. And if my hand be out, then belike your hand
is in

Clo. Then will thee get the vpshoot by cleauing the
is in.

Ma. Come, come, you talke greasely, your lips grow
foule

Clo. She's too hard for you at pricks, sir challenge her to boule

Boy. I feare too much rubbing: good night my good Oule.

Clo. By my soule a Swaine, a most simple Clowne.
Lord, Lord, how the Ladies and I haue put him downe.
O my troth most sweete icells, most inconie vulgar wit,
When it comes so smoothly off, so obscenely, as it were,
so fit.

Armather ath to the side, O a most dainty man,
To see him walke before a Lady, and to beare her Fan
To see him kisse his hand, and how most sweetly a will swaere.

And his Page at other side, that handfull of wit,
Ah heauens, it is most pathetical nit.

Sowla, sowla

Exeunt

Shoote within.

Enter Dull, Holofernes, the Pedant and Nathaniel

Nat. Very seuerent sport truly, and done in the t-mony of a good conscience

Ped. The Deare was (as you know) sanguis in blood, ripe as a Pomwater, who now hangeth like a Jewell in the eare of Celo the skie, the welken the heaven, and anon fallerh like a Crab on the face of Terra, the soyle, the land, the earth.

Curat. Nath. Truly M. Holofernes, the epythithes are sweetly varied like a scholler at the least but sir I assure ye, it was a Bucke of the first head

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, haud credo.

Dul. 'Twas not a haud credo, 'twas a Pricket

Hol. Most barbarous intimation: yet a kinde of insination, as it were in via, in way of explication facere. as it were replication, or rather ostensare, to shew as it were his inclination after his vndressed, vnpolished, vneduca-ted, vnpruned, vntrained, or rather vnlettered, or rather reft vnconfirmed fashion, to insert againe my haud credo for a Deare.

Dul. I said the Deare was not a haud credo, 'twas a Pricket.

Hol. Twice sod simplicitie, bu colius, O thou monster Ignorance, how deformed doost thou looke,

Nath. Sir hee hath neuer fed of the dainties that are bred in a booke.

He hath not eate paper as it were:

He hath not drunke inke.

His intellect is not replenished, hee is onely an animal,
onely sensible in the duller parts and such barren plants are set before vs, that we thankfull should be. which we taste and feeling, are for those parts that doe fructifie in vs more then he.

For as it would ill become me to be vaine, indiscreet, or a foole;

So were there a patch set on Learning, to see him in a Schoole

But omne bene say I, being of an old Fathers minde,
Many can brooke the weather, that loue not the winde

Dul. You two are book-men: Can you tell by your wit, What was a month old at Cains birth, that's not fife weekes old as yet?

Hol. Dilissima Goodman Dull, dilissima Goodman
Dull.

Dul. What is dilissima?

Nath. A title to Phebe, to Luna, to the Moone

Hol. The Moone was a month old when Adam was no more. (score)

And wrought not to fife-weekes when he came to fife-
Th'allusion holds in the Exchange

Dul. 'Tis true indeede, the Collusion holds in the Exchange.

Hol. God comfort thy capacity, I say th'allusion holds in the Exchange.

Dul. And I say the polusion holds in the Exchange:
for the Moone is neuer but a month old and I say beside that, 'twas a Pricket that the Princesse kill'd

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you heare an extemporall Epytaph on the death of the Deare, and to humout the ignorant call d the Deare, the Princesse kill'd a Pricket.

Nath. Perge, good M. Holofernes, perge, so it shall please you to abrogate scurilitie.

Hol. I will something affect the letter, for it argues facilitie.

The prayfull Princesse pearst and prickt

a prettie pleasing Pricket,

Some say a Sore, but not a sore,

ill now made sore with shooting.

The Dogges did yell, put ell to Sore,

then Sorell jumps from the Pricket:

Or Pricket-sore, or else Sorell,

the people fall a hoeting.

If Sore be sore, then ell to Sore,

makes fiftie sores O Sorell:

Of one sore I an hundred make

by adding but one more L.

Nath. A rare talent.

Dul. If a talent be a claw, looke how he clawes him with a talent

Nath. This is a gift that I haue simple: simple, a foolish extrauagant spirit, full of formes, figures, shapcs, objects, Ideas, apprehensions, motions, reuolutions. These are begot in the ventricle of memorie, nourisht in the wombe of primater, and deliuered vpon the mellowing of occasion: but the gift is good in those in whom it is acute, and I am thankfull for it.

Hol. Sir, I praise the Lord for you, and so may my panshioners, for their Sonnes are well tutor'd by you, and their Daughters profit very greatly vnder you: you are a good member of the common-wealth.

Nath. Mehurle, If their Sonnes be ingenuous, they shall shall want no instruction; If their Daughters be capable,

I will put it to them. But Vir sapi. qui panchi rogatur, & soule Feminine salutech vs.

Enter Jaquenetta and the Clowne.

Iagu. God giue you good morrow Mr. Person

Narb. Master Person, quasi Person? And if one should be perst, Which is the one?

Cl. Marry M. Schoolemaster, hee that is likest to a hogthead.

Narb. Of persting a Hogthead, a good luster of conceit in a turp of Earth, Fire enough for a Flint, Pearle enough for a Swine: 'tis prettie, it is well

Iagu. Good Master Parson be so good as reade mee this Letter, it was giuen mee by Costard, and sent mee from Don Armatho. I beseech you reade it.

Narb. Facile precor gellidus, quando pecas omnia sub um- brarumminat, and so forth. Ah good old Mantuan, I may speake of thee as the traueiler doth of Venice, ven- chie, venchia, que non te vnde, que non te perreche Old Man- tuam, old Mantuan. Who vnderstandeth thee not, ut re- fol la m fa. Vnder pardon sir, What are the contents? or rather as Horrace sayes in his, What my soule verses.

Hol. I sir, and very learned.

Nath. Let me heare a stasse, a stanze, a verse, Lege do- mini.

If Loue make me forsworne, how shall I sweare to loue?
Ah neuer faith could hold, if not to beautie vowed.

Though to my selfe forsworn, to thee Ile faithfull proue.
Those thoughts to mee were Okes, to thee like Osiers bowed.

Studie his byas leaues, and makes his booke thine eyes.
Where all those pleasures lue; that Art would comprehend.

If knowledge be the marke, to know thee shall suffice.
Well learned is that tongue, that well can thee commend.
All ignorant that soule, that sees thee without wonder.
Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire;
Thy eye Ioues lightning beares, thy voyce his dreadfull thunder.

Which not to anger bent, is musique, and sweet fire.
Celestiall as thou art, Oh pardon loue this wrong,
That sings heauens praise, with such an earthly tongue.

Ped. You finde not the apostrophas, and so misse the accent. Let me superuise the cangener.

Narb. Here are onely numbers ratified, but for the elegancy, facility, & golden cadence of poesie caret. O- niddius Naso was the man. And why in deed Naso, but for smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy? the jerkes of inuention imitarie is nothing. So doth the Hound his master, the Ape his keeper, the tyred Horse his rider: But Damofella virgin, Was this directed to
you?

Iag. I sit from one mounsier Berowne, one of the strange Queenes Lords.

Narb. I will ouerglance the superscript.

To the snow-white hand of the most beuonious Lady Rosaline.
I will looke againe on the intellex of the Letter, for the nomination of the partie written to the person written vnto.

Your Ladyships in all desired impleymen, Berowne.

Per. Sir Halofernes, this Berowne is one of the Votaries with the King, and here he hath framed a Letter to a se-quent of the stranger Queenes: which accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried. Trip and goe my sweete, deliuer this Paper into the hand of the King, it may concerne much: stay not thy complement; I forgiue thy duetie, adue

Maid. Good Costard go with me:

Sir God haue your life.

Cost. Haue with thee my girle.

Exit.

Hol. Sir you haue done this in the feare of God very religiously: and as a certaine Father saith

Ped. Sir tell not me of the Father, I do feare colourable colours: But to retorne to the Verses, Did they please you sir Nathaniel?

Nath. Marueilous well for the pen.

Peda. I do dine to day at the fathers of a certaine Pu-pill of mine, where if (being repast) it shall please you to gratifie the table with a Grace, I will on my priuiledge I haue with the parents of the foresaid Childe or Pupill, vndertake your bien vnnio, where I will proue those Verses to be very vnlearned, neither saououring of Poetrie, Wit, nor Inuention. I beseech your So-cietie.

Nat. And thanke you to for societie (saith she text)
is the happinesse of life.

Peda. And certes the text most infallibly concludes it.
sir I do inuite you too, you shall not say me nay. panca
verba.

Away, the gentles are at their game, and we will to our recreation. Exeunt.

Enter Berowne with a Paper in his hand, alone.

Ber. The King he is hunting the Deare,
I am courting my selfe.

They haue pitcht a Toyle, I am toying in a pytch, pitch that defiles; defile, a foule word. Well, set thee downe forrow; for so they say the foole said, and so say
I, and I the foole. Well proued wit. By the Lord this Loue is as mad as Aiax, it kils sheepe, it kils mee, I a sheepe: Well proued againe a my side. I will not loue;
if I do hang me. ysaith I will not. O but her eye. by this light, but for her eye, I would not loue her, yes, for her two eyes. Well, I doe nothing in the world but lye, and lye in my throate. By heauen I doe loue, and it hath raught mee to Rime, and to be mallicholie and here is part of my Rime, and heere my mallicholie. Well, she hath one a my Sonnets already, the Clowne bore it, the Foole sent it, and the Lady hath it. sweet Clowne, sweeter Foole, sweetest Lady By the world, I would not care a pin, if the other three were in. Here comes one with a paper, God giue him grace to grone.

He stands aside.

The King entreth.

Kin. Aymee!

Ber. Shot by heauen proceede sweet Cupid, thou hast thump't him with thy Birdbolt vnder the left papin faith secrets.

King. So sweete a kisse the golden Sunne giues not,
To those fresh morning drops vpon the Rose,
As thy eye beames, when their fresh rayse haue smot.
The night of dew that on my cheekes downe flower.
Nor shines the silver Moone one halfe so bright,
Through the transparent bosome of the deepe,
As doth thy face through tearés of mine giue light:
Thou shin'st in euery teare that I doe weepe,
No drop, but as a Coach doth carry thee.
So ridest thou triumphing in my woe.
Do but behold the tearés that swell in me,
And they thy glory through my griefe will show:

But

But doe not loue thy selfe, then thou wilt keepe
My teares for glasses, and still make me weepe.
O Queene of Queenes, how farre dost thou excell,
No thought can thinke, nor tongue of mortall tell.
How shall she know my griefes? Ile drop the paper
Sweet leaues shade folly. Who is he comes heere?

Enter Longaule The King steps aside.

What Longaule, and reading listen eare
Ber Now in thy likenesse, one more foole appeare.
Long Ay me, I am forsworne
Ber. Why he comes in like a periure, wearing papers.
Long In loue I hope, sweet fellowship in shame
Ber One drunkard loues another of the name.
Long. Am I the first y haue been periu'd so? (know,
Ber. I could put thee in comfort, not by two that I
Thou makest the triumphery, the corner cap of societie,
The shape of Loues Tiburne, that hangs vp simplicitie.
Long. I feare these stubborn lines lack power to moue
O sweet Maria, Empreffe of my Loue,
These numbers will I teare, and write in prose
Ber O Rimes are gards on wanton Cupids hose,
Disfigure not his Shop

Long. This same shall goe He reads the Sonnet
Did not the heavenly Rhetorick of thine eye,
'Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument,
Perswade my heart to this false periuire?
Vowes for thee broke deserue not punishment.
A Woman I forswore, but I will proue,
Thou being a Goddesse, I forswore not thee
My Vow was earthly, thou a heavenly Loue.
Thy grace being gain'd, cures all disgrace in me.
Vowes are but breath, and breath a vapour is
Then thou faire Sun, which on my earth doest shine,
Exhalest this vapor-vow, in thee it is.
If broken then, it is no fault of mine
If by me broke, what foole is not so wise,
To loose an oath, to win a Paradise?

Ber. This is the liuer veine, which makes flesh a deity
A greene Goose, a Goddesse, pure pure Idolatry.
God amend vs, God amend, we are much out o'th' way.

Enter Dumaine.

Long. By whom shall I send this (company?) Stay
Ber. All hid, all hid, an old infant play,
Like a demie God, here sit I in the skie,
And wretched foolles secrets heedfully ore-eye.
More Sacks to the myll O heauens I haue my wish,
Dumaine transform'd, loue Woodcocks in a dish
Dum. O most diuine Kate
Ber. O most prophane coxcombe.
Dum. By heauen the wonder of a mortall eye
Ber. By earth she is not, corporall, there you lye
Dum. Her Amber haire for foule hath amber coted
Ber. An Amber coloured Rauens was well noted.
Dum. As vpright as the Cedar,
Ber. Stoope I say her shoulder is with-child.
Dum. As faire as day
Ber. As softe dates, but then no sunne must shine
Dum. O that I had my wish?
Long. And I had mine.
Kin. And mine too good Lord
Ber. Amen, so I had mine. Is not that a good word?
Dum. I would forget her, but a Feuer the Raignes in my bloud, and will remembred be.
Ber. A Feuer in your bloud, why then incision

Would let her out in Sawcers, sweet misprision.
Dum. Once more Ile read the Ode that I haue writt
Ber. Once more Ile marke how Loue can varry Wit.

On a day, alack the day.
Loue, whose Month is euery Day,
Spied a blossome passing faire,
Playing in the wanton ayre
Through the Velvet, leanes the winde,
All vnscene, can passage finde.
That the Louer sick to death,
Wish himselfe the heauens breath
Ayre (quoth he) thy cheekes may blowe,
Ayre, would I might triumph so
But alacke my hand is sworne,
Nere to plucke thee from thy throne.
Vow alacke for youth vnmeeete,
Touth so apt to plucke a sweet
Doe not call it sirne in me,
That I am forsworne for thee.
Thou for whom Loue would sweare,
Iuno but an Ethiop were,
And denie himselfe for Loue.
Turning mortall for thy Loue.

This will I send, and something else mote plaine
That shall expresse my true-loues fasting paine.
O would the King, Berowne and Longaule,
Were Louers too, ill to example ill,
Would from my forehead wipe a periur'd note:
For none offend where all alike doe dote.

Long Dumaine, thy Loue is farre from charitie,
That in Loues grife desir'd societie
You may looke pale, but I should blush I know,
To be ore-heard, and taken napping so.
Kin Come sir, you blush, as his, your case is such,
You chide at him, offending twice as much.
You doe not loue Maria? Longaule,
Did neuer Sonnet for her sake compile;
Nor neuer lay his wreathed armes ahwart
His louing bosome, to keepe downe his heart
I haue beene closely throw ded in this bush,
And markt you both, and for you both did blush
I heard your guilty Rimes, obleru'd your fashion:
Saw sighes reeke from you, noted well your passion.
Aye me, sayes one! O Loue, the other cries!
On her haire were Gold, Christall the others eyes.
You would for Paradise breake Faith and troth,
And Loue for your Loue would infringe an oath
What will Berowne say when that he shall heare
Faith infringed, which such zeale did sweare
How will he scorne? how will he spend his wit?
How will he triumph, leape, and laugh at it?
For all the wealth that euer I did see,
I would not haue him know so much by me.

Ber. Now step I forth to whip hypocrisie.
Ah good my Liedge, I pray thee pardon me.
Good heart, What grace hast thou thus to reprove
These wormes for louing, that art most in loue?
Your eyes doe make no couches in your teares.
There is no certaine Princeffe that appeares.
You'll not be periur'd, 'tis a hatefull thing.
Tush, none but Minstrels like of Sonnetting.
But are you not asham'd? nay, are you not

M

All

All three of you, to be thus much ore shot?
 You found his Moth, the King your Moth did see:
 But I a Beame doe finde in each of three.
 O what a Scene of fool ry haue I scene.
 Of sighes, of grones, of sorrow, and of teene.
 O me, with what strict patience haue I sat,
 To see a King transformed to a Gnat?
 To see great Hercules whipping a Gigge,
 And profound Salomon tuning a Tygge?
 And Nestor play at push-pin with the boyes,
 And Critticle Tymon laugh at idle toyes
 Where lies thy griefe? O tell me good Dumaine;
 And gentle Longau'l, where lies thy paine?
 And where my Liedges? all about the brest -
 A Candle horn!

King Too bitter is thy iest
 Are wee betrayed thus to thy ouer-view?
 Ber Not you by me, but I betrayed to you
 I that am honest, I that hold it sinne
 To breake the vow I am ingaged in.
 I am betrayed by keeping company
 With men, like men of inconstancie.
 When shall you see me write a thing in rime?
 Or grone for some? or spend a minutes time,
 In pruning mee, when shall you heare that I will praise a hand, a foot, a face, in eye a gate, a state, a brow, a brest,
 a waste, a legge, a limme

King Soft, Whither a-way so fast?
 A true man, or a theete, that gallops so.
 Ber. I post from Loue, good Louer let me go

Enter Isquenetta and Clowne

Iaqu. God blesse the King.

King. What Present hast thou there?

Clo. Some certaire treason.

King. What makes treason heere?

Clo. Nay it makes nothing sir.

King. If it marre nothing neither,
 The treason and you goe in peace away together.

Iaqu. I beseech your Grace let this Letter be read,
 Our person mis-doubts it: it was treason he said

King. Berowne, read it ouer He reads the Letter.

King. Where hadst thou it?

Iaqu. Of Costard

King. Where hadst thou it?

Cost. Of Dun Adramadio, Dum Adramadio.

King. How now, what is in you? why dost thou tear it?

Ber. A toy my Liedge, a toy: your grace needes not feare it.

Long. It did moue him to passion, and therefore let's heare it.

Dum. It is Berownes writing, and heere is his name

Ber. Ah you whorison loggerhead, you were borne to doe me shame.

Guilty my Lord, guilty. I confesse, I confesse.

King. What?

Ber. That you three fooles, lackt mee foole, to make vp the messe.

He, he, and you and you my Liedge, and I,
 Are picke-purses in Loue, and we deserue to die.
 O dismiss this audience, and I shall tell you more.

Dum. Now the number is euen.

Berowne True true, we are fowre: will these Turtles be gone?

King. Hence sirs, away

Clo. Walk aside the true folke, & let the traytors stay.

Ber. Sweet Lords, sweet Louers, O let vs embrace,
 As true we are as flesh and bloud can be,
 The Sea will ebbe and flow, heauen will shew his face:
 Young bloud doth not obey an old decree.
 We cannot crosse the cause why we are borne.
 Therefore of all hands must we be forsworne.

King. What, did these rent lines shew some loue of thine? (Rosaline,

Dr. Did they, quoth you? Who sees the heauenly
 That (like a rude and sauage man of Inde.)
 At the first opening of the gorgeous East,
 Bowes not his vassall head, and strooken blinde,
 Kisses the base ground with obedient breast?
 What peremptory Eagle-sighted eye
 Dares looke vpon the heauen of her brow,
 That is not blinded by her maiestie?

King. What zeale, what surie, hath inspir'd thee now?
 My Loue (her Mistres) is a gracious Moone,
 Shee (an attending Starre) scarce scene a light

Ber. My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Berowne.
 O, but for my Loue, day would turne to night,
 Of all complexions the culd soueraintry,
 Doe meet as at a faire in her faire cheek,
 Where feuerall Worthies make one dignity,
 Where nothing wants, that want it selfe doth seeke.
 Lend me the flourish of all gentle tongues,
 The painted Rhetoricke, O she needs it not,
 To things of tale, a sellers praise belongs:
 She passes prayse, then prayse too short doth blot -
 A withered Hermite, fuescore winters worne,
 Might shake off fistie, looking in her eye.
 Beauty doth varnish Age, as if new borne,
 And giues the Crutch the Cradles infancie
 O tis the Sunne that maketh all things shine.

King. By heauen, thy Loue is blacke as Ebonie.

Berowne Is Ebonie like her? O word diuine?

A wife of such wood were felicitie
 O who can giue an oth? Where is a booke?
 That I may sweare Beauty doth beauty lacke,
 If that she learne not of her eye to looke.
 No face is faire that is not full so blacke

King. O paradoxe, blacke is the badge of hell,
 The hue of dungeons, and the Schoole of night.
 And beauties crest becomes the heauens well.

Ber. Duels soonest tempt resembling spirits of light
 O if in blacke my Ladies browes be deckt,
 It mournes, that painting vsurping haire
 Should rauish doers with a false aspect:
 And therefore is she borne to make blacke, faire.
 Her fauour turnes the fashion of the dayes,
 For natue bloud is counted painting now.
 And therefore red that would auoyd dispraise,
 Paints it selfe blacke, to imitate her brow.

Dum. To look like her are Chimny-sweepers blacke.

Long. And since her time, are Colliers counted bright.

King. And Ethiops of their sweet complexion crake.

Dum. Dark needs no Candles now, for dark is light.

Ber. Your mistresses dare neuer come in raine,
 For feare their colours should be wash away.

King. 'Twere good yours did. for sir to tell you plaine,
 He finde a fairer face not wast to day.

Ber. He proue her faire, or talke till dooms-day here.

Am. No Duell will fright thee then so much as thee

Dum. I neuer knew man hold vile stuffe so deere.

Long. Look, heere's thy loue, my foot and her face see.

Ber. O if the streets were paved with thine eyes,

Her

Her feet were much too dainty for such tread.

Dum. O vile, then as she goes what upward lyes?
The street should see as she walk'd ouer head.

Kim. But what of this, are we not all in loue?

Ber. O nothing so sure, and thereby all forsworne.

Kim. Then leaue this chat, & good Brown now proue
Our louing lawfull, and our sayth not torne.

Dum. I marie there, some flattery for this euill.

Long. O some authority how to proceed,
Some tricks, some quillies, how to cheate the diuill.

Dum. Some salue for penurie.

Ber. O 'tis more then neede.

Haue at you then affections men at armes,
Consider what you first did sweare vnto:
To fast, to study, and to see no woman:
Flat treason against the Kingly state of youth
Say, Can you fast? your stomachs are too young:
And abstinence ingenders maladies.

And whete that you haue vow'd to studie (Lord)
In that each of you haue forsworne his Booke
Can you still dreame and pore, and thereon looke.

For when would you my Lord, or you, or you,
Haue found the ground of studies excellence,
Without the beauty of a womans face;
From womens eyes this doctrine I deriue.

They are the Ground, the Bookes, the Achadems,
From whence doth spring the true Promethean fire.
Why, vniuersall plodding poysons vp
The nimble spirits in the arteries,

As motion and long during action tyres
The sinnowy vigour of the trauailer
Now for not looking on a womans face,
You haue in that forsworne the vse of eyes:

And studie too, the causer of your vow.
For where is any Author in the world,
Teaches such beauty as a womans eye:
Learning is but an adiunct to our selfe,

And where we are, our Learning likewise it.
Then when our selues we see in Ladies eyes,
With our selues.

Doe we not likewise see our learning there?
O we haue made a Vow to studie. Lords,
And in that vow we haue forsworne our Bookes:
For when would you (my Leeg) or you, or you?

In leaden contemplation haue found out
Such fiery Numbers as the prompting eyes,
Of beauties tutors haue enrich'd you with.

Other slow Arts intirely keepe the braine.
And therefore finding barraine practizers,
Scarce shew a harvest of their heauy toyle.

But Loue first learned in a Ladies eyes,
Lives not alone emured in the braine
But with the motion of all elements,
Courses as swift as thought in every power,

And giues to every power a double power,
About their functions and their offices.
It adds a precious seeing to the eye:
A Louers eyes will gaze an Eagle blinde.

A Louers eare will heare the lowest sound
When the suspitious head of theist is stopt.
Loues feeling is more soft and sensible,
Then are the tender hornes of Cockled Snayles.

Loues tongue proues dainty, Bacchus grosse in taste,
For Valour, is not Loue a Hercules?
Still climbing trees in the Hesperides.

Subtill as Sphinx, as sweet and musically,
As bright Apolls Lute, strung with his haire.

And when Loue speaks, the voyce of all the Gods,
Make heauen drowse with the harmonic.
Neuer durst Poet touch a pen to write,
Vntill his Inke were tempered with Loues sighes:

O then his lines would rauish sauage eares,
And plant in Tyrants milde humilitie.
From womens eyes this doctrine I deriue.
They sparele still the right prometean fire,

They are the Bookes, the Arts, the Achademes,
That shew, containe, and nourish all the world.
Else none at all in ought proues excellent
Then fooles you were these women to forswear:
Or keeping what is sworne, you will proue fooles,
For Wisedomes sake, a word that all men loue.

Or for Loues sake, a word that loues all men
Or for Mens sake, the author of these Women.
Or Womens sake, by whom we men are Men
Let's once loose our oathes to finde our selues,
Or else we loose our selues, to keepe our oathes:

It is religion to be thus forsworne.
For Charity it selfe fulfills the Law:
And who can seuer loue from Charity

Kim. Saint Cupid then, and Souldiers to the field
Ber. Aduance your standards, & vpon them Lords,
Pell, mell, downe with them: but be first aduis'd,
In consist that you get the Sunne of them.

Long. Now to plaine dealing, Lay these glozes by,
Shall we re'olue to wooe these girles of France?

Kim. And winne them too, therefore let vs deuise;
Some entertainment for them in their Tent.

Ber. First from the Park let vs conduct them thither,
Then homeward eery man attach the hand
Of his faire Mistresse, in the afternoone
We will with some strange pastime solace them:

Such as the shortnesse of the time can shape,
For Reuels, Dances, Maskes, and merry houres,
Fore-runne faire Loue, strewing her way with flowres

Kim. Away, away, no time shall be omitted;
That will be time, and may by vs be fitted.

Ber. Alone, alone sowed Cockell, reap'd no Corne,
And Iustice alwaies whirles in equall measure:
Light Wenches may proue plagues to men forsworne,
If so, our Copper buyes no better treasure.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter the Pedant, Curate and Duil.

Pedant. Satis quid sufficit.

Curat. I praise God for you sir, your reasons at dinner
haue beene sharpe & sententious: pleasant without scur-rillity, witty without affection, audacious without im-pudency, learned without opinion, and strange without heresie. I did conuerse this quondam day with a companion of the Kings, who is intituled, nominated, or called,
Don Adriano de Armatho

Ped. Noni bonum tanquam te. His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptorie: his tongue filed, his eye ambitious, his gate maiestical, and his generall behauiour valne, ridiculous, and thraconicall. He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odde, as it were, too pere-grinat, as I may call it.

M 2

Curat

Curat. A most singular and choise Epithat,
Draw out his Table-booke.

Peda. He draweth out the thred of his verbosity, finer then the staple of his argument I abhor such phantasticall phantasims, such infocable and poynt deuise companions, such rackers of ortagraphe, as to speake dout fine, when he should say doubt; det, when he should pronounce debt; d e b t, not det: he clepeth a Calf, Cause halfe, haufe; neighbour vocatur nebour; neigh abreuiated ne this is abhominable, which he would call abhominable it insinuateth me of infamie: ne intelligis domine, to make franticke, lunaticke?

Curat. Laus deo, bene intelligo.

Peda. Borne boon for boon prescians, a little scratcht, 'twil serue

Enter Bragart, Boy.

Curat. Vides ne quis venit?

Peda. Vides, & gaudio.

Brag. Chirra.

Peda. Quasi Chirra, not Sirra?

Brag. Men of peace well incountred

Ped. Most militarie sir salutation

Boy. They haue beene at a great feast of Languages, and stolne the scraps.

Clow. O they haue liu'd long on the almes-basket of words. I maruell thy M. hath not eaten thee for a word, for thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatibus: Thou art easier swallowed then a flapdragon.

Page. Peace, the peale begins.

Brag. Mounfier, are you not lettred?

Page. Yes, yes, he teaches boyes the Horne-booke. What is Ab speld backward with the horn on his head?

Peda. Ba, puericia with a horne added

Page. Ba most seely Sheepe, with a horne: you heare his learning.

Peda. Quis qui, thou Consonant?

Page. The last of the five Vowels if You repeat them, or the first if I.

Peda. I will repeat them a e i.

Page. The Sheepe, the other two con-ludes it o u.

Brag. Now by the salt waue of the mediteranium, a sweet tutch, a quicke vene we of wit, snap snap, quick & home, it reioyceth my intellect, true wit.

Page. Offered by a childe to an olde man which is wit-old.

Peda. What is the figure? What is the figure?

Page. Hornes.

Peda. Thou disputes like an Infant goe whip thy Gigge.

Page. Lend me your Horne to make one, and I will whip about your Infamie unum citta a gigge of a Cuck-olds horne.

Clow. And I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst haue it to buy Ginger bread. Hold, there is the very Remuneration I had of thy Maister, thou halspenny purse of wit, thou Pidgeon-egge of discretion. O & the heauens were so pleased, that thou wert but my Bastard; What a ioyfull father wouldst thou make mee? Goeto, thou hast it adungit, at the fingers ends, as they say.

Peda. Oh I smell false Latine, dungel for unguem.

Brag. Arif-man preambulat, we will bee singled from the barbarous. Do you not educate youth at the Charge-house on the top of the Mountaine?

Peda. Or Mons the hill.

Brag. At your sweet pleasure, for the Mountaine.

Peda. I doe sans question.

Bra. Sir, it is the Kings most sweet pleasure and affection, to congratulate the Princeesse at her Paulion, in the posterior of this day, which the rude multitude call the after-noonne.

Ped. The posterior of the day, most generous sir, is liable, congruent, and measurable for the after-noonne: the word is well culd, chose, sweet, and apt I doe assure you sir, I doe assure.

Brag. Sir, the King is a noble Gentleman, and my familiar, I doe assure ye very good friend: for what is inward betweene vs, let it passe. I doe beseech thee remember thy curtesie. I beseech thee apparell thy head: and among other importunate & most serious designes, and of great import indeed too: but let that passe, for I must tell thee it will please his Grace (by the world) sometime to leane vpon my poore shoulder, and with his royall finger thus dallie with my excrement, with my mustachio - but sweet heart let that passe. By the world I recount no fable, some certaine speciall honours it pleaseth his greatnesse to impart to Armado a Souldier, a man of trauell, that hath seene the world: but let that passe, the very all of all is, but sweet heart, I do implore lecrecie, that the King would haue mee present the Princeesse (sweet chucke) with some delightfull ostentation, or show, or pageant, or anticke, or fire-worke - Now, vnderstanding that the Curate and your sweet self are good at such eruptions, and sodaine breaking out of myrth (as it were) I haue acquainted you withall, to the end to craue your assistance.

Peda. Sir, you shall present before her the Nine Worthies. Sir Holofernes, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rendered by our assistants the Kings command and this most gallant, illustrate and learned Gentleman, before the Princeesse I say none so fit as to present the Nine Worthies

Curat. Where will you finde men worthy enough to present them?

Peda. Iofua, your selfe my selfe, and this gallant gentleman Iudas Machabens; this Swaine (because of his great limme or ioynt) shall passe Pompey the great, the Page Hercules.

Brag. Pardon sir, error. He is not quantitie enough for that Worthies thumb, hee is not so big as the end of his Club.

Peda. Shall I haue audience? he shall present Hercules in minoritie. his enter and exit shall bee strangling a Snake; and I will haue an Apologie for that purpose.

Page. An excellent deuice. so if any of the audience hisse, you may cry, Well done Hercules, now thou crushest the Snake, that is the way to make an offence gracious, though few haue the grace to doe it.

Brag. For the rest of the Worthies?

Peda. I will play three my selfe.

Page. Thrice worthy Gentleman.

Brag. Shall I tell you a thing?

Peda. We attend.

Brag. We will haue, if this sadge not, an Antique. I beseech you follow.

Ped. Via good-man Dnll, thou hast spoken no word all this while.

Dnll. Nor vnderstood none neither sir.

Ped. Alone, we will employ thee.

Dnll. Ile make one in a dance, or so: or I will play on on the taber to the Worthies, & let them dance the hey.

Ped. Most Dull, honest Dull, to our sport away. Exit.

Enter Ladies.

Qu. Sweet hearts we shall be rich ere we depart,
If fairings come thus plentifully in.
A Lady wal'd about with Diamonds: Look you, what I haue from the louing King.

Rosa. Madam, came nothing else along with that?

Qu. Nothing but this: yes as much loue in Rime,
As would be cram'd vp in a sheet of paper
Writ on both sides the leafe, margent and all,
That he was faire to scale on Cupid's name.

Rosa. That was the way to make his god-head wax:
For he hath bene fise thousand yeeres a Boy

Kath. I, and a shrewd vnhappy gallowes too.

Ros. You'll nere be friends with him, a kild your sister.

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heauy, and so she died: had she bene Light like you, of such a ther-rie nimble stirring spirit, she might a bin a Grandam ere she died. And so may you. For a light heart lues long

Ros. What's your darke meaning mouse, of this light
word?

Kat. A light condition in a beauty darke.

Ros. We need more light to finde your meaning out

Kat. You'll marre the light by taking it in snuffe
Therefore Ile darkely end the argument

Ros. Look what you doe, you doe it stil i'th darke.

Kat. So do not you, for you are a light Wench

Ros. Indeed I waigh not you, and therefore light.

Kat. You waigh me not, O that's you care not for me.

Ros. Great reason for past care, is still past cure.

Qu. Well bandied both, a set of Wit well played.

But Rosaline, you haue a Favour too?

Who sent it? and what is it?

Ros. I would you knew.

And if my face were but as faire as yours,
My Favour were as great, be witness this
Nay, I haue Verses too, I thanke Berowne,
The numbers true, and were the numbring too,
I were the fairest goddesse on the ground.
I am compar'd to twenty thousand fairs.

O he hath drawne my picture in his letter

Qu. Any thing like?

Ros. Much in the letters, nothing in the praise

Qu. Beauteous as Incke: a good conclusion.

Kat. Faire as a text B. in a Coppie booke

Ros. Ware pensals. How? Let me not die your debtor,

My red Domin call, my golden letter.

O that your face were full of Oes

Qu. A Pox of that iest, and I beshrew all Shrowes

But Katherine, what was sent to you

From faire Dumaine?

Kat. Madame, this Gloue.

Qu. Did he not send you twaine?

Kat. Yes Madame. and moreover,
Some thousand Verses of a faithfull Louer.
A huge translation of hypocrisie,

Vildly compiled, profound simplicitie

Mar. This, and these Péails, to me sent Longaule.
The Letter is too long by halfe a mile.

Qu. I thinke no lesse Dost thou wish in heart
The Chaine were longer, and the Letter short

Mar. I, or I would these hands might neuer part

Qu. We are wise giles to mocke our Louers so

Ros. They are worse fooles to purchase mocking so.

That same Berowne ile torture ere I got.

O that I knew he were but in by th' weeke,
How I would make him fawne, and begge, and seeke,
And wait the season, and obserue the times,
And spend his prodigall wits in booteles rimes,
And shape his seruice wholly to my deuce,
And make him proud to make me proud that iests.
So pertraunt like would I o'resway his state,
That he shold be my foole, and I his fate.

Qu. None are so surely caught, when they are catcht,
As Wit turn'd foole, follie in Wisedome hatch'd:
Hath wisedomes warrant, and the helpe of Schoole,
And Wits owne grace to grace a learned Foole?

Ros. The bloud of youth burns not with such excessse,
As grauities reuolt to wantons be.

Mar. Follie in Fooles beares not so strong a note,
As fool'ry in the Wise, when Wit doth dote.
Since all the power thereof it doth apply,
To proue by Wit, worth in simplicitie.

Enter Boyet

Qu. Heere comes Boyet, and mirth in his face

Boy. O I am stab'd with laughter, Wher's her Grace?

Qu. Thy newes Boyet?

Boy. Prepare Madame, prepare.

Arme Wenches arme, incounters mounted are,
Against your Peace, Loue doth approach, disguis'd:
Armed in arguments, you'll be surpriz'd.

Mutter your Wits, stand in your owne defence,
Or hide your heads like Cowards, and flic hence

Qu. Saint Dennis to S Cupid What are they,
That charge their breath against vs? Say scout say.

Boy. Vnder the coole shade of a Siccamore,
I thought to close mine eyes some halfe an houre:

When lo to interrupt my purpos'd rest,
Toward that shade I might behold adrest,

The King and his companions warely

I stole into a neighbour thicket by,

And ouer-heard, what you shall ouer-heare:

That by and by disguis'd they will be heere.

Their Herald is a pretty knauish Page:

That well by heart hath con'd his embassage,

Action and accent did they teach him there.

Thus must thou speake, and thus thy body beare.

And euer and anon they made a doubt,

Presence maiesticall would put him out:

For quoth the King, an Angell shalt thou see:

Yet feare not thou, but speake audaciously

The Boy reply'd, An Angell is not euil:

I should haue fear'd her, had she bene a deuill,

With that all laugh'd, and clap'd him on the shoulder,

Making the bold wagg by their praises bolder.

One rub'd his elbow thus, and flect'd, and swore,

A better speech was neuer spoke before

Another with his finger and his thumb,

Cry'd uia we will doo't, come what will come.

The third he caper'd and cited, All goes well.

The fourth turn'd on the toe, and downe he fell:

With that they all did tumble on the ground,

With such a zelous laughter so profound,

That in this spleene ridiculous appears,

To checke their folly passions solemne teares

Qu. But what, but what, come they to visit vs?

Boy. They do, they do; and are apparel'd thus,

Like Muscottes, or Russians, as I gesse.

Their purpose is to parlee, to court, and dance,

M 3

And

And every one his Love-feat will aduance,
Vnto his feuerall Mistresse. which they'll know
By fauours feuerall, which they did bestow.

Queen. And will they so the Gallants shall be taskt:
For Ladies; we will euery one be maskt,
And not a man of them shall haue the grace
Despight of lute, to see a Ladies face.
Hold Rosaline, this Fauour thou shalt weare,
And then the King will court thee for his Deare.
Hold, take thou this my sweet, and giue me thine,
So shall Berowne take me for Rosaline
And change your Fauours too, so shall your Loues
Woo contrary, deceiu'd by these remoues.

Rosa. Come on then, weare the fauours most in sight.

Kath. But in this changing, What is your intent?

Queen. The effect of my intent is to crosse them:
They doe it but in mocking merriment,
And mocke for mocke is ouely my intent.
Their feuerall counsels they vnboosome shall,
To Loues mistooke, and so be mockt withall
Vpon the next occasion that we meete,
With Visages displayd to talke and greet.

Ros. But shall we dance, if they desire vs too't?

Quee. No, to the death we will not moue a foot,
Nor to their pen'd lpeeche render we no grace
But while 'tis spoke, each turne away his face.

Boy. Why that contempt will kill the keepers heart,
And quite diuorce his memory from his part.

Quee. Therefore I doe it, and I make no doubt,
The rest will ere come in, if he be out.

Theres no such sport, as sport by sport orethrowne
To make theirs ours, and ours none but our owne.

So shall we stay mocking entended game,
And they well mockt, depart away with shame.

Sound.
Boy. The Trompet sounds, be maskt, the maskers
come

Enter Black moores with musick, the Toy with a speech, and the rest of the Lords disguised

Page. All haile, the richest Beauties on the earth.

Ber. Beauties no richer then rich Tassata.

Page. A holy percell of the fairest dames th it erer turn'd their backs to mortall viewes

The Ladies turne their backs to him.

Ber. Their eyes villaine, their eyes.

Page. That erer turn'd their eyes to mortall viewes.

Out

Boy. True, out indeed

Page. Out of your fauours heavenly spirits vouchsafe
Not to beholde

Ber. Once to behold, rogue

Page. Once to behold with your Sunne beamed eyes,
With your Sunne beamed eyes.

Boy. They will not answer to that Epythite,
You were best call it Daughter beamed eyes

Page. They do not marke me, and that brings me out

Ber. Is this your perfectnesse? be gon you rogue.

Rosa. What would these strangers?

Know their mindes Bejer

If they doe speake our language, 'tis our will

That some plaine man recount their purposes,

Know what they would?

Boyet. What would you with the Princes?

Ber. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation.

Ros. What would they, say they?

Boy. Nothing but peace, and gentle visitation
Rosa. Why that they haue, and bid them so be gon.

Boy. She saies you haue it, and you may be gon.

Kim. Say to her we haue measur'd many miles,
To tread a Measure with you on the grasse.

Boy. They say that they haue measur'd many a mile,
To tread a Measure with you on this grasse.

Rosa. It is not so. Aske them how many inches
Is in one mile? If they haue measur'd manie,
The measure then of one is easie told.

Boy. If to come hither, you haue measur'd miles,
And many miles. the Princesse bids you tell,
How many inches doth fill vp one mile?

Ber. Tell her we measure them by weary steps.

Boy. She heares her selfe.

Rosa. How manie wearie steps,
Of many wearie miles you haue ore-gone,
Are numbered in the trauell of one mile?

Ber. We number nothing that we spend for you,
Our dutie is so rich, so infinite,
That we may doe it still without accompt
Vouchsafe to shew the sunshine of your face,
That we (like saunges) may worship it.

Rosa. My face is but a Moone, and clouded too.

Kim. Blessed are clouds, to doe as such clouds do.
Vouchsafe bright Moone, and these thy stars to shine,
(Those clouds remooued) vpon our waterie eyne.

Rosa. O vaine petitioner, beg a greater matter,
Thou now requestst but Mooneshine in the water.

Kim. Then in our measure, vouchsafe but one change.
Thou bidst me begge, this begging is not strange.

Rosa. Play musicke then: nay you must doe it soone
Not yet no dance thus change I like the Moone.

Kim. Will you not dance? How come you thus estranged?

Rosa. You tooke the Moone at full, but now shee's changed?

Kim. Yet still she is the Moone, and I the Man.

Rosa. The nuttick playes, vouchsafe some motion to
it. Our eares vouchsafe it

Kim. But your legges should doe it

Ros. Since you are strangers, & come here by chance,
Wee'll not be nice, take hands, we will not dance.

Kim. Why take you hands then?

Rosa. One's to part friends,

Curtie sweet hearts, and so the Measure ends.

Kim. More measure of this measure, be not nice.

Rosa. We can afford no more at such a price.

Kim. Praise your selues: What buyes your companie?

Rosa. Your absence onlie

Kim. That can neuer be.

Rosa. Then cannot we be bought and so adue,
Twice to your Visoe, and halfe once to you.

Kim. If you denie to dance, let's hold more chat.

Ros. In priuate then

Kim. I am best pleas'd with that

Ber. Whie handed Mistis, one sweet word with thee.

Qu. Hony, and Milke, and Suger there is three.

Ber. Nay then two treyes, an if you grow so nice Methegline, Wort, and Malmsey; well runne dice:
There's halfe a dozen sweets.

Qu. Seueneth sweet adue, since you can cogg,
Ile play no more with you.

Ber. One word in secret.

Qu. Let it not be sweet.

Ber. Thou greu'st my gall.

Queen.

Qu. Gall, bitter.

Ber. Therefore meete.

Dn. Will you vouchsafe with me to change a word?

Mar. Name it.

Dum. Faire Ladie:

Mar. Say you so? Faire Lord:

Take you that for your faire Lady.

Dn. Please it you,

As much in priuate, and Ile bid adieu.

Mar. What, was your vizard made without a tong?

Long. I know the reason Ladie why you aske.

Mar. O for your reason, quickly sir, I long.

Long. You haue a double tongue within your mask.

And would affoord my speechlesse vizard halfe.

Mar. Veale quoth the Dutch-man. is not Veale a Calfe?

Long. A Calfe faire Ladie?

Mar. No, a faire Lord Calfe

Long. Let's port the word

Mar. No, Ile not be your halfe:

Take all and weane it, it may proue an Oxe.

Long. Looke how you but your selfe in these sharpe mockes.

Will you giue hornes chafte Ladie? Do not so.

Mar. Then die a Calfe before your horns do grow.

Lon. One word in priuate with you ere I die.

Mar. Bleat softly then, the Butcher heares you cry

Boyet. The tongues of mocking wenches are askeen

As is the Razors edge, inuisible

Cutting a smaller haire then may be seene,

Above the sence of fence so sensible

Seemeth their conference, their conceits haue wings,

Fleeter then arrows, bullets wind, thoght, swifter things

Rosa. Not one word more my maides, breake off, breake off.

Ber. By heauen, all drie beaten with pure scoffe.

King. Farewell miadde Wenches, you haue simple wits. Exeunt.

Qu. Twentie adieus my frozen Muscouits, Are these the breed of wits so wondred at?

Boyet. Tapers they are, with your sweete breathes puffed out.

Rosa. Wel-liking wits they haue, grosse, grosse, fat, fat

Qu. O pouertie in wit, Kingly poore flour.

Will they not (thinke you) hang themselves to night?

Oreuer but in vizards shew their faces.

This pert Berowne was out of count'nance quite.

Rosa. They were all in lamentable cases

The King was weeping ripe for a good word

Qu. Berowne did sweare himselfe out of all suite.

Mar. Dumaine was at my seruice, and his sword:

No point (quoth I) my seruant straight vvas mute.

Ka. Lord Longanill said I came ore his hart

And trow you vwhat he call'd me?

Qu. Qualme perhaps.

Kat. Yes in good faith.

Qu. Go sicknesse as thou art.

Ros. Well, better wits haue worne plain statute caps,

But vil you heare; the King is my loue sworne

Qu. And quicke Berowne hath plighted faith to me.

Kat. And Longanill was for my seruice borne.

Mar. Dumaine is mune as sure as barke on tree.

Boyet. Madam, and prettie mistresses giue care,

Immediately they will againe be here

In their owne shapes. for it can neuer be,

They will digest this harsh indignite.

Qu. Will they returne?

Boy. They will they will, God knows, And leape for ioy, though they are lame with blowes: Therefore change Fauours, and when they repaire, Blow like sweet Roses, in this summer aire.

Qu. How blow? how blow? Speake to bee vnderstood.

Boy. Faire Ladies mask, are Roses in their bud - Dismask, their damaske sweet commixture showne, Are Angels vailing clouds, or Roses blowne

Qu. Auant perplexitie. What shall vve do, If they returne in their owne shapes to wo?

Rosa. Good Madam, if by me you'll be aduis'd, Let's mocke them still as well knowne as disguis'd: Let vs complaine to them vwhat fooles were heare, Disguis'd like Muscouites in shapelesse geare - And wonder what they were, and to what end Their shallow shoues, and Prologue vildely pen'd. And their rough carriage so ridiculous, Should be presented at our Tent to vs.

Boyet. Ladies, withdraw. the gallants are at hand.

Quee. Whip to our Tents, as Roes runnes ore Land. Exeunt.

Enter the King and the rest.

King. Faire sir, God saue you. Wher's the Princeesse?

Boy. Gone to her Tent.

Please it your Maiestie command me any seruice to her?

King. That she vouchsafe me audience for one word.

Boy. I will, and so will she, I know my Lord. Exit.

Ber. This fellow pickes vp wit as Pigeons pease, And vtters it againe, when Iane doth please. He is Wits Pedler, and retails his Wares, At Wakes, and Waffels, Meetings, Markets, Faires. And we that sell by grosse, the Lord doth know, Haue not the grace to grace it with such show. This Gallant pims the Wenches on his steue. Had he bin Adam, he had tempted Eue.

He can carue too, and lisper. Why this is he, That kist away his hand in courtesie.

This is the Ape of Forme, Monsieur the nice, That when he plaies at Tables, chides the Dice

In honorable tearmes. Nay he can sing A meane most meanly, and in Vshering

Mend him who can. the Ladies call him sweete. The flaires as he treads on them kisse his feete.

This is the flower that smiles on euerie one, To shew his teeth as white as Whales bone.

And consciences that wil not die in debt, Pay him the dutie of honie-tongued Boyet.

King. A blister on his sweet tongue with my hart, That put Armatboes Page out of his part.

Enter the Ladys.

Ber. See where it comes. Behaviour what wer't thou, Till this madman shew'd thee? And what art thou now?

King. All haile sweet Madame, and faire time of day. Qu. Faire in s'l Haile is foule, as I conceiue.

King. Construe my speeches better, if you may.

Qu. Then wish me better, I wil giue you leaue

King. We came to visit you, and purpose now

To leade you to our Court, vouchsafe it then. Qu. This field shal hold me, and so hold your vow:

Nor God, nor I, delights in periu'd men.

King. Rebuke me not for that which you prouoke: The

The vertue of your eie must breake my oth.

Q. You nickname vertue vice you should haue spoke:
For vertues office neuer breakes men troth.
Now by my maiden honor, yet as pure
As the vnfallied Lilly, I protest,
A world of torments though I should endure,
I would not yeeld to be your houses guest:
So much I hate a breaking cause to be
Of heavenly oaths, vow'd with integritie.

Kim. O you haue hu'd in desolation heere,
Vnseene, vnvisited, much to our shame.

Qu. Not so my Lord, it is not so I sweare,
We haue had pastimes heere, and pleasant game,
A messe of Russians left vs but of late.

Kim. How Madam? Russians?

Qu. I in truth, my Lord.
Trim gallants, full of Courtship and of state.

Rosa. Madam speake true. It is not so my Lord:
My Ladie (to the manner of the daies)
In curtesie giues vnderferuing praise.

We foure indeed confronted were with toure
In Russia habit. Heere they stayed an houre,
And talk'd apace. and in that houre (my Lord)
They did not blesse vs with one happy word.
I dare not call them fooles; but this I thinke,
When they are thirstie, fooles would faine haue drinke.

Ber. This test is drie to me Gentle sweete,
Your wits makes wise things foolish when we greate
With eies best feeling, heauens ferie eie:
By light we loose light, your capacitie
Is of that nature, that to your huge floore,
Wise things seeme foolish, and rich things but poore.

Ros. This proues you wise and rich: for in my eie

Ber. I am a foole, and full of pouertie.

Ros. But that you take what doth to you belong,
It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue.

Ber. O, I am yours, and all that I possesse.

Ros. All the foole mine

Ber. I cannot giue you lesse.

Ros. Which of the Vizards what it that you wore?

Ber. Where? when? What Vizard?

Why demand you this?

Ros. There, then, that vizard, that superfluous case,
That hid the worse, and shew'd the better face.

Kim. We are discried,
They'l mocke vs now downeright.

Qu. Let vs confesse, and turne it to a test

Qu. Amaz'd my Lord? Why lookes your Highnes sadde?

Rosa. Helpe hold his browes, hee'l found. why looke
you pale?

Sea-sicke I thinke comming from Muscoue.

Ber. Thus poure the stars down plagues for perjury.
Can any face of brasse hold longer out?

Heere stand I, Ladie dart thy skill at me,
Bruise me with scorne, confound me with a flout.
Thrust thy sharpe wit quite through my ignorance.
Cut me to peeces with thy keene conceit:

And I will with thee neuer more to dance,
Nor neuer more in Russian habit waite.
O' neuer will I trust to speeches pen'd,
Nor to the motion of a Schoole-boies tongue.

Nor neuer come in vizard to my friend,
Nor woo in rime like a blmd-harpers songue,
Taffata phrases, silken tearmes precise,
Three-pil'd Hyperboles, spruce affection;

Figures pedanticall, these summer flies,
Haue blowne me full of maggot ostentation.
I do forswear them, and I heere protest,
By this white Gloue (how white the hand God knows)
Henceforth my woiuing minde shall be exprest
In russet yeas, and honest kersie noes.
And to begin Wench, so God helpe me law,
My loue to thee is sound, sans cracke or flaw.

Rosa. Sans, sans, I pray you.

Ber. Yet I haue a tricke

Of the old rage beare with me, I am sicke.
He leaue it by degrees: soft, let vs see,
Write Lord haue mercie on vs, on those three,
They are infected, in their hearts it lies:
They haue the plague, and caught it of your eyes:
These Lords are visited, you are not free:

For the Lords tokens on you do I see.

Qu. No, they are free that gaue these tokens to vs.

Ber. Our states are forfeit, seeken not to vndo vs.

Ros. It is not so; for how can this be true,
That you stand forfeit, being those that sue.

Ber. Peace, for I will not haue to do with you.

Ros. Nor shall not, if I do as I intend.

Ber. Speake for yourselues, my wit is at an end.

King. Teach vs sweete Madame, for our rude transgression, some faire excuse.

Qu. The fairest is confession.

Were you not heere but euen now, disguis'd?

Kim. Madam, I was.

Qu. And were you well aduis'd?

Kim. I was faire Madam.

Qu. When you then were heere,
What did you whisper in your Ladies eare?

King. That more then all the world I did respect her

Qu. When shee shall challenge this, you will reiect
her

King. Vpon mine Honor no.

Qu. Peace, peace, forbear your oath once broke, you force not to forswear.

King. Despise me when I breake this oath of mine.

Qu. I will, and therefore keepe it. Rosalme,
What did the Russian whisper in your eare?

Ros. Madam, he swore that he did hold me deare
As precious eye-sight, and did value me
About this World: adding thereto moreover,
That he would Wed me, or else die my Louer.

Qu. God giue thee ioy of him the Noble Lord
Most honorably doth uphold his word

King. What meane you Madame?
By my life, my troth,

I neuer swore this Ladie such an oth.

Ros. By heauen you did; and to confirme it plaine,
you gaue me this. But take it sir againe.

King. My faith and this, the Princeesse I did giue,
I knew her by this Jewell on her sleeue.

Qu. Pardon me sir, this Jewell did she weare,
And Lord Berowne (I thanke him) is my deare
What? Will you haue me, or your Pearle againe?

Ber. Neither of either, I reinit both twaine.
I see the tricke on't. Heere was a consent,
Knowing aforehand of our merriment,
To dash it like a Christmas Comedie.
Some carry-tale, some please-man, some slight Zanie,
Some mumble-newes, some trencher-knight, som Dick
That smiles his cheek in yeares, and knowes the trick
To make my Lady laugh, when she's dispos'd;

To Tell

Told our intents before : which once disclosed,
The Ladies did change Fauour, and then we Following the signes, wou'd but the signe of the.
Now to our periurie, to adde more terror,
We are againe sworn in will and error.
Much vpon this tis : and might not you
Forefall our sport, to make vs thus vnttrue?
Do not you know my Ladies foot by'th squier?
And laugh vpon the apple of her eie?
And stand betwene her backe sir, and the fire,
Holding a trencher, iesting merrie?
You put our Page out - go, you are alowd.
Die when you will, a smocke shall be your shrowd.
You ieepe vpon me, do you? There's an eie
Wounds like a Leaden sword.

Boy. Full merrily hath this braue manager, this carreere bene run.

Ber. Lo, he is tilting straight Peace, I haue don

Enter Clowne

Welcome pure wit, thou part'st a faire fray.

Clo. O Lord sir, they would kno,
Whether the three worthies shall come in, or no.

Ber. What, are there but three?

Clo. No sir, but it is vana fine,
For euerie one pursents three

Ber. And three times thrice is nine.

Clo. Nor so sir, vnder correction sir, I hope it is not so
You cannot beg vs sir, I can assure you sir, we know what we know I hope sir three times thrice sir

Ber. Is not nine.

Clo. Vnder correction sir, wee know where-vntill it doth amount

Ber. By Ioue, I alwaies tooke three threes for nine

Clo. O Lord sir, it were pittie you should get your living by reckning sir.

Ber. How much is it?

Clo. O Lord sir, the parties themselves, the actors sir will shew where-vntill it doth amount. for mine owne part, I am (as they say, but to perfect one man in one poore man) Pompey the great sir.

Ber. Art thou one of the Worthies?

Clo. It pleased them to thinke me worthie of Pompey the great : for mine owne part, I know not the degree of the Worthie, but I am to stand for him

Ber. Go, bid them prepare.

Exit.

Clo. We will turne it finely off sir, we wil take some care

King Beronne, they will shame vs.
Let them not approach.

Ber. We are shame-prooue my Lord - and 'tis some politic, to haue one shew worse then the Kings and his companie.

King I say they shall not come

Qu. Nay my good Lord, let me ore-rule you now,
That sport best pleases, that doth least know how.
Where Zeale strides to content, and the contents
Dies in the Zeale of that which it presents.

Their forme confounded, makes most forme in mirth,
When great things labouring perish in their birth

Ber. A right description of our sport my Lord.

Enter Braggart.

Brag. Anointed, I implore so much expence of thy royall sweet breath, as will vter a brace of words.

Qu. Doth this man serue God?

Ber. Why aske you?

Qu. He speak's not like a man of God's making.

Brag. That's all one my faire sweet homie Monarch
For I protest, the Schoolmaster is exceeding fantastickall Too too vaine, too too vaine. But we will put it (as they say) to Fortuna delaguar, I wish you the peace of minde
most royall supplement.

King. Here is like to be a good presence of Worthies,
He presents Hector of Troy, the Swaine Pompey great,
the Parish Curate Alexander, Armadoes Page Hercules,
the Pedant Iudas Machabew. And if these foure Worthies in their first shew thrue, these foure will change habites, and present the other five.

Ber. There is five in the first shew.

King. You are deceiued, tis not so.

Ber. The Pedant, the Braggart, the Hedge-Priest, the Foole, and the Boy,

Abate throw at Novum, and the whole world againe,
Cannot pricke out five such, take each one in's vaine.

Boy. With Libbards head on knee.

Ber. Well said old mocker,
I must needs be friends with thee.

Clo. I Pompey am, Pompey surnam'd the big.

Du. The great

Clo. It is great sic Pompey surnam'd the great -
That oft in field, with Targe and Shield, did make my see to sweat

And trauielling along this coast, I heere am come by chance,
And lay my Armes before the legs of this sweet Lasse of France

If your Ladiship would say thankes Pompey, I had done.

La. Great thankes great Pompey.

Clo. Tis not so much worth - but I hope I was perfect I made a little fault in great.

Ber. My hat to a halfe-pennie, Pompey prooues the best Worthie.

Enter Curate for Alexander.

Curat. When in the world I liu'd, I was the worldes Con-
mander

By East, West, North, & South, I spred my conqerring might
My Scutcheon plaue declares that I am Alexander.

Boier. Your nose saies no, you are not :
For it stands too right.

Ber. Your nose smells no, in this most tender smelling Knight.

Qu. The Conqueror is dismayd : Proceede good Alexander.

Cur. When in the world I liued, I was the worldes Commander.

Boier. Most true, 'tis right - you were so Alexander.

Ber. Pompey the great.

Clo. your seruant and Costard.

Ber. Take away the Conqueror, take away Alexander

Clo. O sir, you haue ouerthrowne Alexander the conqueror : you will be scrap'd out of the painted cloth for this.

this - your Lion that holds his Pollax sitting on a close stoole, will be giuen to Ajax. He will be the ninth wor-thie. A Conqueror, and affraid to speake? Runne away for shame Alisander. There an't shall please you: a foolish milde man, an honest man, looke you, & soon dasht He is a maruellous good neighbour in sooth, and a venie good Bowler but for Alisander, alas you see, how tis a little ore-parted But there are Worthies a comming, will speake their minde in some other sort Exit Cn.

Qu. Stand aside good Pompey.

Enter Pedant for Iudas, and the Boy for Hercules.

Ped. Great Hercules is presented by this Impe, Whose Club kil'd Cerberus that three-headed Cinns, And when he was a babe, a childe, a shrimpe, Thus did he strangle Serpents in his Manus - Quoniam, he seemeth in minority, Ergo, I come with this Apologic. Keepe some state in thy east, and vanish. Exit Boy

Ped. Iudas I am.

Dum. A Iudas?

Ped. Not I fearist sir.

Iudas I am yeliped Machabens.

Dum. Iudas Machibens clipt, is plaine Iudas.

Ber. A kissing traitor How art thou prou'd Iudas?

Ped. Iudas I am.

Dum. The more shame for you Iudas.

Ped. What meane you sir?

Ber. To make Iudas hang himselfe.

Ped. Begin sir, you are my elder

Ber. Will follow'd, Iudas was hang'd on an Elder.

Ped. I will not be put out of countenance.

Ber. Because thou hast no face.

Ped. What is this?

Ber. A Citterne head.

Dum. The head of a bodkin.

Ber. A deaths face in a ring

Lon. The face of an old Roman come, scarce scene

Ber. The pummell of Asors Faulchion.

Dum. The caru'd-bone face on a Flaske.

Ber. O Georges halfe cheeke in a brooch.

Dum. I, and in a brooch of Lead.

Ber. I, and worne in the cap of a Tooth-drawer.

And now forward, for we haue put thee in countenance

Ped. You haue put me out of countenance.

Ber. False, we haue giuen thee faces.

Ped. But you haue out-fac'd them all.

Ber. And thou wert a Lion, we would do so.

Boy. Therefore as he is, an Ass, let him go:

And so adieu sweet Iude. Nay, why dost thou stay?

Dum. For the latter end of his name.

Ber. For the Ass to the Iude: giue it him. Iudas a-way.

Ped. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.

Boy. A light for monsieur Iudas, it growes darke, he may stumble.

Que. Alas poore Machabens, how hath hee beene baited.

Enter Braggart

Ber. Hide thy head Achilles, heere comes Hector in Armes.

Dum. Though my mockes come home by me, I will now be merrie

King. Hector was but a Trojan in respect of this.

Boi. But is this Hector?

Kn. I thinke Hector was not so cleane timber'd.

Lon. His legges is too big for Hector.

Dum. More Calse certaine

Boi. No, he is best indued in the small.

Ber. This cannot be Hector.

Dum. He's a God or a Painter, for he makes faces.

Brag. The Armipotent Mars, of Lauces the almighty, gaue Hector a gift.

Dum. A gile Nutmegge.

Ber. A Lemmon.

Lon. Stucke with Cloues.

Dum. No clouen.

Brag. The Armipotent Mars of Lauces the almighty, gaue Hector a gift, the beere of Illion;

A man so breathed, that certaine he would fight you From morne till night, out of his Pavillion

I am that Flower.

Dum. That Mint.

Long. That Cullambine.

Brag. Sweet Lord Lengas and reine thy tongue.

Lon. I must rather giue it the rene - for it turnes against Hector

Dum. I and Hector's a Grey-hound

Brag. The sweet War-man is dead and rotten, Sweet chukes, beat not the bones of the buried: But I will forward with my deuce; Sweet Royaltie bellow on me the fence of hearing.

Enter a steppes forth.

Qu. Speake braue Hector, we are much delighted.

Brag. I do adore thy sweet Graces slipper.

Boy. Louer her by the foot

Dum. He may not by the yard

Brag. Thus Hector sure surmounted Hannibal.

The pricke is gone.

Clo. Fellow Hector, she is gone; she is sworne oneths on her way.

Brag. What meanest thou?

Clo. Faith vlesse you play the honest Trojan, the poore Wench is cast away. She's quick, the child brags in her belly already - tis yours.

Brag. Dost thou infamonize me among Potentates? Thou shalt die.

Clo. Then shall Hector be whipt for Jaqueretta that is quicke by him, and hang'd for Pompey, that is dead by him.

Dum. Most rare Pompey.

Boi. Renowned Pompey.

Ber. Greater then great, great, great, great Pompey: Pompey the huge.

Dum. Hector trembles

Ber. Pompey is moued, more Atees more Atees stirre them, or stirre them on.

Dum. Hector will challenge him.

Ber. I, if a haue no more mans blood in's belly, then will sup a Flea.

Brag. By the North-pole I do challenge thee

Clo. I wil not fight with a pole like a Northern man; He slash, He do it by the sword. I pray you let mee borrow my Armes againe.

Dum. Roome for the incensed Worthies.

Clo. He do it in my shirt.

Dum. Most resolute Pompey.

Page. Master, let me take you a button hole lower: Do you not see Pompey is vncaising for the combat: what meane meane you? you will lose your reputation.

Brag Gentlemen and Souldiers pardon me, I will not combat in my shirt.

Du You may not denie it, Pompry hath made the challenge.

Brag Sweet bloods, I both may, and will

Ber. What reason haue you for t?

Brag. The naked truth of it is, I haue no shirt, I go woolward for penance

Boy True, and it was moyned him in Rome for want of Linnen since when, He be sworne he wore none, but a dishclout of Iaquenettau, and that nee weares next his heart for a fauour.

Enter a Messenger, Monsieur Marcade.

Mar. God saue you Madame

Qu. Welcome Marcade, but that thou interruptest our merriment

Marc. I am forrie Madam, for the newes I bring is heaue in my tongue The King your father

Qu. Dead for my life.

Mar Euen so My tale is told.

Ber Worthies away, the Scent begins to cloud

Brag. For mine owne part, I breath free breath I haue scene the day of wrong, through the little hole of discretion, and I will right my selfe like a Souldier

Exeunt Worthies

Kim. How fare's your Maestie?

Qu. Boyes prepare, I will away to night.

Kim Madame not so, I do beseech you stay

Qu Prepare I say. I thanke you gracious Lords

For all your fure endeouours and entreats

Out of a new fid-soule, that you vouchsafe,

In your rich wisdom to excuse, or hide,

The liberall opposition of our spirits,

If ouer-boldly we haue borne our selues,

In the conuise of breath (your gentlenesse

Was guiltie of it.) Farewell worthe Lord

A heaue heart beares not a humble tongue

Excuse me so, comming so short of thanks,

For my great sure, so easily obtain d

Kim. The extreme parts of time, extremelie formes

All causes to the purpose of his speed

And often at his verie loose decides

That, which long proceesse could not arbitrate.

And though the mourning brow of progenie

Forbid the smiling curtesie of Loue

The holy suite which faine it would conuince,

Yet since loues argument was first on foote,

Let not the cloud of sorrow iustle it

From what it purpos'd: since to waile friends lost,

Is not by much so wholsome profitable,

As to re.oyce at friends but newly found.

Qu. I vnderstand you not, my greefes are double.

Ber. Honest plain words, best pierce the ears of griefe

And by these badges vnderstand the King,

For your faire sakes haue we neglected time,

Plaid foule play with our oaths your beautie Ladies

Hath much defamed vs, fashioning our humors

Euen to the opposed end of our intents.

And what in vs hath seem'd ridiculous.

As Loue is full of vnbestitting straines,

All wanton as a childe, skipping and vaine.

Form'd by the eie, and therefore like the eie.

Full of straying shapes, of habits, and of formes

Varying in subiects as the eie doth roule,

To euerie varied object in his glance

Which partie-coated presence of loose loue

Put on by vs, if in your heauenly eies,

Haue misbecom'd our oaths and grauties,

Thole heauenlie eies that looke into these faults,

Suggested vs to make therefore Ladies

Our loue being yours, the error that Loue makes

Is likewise yours. We to our selues pioue false,

By being once false, for euer to be true

Is thole that make vs both, faire Ladies you

And euen that falshood in it selfe a sinne,

Thus purifies it felie, and turnes to grace.

Qu We haue receiu'd your Letters, full of Loue

Your fauours, the Ambassadors of Loue.

And in our maiden counsaile rated them,

At courtship, pleasant iest, and curtesie,

As bumbast and as lining to the time.

But more deuout then these are our respects

Haue we not bene, and therefore met your loues

In their owne fashion, like a merriment.

Du Our letters Madam, shew'd much more then iest.

Lon. So did our lookes.

Rosa. We did not coat them so

Kim. Now at the latest minute of the houre,

Grant vs your loues.

Qu A time me thinkes too short,

To make a world-without-end bargain in;

No, no my Lord, your Grace is periu'd much,

Full of deare guilnesse, and therefore this.

It for my Loue (as there is no such cause)

You will do ought, this shall you do for me.

Your oth I will not trust but go with speed

To some forlorne and naked Hermitage,

Remote from all the pleasures of the world

There stay, vntill the twelue Celestiall Signes

Haue brought about their annuall reckoning.

If this austere insociable life,

Change not your offer made in heate of blood.

If sloths, and fits, hard lodging, and thin weeds

Nip not the gaudie blossomes of your Loue,

But that it beare this triall, and last loue.

Then at the expiration of the yeare,

Come challenge me, challenge me by these deserts,

And by this Virgin palme, now kissing thine,

I will be thine and till that instant shut

My wofull selfe vp in a mourning house,

Raining the teares of lamentation,

For the remembrance of my Fathers death

If this thou do denie, let our hands part,

Neither intred in the others hart

Kim If this, or more then this, I would denie,

To flatter vp these powers of mine with rest,

The sodaine hand of death close vp mine eie.

Hence euer then, my heart is in thy breast.

Ber. And what to me my Loue? and what to me?

Ref. You must be purged too, your sins are rack'd.

You are attaint with faults and perurie

Therefore if you my fauor meane to get,

A tweluemonth shall you spend, and neuer rest,

But seeke the wearie beds of people sicke

Du. But what to me my loue? but what to me?

Kat. A wife? a beard, faire health, and honestie,

With three-fold loue, I wish you all these three.

Du O shall I say, I thanke you gentle wife?

Kat. Not so my Lord, a tweluemonth and a day,

Ille

He make no words that smoothie'd wooers say.
Come when the King doth to my Ladie come :

Then if I have much loue, He giue you some.

Dum. He serue thee true and faithfully till then.

Kath. Yet sweare not, lest ye be forsworne agen.

Lon. What saies Maria?

Maria. At the tweluenonths end,
He change my blacke Gowne, for a faithfull friend

Lon. He stay with patience but the tunc is long.

Maria. The liker you, few taller are so yong.

Ber. Studies my Ladie? Mistresse, looke on me,

Behold the window of my heart, mine eie.

What humble suite attends thy answer there,

Impole some seruice on me for my loue.

Ros. Oft haue I heard of you my Lord Beronne,
Before I saw you: and the worlds large tongue
Proclaimes you for a man replete with mockes,
Full of comparisons, and wounding floutes
Which you on all estates will execute,
That lie within the mercie of your wit.
To weed this Wormewood from your fruitfull braine,
And therewithall to win me, if you please,
Without the which I am not to be won
You shall this tweluenmonth terme from day to day,
Visite the speechlesse sicke, and still conuerse
With groaning wretches: and your taske shall be,
With all the fierce endeavour of your wit,
To enforce the pained impotent to smile.

Ber. To moue wilde laughter in the throate of death?
It cannot be, it is impossible.

Mirth cannot moue a soule in agonie

Ros. Why that's the way to choke a gining spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace,
Which shallow laughing hearers giue to fooles
A iests prosperitie, lies in the eare
Of him that heares it, neuer in the tongue
Of him that makes it: then, if sickly eares,
Deaf with the clamours of their owne deare grones,
Will heare your idle scornes, continue then,
And I will haue you and that fault withall.
But if they will not, throw away that spirit,
And I shal finde you emptie of that fault,
Right ioyfull of your reformation

Ber. A tweluemonth? Well befall what will befall,
He iest a tweluemonth in an Hospitall.

Qu. I sweet my Lord and to I take my leaue

King. No Madam, we will bring you on your way.

Ber. Our woiing doth not end like an old Play:

Iacke hath not Gill these Ladies courtesie

Might wel haue made our sport a Comedie.

Ans. Come sir, it wants a tweluemonth and a day,
And then 'twil end.

Ber. That's too long for a play.

Enter Braggart

Brag. Sweet Maiesly vouchsafe me:

Qu. Was not that Hector?

Dum. The worthie Knight of Troy.

Brag. I wil kisse thy royal finger, and take leaue.
I am a Votarie, I haue vow'd to Iaquenetta to holde the Plough for her sweet loue three yeares. But most esteemed greatnesse, wil you heare the Dialogue that the two Learned men haue compiled, in praise of the Owle and the Cuckow? It should haue followed in the end of our shew

Kim. Call them forth quickly, we will do so.

Brag. Holla, Approach.

Enter all.

This side is Hibernia, Winter.

This Ver, the Spring: the one maintained by the Owle, Th'other by the Cuckow.

Ver, begin.

The Song.

When Daisies pied, and Violets blew,
And Cuckow-buds of yellow hew:
And Ladie smockes all silver white,
Do paint the Medowes with delight
The Cuckow then on euerie tree,
Mockes married men, for thus sings he,
Cuckow.
Cuckow, Cuckow. O word of feare,
Vnpleasing to a married eare.

When Shepheards pipe on Oaten straws,
And merrie Larkes are Ploughmens clockes:
When Turtles tread, and Rookes and Daws,
And Maidens bleach their summer smockes.
The Cuckow then on euerie tree
Mockes married men; for thus sings he,
Cuckow.
Cuckow, Cuckow: O word of feare,
Vnpleasing to a married eare.

Winter.

When Icicles hang by the wall,
And Dicke the Spheheard blowes his naile;
And Tom beares Logges into the hall,
And Milke comes frozen home in pail.
When blood is nipt, and waies be fowle,
Then nightly sings the staring Owle
Tu-whit to-who.

A merrie note,

While greasie Ione doth keele the pot.

When all aloud the winde doth blow,
And coughing drownes the Parsons saw:
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marrians nose looks red and raw:
When roasted Crabs hisse in the bowle,
Then nightly sings the staring Owle,
Tu-whit to who:

A merrie note,

While greasie Ione doth keele the pot.

Brag. The Words of Mercurie,
Are harsher after the songs of Apollo:
You that way; we this way.

EXEUNT OMNES.

FINIS.

A MIDSOMMER Nights Dreame.

Actus primus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolita, with others

Theseus.

Now faire Hippolita, our nuptiall-houre
Drawes on apace foure happy daies bring in Another Moon but oh, me thinks, how slow
This old Moon wanes; She lingers my desires
Like to a Step-dame, or a Dowager,
Long withering out a yong mans reuennew.

Hip Foure daies wil quickly steep theselues in nights
Foure nights wil quickly dreame away the time.
And then the Moone, like to a silver bow,
Now bent in heauen, shal behold the night
Of our solemnities

The. Go Philostrate,
Stirre vp the Athenian youth to merriments,
Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth,
Turne melancholy forth to Funerals
The pale companion is not for our pompe,
Hippolita, I woo'd thee with my sword,
And wonne thy loue, doing thee iniuries
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pompe, with triumph, and with reuelling.

Enter Egeus and his daughter Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned Duke

The. Thanks good Egeus: What's the news with thee?

Ege Full of vexation, come I, with complaint Against my child, my daughter Hermia
Stand forth Demetrius

My Noble Lord,
This man hath my consent to marrie her.

Stand forth Lysander.

And my gracious Duke,
This man hath bewitch'd the bosome of my child:
Thou, thou Lysander, thou hast given her rimes,
And interchang'd loue tokens with my child:
Thou hast by Moone-light at her window sing'd,
With fainting voice, verses of faining loue,
And stolne the impression of her fantasie,
With bracelets of thy haire, rings, gawds, eardrops,
Knackers, trifles, Nose-gaies, sweet meates, messengers
Of strong preuailment in unhardned youth.

With cunning hast thou filch'd my daughters heart,
Turn'd her obedience (which is due to me)
To stubbornesse. And my gracious Duke,
Be it so she will not heere before your Grace,
Consent to marrie with Demetrius;
I beg the ancient priuiledge of Athens;
As fate is mine, I may dispose of her;
Which shall be either to this Gentleman,
Or to her death, according to our Law,
Immediately provided in that case.

The What say you Hermia? be aduis'd faire Maide,
To you your Father should be as a God;
One that compos'd your beauties; yea and one
To whom you are but as a forme in waxe
By him imprinted' and within his power,
To leaue the figure, or disfigure it:

Demetrius is a worthy Gentleman.

Her. So is Lysander

The In himselfe he is.

But in this kinde, wanting your fathers voyce,
The other must be held the worthier

Her I would my father look'd but with my eyes.

The Rather your eyes must with his iudgment looke

Her I do entreat your Grace to pardon me
I know not by what power I am made bold,
Nor how it may concerne my modestie
In such a pretence heere to pleade my thoughts;
But I beseech your Grace, that I may know
The worst that may befall me in this case,
If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

The. Either to dye the death, or to abiure
For euer the society of men
Therefore faire Hermia question your desires,
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether (if you yeeld not to your fathers choise)
You can endure the liverie of a Nunne,
For aye to be in shady Cloister mew'd,
To liue a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymnes to the cold fruitlesse Moone,
Thrice blessed they that master so their blood,
To vndergo such maiden pilgrimage;
But earthlier happie is the Rose distill'd,
Then that which withering on the virgin thorn,
Growes, liues, and dies, in single blessednesse

N

Her.

Her. So will I grow, so liue, so die my Lord,
Ere I will yeeld my virgin Patent vp
Vnto his Lordship, whose vnwished yooke.
My soule consents not to giue foueraignty

The. Take time to pause, and by the next new Moon
The sealing day betwixt my loue and me,
For euerslasting bond of fellowship:
Vpon that day either prepare to dye,
For disobedience to your fathers will,
Or else to wed Demetrius as hee would,
Or on Dianaes Altar to p̄test
For aie, austerit̄, and single life.

Dem. Relent sweet Hermia, and Lysander, yeelde
Thy crazed title to my certaine right.

Lys. You haue her fathers loue, Demetrius.
Let me haue Hermias. do you marry him.

Egeu. Scornfull Lysander, true, he hath my Loue;
And what is mine, my loue shall render him.
And she is mine, and all my right of her,
I do estate vnto Demetrius.

Lys. I am my Lord, as well deriu'd as he,
As well possesse: my loue is more then his
My fortunes euery way as fau'relly ranck'd
(If not with vantage) as Demetrius
And (which is more then all these boasts can be)
I am belou'd of beauteous Hermia

Why should not I then prosecute my right?

Demetrius, Ile auouch it to his head,
Made loue to Nedars daughter, Helena,
And won her soule: and she (sweet Ladie) dotes,
Duntyly dotes, dotes in Idolatry,
Vpon this spotted and inconstant man.

The. I must cōfesse, that I haue heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought to haue spoke thereof
But being ouer-full of selfe-affaires,
My mende did lose it. But Demetrius come,
And come Egeu, you shall go with me,
I haue some priuate schooling for you both.
For you faire Hermia, looke you arme your selfe,
To fit your fancies to your Fathers will,
Or else the Law of Athens yeelds you vp
(Which by no meanes we may extenuate)
To death, or to a vow of single life
Come my Hippolita, what cheare my loue?

Demetrius and Egeu go along:

I must imploy you in some businesse
Against our nuptiall, and conferre with you
Of something, neerely that concerns your selues.

Ege. With dutie and desire we follow you. Exeunt
Manet Lysander and Hermia.

Lys. How now my loue? Why is your cheek so pale?
How chance the Roses there do fade so fast?

Her. Belike for want of raine, which I could well
Beteeme them, from the tempest of mine eyes.

Lys. For ought that euer I could reade,
Could euer heare by tale or historie,
The course of true loue neuer did run smooth,
But either it was different in blood

Her. O crosse! too high to be enthal'd to loue.

Lys. Or else misgraffed, in respect of yeares

Her. O spight! too old to be ingag'd to yong

Lys. Or else it stood vpon the choise of merit.

Her. O hell! to chooise loue by anothers eie.

Lys. Or if there were a simpathe in choise,
Warre, death, or sicknesse, did lay siege to it;
Making it momentarie, as a sound:

Swift as a shadow, short as any dreame,
Briefe as the lightning in the collied night,
That (in a splene) vnfolde both heauen and earth;
And ere it hath power to say, behold,
The lawes of darknesse do deuoure it vp:
So quicke bright things come to confusion.

Her. If then true Louers haue beene euer crost,
It stands as an edict in destinie:
Then let vs teach our triall patience,
Because it is a customarie crosse,
As due to loue, as thoughts, and dreames, and sighes,
Wishes and feares; poore Fancies followers.

Lys. A good perswasion; therefore heare me Hermia,
I haue a Widdow Aunt, a dowager,
Of great reuennew, and she hath no childe,
From Athens is her house remou'd seuen leagues,
And she respects me, as her onely sonne.
There gentle Hermia, may I marrie thee,
And to that place, the sharpe Athenian Law
Cannot pursue vs. If thou lou'st me, then Steale forth thy fathers house to morrow night.
And in the wood, a league without the towne,
(Where I did meete thee once with Helena,
To do obseruance for a morne of May)
There will I stay for thee.

Her. My good Lysander,
I sweare to thee, by Cupids strongest bow,
By his best arrow with the golden head,
By the simplicitie of Venus Doves,
By that which knitteth soules, and prospers loue,
And by that fire which burn'd the Carthage Queene,
When the false Trojan vnder saile was seene,
By all the voves that euer men haue broke,
(In number more then euer women spoke)
In that same place thou hast appointed me,
To morrow truly will I meete with thee.

Lys. Keepe promise loue. looke here comes Helena.

Enter Helena.

Her. God speede faire Helena, whither away?

Hel. Cal you me faire? that faire againe vn say,
Demetrius loues you faire: O happie faire!
Your eyes are loadstarres, and your tongues sweet ayre
More tuneable then Larke to shepheards eare,
When wheate is greene, when hauthorne buds appeare,
Sicknesse is catching: O were fauor so,
Your words I catch, faire Hermia ere I go,
My eare should catch your voice, my eye, your eye,
My tongue should catch your tongues sweet melodie,
Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated,
The rest Ile giue to be to you translated.
O teach me how you looke, and with what art
you sway the motion of Demetrius hart.

Her. I frowne vpon him, yet he loues me still.

Hel. O that your frownes would teach my smiles such skil.

Her. I giue him curses, yet he giues me loue.

Hel. O that my prayers could such affection moue.

Her. The more I hate, the more he followes me.

Hel. The more I loue, the more he hateth me.

Her. His folly Helena is none of mine.

Hel. None but your beauty, wold that fault wer mine.

Her. Take comfort: he no more shall see my face,
Lysander and my selfe will flie this place.

Before the time I did Lysander see,
Seem'd Athens like a Paradise to mee.

O then, what graces in my Loue do dwell,
That he hath turn'd a heauen into hell

Lys. Helon, to you our mindes we will unfold,
To morrow night, when Phabe doth behold
Her siluer visage, in the watry glasse,
Decking with liquid pearle, the bladed grasse
(A time that Louers flights doth still conceale)
Through Athens gates, haue we deuised to steale
Her. And in the wood, where often you and I,
Vpon faint Primrose beds, were wont to lye,
Emptying our bosomes, of their counsell sweld.
There my Lysander, and my selfe shall meete,
And thence from Athens turne away our eyes
To seeke new friends and strange companions,
Farwell sweet play-fellow, pray thou for vs,
And good lucke grant thee thy Demetrius.
Keepe word Lysander we must starue our sight,
From louers foode, till morrow deepe midnight

Exit Hermia.

Lys. I will my Hermia Helena adieu,
As you on him, Demetrius dotes on you. Exit Lysander
Hele. How happy some, ore other some can be?
Through Athens I am thought as faire as she.
But what of that? Demetrius thinkes not so.
He will not know, what all, but he doth know,
And as hee erres, doting on Hermias eyes;
So I, admiring of his qualities.
Things base and vilde, holding no quantity,
Loue can transpoe to forme and dignity,
Loue lookes not with the eyes, but with the minde,
And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blinde.
Nor hath loues minde of any iudgement taste.
Wings and no eyes, figure, vnheedy ha'e.
And therefore is I oue said to be a childe,
Because in choise he is often beguil'd,
As waggish boyes in game themselves foitsweare;
So the boy Loue is periu'd euery where
For ere Demetrius lookt on Hermias byne,
He hail'd downe oathes that he was onely mine.
And when this Haile some hear from Hermia felt,
So he dissolu'd, and showres of oathes did melt,
I will goe tell him of faire Hermias flight
Then to the wood will he, to morrow night
Pursue her, and for his intelligence,
If I haue thanks, it is a deere expence
But heerein meane I to enrich my paine,
To haue his sight thither, and backe againe

Exit

Enter Quince the Carpenter, Snug the Ioyner, Bottom the Weaver, Flute the bellows-mender, Snout the Tinker, and Starveling the Taylor.

Quin. Is all our company heere?

Bot. You were best to call them generally, man by man, according to the scrip

Quin. Here is the knowle of euery mans name, which is thought fit through all Athens, to play in our Enterlude before the Duke and the Dutches, on his wedding day at night

Bot. First, godd Peter Quince, say what the play treats on: then read the names of the Actors: and so grow on to a point

Quin. Marry our play is the most lamentable Comedy, and most iust death of Pyramus and Thisbe.

Bot. A very good peece of worke I haue you, and a merry. Now good Peter Quince, call forth your Actors by the crowle. Masters spread your selues

Quince. Answer as I call you. Nicke Bottom the Weaver.

Bottom. Ready; name what part I am for, and proceed.

Quince. You Nicke Bottom are set downe for Pyramus.

Bot. What is Pyramus, a louer, or a tyrant?

Quin. A Louer that kills himselfe most gallantly for loue

Bot. That will aske some teares in the true performing of it if I do it, let the audience looke to their eyes I will moue stormes; I will condole in some measure. To the rest yet, my chiefe humour is for a tyrant I could play Ercles rarely, or a part to teare a Cat in, to make all split the raging Rocks, and shiuering shocks shall break the locks of prison gates, and Phibbus carre shall shine from farre, and make and marre the foolish Fates. This was losly Now name the rest of the Players. This is Ercles vaine, a tyrants vaine a louer is more condoling

Quin. Francis Flute the Bellowes-mender

Flu. Heere Peter Quince.

Quin. You must take Thisbe on you

Flu. What is Thisbe, a wandring Knight?

Quin. It is the Lady that Pyramus must loue.

Flu. Nay faith, let not mee play a woman, I haue a beard comming.

Quin. That's all one, you shall play it in a Maske, and you may speake as small as you will

Bot. And I may hide my face, let me play Thisbe too. He speake in a monstrous little voyce, Thisbe, Thisbe, ah Pyramus my louer deare, thy Thisbe deare, and Lady deare.

Quin. No no, you must play Pyramus, and Flute, you Thuby.

Bot. Well, proceed

Quin. Robin Starveling the Taylor.

Star. Heere Peter Quince

Quince. Robin Starveling, you must play Thisbe mother?

Tom Srowt, the Tinker

Snout. Heere Peter Quince

Quin. You, Pyramus father; my self, Thisbe father; Snug the Ioyner, you the Lyons part and I hope there is a play fitted

Snug. Haue you the Lyons part written? pray you if be, giue it me, for I am slow of studie.

Quin. You may doe it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring

Bot. Let mee play the Lyon too, I will roare that I will doe any mans heart good to heare me I will roare, that I will make the Duke say, Let him roare againe, let him roare againe

Quin. If you should doe it too terribly, you would fright the Dutchesse and the Ladies, that they would shrink, and that were enough to hang vs all.

All That would hang vs euery mothers sonne

Bottom. I graunt you friends, if that you should fright the Ladies out of their Wittes, they would haue no more discretion but to hang vs: but I will aggravate my voyce so, that I will roare you as gently as any sucking Doue; I will roare and 'twere any Nightingale.

Quin. You can play no part but Pyramus, for Pyra- mis is a sweet-fac'd man, a proper man as one shall see in a summers day; a most louely Gentleman-like man, therefore you must needs play Pyramus

Bot. Well, I will vndertake it What beard were I best to play it in?

Quin. Why, what you will

Bot. I will discharge it, in either your straw-colour beard, your orange tawne beard, your purple in graine beard, or your French-crowne colour'd beard, your perfect yellow.

Quin. Some of your French Crownes haue no haire at all, and then you will play bare-fac'd But masters here are your parts, and I am to intreat you, request you, and desire you, to con them by too morrow night and meet me in the palace wood, a mile without the Towne, by Moone-light, there we will rehearse for if we meete in the Cite, we shalbe dog'd with company, and our deuises knowne In the meane time, I wil draw a bil of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you faile me not.

Bottom. We will meete, and there we may rehearse more obicenely and couragiously Take paines, be perfect, adieu

Quin. At the Dukes oake we meete.

Bot. Enough, hold or cux bow-strings. Exeunt

Actus Secundus

Enter a Fairie at one doore, and Robin good-fellow at another.

Rob. How now spirit, whether wander you?

Fa. Quer hill, ouer dale, through bush, through briar, ouer parke, ouer pale, through flood, through fire, I do wander euer where, swifter then 5 Moons sphere, And I serue the Fairy Queene, to dew her orbs vpon the The Cowslips tall, her personers bee, (green In their gold coats, spots you see, Those be Rubies, Fairie fauors, In those freckles, liue their fauors, I must go seeke some dew drops heere, And hang a pearle in euery cowslips eare. Farewell thou Lob of spirits, Ile be gon, Our Queene and all her Blues come heere anon.

Rob. The King doth keepe his Reuels here to night, Take heed the Queene come not without his sight, For Oberon is paising fell and wrath, Because that she, as her attendant, hath A louely boy stolne from an Indian King, She neuer had to sweet a changeling, And zealous Oberon would haue the childe Knight of his traine, to trace the Forrests wilde But she (perforce) with holds the loued boy, Crownes him with flowers, and makes him all her ioy. And now they neuer meete in groue, or greene, By fountaine cleere, or spangled star-light sheene, But they do square, that all their Blues for feare Creep into Acorne cups and hide them there.

Fa. Either I mistake your shape and making quite, Or else you are that shrew'd and knauish spirit Cal'd Robin Good-fellow. Are you not hee, That frights the maidens of the Villagere, Skim milke, and sometimes labour in the querne, And bottlelesse make the breathlesse hufwife cherne, And sometime make the drinke to beare no barme, Misleade night-wanderers, laughing at their harme, Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Pucke, You do their worke, and they shall haue good lucke. Are not you he?

Rob. Thou speake'st aright; I am that merrie wanderer of the night: I left to Oberon, and make him smile, When I a fax and beane-fed horse beguile, Neighing in likenesse of a silly foale, A id sometime lurke I in a Gossips bole, In very likenesse of a roasted crab: And when she drukes, against her lips I bob. And on her withered dewlop poure the Ale. The wisest Aunt telling the saddest tale, Sometime for three-foot stoole, mistaketh me, Then slip I from her bum, downe topples she, And tailour cries, and falls into a coffe. And then the whole quire hold their hips, and loffe, And waxen in their mirth, and neeze, and sm care, A merrier houre vvas neuer wasted there But roome Fairy, heere comes Oberon

Fa. And heere my Mistis Would that he vvere gone.

Enter the King of Fairies at one doore with his traine, and the Queene at another with hers.

Ob. Ill met by Moone-light, Proud Tytania,

Qu. What, zealous Oberon? Fairy skip hence. I haue forsworne his bed and companie

Ob. Tartarish Wanton; am not I thy Lord?

Qu. Then I must be thy Lady. but I know When thou vvasst stolne away from Fairy Land, And in the shape of Cormisate all day, Playing on pipes of Corne, and versing loue To amorous Phidias Why art thou heere Come from the farthest sleepe of India? But that forsooth the bouncing Amazon Your bust in d Mistresse, and your Warrior loue, To Theseus must be Wedded, and you come, To giue their bed ioy and prosperitie

Ob. How canst thou thus for shame Tytania, Glance at my credite, with Hippolita? Knowing I know thy loue to Theseus? Didst thou not leade him through the glimmering night From Peregria, whom he rauished? And make him with rare Eagles breake his faith With Ariadne, and Asiopa?

Quet. These are the forgeres of zealousie, And neuer since the middle Summers spring Met vve on hill, in dale, Forrest, or mead, By pained fountaine, or by rushe brooke, Or in the beached margin of the sea, To dance our ringlets to the whistling Winde, But with thy braules thou hast disturb'd our sport, Therefore the Windes, piping to vs in vaine, As in reuenge, haue suck'd vp from the sea Contagious foggies Which falling in the Land, Hath euerie petty Riuer made so proud, That they haue ouer-borne their Continents. The Oxe hath therefore stretch'd his yoke in vaine, The Ploughman loft his sweat, and the greene Corne Hath rotted, ere his youth attain'd a beard: The fold stands empty in the drowned field, And Crows are fatted with the murrion focke,

The

The nine mens Morris is filld vp with mud,
And the quaint Mazes in the wanton greene,
For lacke of tread are vndistinguishable.
The humane mortals want their winter heere,
No night is now with hymne or caroll blest;
Therefore the Moone (the gouernesse of floods)
Pale in her anger, washes all the aire;
That Rheumaticke diseases doe abound
And through this distemperature, we see
The seasons alter, hoared headed frosts
Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson Rose,
And on old Hyems chinne and Ice crowne,
An odoros Chaplet of sweet Sommer buds
Is as in mockry iet The Spring, the Sommer,
The childing Autumne, angry Winter change
Their wonted Liveries, and the mazed world,
By their increase, now knowes not which is which,
And this same progeny of evils,
Comes from our debate, from our dissention,
We are their parents and originall

Ober Do you amēd it then, it lies in you,
Why should Titania crosse her Oberon?
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my Henchman

Qu Set your heart at rest,
The Fairy land buyes not the childe of me,
His mother was a Votresse of my Order,
And in the spiced Indian aire, by night
Full often hath she gossip by my side,
And sat with me on Neptunes yellow sands,
Marking th embarked traders on the flood,
When we haue laught to see the sailes conceiue,
And grow big bellied with the wanton winde
Which she with pretty and with swimming gate,
Following (her vombe then rich with my yong squire)
Would imitate, and saile vpon the Land,
To fetch me trissles, and returne againe,
As from a voyage, rich with n erchandize.
But she being mortall, of that boy did die,
And for her sake I doe reare vp her boy,
And for her sake I will not part with him.

Ob. How long within this wood intend you stay?

Qu Perchance till after Theseus wedding day
If you will patiently dance in our Round,
And see our Moone-light reuels, goe with vs;
If not, shun me and I will spare your haunts

Ob. Giue me that boy, and I will goe with thee.

Qu Not for thy Fairy Kingdome Fairies away:
We shall chide downe right, if I longer stay

Ob. Wel, go thy way thou shalt not from this grouce,
Till I torment thee for this injury.

My gentle Pucke come hither; then remembrest
Since once I sat vpon a promontory,
And heard a Meare-maide on a Ddolphins backe,
Vtering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew wul at her soing,
And certaine starres shot madly from their Spheares,
To heare the Sea-maids musickd.

Puc. I remember.

Ob. That very time I say (but thou couldst not)
Flying betweene the eold Moone and the earth,
Cupid all arm'd; a certaine arrow heooke
At a faire Vestall, throwed by the West,
And loos'd his loue-shaft smactly from his bow,
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts,
But I might see young Cupid fiery shaft

Quencht in the chaffe beames of the warry Moone;
And the imperiall Votresse passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy free.
Yet markt I where the bolt of Cupid fell.
It fell vpon a little westerne flower,
Before, milke-white; now purple with lous wound,
And maidens call it, Loue in idleness.
Fetch me that flower; the hearb I shew'd thee once,
The iuyce of it, on sleeping eye-lids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Vpon the next hie creature that it sees
Fetch me this hearbe, and be thou heere againe,
Ere the Lenuathan can twine a league.

Pucke Ile put a girdle about the earth, in forty minutes

Ober. Having once this iuyce,
Ile watch Titania, when she is asleepe,
And drop the liquor of it in her eyes
The next thing when she awakes lookes vpon,
(Be it on Lyon, Beare, or Wolfe, or Bull,
On medling Monkey, or on busie Ape)
Shall pursue it, with the soule of loue
And ere I take this charme off from her sight,
(As I can take it with another hearbe)
Ile make her render vp her Page to me.
But v ho comes heere? I am inuisible,
And I will ouer-heare their conference.

Enter Demetrius, Helena following him

Dem. I loue thee not, therefore pursue me not,
Where is Lyssander, and faire Helmi?
The one Ile stay, the other stayeth me,
Thou toldst me they were stolne into this wood;
And heere am I, and wood within this wood,
Because I cannot mee my Helmi

Hence, get thee gone, and follow me no more

Hel. You draw me, you hard-hearted Adamant,
But yet you draw not Iron, for my heart
Is true as Steele. Leau your power to draw,
And I shall haue no power to follow you

Dem. Do I entice you? do I speake you faire?
Or rather doe I not in plainest truth,

Tell you I doe not, nor I cannot loue you?

Hel. And euen for that doe I loue thee the more;
I am your spaniell, and Demetrius,
The more you beat me, I will fawne on you,
Vse me but as your spaniell, spurne me, strike me,
Neglect me, lose me; onely giue me leau
(Vnworthy as I am) to follow you.

What worser place can I beg in your loue,
(And yet a place of high respect with me)
Then to be vsed as you doe your dogge.

Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my spirit,
For I am sicke when I do looke on thee.

Hel. And I am sicke when I looke not on you.

Dem. You doe impeach your modesty too much,
To leau the City, and commit your selfe
Into the hands of one that loues you not,
To trust the opportunity of night,
And the ill counsell of a desert place,
With the rich worth of your virginity.

Hel. Your vertue is my priuiledge: for that
It is not night when I doe see your face.
Therefore I thinke I am not in the night;
Nor doth this wood lacke worlds of company,

For you in my respect are nill the world
Then how can it be said I am alone,
When all the world is heere to looke on me?

Dem. Ile run from thee, and hide me in the brakes,
And leaue thee to the mercy of wilde beafts.

Hel. The wildest hath not such a heart as you;
Runne when you will, the story shall be chang'd:
Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chase;
The Doue pursues the Griffin, the milde Hinde
Makes speed to catch the Tyger. Bootlesse speede,
When cowardise pursues, and valour flies.

Demet. I will not stay thy questions, let me go;
Or if thou follow me, doe not beleue,
But i shall doe thee mischief in the wood.

Hel. I, in the Temple, in the Towne, and Field
You doe me mischief. Fye Demetrius,
Your wrongs doe set a scandall on my sexe:
We cannot fight for loue, as men may doe;
We should be woo'd, and were not made to wooe.
I follow thee, and make a heauen of hell,
To die vpon the hand I loue so well.

Exit

Ob. Fare thee well Nymph, ere he do leaue this groue,
Thou shalt see him, and he shall seeke thy loue.
Hast thou the flower there? Welcome wanderer.

Enter Pucke.

Puck. I, there it is

Ob. I pray thee giue it me
I know a banke where the wilde time blowes,
Where Oxslips and the nodding Violet growes,
Quite ouer-cannop'd with luscious woodbine,
With sweet muske roses, and with Eglantine,
There sleepest Tytania, sometime of the night,
Lul'd in these flowers, with dances and delight.
And there the snake throwes her enammel'd skinne,
Weed wide enough to rap a Fairy in
And with the iuyce of this Ile streak her eyes,
And make her full of hatefull fantasies
Take thou some of it, and seek through this groue;
A sweet Athenian Lady is in loue
With a disdainefull youth annoint his eyes,
But doe it when the next thing he espies,
May be the Lady Thou shalt know the man,
By the Athenian garments he hath on.
Effect it with some care, that he may proue
More fond on her, then she vpon her loue;
And looke thou meet me ere the first Cocke crow.

Pu. Feare not my Lord, your seruant shall do so. Exit.

Enter Queene of Fairies, with her traine.

Queen. Come, now a Roundell, and a Fairy song;
Then for the third part of a minute hence,
Some to kill Cankers in the muske rose buds,
Some warre with Remise, for their leathern wings,
To make my small Blues coates, and some keepe backe
The clamorous Oyle that nightly hoots and wonders
At our quaint spirits. Sing me now asleepe,
Then to your offices, and let me rest.

Fairies Sing.

*Ton spotted Snakes with double tongue,
Thorny Hedgehogges be not scene,
Newts and blinde wormes do no wrong,
Come not neere our Fairy Queene.
Philomela with melodie,*

*Sing in your sweet Lullaby.
Lulla, lulla, lullaby, lulla, lulla, lullaby,
Newer harme, nor spell, nor charme,
Come our lonely Lady nye,
So good night with Lullaby.*

2. Fairy Weaning Spiders come not neere,
Hence you long leg'd Spinners, hence:
Beetles blacke approach not neere;
Worme nor Snake doe no offence.
Philomela with melody, &c.

1. Fairy Hence away, now all is well;
One alsofe, stand Centinell. Shee sleepest.

Enter Oberon.

Ober. What thou seest when thou dost wake,
Do it for thy true Loue take:
Loue and languish for his sake.
Be it Ounce, or Catte, or Beare,
Pard, or Boare with bristled haire,
In thy eye that shall appeare,
When thou wak'st, it is thy deare,
Wake when some vile thing is neere.

Enter Lysander and Hermia.

Lys. Faire loue, you faint with wandring in y woods,
And to speake troth I haue forgot our way:
Wee'll rest vs Hermia, if you thinke it good,
And tarry for the comfort of the day.

Her. Be it so Lysander; finde you out a bed,
For I vpon this banke will rest my head.

Lys. One turfe shall serue as pillow for vs both,
One heart, one bed, two bosomes, and one troth.

Her. Nay good Lysander, for my sake my deere Lie further off yet, doe not lie so neere

Lys. O take the sence sweet, of my innocence,
Loue takes the meaning, in loues conference,
I meane that my heart vnto yours is knit,
So that but one heart can you make of it.
Two bosomes interchanged with an oath,
So then two bosomes, and a single troth.
Then by your side, no bed-roome me deny,
For lying so, Hermia, I doe not lye.

Her. Lysander riddles very prettily;
Now much beshrew my manners and my pride,
If Hermia meant to say, Lysander lied
But gentle friend, for loue and courtesie
Lie further off, in humane modesty,
Such separation, as may well be said,
Becomes a vertuous batchelour, and a maide,
So farre be distant, and good night sweet friend;
Thy loue nere alter, till thy sweet life end.

Lys. Amen, amen, to that faire prayer, say I,
And then end life, when I end loyalty:
Heere is my bed, sleepe giue thee all his rest

Her. With halfe that wish, the wishers eyes be prest
Enter Pucke They sleepe.

Puck. Through the Forrest haue I gone,
But Athenian finde I none,
One whose eyes I might approue
This flowers force in stirring loue.
Night and silence: who is heere?
Weedes of Athen she doth weare:
This is he (my master said)
Despised the Athenian maide:
And heere the maiden sleeping found,

On

On the danke and durty ground.
 Pretty soule, she dust not lye
 Neere this lacke-loue, this kill-curtisie.
 Churle, vpon thy eyes I throw
 All the power this charme doth owe:
 When thou wak'st, let loue forbid
 Sleepe his seate on thy eye-lid
 So awake when I am gone:
 For I must now to Oberon.

Exit.

Enter Demetrius and Helena running.

Hel. Stay, though thou kill me, sweete Demetrius
De. I charge thee hence, and do not haunt me thus.
Hel. O wilt thou darkling leaue me? do not so.
De. Stay on thy perill, I alone will goe.

Exit Demetrius

Hel. O I am out of breath, in this fond chace,
 The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace,
 Happy is Hermia, wherefore she lies;
 For she hath blessed and attractive eyes.
 How came her eyes so bright? Not with salt teares
 If so, my eyes are oftner washt then hers
 No, no, I am as vgly as a Beare;
 For beasts that meete me, runne away for feare,
 Therefore no maruaile, though Demetrius
 Doe as a monster, flie my presence thus
 What wicked and dissembling glasse of mine,
 Made me compare with Hermias sphery eyne?
 But who is here? Lysander on the ground;
 Deade or asleepe? I see no bloud, no wound,
Lysander, if you liue, good fir awake
Lys. And run through fire I will for thy sweet sake.
 Transparent Helena, nature her shewes art,
 That through thy bosome makes me see thy heart
 Where is Demetrius? oh how fit a word
 Is that vile name, to perish on my sword!
Hel. Do not say so Lysander, say not so
 What though he loue your Hermia? Lord, what though?
 Yet Hermia still loues you; then be content,
Lys. Content with Hermia? No, I do repent
 The tedious minutes I with her haue spent
 Not Hermia, but Helena now I loue;
 Who will not change a Rauens for a Doue?
 The will of man is by his reason sway'd:
 And reason saies you are the worthier Maide.
 Things growing are not ripe vntill their season;
 So I being yong, till now ripe not to reason,
 And touching now the point of humane skill,
 Reason becomes the Marshall to my will,
 And leades me to your eyes, where I orelook
 Loues stories, written in Loues richest booke.
Hel. Wherefore was I to this keene mockery borne?
 When at your hands did I deterur this scorne?
 If not enough, if not enough, yong man,
 That I did neuer, no nor neuer can,
 Deferue a sweete looke from Demetrius eye,
 But you must flout my insufficiency?
 Good troth you do me wrong (good-sooth you do)
 In such disdainfull manner, me to wooe.
 But fare you well; perforce I must confesse,
 I thought you Lord of more true gentlenesse.
 Oh, that a Lady of one man refus'd,
 Should of another therefore be abus'd.
Lys. She sees not Hermia: Hermia sleepe thou there,
 And neuer must thou come Lysander neere;

Exit.

For as a surfeit of the sweetest things
 The deepest loathing to the stomacke brings:
 Or as the heresies that men do leaue,
 Are hated most of those that did deceiue:
 So thou, my surfeit, and my heresie,
 Of all be hated, but the most of me;
 And all my powers addresse your loue and might,
 To honour Helena, and to be her Knight.
Exit.
Her. Helpe me Lysander, helpe me; do thy best
 To plucke this crawling serpent from my brest
 Aye me, for pittie, what a dreame was here?
Lysander looke, how I do quake with feare:
 Me-thought a serpent eate my heart away,
 And yet sat smiling at his cruell prey.
Lysander, what remou'd? Lysander, Lord,
 What, out of hearing, gone? No sound, no word?
 Alacke where are you? speake and if you heare:
 Speake of all loues; I found almost with feare
 No, then I well perceiue you are not nye,
 Either death or you Ile finde immediately.

Exit.

Actus Tertius.

Enter the Clownes.

Bot. Are we all met?
Quin. Pat, pat, and here's a maruailous conuenient place for our rehearfall. This Greene plot shall be our stage, this hauthorne brake our tyeing house, and we will do it in action, as we will do it before the Duke.
Bot. Peter quince?
Peter. What saist thou, bully Bottom?
Bot. There are things in this Comedy of Piramus and Thisby, that will neuer please. First, Piramus must draw a sword to kill himselfe, which the Ladies cannot abide How answer you that?
Snout. Berlaken, a pailous feare
Star. I belecue we must leaue the killing out, when all is done
Bot. Not a whit, I haue a deuice to make all well.
 Write me a Prologue, and let the Prologue seeme to say,
 we will do no harme with our swords, and that Piramus
 is not kill'd indeede: and for the more better assurance, tell them, that I Piramus am not Piramus, but Bottom the Weaver, this will put them out of feare.
Quin. Well, we will haue such a Prologue, and it shall be written in eight and sixe
Bot. No, make it two more, let it be written in eight and eight
Snout. Will not the Ladies be ascar'd of the Lyon?
Star. I feare it, I promise you
Ept. Masters, you ought to consider with your selues, to bring in (God shield vs) a Lyon among Ladies, is a most dreadfull thing. For there is not a more fearefull wilde foule then your Lyon liuing: and wee ought to looke to it.
Snout. Therefore another Prologue must tell he is not a Lyon
Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and halfe his face must be seene through the Lyons necke, and he himselfe must speake through, saying thus, or to the same defect; Ladies, or faire Ladies, I would wish you, or I would request

request you, or I would entreat you, not to feare, nor to tremble my life for yours. If you thinke I come higher as a Lyon, it were pittie of my life No, I am no such thing, I am a man as other men are, and there indeed let him name his name, and tell him plainly hee is Snug the ioyner

Quin. Well, it shall be so; but there is two hard things, that is, to bring the Moone-light into a chamber for you know, Piramus and Thuby meete by Moone-light.

Sn. Doth the Moone shine that night wee play our play?

Bot. A Calender, a Calender, looke in the Almanack, finde out Moone-shine, finde out Moone-shine.

Enter Pucke

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.

Bot. Why then may you leaue a casement of the great chamber window (where we play) open, and the Moone may shine in at the casement.

Quin. I, or else one must come in with a bush of thorns and a lanthorne, and say he comes to disfigure, or to present the person of Moone-shine. Then there is a other thing, we must haue a wall in the great Chamber, for Piramus and Thuby (saies the story) did talke through the chinke of a wall.

Sn. You can neuer bring in a wall What say you Bottom?

Bot. Some man or other must present a wall, and let him haue some Plaster, or some Lome, or some rough cast about him, to signifie a wall; or let him hold his fingers thus; and through thir cranny, shall Piramus and Thuby whisper.

Quin. If that may be, then all is well Come, sit downe euery mothers sonne, and rehearse your parts. Piramus, you begin, when you haue spoken your speech, enter into that Brake, and for euery one according to his cue.

Enter Pucke.

Rob. What hempen home-spuns haue we swagging here,

So nere the Cradle of the Faerie Queene?

What, a Play toward? He be an auditor,

An Actor too perhaps, if I see cause.

Quin. Speake Piramus Thuby stand forth.

Pir. Thuby, the flowers of odious fauours sweete.

Quin. Odours, odours

Pir. Odours fauours sweete,

So hath thy breath, my dearest Thuby deare.

But harke, a voyce stay thou but here a while,

And by and by I will to thee appeare. Exit, Pir.

Puck. A stranger Piramus, then ere plaid here.

Thys. Must I speake now?

Pir. I marry must you For you must vnderstand he goes but to see a noyse that he heard, and is to come againe

Thys. Most radiant Piramus, most Lilly white of hue, Of colour like the red rose on triumphant bryer, Most brisky Iuuenall, and eke most louely Iew, As true as truest horse, that yet would neuer tyre, He meete thee Piramus, at Nimies toombe.

Pir. Nimies toombe man: why, you must not speake that yet; that you answere to Piramus. you speake all your part at once, cues and all. Piramus enter, your cue is past; it is neuer tyre.

Thys. O, as true as truest horse, that yet would neuer tyre.

Pir. If I were faire, Thuby I were onely thine.

Pir. O monstrous, O strange. We are hanted; pray masters, flye masters, helpe.

The Clowes all Exit.

Puk. He follow you, He leade you about a Round, Through bogge, through bush, through brake, through Sometime a horse He be, sometime a hound - (bryer, A hogge, a headlesse beare, sometime a fire, And neigh, and barker, and grunt, and rore, and burne, Like horse, hound, hog, beare, fire, at every turne. Exit.

Enter Piramus with the Ass-head.

Bot. Why do they run away? This is a knauery of them to make me afear'd. Enter Snug.

Sn. O Bottom, thou art chang'd; What doe I see on thee?

Bot. What do you see? You see an Ass-head of your owne, do you?

Enter Peter Quince.

Pir. Blesse thee Bottom, blesse thee; thou art translated. Exit.

Bot. I see their knauery, this is to make an ass of me, to fright me if they could; but I will not stirre from this place, do what they can. I will walke vp and downe here, and I will sing that they shall heare I am not afraid

The Woofell cocke, so blacke of hew,
With Orange tawny bill.

The Throistle, with his note so true,
The Wren and little quill

Tyta. What Angell wakes me from my flowry bed?

Bot. The Finch, the Sparrow, and the Lark,
The plantain Cuckow gray;

Whose note full many a man doth marke,
And dares not answere, say.

For indeede, who would let his wit to so foolish a bird?
Who would giue a bird the lye, though he cry Cuckow, neuer so?

Tyta. I pray thee gentle mortall, sing againe,
Mine eare is much enamored of thy note;

On the first view to say, to sweare I loue thee.

So is mine eye enthralled to thy shape

And thy fauour vertues force (perforce) doth moue me.

Bot. Me-thinks mistress, you should haue little reason for that: and yet to say the truth, reason and loue keepe little company together, now-a-days. The more the pittie, that some honest neighbours will not make them friends. Nay, I can gleeke vpon occasion.

Tyta. Thou art as wise, as thou art beautifull.

Bot. Not so neither: but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I haue enough to serue mine owne turne

Tyta. Out of this wood, do not desire to goe,
Thou shalt remaine here, whether thou wilt or no.

I am a spirit of no common rate:

The Summer still doth tend vpon my state,
And I doe loue thee; therefore goe with me,

He giue thee Faeries to attend on thee;

And they shall fetch thee Jewels from the deepe,

And sing, while thou on pressed flowers dost sleepe;

And I will purge thy mortall grossnesse so,

That thou shalt like an aerie spirit goe.

Enter Pease-blossome, Cobweb, Moth, Mustard-seede, and four Faeries

Fa. Ready, and I, and I, and I, Where shall we go?

Tyta. Be

Tit. Be kinde and courteous to this Gentleman,
Hop in his walkes, and gambole in his eyes,
Feede him with Apricocks, and Dewberries,
With purple Grapes, Greene Figs, and Mulberries,
The home-bags steale from the humble Bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighes,
And light them at the flarie-Glow-wormes eyes,
To haue my loue to bed, and to arise:
And plucke the wings from painted Butterflies,
To fan the Moone-beames from his sleeping eyes.
Nod to him Elues, and doe him curtiesies,

1 Fai. Haile mortall, haile

2 Fai. Haile.

3 Fai. Haile

Bot. I cry your worships mercy hartly; I beseech your worships name.

Cob. Cobweb

Bot. I shall desire you of more acquaintance, good Master Cobweb. if I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you

Your name honest Gentleman?

Peaf. Peafe blossome

Bot. I pray you commend mee to mistress Squash, your mother, and to master Peafcod your father. Good master Peafe blossome, I shal desire of you more acquaintance to Your name I beseech you sir?

Mus. Mustard-seede

Peaf. Peafe-blossome

Bot. Good master Mustard-seede, I know your patience well. At same cowardly gyant-like Oxe-beefe hath deuoured many a gentleman of your house. I promise you, your kindred hath made my eyes water ere
now. I desire you more acquaintance, good Master Mustard-seede

Tit. Come waite vpon him, lead him to my bower
The Moone me-thinks, lookes with a watric eie,
And when she weepes, weepe euerie little flower,
Lamenting some enforced chastitie
Tye vp my louers tongue, bring him silently. Exit.

Enter King of Pharies, solus.

Ob. I wonder if Titania be awak't;
Then what it was that next came in her eye,
Which she must dote on, in extremitie

Enter Pucke.

Here comes my messenger: how now mad spirit,
What night-rule now about this gaunted groue?

Puck. My Mistress with a monster is in loue,
Neere to her close and consecrated bower,
While she is in her dull and sleeping hower,
A crew of patches, rude Mechanicals,
That worke for bread vpon Athenian stals.
Were met together to rehearse a Play,
Intended for great Theseus nuptiall day:
The shallowest thick-skinn of that barren sort,
Who Piramus presented, in their sport,
Forsooke his Scene, and entred in a bracke,
When I did him at this advantage take,
An Asse's nole I fixed on his head.
Anon his Thynke must be answered,
And forth my hummick comes: when they him speake,
As Wilde-geese, that the creeping Fowler eye,
Or ruffled patch shoughes many an spore
(Rising and cawing at the gulls report)
Seuer themselves, and madly sweep the skye;

So at his sight, away his fellowes flye,
And at our stampe, here ore and ore one fals;
He murder cries, and helpe from Athens calls,
Their sense thus weak, lost with their fears thus strong,
Made senselesse things begin to do them wrong.
For briars and thornes at their apparell snatch,
Some sleeues, some hats, from yeelders all things catch,
I led them on in this distracted feare,
And left sweete Piramus translated there
When in that moment (so it came to passe)
Titania waked, and straightway lou'd an Asse.

Ob. This fals out better then I could deuise:
But hast thou yet lacht the Athenians eyes,
With the loue iuyce, as I did bid thee doe?

Rob. I tooke him sleeping (that is finisht to)
And the Athenian woman by his side,
That when he wak't, of force she must be cyde.

Enter Demetrius and Hermia.

Ob. Stand close, this is the same Athenian

Rob. This is the woman, but not this the man.

Liss. O why rebute you him that loues you so?
Lay breath so bitter on your bitter foe.

Her. Now I but chide, but I should vse thee worse.
For thou (I feare) hast giuen me cause to curse,
If thou hast slaine Lysander in his sleepe,
Being ore shoos in blood, plunge in the deepe, and kill me too.

The Sunne was not so true vnto the day,
As he to me. Would he haue stollen away,
From sleeping Hermia? He beleue as soone
This whole earth may be bord, and that the Moone
May through the Center creepe, and so displease
Her brothers noonetide, with th' Antopodes.
It cannot be but thou hast murdered him,
So should a murderer looke, so dead, so grim.

Dem. So should the murderer looke, and so should I,
Pierst through the heart with your stearne cruelty:
Yet you the murderer looks as bright as cleare,
As yonder Venus in her gumming spheare

Her. What's this to my Lysander? where is he?
Ah good Demetrius, wilt thou giue him me?

Dem. I de rather giue his carkasse to my hounds.

Her. Out dog, out cur, thou dost me past the bounds
Of maidens patience. Hast thou slaine him then?
Henceforth be neuer numbred among men.

Oh, once tell true, euen for my sake,
Durst thou a look vpon him being awake?
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O braue rutch:
Could not a worme, an Adder do so much?
An Adder did it. for with doubler tongue
Then thine (thou serpent) neuer Adder stung.

Dem. You spend your passion on a misprisd moqd,
I am not guiltie of Lysanders blood:
Nor is he dead for ought that I can tell,

Her. I pray thee tell me, then what he is well,

Dem. And if I could, what should I get therefore?

Her. A priuiledge, neuer to see me more;
And from thy hated presence part I: see me no more
Whether he be dead or no Exit.

Dem. There is no following her in this fierce vaine,
Here therefore for a while I will remaine
So sorrowes heavynesse doth heauier grow:
For debt that bankrout slip doth sorrow owe,
Which now in some slight measure it will pay,

If

If for his tender here I make some stay. Lie downe.

Ob. What hast thou done? Thou hast mistaken quite
And laid the loue iuyce on some true loutes fight:
Of thy misprision, must perforce ensue

Some true loue turn'd, and not a false turn'd true
Rob. Then fate ore-rules, that one man holding troth,
A million faile, confounding oath on oath

Ob. About the wood, goe swifter then the winde,
And Helena of Athens looke thou finde.
All fancy sicke she is, and pale of cheere,
With sighes of loue, that costs the fresh bloud deare.
By some illusion see thou bring her heere,
Ile charme his eyes against she doth appeare.

Robin. I go, I go, looke how I goe, Swifter then arrow from the Tartars bowe. Exit.

Ob. Flower of this purple die,
Hit with Cupids archery,
Sinke in apple of his eye,
When his loue he doth espie,
Let her shine as gloriously
As the Venus of the sky.
When thou wak'st if he be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

Enter Pucke.

Puck. Captaine of our Fairy band,
Helena is heere at hand,
And the youth, mistooke by me,
Pleading for a Louers fee
Shall we their fond Pageant see?
Lord, what foolles these mortals be!

Ob. Stand aside, the noyie they make,
Will cause Demetrius to awake.

Puck. Then will two at once wooe one,
That must needs be sport alone:
And those things doe best please me,
That befall preposterously

Enter Lysander and Helena.

Lys. Why should you think y I should wooe in scorn?
Scorne and derision neuer comes in teares:
Looke when I vow I weepe; and vowes so borne,
In their nativity all truth appeares
How can these things in me, seeme scorne to you?
Bearing the badge of faith to proue them true

Hel. You doe aduance your cunning more & more,
When truth kils truth, O diuelish holy tray!
These vowes are Hermias. Will you giue her ore?
Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh
Your vowes to her, and me, (put in two scales)
Will euen weigh, and both as light as tales.

Lys. I had no iudgement, when to her I swore.
Hel. Nor none in my minde, now you giue her ore.

Lys. Demetrius loues her, and he loues not you. Awake.

Dem. O Helena, goddesse, nimph, perfect, diuine,
To what my loue, shall I compare thine eyne?
Christall is muddy, O how ripe in show,
Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow!
That pure congealed white, high Tantrus snow,
Fan'd with the Easterne winde, turnes to a crow,
When thou holdst vp thy hand. O let me kisse
This Princess of pure white, this scale of blisse.

Hel. O spight! O hell! I see you are all bent
To set against me, for your merriment:
If you were ciuill, and knew curtesie,
You would not doe me thus much injury.

Can you not hate me, as I know you doe,
But you must ioyne in soules to mocke me to?
If you are men; as men you are in show,
You would not vse a gentle Lady so;
To vow, and swear, and superpraise my parts,
When I am sure you hate me with your hearts
You both are Riuals, and loue Hermias;
And now both Riuals to mocke Helena.
A trim exploit, a manly enterprize,
To coniure teares vp in a poore maids eyes,
With your derision; none of noble sort,
Would so offend a Virgin, and extort
A poore soules patience, all to make you sport.

Lysa. You are vnkind Demetrius; be not so,
For you loue Hermias; this you know I know;
And here with all good will, with all my heart,
In Hermias loue I yeeld you vp my part;
And yours of Helena, to me bequeath,
Whom I do loue, and will do to my death.

Hel. Neuer did mockers wast more idle breath.

Dem. Lysander, keep thy Hermia, I will none.
If ere I lou'd her, all that loue is gone.
My heart to her, but as guest-wise sojourn'd,
And now to Helena it is home return'd,
There to remaine.

Lys. It is not so.
De Disparage not the faith thou dost not know,
Left to thy perill thou abide it deare.
Looke where thy Loue comes, yonder is thy deare.

Enter Hermia.

Her. Dark night, that from the eye his function takes,
The eare more quicke of apprehension makes,
Wherein it doth impair the seeing sense,
It pates the hearing double recompence.
Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander found,
Mine eare (I thank it) brought me to that sound.
But why vnkindly didst thou leaue me so? (to go)

Lysan. Why should hee stay whom Loue doth presse
Her. What loue could presse Lysander from my side?

Lys. Lysanders loue (that would not let him bide)
Faile Helena; who more engilds the night,
Then all yon fierie oes, and eyes of light,
Why seek'st thou me? Could not this make thee know,
The hate I bare thee, made me leaue thee so?

Her. You speake not as you thinke; it cannot be.

Hel. Lo, she is one of this confederacy,
Now I perceiue they haue comoynd all three,
To fashion this false sport in spight of me
Inurious Hermia, most vngratefull maid,
Haue you conspir'd, haue you with these contriu'd
To baite me, with this foule derision?
Is all the counsell that we two haue shar'd,
The sisters vowes, the houres that we haue spent,
When wee haue chid the hasty footed time,
For parting vs? O, is all forgot?

All schooledaies friendship, child-hood innocence?
We Hermia, like two Artificiall gods,
Haue with our needles, created both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion,
Both warbling of one song, both in one key;
As if our hands, our sides, our voices, and mindes
Had bene incorporate. So we grew together,
Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,
But yet a vniou in partition,

Two louely berries molded on one stem,
So with two seeming bodies, but one heart,
Two of the first life coats in Heraldry,
Due but to one and crowned with one crest.
And will you rent our ancient loue asunder,
To ioyne with men in scorning your poore friend?
It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly.
Our sexe as well as I, may chide you for it,
Though I alone doe feele the iniurie.

Her. I am amazed at your passionate words,
I scorne you not; It seemes that you scorne me.

Hel. Haue you not set Lyfander, as in scorne
To follow me, and praise my eyes and face?
And made your other loue, Demetrius
(Who euen but now did spurne me with his foote)
To call me goddesse, ninph, diuine, and rare,
Precious, celestiall? Wherefore speakes he thus
To her he hates? And wherefore doth Lyfander
Denie your loue (so rich within his soule)
And tender me (forsooth) affection,
But by your setting on, by your consent?
What though I be not so in grace as you,
so hung vpon with loue, so fortunate?
(But miserable most, to loue vncloud)
This you should pittie, rather then despise

Her. I vnderstand not what you meane by this.

Hel. I, doe, perfeuer, counterfeit sad lookes,
Make mouthes vpon me when I turre my backe,
Winke each at other, hold the sweete iest vp
This sport well carried, shall be chroleied.
If you haue any pittie, grace, or manners,
You would not make me such an argument.
But fare ye well, 'tis partly mine owne fault,
Which death or absence soone shall remedie.

Lyf. Stay gentle Helena, heare my excuse,
My loue, my life, my soule, faire Helena

Hel. O excellent!

Her. Sweete, do not scorne her so.

Dem. If she cannot entreate, I can compell.

Lyf. Thou canst compell, no more then she entreate.

Thy threats haue no more strength then her weak praise
Helena, I loue thee, by my life I doe;

I sweare by that which I will lose for thee,
To proue him false, that saies I loue thee not.

Dem. I say, I loue thee more then he can do.

Lyf. If thou say so, with-draw and proue it too.

Dem. Quick, come.

Her. Lyfander, whereto tends all this?

Lyf. Away, you Ethiops

Dem. No, no, Sir, seeme to breake loose;

Take on as you would follow,

But yet come not: you are a tame man, go.

Lyf. Hang off thou cat, thou bur; vile thing let loose,
Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent.

Her. Why are you growne so rude?

What change is this sweete Loue?

Lyf. Thy loue? out tawny Tartar, out;
Out loathed medicine; O hated poison hence

Her. Do you not iest?

Hel. Yes sooth, and so do you

Lyf. Demetrius I will keepe my word with thee

Dem. I would I had your bond: for I perceiue

A wake bond holds you; Ile not trust your word.

Lyf. What, should I hurt her, strike her, kill her dead?

Although I hate her, Ile not harme her so.

Her. What, can you do me greater harme then hate?

Hate me, wherefore? O me, what newes my Loue?

Am not I Hermia? Are not you Lyfander?

I am as faire now, as I was ere while.

Since night you lou'd me, yet since night you left me.

Why then you left me (O the gods forbid

In earnest, shall I say?

Lyf. I, by my life;

And neuer did desire to see thee more.

Therefore be out of hope, of question, of doubt;

Be certaine, nothing truer 'tis no iest,

That I doe hate thee, and loue Helena

Her. O me, you iugler, you canker blossome,
You theefe of loue; What, haue you come by night,

And stolne my loues heart from him?

Hel. Fine yfaith

Haue you no modesty, no maiden shame,

No touch of bashfulnesse? What, will you teare

Impatient answers from my gentle tongue?

Fie, fie, you counterfeit, you puppet, you

Her. Puppet? why so? I, that way goes the game.

Now I perceiue that she hath made compare

Betweene our statutes, she hath vrg'd her height,

And with her personage, her tall personage,

Her height (forsooth) she hath preuail'd with him.

And are you growne so high in his esteeme,

Because I am so dwarfish, and so low?

How low am I, thou painted May-pole? Speake,

How low am I? I am not yet so low,

But that my nables can reach vnto thine eyes.

Hel. I pray you though you mocke me, gentlemen,

Let her not hurt me; I was neuer curst:

I haue no gift at all in shrewishnesse,

I am a right maide for my cowardize;

Let her not strike me: you perhaps may thinke,

Because she is something lower then my selfe,

That I can match her

Her. Lower? harke againe

Hel. Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me,

I euermore did loue you Hermia,

Did euer keepe your counsels, neuer wronged you,

Saue that in loue vnto Demetrius,

I told him of your stealth vnto this wood.

He followed you, for loue I followed him,

But he hath chid me hence, and threatned me

To strike me, spurne me, nay to kill me too;

And now, so you will let me quiet go,

To Athenis will I beare my folly backe,

And follow you no further. Let me go.

You see how simple, and how foud I am.

Her. Why get you gone? who ist that hinders you?

Hel. A foolish heart, that I leaue here behinde,

Her. What, with Lyfander?

Her. With Demetrius

Lyf. Be not afraid, she shall not harme thee Helena.

Dem. No sir, she shall not, though you take her part.

Hel. O when she's angry, she is keene and shrewd,

She was a vixen when she went to schoole,

And though she be but little, she is fierce.

Her. Little againe? Nothing but low and little?

Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?

Let me come to her.

Lyf. Get you gone you dwarfe,

You minimus, of hindring knot-grasse made,

You bead, you acome.

Dem. You are too officious,

In her behalfe that scornes your seruices.

Let

Let her alone, speake not of Helena,
Take not her part. For if thou dost intend Neuer so little shew of loue to her,
Thou shalt abide it

Lys. Now she holds me not,
Now follow if thou dar'st, to try whose right,
Of thine or mine is most in Helena.

Dem. Follow: Nay, Ile goe with thee cheeke by iowle Exit Lysander and Demetrius.

Her. You Mistis, all this coyle is long of you,
Nay, goe not backe.

Hel. I will not trust you I,
Nor longer stay in your curst companie.
Your hands then mine, are quicker for a fray,
My legs are longer though to runne away.

Enter Oberon and Pucke

Ob. This is thy negligence, still thou mistak'st,
Or else committ'st thy knaueries willingly

Puck. Beleeue me, King of shadows, I mistooke,
Did not you tell me, I should know the man,
By the Athenian garments he hath on?

And so farre blamelesse proves my enterprize,
That I haue noited an Athenians eies,
And so farre am I glad, it so did sort,
As this their iangling I esteeme a sport

Ob. Thou see'st these Louers seeke a place to fight,

Hie therefore Robin, ouercast the night,
The starrie Welkin couer thou anon,
With drooping fogge as blacke as Acheron,
And lead these testie Riuals so astray,

As one come not within anothers way
Like to Lysander, sometime frame thy tongue,
Then stirre Demetrius vp with bitter wrong;

And sometime raile thou like Demetrius,
And from each other looke thou leade them thus,
Till ore their browes, death-counterfeiting, sleepe

With leaden legs, and Battie-wins doth creepe;
Then crush this hearbe into Lysanders eie,

Whose liquor hath this vertuous propertie,
To take from thence all error, with his might,
And make his cie-balls role with wonted sight.

When they next wake, all this derision
Shall seeme a dreame, and fruitlesse vision,
And backe to Athens shall the Louers wend

With league, whose date till death shall neuer end
Whiles I in this affaire do thee imply,
Ile to my Queene, and beg her Indian Boy;

And then I will her charmed eie release
From monsters view, and all things shall be peace.

Puck. My Fairie Lord, this must be done with haste,
For night-swift Dragons cut the Clouds full fast,

And yonder shines Auroras harbinger,
At whose approach Ghosts wandring here and there,
Troope home to Church-yards; damned spirits all,

That in crosse-waies and foulds haue buriall,
Already to their wormie beds are gone;

For feare least day should looke their shames vpon,
They wilfully them selues exile from light.

And must for aye consort with blacke browd night.
Ob. But we are spirits of another sort

I, with the mornings loue haue oft made sport,
And like a Forrester, the groues may tread,

Euen all the Easterne gate althierie red,
Opening on Neptune, with faire blessed beames,
Turnes into yellow gold, his salt greene streames.

But notwithstanding haste, make no delay
We may effect this businesse, yet ere day.

Puck. Vp and downe, vp and downe, I will leade them vp and downe. I am fear'd in field and towne.
Goblin, lead them vp and downe: here comes one.

Enter Lysander.

Lys. Where art thou, proud Demetrius?
Speake thou now.

Rob. Here villaine, drawne & readie. Where art thou?

Lys. I will be with thee straight

Rob. Follow me then to plainer ground.

Enter Demetrius.

Dem. Lysander, speake againe;
Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled?
Speake in some bush Where dost thou hide thy head?

Rob. Thou coward, art thou bragging to the stars,
Telling the bushes that thou look'st for wars,
And wilt not come? Come recreant, come thou childe,
Ile whip thee with a rod. He is defild
That drawes a sword on thee

Dem. Yes, art thou there?

Rob. Follow my voice, we'll try no manhood here. Exit.

Lys. He goes before me, and still dares me on,
When I come where he calls, then he's gone.
The villaine is much lighter heel'd than I:
I followed fast, but after he did flye; Shifting places

That fallen am I in darke vneuen way,
And here wil rest me. Come thou gentle day: lye down
For if but once thou shew me thy gray light,
Ile finde Demetrius, and reuenge this spight.

Enter Robin and Demetrius

Rob. Ho, ho, ho, coward, why com'st thou not?

Dem. Abide me, if thou dar'st. For well I wot,
Thou runst before me, shifting euery place,
And dar'st not stand, nor looke me in the face
Where art thou?

Rob. Come hither, I am here.

Dem. Nay then thou mock'st me, thou shalt buy this deere,

If euer I thy face by day-light see.
Now goe thy way. fuintnesse constraineth me,
To measure out my length on this cold bed,
By daies approach looke to be visited

Enter Helena.

Hel. O weary night, O long and tedious night,
Abate thy houres, shine comforts from the East,
That I may backe to Athens by day-light.
From these that my poore companie detest;
And sleepe that sometime shuts vp sorrowes eie,
Steale me a while from mine owne companie. Sleepe.

Rob. Yet but three? Come one more,
Two of both kindes makes vp foure.

Here she comes, curst and sad,
Cupid is a knauish lad,

Enter Hermia.

Thus to make poore females mad.

Her. Neuer so wearie, neuer so in woe,
Bedabbled with the dew, and torne with briars,
I can no further crawle, no further goe;
My legs can keepe no pace with my desires.
Here will I rest me till the breake of day,
Heauens shield Lysander, if they meane a fray.

Rob. On the ground sleepe sound,
Ile apply your eie gentle louer, remedy;
When thou wak'st, thou tak'st
True delight in the sight of thy former Ladies eye,

And

And the Country Proverb knowie,
That euery man should take his owne.
In your waking shall be showane.
Iacke shall haue Lill, nought shall goe fill,
The man shall haue his Mare againe, and all shall bee well

They sleepe all the Act.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Queene of Fairies, and Clowne, ana Fairies, and the King behinde them.

Tita. Come, sit thee downe vpon this flowry bed,
While I thy amiable cheekes doe coy,
And sticke muske roses in thy sleeke smoothe head,
And kisse thy faire large eares, my gentle ioy.

Clow. Where's Pease-blossome?

Peaf. Ready

Clow scratch my head, Pease-blossome. Wher's Mounsieur Cobweb

Cob. Ready

Clowne. Mounsieur Cobweb, good Mounsier get your weapons in your hand, &c kill me a red hipt humble-Bee, on the top of a thistle; and good Mounsieur bring mee
the hony bag Doe not fret your selfe too much in the action, Mounsieur, and good Mounsieur haue a care the hony bag breake not, I would be loth to haue yon ouer-flowne with a hony-bag signiour Where's Mounsieur Mustardseed?

Musf. Ready.

Clow. Giue me your nease, Mounsieur Mustardseed.
Pray you leaue your courtesie good Mounsieur.

Musf. What's your will?

Clow. Nothing good Mounsieur, but to help Caualery Cobweb to scratch. I must to the Barbers Mounsieur, for me thinkes I am maruellous hairy about the face. And I am such a tender asse, if my haire do but tickle me, I must scratch.

Tita. What, wilt thou heare some musicke, my sweet
loue.

Clow. I haue a reasonable good eare in musicke. Let vs haue the tongs and the bones.

Musicke Tongs, Rurall Musicke.

Tita. Or say sweete Loue, what thou desirest to eat
Clowne. Truly a pecke of Prouender, I could munch your good dry Oates Me-thinkes I haue a great desire to a bottle of hay - good hay, sweete hay hath no fellow

Tita. I haue a venturous Fairy,
That shall seeke the Squirrels hoard,
And fetch thee new Nuts.

Clowne I had rather haue a handfull or two of dried pease. But I pray you let none of your people stirre me, I haue an exposition of sleepe come vpon me

Tita. Sleepe thou, and I will winde thee in my arms,
Fairies be gone, and be alwaies away.
So doth the woodbine, the sweet Honisuckle,
Gently entwist; the female Iuyse
Entrings the barky fingers of the Elme.

O how I loue thee ! how I dote on thee !

Enter Robin goodfellow and Oberon.

Ob. Welcome good Robin :

See'st thou this sweet sight?

Her dorage now I doe begin to pittie.

For meeting her of late behinde the wood,
Seeking sweet sauors for this hatefull foole,
I did vpbraide her, and fall out with her.

For she his hairy temples then had rounded,
With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers.
And that same dew which sometime on the buds,
Was wont to swell like round and orient pearles;
Stood now within the pretty flourets eyes,
Like teares that did their owne disgrace bewaile.

When I had at my pleasure taunted her,
And she in milde termes beg'd my patience;
I then did aske of her, her changeling childe,
Which straight she gave me, and her Fairy sent
To beare him to my Bower in Fairy Land
And now I haue the Boy, I will vndoe
This hatefull imperfection of her eyes
And gentle Pucke, take this transform'd scalpe,
From off the head of this Athenian swaine,
That he awaking when the other doe,
May all to Athens backe againe repaire,
And thinke no more of this nights accidents,
But as the fierce vexation of a dreame
But first I will release the Fairy Queene.

*Be thou as thou wast wont to be,
See as thou wast wont to see.
Dians bud, or Cupids flower,
Hath such force and blessed power*

Now my Titania wake you my sweet Queene.

Tita. My Oberon, what visions haue I seene!
Me-thought I was enamoured of an Asse.

Ob. There lies your loue.

Tita. How came these things to passe?
Oh, how mine eyes doth loath this visage now!

Ob. Silence a while, Robin take off his head
Titania, musick call, and strike more dead

Then common sleepe, of all these, fine the sense
Tita. Musicke, he musicke, such as charmeth sleepe

Musick still.

Rob. When thou wak'st, with thine owne fooles eyes
peepe. (me)

Ob. Sound musick, come my Queen, take hands with
And rocke the ground whereon these sleepers be.

Now thou and I are new in amity,
And will to morrow midnight, solemnly
Dance in Duke Theseus house triumphantly,
And blesse it to all faire posterity.

There shall the paires of faithfull Louers be Wedded, with Theseus, all in iollity.

Rob. Faire King attend, and marke,
I doe heare the morning Larke.

Ob. Then my Queene in silence sad,
Trip we after the nights shade;
We the Globe can compasse soone,
Swifter then the wandring Moone

Tita. Come my Lord, and in our flight,
Tell me how it came this night,
That I sleeping heere was found,

Sleepers Eye still.

O

With

With these mortals on the ground.

Exeunt.

Winde Hornes.

Enter Theseus, Egeus, Hippolita and all his traine.

Theseus. Goe one of you, finde out the Forrester,
For now our obseruation is perform'd,
And since we haue the vaward of the day,
My Loue shall heare the musicke of my hounds.
Vncouple in the Westerne valley, let them goe;
Dispatch I say, and finde the Forrester.
We will faire Queene, vp to the Mountaines top
And marke the musிக்கall confusion
Of hounds and eccho in conjunction.

Hippolita. I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in a wood of Crete they bryed the Beare
With hounds of Sparta, neuer did I heare
Such gallant chiding. For besides the groues,
The skies, the fountaines, euery region neere,
Seeme all one mutuall cry I neuer heard
So musிக்கall a discord, such sweet thunder.

Theseus. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kinde,
So flew'd, so fanded, and their heads are hung
With eares that sweepe away the morning dew,
Crooke kneed, and dew-lapt, like Thessalian Bulls,
Slow in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like bells,
Each vnder each. A cry more tuneable
Was neuer hallowed to, nor cheer'd with horne,
In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly;
Iudge when you heare. But soft, what nymphs are these?

Egeus. My Lord, this is my daughter heere asleepe,
And this Lysander, this Demetrius is,
This Helena, olde Nedars Helena,
I wonder of this being heere together

Theseus. No doubt they rose vp early, to obiectue
The right of May, and hearing out intent,
Came heere in grace of our solemnity
But speake Egeus, is not this the day
That Hermia should giue answer of her choice?

Egeus. It is, my Lord.

Theseus. Goe bid the hunt-men wake them with their hornes.

Hornes and they wake.

Shout within, they all start vp

Theseus. Good morrow friends. Saint Valentine is past,
Begin these wood birds but to couple now?

Lysander. Pardon my Lord.

Theseus. I pray you all stand vp
I know you two are Riual enemies.
How comes this gentle concord in the world,
That harred is is so farre from ieaousie,
To sleepe by hate, and feare no enmity.

Lysander. My Lord, I shall reply amazedly,
Halfe sleepe, halfe waking. But as yet, I sweare,
I cannot truly say how I came heere
But as I thinke (for truly would I speake)
And now I doe bethinke me, so it is;
I came with Hermia hither. Our intent
Was to be gone from Athens, where we might be Without the perill of the Athenian Law.

Egeus. Enough, enough, my Lord: you haue enough;
I be the Law, the Law, vpon his head:
They would haue stolne away, they would Demetrius,
Thereby to haue defeated you and me.
You of your wife, and me of my consent;
Of my consent, that she should be your wife.

Demetrius. My Lord, faire Helena told me of their Realth,
Of this their purpose hither, to this wood,

And I in furie hither followed them;
Faith Helena, in fancy followed me.
But my good Lord, I wot not by what power,
(But by some power it is) my loue
To Hermia (melted as the snow)
Seems to me now as the remembrance of an idle gaude,
Which in my childhood I did doat vpon:
And all the faith, the vertue of my heart,
The obiect and the pleasure of mine eye,
Is onely Helena. To her, my Lord,
Was I betroth'd, ere I see Hermia,
But like a sicknesse did I loath this food,
But as in health, come to my naturall taste,
Now doe I wish it, loue it, long for it,
And will for euermore be true to it.

Theseus. Faire Louers, you are fortunately met;
Of this discourse we shall heare more anon.

Egeus. I will over-bear your will;
For in the Temple, by and by with vs,
These couples shall eternally be knit
And for the morning now is something worne,
Our purpos'd hunting shall be set aside,
Away, with vs to Athens, three and three,
Wee'll hold a feast in great solemnity.

Come Hippolita. Exit Duke and Lords.

Demetrius. These things seeme small & vndistinguishable,
Like farre off mountaines turned into Clouds.

Helena. Me-thinks I see these things with parted eye,
When euery things seemes double

Helena. So me-thinks:
And I haue found Demetrius, like a iewel,
Mine owne, and not mine owne

Demetrius. It seemes to mee,
That yet we sleepe, we dreame. Do not you thinke,
The Duke was heere, and bid vs follow him?

Helena. Yea, and my Father.

Helena. And Hippolita

Lysander. And he bid vs follow to the Temple.

Demetrius. Why then we are awake, lets follow him, and by the way let vs recount our dreames.

Bottome wakes.

Exit Louers.

Bottom. When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer.
My next is, most faire Piramus. Hcy ho. Peter Quince?
Flute the bellows mender? Snout is theinker? Starveling?
Gods my life! Stolne hence, and left me asleepe. I haue had a most rare vision. I had a dreame, past the wit of man, to say, what dreame it was. Man is but an Ass, if he goe about to expound this dreame. Me-thought I was, there is no man can tell what. Me-thought I was,
and me-thought I had. But man is but a patch'd foole, if he will offer to say, what me-thought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the eare of man hath not seen, mans hand is not able to tasste, his tongue to conceiue, nor his heart to report, what my dreame was. I will get Peter Quince to write a baller of this dreame, it shall be called Bottomes Dreame, because it hath no bottom; and I will sing it in the latter end of a play, before the Duke. Peraduenture, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at her death. Exit.

Enter Quince, Flute, Thisbie, Snout, and Starveling.

Quince. Haue you sent to Bottomes house? Is he come home yet?

Starveling. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt hee is transported.

Thus If

This. If he come not, then the play is mar'd. It goes not forward, doth it?

Quin. It is not possible. you have not a man in all Athens, able to discharge Pyramus but he.

This. No, hee hath simply the best wit of any handy-craft man in Athens.

Quin. Yea, and the best person too, and hee is a very Paramour, for a sweet voyce

This. You must say, Paragon A Paramour is (God blesse vs) a thing of nought

Enter Snug the Ioyner.

Sung. Masters, the Duke is coming from the Temple, and there is two or three Lords & Ladies more married. If our sport had gone forward, we had all bin made men

This. O sweet bully Bottom, thus hath he lost sixpence a day, during his life, he could not have scaped sixpence a day. And the Duke had not given him sixpence a day for playing Pyramus, Ile be hang'd He would have deserued it. Sixpence a day in Pyramus, or nothing

Enter Bottom.

Bot. Where are these Lads? Where are these hearts?

Quin. Bottom, O most couragious day! O most happy houre!

Bot. Masters, I am to discourse wonders; but ask me not what. For if I tell you, I am no true Athenian. I will tell you every thing as it fell out.

Qu. Let vs heare, sweet Bottom.

Bot. Not a word of me all that I will tell you, is, that the Duke hath din'd. Get your apparell together, good strings to your beards, new ribbands to your pumps, meete presently at the Palace, every man looke ore his part for the short and the long is, our play is preferred. In any case let Thisby haue cleane linnen and let not him that playes the Lion, pare his nailes, for they shall hang out for the Lions claws. And most deare Actors, cate no Onions, nor Garlick; for wee are to utter sweete breath, and I doe not doubt but to heare them say, it is a sweet Comedy. No more words away, go away.

Exunt

Actus Quintus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolita, Egeus and his Lords

Hip. 'Tis strange my Theseus, & these louers speake of.

This. More strange then true. I neuer may belecue

These anticke fables, nor these Fairy toyes,

Louers and mad men haue such seething braines,

Such shaping phantasies, that apprehend more

Then coole reason euer comprehends:

The Lunaticke, the Louer, and the Poet,

Are of imagination all compact

One sees more diuels then vast hell can hold;

That is the madman The Louer, all as frantick,

Sees Helens beauty in a brow of Egypt,

The Poets eye in a fine frenzy rolling, doth glance

From heauen to earth; from earth to heauen.

And as imagination bodies forth the forms of things

Vnknowne; the Poets pen turns them to shapers,

And giues to alre nothing, a bodie habitation,

And a name. Such tricks hath strong imagination,

That if it would but apprehend some ioy,
It comprehends some bringer of that ioy
Or in the night, imagining some feare,
How easie is a bush suppos'd a Beare?

Hip. But all the storie of the night told ouer,
And all their minds transfigur'd so together,
More witnesseth than fancies images,
And growes to something of great constancie;
But howloeu, strange, and admirable

Enter Iouers, Lyssander, Demetrius, Hermia, and Helena.

This. Heere come the louers, full of ioy and mirth:
Ioy, gentle friends, ioy and fresh dayes
Of loue accompanie your hearts

Lys. More then to vs, waite in your royall walkes, your boord, your bed.

The. Come now, what maskes, what dances shall we haue,

To weare away this long age of three houres,
Between our alter supper, and bed-time?

Where is our vsuall manager of mirth?

What Renels are in hand? Is there no play,

To ease the anguish of a torturing houre?

Call Egrius.

Ege. Heere mighty Theseus.

The. Say, what abridgement haue you for this evening?

What maske? What musick? How shall we beguile
The lastie time, if not with some delight?

Ege. There is a breefe how many sports are ripe:
Make choise of which your Highnesse will see first.

Lis. The battell with the Centaurs to be sung
By an Athenian Eunuch, to the Harpe.

The. Wee'l none of that. That haue I told my Loue
In glory of my kintman Hercules.

Lis. The riot of the uplie Bachanals,

Tearing the Thracian singer, in their rage?

The. That is an old deuice, and it was plaid

When I from Thebes came last a Conqueror.

Lis. The thrice three Muses, mourning for the death of learning, late decaist in beggerie.

The. That is some Satire keene and criticall,
Not sorting with a nuptiall ceremonie.

Lis. A tedious breefe Scene of yong Pyramus,
And his loue Thisby; very tragicall mirth.

The. Merry and tragicall? Tedious, and breife? That is, hot ice, and wondrous strange snow. How shall wee finde the concord of this discord?

Ege. A play there is, my Lord, some ten words long,
Which is as breefe, as I haue knowne a play;

But by ten words, my Lord, it is too long;

Which makes it tedious. For in all the play,

There is not one word apt, one Player fitted.

And tragicall my noble Lord it is: for Pyramus

Therein doth kill himselfe. Which when I saw

Rehearse, I must confesse, made mine eyes water:

But more merittie teares, the passion of loud laughter
Neuer shed

This. What are they that do play it?

Ege. Hard handed men, that worke in Athens heere,
Which neuer labour'd in their mindes till now;

And now haue toyled their vnbreathed memories
With this same play, against your nuptiall.

The. And we will heare it.

Phyl.

Phi. No, my noble Lord, it is not for you I haue heard
It ouer, and it is nothing, nothing in the world;
Vnlesse you can finde sport in their intents,
Extreamely stretcht, and cond with cruell paine,
To doe you seruice.

Thes. I will heare that play. For neuer any thing
Can be amisse, when simplessesse and duty tender it.
Goe bring them in, and take your places, Ladies.

Hip. I loue not to see wretchednesse orecharged;
And duty in his seruice perishing.

Thes. Why gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

Hip. He saies, they can doe nothing in this kinde.

Thes. The kinder we, to giue them thanks for nothing
Our sport shall be, to take what they mistake;
And what poore duty cannot doe, noble respect
Takes it in might, not merit.

Where I haue come, great Clearkes haue purposed
To grette me with premeditated welcomes;
Where I haue seene them shiner and looke pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practiz d accent in their feares,
And in conclusion, dumbly haue broke off,
Not paying me a welcome. Trust me sweete,
Out of this silence yet, I pickt a welcome.
And in the modesty of fearefull duty,
I read as much, as from the ratling tongue
Of fauoy and audacious eloquence
Loue therefore, and tongue-tide simplicity,
In least, speake most, to iry capacity.

Egeus. So please your Grace, the Prologue is addrest
Duke. Let him approach. Flor. Truue.

Enter the Prologue. Quince.

Pro. If we offend, it is with our good will.
That you should thinke, we come not to offend,
But with good will To shew our simple skill,
That is the true beginning of our end,
Consider then, we come but in despight.
We do not come, as minding to content you,
Our true intent is. All for your delight,
We are not heere That you should here repent you,
The Actors are at hand, and by their show,
You shall know all, that you are like to know.

Thes. This fellow doth not stand vpon points.

Lys. He hath rid his Prologue, like a rough Colt: he knowes not the stop. A good morall my Lord It is not enough to speake, but to speake true.

Hip. Indeed hee hath plaid on his Prologue, like a childe on a Recorder, a sound, but not in gouernment.

Thes. His speech was like a tangled chaine: nothing impaired, but all disorderd. Who is next?

Touyer with a Trumpet before them.

Enter Pyramus and Thisby, Wall, Moone shine, and Lyon.

Pro. Gentles, perchance you wonder at this show,
But wonder on, till truth make all things plaine.
This man is Pyramus, if you would know;
This beauteous Lady, Thisby is certaine.
This man, with lyme and rough-cast, doth present
Wall, that vile wall, which did these louers sunder -
And through walls chink (poor soules) they are content
To whisper. At the which, let no man wonder.
This man, with Lanthorne, dog, and bush of thorne,
Presenteth moone-shine. For if you will know,
By moone-shine did these Louers thinke no scome
To meet at Ninus toombe, there, there to wooe:

This guzy beast (whith Lyon hight by name)
The trusty Thisby, comming first by night,
Did scarre away, or rather did affright.
And as she fled, her mantle she did fall;
Whith Lyon vile with bloody mouth did staine.
Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth and tall,
And findes his Thisbies Mantle staine;
Whereat, with blade, with bloody blamefull blade,
He bravely broacht his boiling bloody breast,
And Thisby, tarrying in Mulberry shade,
His dagger drew, and died. For all the rest,
Let Lyon, Moone shine, Wall, and Louers twaine,
At large discourse, while here they doe remaine.

Exit all but Wall.

Thes. I wonder if the Lion be to speake.

Deme. No wonder, my Lord: one Lion may, when many Asses doe.

Exit Lyon, Thisby, and Moone shine.

Wall. In this same Interlude, it doth befall,
That I, one Sneut (by name) present a wall:
And such a wall, as I would haue you thinke,
That had in it a crannied hole or chinke:
Through which the Louers, Pyramus and Thisby
Did whisper often, very secretly.
This loame, this rough-cast, and this stone doth shew,
That I am that same Wall; the truth is so.
And thus the cranny is, right and sinister,
Through which the feartull Louers are to whisper.

Thes. Would you desire Lime and Haire to speake better?

Deme. It is the vviticest partition, that euer I heard discourse, my Lord

Thes. Pyramus drawes neere the Wall, silence.

Enter Pyramus.

Pro. O grim lookt night, o night with hue so blacke,
O night, which euer art, when day is not:
O night, o night, alacke, alacke, alacke,
I feare my Thisbies promise is forgot.
And thou o vvall, thou sweet and louely vvall,
That stands betwene her fathers ground and mine,
Thou vvall, o vvall, o sweet and louely vvall,
Shew me thy chinke, to blinke through with mine eie.
Thankes courteous vvall, Ioue shield thee vvell for this.
But what see I? No Thisby doe I see.
O vicked vvall, through vvhom I see no blisse,
Curst be thy stones for thus deceiuing mee.

Thes. The vvall me-thinkes being sensible, should curse againe.

Pir. No in truth sir, he should not Deceiuing me,
Is Thisbies cue; she is to enter, and I am to spy
Her through the vvall. You shall see it vvell fall.

Enter Thisby.

Pat as I told you, yonder she comes.

Thes. O vvall, full often hast thou heard my moones,
Forparting my faire Pyramus, and me.
My cherry lips haue often kist thy stones;
Thy stones with Lime and Haire knit vp in thee.

Pir. I see a voyce; now vvvill I to the chinke,
To spy and I can heare my Thisbies face. Thisbe?

Thes. My Loue thou art, my Loue I thinke.

Pir. Thinke vvhath thou vvvilt, I am thy Louers grace,
And like Lisander am I trusty still.

Thes. And like Helin till the Fates me kill.

Pir. Not Shafalus to Proetus, was so true.

Thes. As Shafalus to Proetus, I to you.

Pir. O

Pir. O kisse me through the hole of this vile wall
Thys. I kisse the wals hole, not your lips at all.
Pir. Wilt thou at Nimmes tombe meete me straight way?

Thys. Tide life, tide death, I come with quicke delay
Wall. Thus haue I Wall, my part discharged so,
 And being done, thus Wall away doth go. Exit Clown.
Du. Now is the morall downe betwene the two Neighbors.

Dem. No remedie my Lord, when Wals are so wil-full, to heare without vvarning.

Dut. This is the filiest stuffe that ere I heard.

Du. The best in this kind are but shadowes, and the worst are no worse, if imagination amend them.

Dut. It must be your imagination then, & not theirs

Duk. If wee imagine no worse of them then they of themselves, they may passe for excellent men Here com
 two noble beasts, in a man and a Lion.

Enter Lion and Moore first

Lyon. You Ladies, you (whole gentle hearts do feare
 The smallest monstrous mouse that creepes on floore)
 May now perchance, both quake and tremble heere,
 When Lion rough in wildest rage doth roare.
 Then know that I, one Shug the Ioyner am
 A Lion fell, nor elsie no Lions dam
 For if I should as Lion come in strife
 Into this place, were pittie of my life

Du. A verie gentle beast, and of a good conscience.

Dem. The verie best at a beast, my Lord, yere I saw.

Lis. This Lion is a verie Fox for his valor.

Du. True, and a Goose for his discretion.

Dem. Not so my Lord for his valor cannot carrie his discretion, and the Fox carries the Goose.

Du. His discretion I am sure cannot carrie his valor for the Goose carries not the Fox. It is well, leaue it to his discretion, and let vs hearken to the Moone

Moone. This Lanthorne doth the horned Moone present

Du. He should haue worne the hornes on his head.

Du. Hee is no crescent, and his hornes are inuisible,
 within the circumference

Moone. This lanthorne doth the horned Moone present My selfe, the man i'th Moone doth seeme to be.

Du. This is the greatest error of all the rest, the mar should be put into the Lanthorne How is it els the man i'th Moone?

Dem. He dares not come there for the candle.

For you see, it is already in snuffe

Dut. I am wearie of this Moore, you'd he would change.

Du. It appeares by his smal light of discretion, that he is in the wane but yet in courtesie, in all reason, we must stay the time

Lis. Proceed Moone

Moone. All that I haue to say, is to tell you, that the Lanthorne is the Moone, I, the man in the Moone; this thorne bush, my thorne bush, and this dog, my dog

Dem. Why all these should be in the Lanthorne for they are in the Moone But silence, heere comes Thusy.

Enter Thusy

Thys. This is old Nimmes tombe. where is my loue?

Lyon. Oh.

The Lion roares, Thusy runs off.

Dem. Well roar'd Lion.

Du. Well run Thusy.

Dut. Well shone Moone

Truly the Moone shines with a good grace.

Du. Well mouz'd Lion

Dem. And then came Piramus.

Lis. And so the Lion vanisht.

Enter Piramus.

Pir. Sweet Moone, I thank thee for thy sunny beames,
 I thanke thee Moone, for shining now so bright:
 For by thy gracious, golden, glittering beames,
 I trust to taste of truest Thusbies sight
 But stay: O spight! but marke, poore Knight,
 What dreadful dole is heere?

Eyes do you see! How can it be!

O dainty Ducke O Deere!

Thy mantle good, what staid with blood!

Approch you Furies fell

O Fates' come, come Cut thred and thrum,

Quaile, crush, conclude, and quell.

Du. This passion, and the death of a deare friend,
 Would go neere to make a man looke sad.

Dut. Beshrew my heart, but I pittie the man

Pir. O wherefore Nature, didst thou Lions frame?
 Since Lion wilde hath heere desfour'd my deere.

Which is no, no, which was the fairest Dame
 That liu'd, that lou'd, that lik'd that look'd with cheere.

Come teares, confound Our sword, and wound

The pip of Piramus.

I, that left pap, where heart doth hop;

Thus dye I, thus, thus, thus

Now am I dead, now am I fled, my soule is in the sky,

Tongue lose thy light, Moone take thy flight,

Now dye, dye, dye, dye, dye

Dem. No De, but an ace for him, for he is but one.

Lis. Lesse then an ace man. For he is dead, he is nothing

Du. With the helpe of a Surgeon, he might yet recouer, and proue an Assie

Dut. How chance Moone-shine is gone before?
Thusy comes backe, and findes her Louer

Enter Thusy.

Duke. She wil finde him by starre light.
 Heere she comes, and her passion ends the play.

Dut. Me thinkes shee should not vse a long one for such a Piramus I hope she will be breefe.

Dem. A Moth wil turne the ballance, which Piramus which Thusy is the better (eyes,

Lis. She hath spyed him already, with those sweete

Dem. And thus she meanes videlicet,

Thys. Asleepe my Loue? What, dead my Done?

O Piramus arise:

Speake, Speake Quite dumbe? Dead, dead? A tombe

Must couer thy sweet eyes

These Lilly Lips, this cherry nose,

These yellow Cowslip cheekes

Are gone, are gone - Louers make mone:

His eyes were greene as Leekes.

O sisters three, come, come to mee,

With hands as pale as Milke,

Lay them in gore, since you haue shore

With sheeres, his thred of silke.

Tongue not a word. Come trusty sword:

Come blade, my brest imbrue:

And farwell friends, thus Thibit ends.
Adieu, adieu, adieu.

Duk, Moon-shine & Lion are left to burne the dead.

Deme. I, and Wall too.

Bar. No, I assure you, the wall is downe, that parted their Fathers. Will it please you to see the Epilogue, or to heare a Bergomask dance, betweene two of our company?

Duk. No Epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Neuer excuse; for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if hee that writ it had plaid Piramus, and hung himselfe in Thibits garter, it would haue beene a fine Tragedy: and so it is truly, and very notably discharg'd. But come, your Bergomaske; let your Epilogue alone. The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelue. Lovers to bed, 'tis almost Fairy time. I feare we shall out-sleepe the coming morne, As much as we this night haue ouer-watcht. This palpable grosse play hath well beguild The heauy gate of night. Sweet friends to bed. A fortnight hold we this solemnity. In nightly Revels; and new iollitie.

Exunt.

Enter Pucke.

Puck. Now the hungry Lyons rores,
And the Wolfe beholds the Moone.
Whilest the heauy ploughman snores,
All with weary riske fore-done.
Now the wasted brandes doe glow,
Whilest the scritch-owle, scritch'ing loud,
Puts the wretch that lies in woe,
In remembrance of a shrowd.
Now it is the time of night,
That the graues, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spright,
In the Church-way paths to glide.
And we Fairies, that do runne,
By the triple Hecates teame,
From the presence of the Sunne,
Following darkenesse like a dreame,
Now are frolicke; not a Mouse
Shall disturbe this hallowed house.
I am sent with broome before,
To sweep the dust behind the doore.

Enter King and Queene of Fairies, with their traine.

Ob Through the house giue glimmering light,

By the dead and drownsie fier,
Euerie Elfe and Fairie spright,
Hop as light as blid from brier,
And this Ditty after me, sing and dance it trippinglie.

Tita. First rehearse this song by rote,
To each word a warbling note.
Hand in hand, with Fairie grace,
Will we sing and blesse this place.

The Song.

Now until the breake of day,
Through this house each Fairy stay.
To the best Bride-bed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be:
And the issue there create,
Euer shall be fortunate:
So shall all the complex three,
Euer true in louing be.
And the blots of Natures hand,
Shall not in their issue stand,
Neuer mole, hare, or scarre,
Nor marke prodigious, such as are Dispers'd in Natures kinne,
Shall upon their children be.
With this field dew consecrate,
Every Fairy take his gate,
And each severall chamber blesse,
Through it is Palace with sweet peace,
Euer shall in safety rest,
And the owner of it blest.
Trip away, make no stay;
Meet me all by breake of day.

Robin. If we shadowes haue offended,
Thinke but this (and all is mended)
That you haue but slumbred heere,
While these visions did appeare.
And this weake and idle theame,
No more yeelding but a dreame,
Centles, doe not reprehend.
If you pardon, we will mend.
And as I am an honest Pucke,
If we haue vnearned lucke,
Now to scape the Serpents tongue,
We will make amends ere long;
Else the Pucke a lyar call.
So good night vnto you all
Giue me your hands, if we be friends,
And Robin shall restore amends.

FINIS.

The Merchant of Venice.

Actus primus.

Enter Antonio, Salario, and Salario.

Antonio.

Alsooth I know not why I am so sad,
It wearies me: you say it wearies you;
But how I caught it, found it, or came by it,
What stuffe 'tis made of, whereof it is borne,
I cannot tell: and such a Want-wit sadness makes of me,

That I have much ado to know my selfe
Sal. Your minde is toying on the Ocean,
There where your Argosies with portly saile
Like Signiors and rich Barges on the flood,
Or as it were the Pageants of the sea,
Do over-peere the petty Traffickers
That curtise to them, do them reverence
As they flye by them with their wouen wings.

Sal. Beleeue me sir, had I such venture forth,
The better part of my affections, I could
Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Plucking the grass to know where sits the winde,
Peering in Maps for ports, and peeres, and rodes:
And euerie object that might misse me feare
Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt
Would make me sad.

Sal. My winde cooling my broth,
Would blow me to an Ague, when I thought
What harme a winde too great might doe at sea.
I should not see the sandie houre-glasse runne,
But I should thinke of shallows, and of flats,
And see my wealthy Andrew docks in sand,
Vailing her high top lower then her ribs
To kisse her buriall; should I goe to Church
And see the holy edifice of stone,
And not bethinke me straight of dangerous rocks,
Which touching but my gentle Vessels side
Would scatter all her spices on the streame,
Enrobe the roaring waters with my silkes,
And in a word, but euen now, worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shall I haue the thought
To thinke on this, and shall I lacke the thought
That such a thing bechaunc'd would make me sad?
But tell not me, I know Antonio

Is sad to thinke vpon his merchandize
Anth. Beleeue me no, I thanke my fortune for it,
My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate

Vpon the fortune of this present yeere:

Therefore my merchandize makes me not sad

Sol. Why then you are in loue

Anth. Fie, fie.

Sola. Not in loue neither: then let vs say you are sad
Because you are not merry, and 'twere as easie
For you to laugh and leape, and say you are merry
Because you are not sad. Now by two-headed Ianus,
Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time:
Some that will euermore peepe through their eyes,
And laugh like Parrats at a bag-piper.
And other of sullen iueger aspect,
That they'll not shew their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor sweare the rest be laughable.

Enter Bassanio, Lorenzo, and Gratiano.

Sola. Heere comes Bassanio,
Your most noble kinsman,
Gratiano, and Lorenzo. Fareyouwell,
We leaue you now with better company.

Sala. I would haue staid till I had made you merry,
If worthier friends had not prevented me.

Anth. Your worth is very deere in my regard.
I take it your owne busines calls on you,
And you embrace th occasion to depart.

Sal. Good morrow my good Lords (when?)
Bass. Good signiors both, when shall we laugh? say,
You grow exceeding strange: must it be so?

Sal. Wee'll make our leysures to attend on yours.

Exeunt Salario, and Salario.

Lor. My Lord Bassanio, since you haue found Antonio
We two will leaue you, but at dinner time
I pray you haue in minde where we must meete.

Bess. I will not faile you
Grat. You looke not well signior Antonio,
You haue too much respect vpon the world.
They loose it that doe buy it with much care,
Beleeue me you are maruellously chang'd.

Anth. I hold the world but as the world Gratiano,
A stage, where euery man must play a part,
And mine a sad one.

Grat. Let me play the foole,
With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come,
And let my Liuer rather heate with wine,
Then my heart coole with mortifying grones.
Why should a man whose blood is warme within,
Sit like his Grandfire, cut in Alabaster?
 sleepe when he wakes? and creep into the Iaudies

By

By being peeuish? I tell thee what Antonio,
 I loue thee, and it is my loue that speaks
 There are a sort of men, whose visages
 Do creame and mantle like a standing pond
 And do a wilfull stilnesse entertaine,
 With purpose to be drest in an opinion
 Of wisdom, grauity, profound conceit,
 As who should say, I am sir an Oracle,
 And when I ope my lips, let no dogge bark.
 O my Antonio, I do know of these
 That therefore onely are reputed wise,
 For saying nothing, when I am verie sure
 If they should speake, would almost dam those eares
 Which hearing them would call their brothers fooles.
 Ile tell thee more of this another time.
 But fish not with this melancholly bait
 For this foole Gudgeon, this opinion.
 Come good Lorenzo, faryewell a while,
 Ile end my exhortation after dinner.

Lor. Well, we will leaue you then till dinner time.
 I must be one of these same dunibe wise men,
 For Gratiano neuer let me speake

Gra. Well, keepe me company but two yeares mo,
 Thou shalt not know the sound of thine owne tongue.

Ant. Far you well, Ile grow a talker for this geare.

Gra. Thanks ifaith, for silence is onely comendable
 In a neats tongue dri'd, and a maid not vendible. Exit.

Ant. It is that any thing now.

Bas. Gratiano speaks an infinite deale of nothing, more then any man in all Venice, his reasons are two graines of wheate hid in two bushels of chaffe you shall seeke all day ere you finde them, & when you haue them
 they are not worth the search

Ant. Well tel me now, what Lady is the faire
 To whom you swore a secret Pilgrimage
 That you to day promis'd to tel me of?

Bas. 'Tis not knowne to you Antonio
 How much I haue disabled mine estate,
 By something shewing a more swelling port
 Then my faint meanes would grant continuance.
 Nor do I now make mone to be abridg'd
 From such a noble rate, but my cheefe care
 Is to come fairly off from the great debts
 Wherein my time something too prodigall
 Hath left me gag'd. to you Antonio
 I owe the most in money, and in loue,
 And from your loue I haue a warrantie
 To vnburthen all my plots and purposes,
 How to get cleere of all the debts I owe.

Ant. I pray you good Bassanio let me know it,
 And if it stand as you your selfe still do,
 Within the eye of honour, be assur'd
 My purse, my person, my extreamest meanes
 Lye all vnlock'd to your occasions.

Bas. In my schoole dayes, when I had lost one shaft
 I shot his fellow of the selfsame flight
 The selfsame way, with more aduised watch
 To finde the other forth, and by aduenturing both,
 I oft found both. I vrge this child-hood proofe,
 Because what follows is pure innocence
 I owe you much, and like a wilfull youth,
 That which I owe is lost: but if you please
 To shoote another arrow that selfe way
 Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt,
 As I will watch the ayme Or to finde both,
 Or bring your latter hazard backe againe,

And thankfully rest debtor for the first.

Ant. You know me well, and heerein spend but time
 To winde about my loue with circumstance.
 And out of doubts you doe more wrong
 In making question of my verriest
 Then if you had made waste of all I haue:
 Then doe but say to me what I should doe
 That in your knowledge may by me be done,
 And I am prest to do it: therefore speake.

Bas. In Belmont is a Lady richly left,
 And she is faire, and fairer then that word,
 Of wondrous vertues, sometimes from her eyes
 I did receiue faire speechlesse messages:
 Her name is Portia, nothing vnderallow'd
 To Cato's daughter, Brutus Portia,
 Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth,
 For the foure windes blow in from every coast
 Renowned suitors, and her sunny locks
 Hang on her temples like a golden fleece,
 Which makes her seat of Belmont Chalcid's strand,
 And many Lafons come in quest of her.
 O my Antonio, had I but the meanes
 To hold a riuall place with one of them,
 I haue a minde presages me such thrife,
 That I should questionlesse be fortunate.

Ant. Thou knowst that all my fortunes are at sea,
 Neither haue I money, nor commodity
 To raise a present summe, therefore goe forth
 Try what my credit can in Venice doe,
 That shall be rackt euen to the uttermost,
 To furnish thee to Belmont to faire Portia
 Goe presently enquire, and so will I
 Where money is, and I no question make
 To haue it of my trust, or for my sake. Exit.

Enter Portia with her waiting woman Nerissa

Portia By my troth Nerissa, my little body is a weatie of this great world

Ner. You would be sweet Madam, if your miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are:
 and yet for ought I see, they are as like that surfet with too much, as they that starue with nothing, it is no small happinesse therefore to bee seated in the meane, super-fluitie comes sooner by white haire, but competencie lues longer.

Portia Good sentences, and well pronounc'd.

Ner. They would be better if well followed.

Portia. If to doe were as easie as to know what were good to doe, Chappels had beene Churches, and poore mens cottages Princes Pallaces: it is a good Diuine that followes his owne instructions; I can easie teach twen-tie what were good to be done, then be one of the twen-tie to follow mine owne teaching: the braine may de-uise lawes for the blood, but a hot temper leapes ore a colde decree, such a hare is madnesse the youth, to skip ore the meshes of good counsaile the cripple; but this reason is not in fashion to choose me a husband: O mee, the word choose, I may neither choose whom I would,
 nor refuse whom I dislike, so is the wil of a liuing daughter curb'd by the will of a dead father: it is not hard Nerissa, that I cannot choose one, nor refuse none.

Ner. Your father was euer vertuous, and holy men at their death haue good inspirations, therefore the lotterie that hee hath deuised in these three chests of gold, siluer, and leade, whereof who chooseth his meaning,
 chooseth

chooses you, wil no doubt neuer be chosen by any rightly, but one who you shall rightly loue: but what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these Princely suiters that are already come?

Per. I pray thee ouer-name them, and as thou namest them, I will describe them, and according to my description leuell at my affection.

Ner. First there is the Neopolitane Prince.

Per. I that's a colt indeede, for he doth nothing but talke of his horse, and hee makes it a great appropriation to his owne good parts that he can shoo him himselfe. I am much afraid my Ladie his mother plaide false with a Smyth.

Ner. Than is there the Countie Palentine.

Per. He doth nothing but frowne (as who should say, and you will not haue me, choose. he heares merrie tales and smiles not, I feare hee will proue the weeping Philosopher when he growes old, being so full of vn-mannerly sadnesse in his youth. I had rather to be married to a deaths head with a bone in his mouth, then to either of these. God defend me from these two.

Ner. How say you by the French Lord, Mounfier Le Bonne?

Per. God made him, and therefore let him passe for a man, in truth I know it is a sinne to be a mocker, but he, why he hath a horse better then the Neopolitans, a better bad habite of frowning then the Count Palentine, he is euery man in no man, it a Trassell sing he fals straight a capping, he will fence with his own shadow. If I should marry him, I should marry twentie husbands. If hee would despise me, I would forgiue him, for if he loue me to madnesse, I should neuer requite him.

Ner. What say you then to Fauconbridge, the yong Baron of England?

Per. You know I say nothing to him, for hee vnderstands not me, nor I him. he hath neither Latine, French, nor Italian, and you will come into the Court & sweare that I haue a poore pennie-worth in the English. hee is a proper mans picture, but alas who can conuerse with a dumbe show? how odly he is suited, I thinke he bought his doublet in Italie, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germanie, and his behaviour euery where.

Ner. What thinke you of the other Lord his neighbour?

Per. That he hath a neighbourly charitie in him, for he borrowed a boxe of the eare of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him againe when hee was able: I thinke the Frenchman became his suretie, and seald vnder for another.

Ner. How like you the yong Germane, the Duke of Saxonia's Nephew?

Per. Very vildely in the morning when hee is sober, and most vildely in the afternoone when hee is drunke when he is best, he is a little worse then a man, and when he is worst, he is little better then a beast. and the worst fall that euer fell, I hope I shall make shift to goe without him.

Ner. If he should offer to choose, and choose the right Casket, you should refuse to performe your Fathers will, if you should refuse to accept him.

Per. Therefore for feare of the worst, I pray thee set a deepe glasse of Remission on the contrary Casket, for if the diuell be within, and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will doe any thing Nerrissa ere I will be married to a sponge.

Ner. You neede not feare Lady the hauing any of these Lords, they haue acquainted me with their determinations, which is indeede to returne to their home, and to trouble you with no more suite, vnlesse you may be won by some other fort then your Fathers imposition, depending on the Caskets.

Per. If I lue to be as olde as Sibilla, I will dye as chaste as Diana: vnlesse I be obtained by the manner of my Fathers will: I am glad this parcell of wooers are so reasonable, for there is not one among them but I doare on his verie absence. and I wish them a faire departure.

Ner. Doe you not remember Ladie in your Fathers time, a Venetian, a Scholler and a Souldior that came hither in companie of the Marquess of Montferrat?

Per. Yes, yes, it was Bassanio, as I thinke, so was hee call'd.

Ner. True Madam, hee of all the men that euer my foolish eyes look'd vpon, was the best deseruing a faire Lady.

Per. I remember him well, and I remember him worthy of thy praise.

Enter a Servingman.

Ser. The foure Strangers seeke you Madam to take their leaue: and there is a fore-runner come from a fift, the Prince of Morocco, who brings word the Prince his Maister will be here to night.

Per. If I could bid the fift welcome with so good heart as I can bid the other foure farewell, I should be glad of his approach: if he haue the condition of a Saint, and the complexion of a diuell, I had rather hee should shriue me then wiae me. Come Nerrissa, sirra go before, whiles wee shut the gate vpon one wooer, another knocks at the doore.

Exeunt.

Enter Bassanio with Shyllocke the Jew.

Shy. Three thousand ducates, well.

Bass. I sir, for three months.

Shy. For three months, well.

Bass. For the which, as I told you, Antonio shall be bound.

Shy. Antonio shall become bound, well.

Bass. May you sted me? Will you pleasure me? Shall I know your answer?

Shy. Three thousand ducats for three months, and Antonio bound.

Bass. Your answer to that.

Shy. Antonio is a good man.

Bass. Haue you heard any imputation to the contrary?

Shy. Ho no, no, no, no. my meaning in saying he is a good man, is to haue you vnderstand me that he is sufficient, yet his meanes are in supposition: he hath an Argosie bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies, I vnderstand moreouer vpon the Ryalta, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England, and other ventures hee hath squandred abroad, but ships are but boords, Saylers but men, there be land rats, and water rats, water theeues, and land theeues, I meane Pyrats, and then there is the perill of waters, windes, and rocks: the man is notwithstanding sufficient, three thousand ducats, I thinke I may take his bond.

Bass. Be assured you may.

Jew. I

Iew. I will be assured I may - and that I may be assured, I will bethinke mee, may I speake with Antonio?

Bass. If it please you to dine with vs.

Iew. Yes, to smell porke, to eate of the habitation which your Prophet the Nazarite censured the diuell into: I will buy with you, sell with you, talke with you, walke with you, and so following: but I will not eate with you, drinke with you, nor pray with you. What newes on the Ryalts, who is he comes here?

Enter Antonio.

Bass. This is signior Antonio.

Iew. How like a fawning publican he lookes.

I hate him for he is a Christian:

But more, for that in low simplicitie

He lends out money gratis, and brings downe

The rate of vsance here with vs in Venice.

If I can catch him once vpon the hip,

I will feede fat the ancient grudge I beare him.

He hates our sacred Nation, and he railes

Euen there where Merchants most doe congregate

On me, my bargaines, and my well-worne thrift,

Which he calls interest. Cursed be my Trybe

If I forgiue him

Bass. Shylock, doe you heare.

Shy. I am debating of my present store,

And by the neere gesse of my memorie

I cannot instantly raise vp the grosse

Of full three thousand ducats: what of that?

Tubal a wealthy Hebrew of my Tribe

Will furnish me, but soft, how many months

Doe you desire? Rest you faire good signior,

Your worship was the last man in our mouths.

Ant. Shylocke, albeit I neither lend nor borrow

By taking, nor by giuing of excessse,

Yet to supply the ripe wants of my friend,

He breake a custome: is he yet posselt

How much he would?

Shy. I, I, three thousand ducats.

Ant. And for three months.

Shy. I had forgot, three months, you told me so.

Well then, your bond: and let me see, but heare you,

Me thoughts you said, you neither lend nor borrow

Vpon aduantage.

Ant. I doe neuer vie it.

Shy. When Jacob graz'd his Vncle Laban's sheepe,

This Jacob from our holy Abram was

(As his wife mother wrought in his behalfe)

The third posseller; I, he was the third.

Ant. And what of him, did he take interest?

Shy. No, not take interest, not as you would say

Directly interest, marke what Jacob did,

When Laban and himselfe were comprymyz'd

That all the canelings which were streakt and pied

Should fall as Jacobs hire, the Ewes being rancke,

In end of Autumne turned to the Rammes,

And when the worke of generation was

Betweene these woolly breeders in the act,

The skilfull shepheard pil'd me certaine wands,

And in the dooing of the deede of kinde,

He stucke them vpon before the fustome Ewes.

Whither then conceauing, did in eaning time

Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacobs.

This was a way to thrive, and he was blest:

And thrift is blessing if men steale it not.

Ant. This was a venture sir that Jacob seru'd for,

A thing not in his power to bring to passe,

But sway'd and fashon'd by the hand of heauen.

Was this interest to make interest good?

Or is your gold and siluer Ewes and Rams?

Shy. I cannot tell, I make it breede as fast,

But note me signior.

Ant. Marke you this Bassanio,

The diuell can cite Scripture for his purpose,

An euill soule producing holy witnesse,

Is like a villaine with a smiling cheeke,

A goodly applerotten at the heart.

O what a goodly outside falsehoode hath.

Shy. Three thousand ducats, tis a good round sum.

Three months from twelue, then let me see the rate.

Ant. Well Shylocke, shall we be beholding to you?

Shy. Signior Antonio, many a time and oft

In the Ryalto, you haue rated me

About my monies and my vsances:

Still haue I borne it with a patient shrug,

(For suffrance is the badge of all our Tribe.)

You call me misbeleuer, cur-throate dog,

And spet vpon my Iewish gaberdine,

And all for vse of that which is mine owne.

Well then, it now appeares you neede my helpe:

Goe to then, you come to me, and you say,

Shylocke, we would haue moneyes, you say so:

You that did voide your rume vpon my beard,

And foote me as you spurne a stranger curre

Ouer your threshold, moneyes is your suite.

What should I say to you? Should I not say,

Hath a dog money? Is it possible

A curre should lend three thousand ducats?

Or Shall I bend low, and in a bond-mans key

With bated breath, and whispering humblenesse,

Say this: Faire sir, you spet on me on Wednesday last:

You spurn'd me such a day; another time

You call'd me dog: and for these curtesies

He lend you thus much moneyes.

Ant. I am as like to call thee so againe,

To spet on thee againe, to spurne thee too.

If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not

As to thy friends, for when did friendship take

A breede of barraine metall of his friend?

But lend it rather to thine enemy,

Who if he breake, thou maist with better face

Exact the penalties.

Shy. Why looke you how you storme,

I would be friends with you, and haue your loue,

Forget the shames that you haue stain'd me with,

Supplie your present wants, and take no doite

Of vsance for my moneyes, and youle not heare me,

This is kinde I offer.

Bass. This were kindnesse,

Shy. This kindnesse will I shoue,

Goe with me to a Notarie, seale me there

Your single bond, and in a merrie sport:

If you repaie me not on such a day,

In such a place, such sum or sums as are

Exprest in the condition, let the forfeite

Be nominated for an equall pound

Of your faire flesh, to be cut off and taken

In what part of your bodie it pleaseth me.

Ant. Content in faith, he seale, so such a bond,

And say there is much kindnesse in the Iew.

Bass. You

Bass. You shall not seale to such a bond for me,
Ile rather dwell in my necessitie.

Ant. Why feare not man, I will not forfeite it,
Within these two months, that's a month before
This bond expires, I doe expect returne
Of thrice three times the vauel of this bond

Shy. O father Abram, what these Christians are,
Whose owne hard dealings teaches them suspect
The thoughts of others. Praise you tell me this,
If he should breake his date, what should I gaine
By the exaction of the forfeiture?

A pound of mans flesh taken from a man,
Is not so estimable, profitable neither
As flesh of Muttons, Beeces, or Goates, I say
To buy his fauour, I extend this friendship,
If he will take it, so if not adieu,

And for my loue I praise you wrong me not

Ant. Yes Shylocke, I will seale vnto this bond,

Shy. Then meete me forthwith at the Notaries,
Giue him direction for this merrie bond,
And I will goe and purse the ducats strait
See to my house left in the fearefull gard
Of an vnthrifit' knaue: and presentlie
Ile be with you.

Exit

Ant. Hie thee gentle Jew. This Hebrew will turne
Christian, he growes kinde.

Bass. I like not faire teames, and a villaines minde.

Ant. Come on, in this there can be no dismaie,
My Shippes come home a month before the daie

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

*Enter Morochus a tawnie Moore all in white, and three or four followers accordingly, with Portia,
Nerissa, and their traine.*

Elo. Cornets.

Mor. Mislikeme not for my complexion,
The shadowed luerie of the burnisht sunne,
To whom I am a neighbour, and neere bred.
Bring me the fairest creature North-ward borne,
Where Phaebus fire scarce thawes the yficles,
And let vs make incision for your loue,
To proue whose blood is reddest, his or mine.
I tell thee Ladie this aspect of mine
Hath feard the valiant, (by my loue I sweare)
The best regarded Virgins of our Clyme
Hauelou'd it to I would not change this hue,
Except to steale your thoughts my gentle Queene.

Por. In tearmes of choise I am not solie led
By nice direction of a maidens eyes:
Besides, the lottrie of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntarie choosing:
But if my Father had not scantred me,
And hedg'd me by his wit to yeelde my selfe
His wife, who wins me by that meanes I told you,
Your selfe (renowned Prince) than stood as faire
As any commor I haue look'd on yet
For my affection.

Mor. Euen for that I thanke you,
Therefore I pray you leade me to the Caskets
To trie my fortune. By thus Symtate

That slew the Sophie, and a Persian Prince
That won three fields of Sultan Solymán,
I would ore-stare the sternest eyes that looke:
Out-braue the heart most daring on the earth:
Plucke the yong sucking Cubs from the she Beare,
Yea, mocke the Lion when he rores for pray
To win the Ladie. But alas, the while
If Hercules and Lycas plaie at dice
Which is the better man, the greater throw
May turne by fortune from the weaker hand.
So is Aleides beaten by his rage,
And so may I, blinde fortune leading me
Misse that which one vnworthier may attaine,
And die with grieuing.

Port. You must take your chance,
And either not attempt to choose at all,
Or sweare before you choose, if you choose wrong
Neuer to speake to Ladie afterward
In way of marriage, therefore be aduis'd.

Mor. Nor will not, come bring me vnto my chance.

Por. First forward to the temple, after dinner
Your hazard shall be made

Mor. Good fortune then,
To make me blest or curs'd 't among men.

Cornets.

Exeunt.

Enter the Clowne alone

Clow. Certainly, my conscience will serue me to run from this Jew my Maister: the fiend is at mine elbow, and tempts me, saying to me, Iobbe, Lanncetel Iobbe, good Lanncetel, on good Iobbe, or good Lanncetel Iobbe, vfe your legs, take the start, run awaie my conscience saies
no, take heede honest Lanncetel, take heede honest Iobbe, or as afore-said honest Lanncetel Iobbe, doe not runne, scorne running with thy heeles; well, the most coragi-ous fiend bids me packe, sia saies the fiend, away saies
the fiend, for the heauens rouse vñ a braue minde saies the fiend, and run, well, my conscience hanging about the necke of my heart, saies verie wisely to me: my honest friend Lanncetel, being an honest mans sonne, or rather an honest womans sonne, for indeede my Father did so-mething smack something grow too, he had a kinde of taste, wel, my conscience saies Lanncetel bouge not, bouge saies the fiend, bouge not saies my conscience, conscience say I you counsaile well, fiend say I you counsaile well, to be rul'd by my conscience I should stay with the Jew
my Maister, (who God blesse the marke) is a kinde of di-uell, and to run away from the Jew I should be ruled by the fiend, who sauing your reuerence is the diuell himselfe: certainly the Jew is the verie diuell incarnation, and in my conscience, my conscience is a kinde of hard conscience, to offer to counsaile me to stay with the Jew;
the fiend giues the more friendly counsaile: I will runne fiend, my heeles are at your commandement, I will runne.

Enter old Gobbo with a Basket.

Gob. Maister yong-man, you I praise you, which is the waie to Maister Jewes?

Lan. O heauens, this is my true begotten Father, who being more then sand-blind, high grauel blind, knows me not, I will trie confusions with him.

Gob. Maister yong Gentleman, I praise you which is the waie to Maister Jewes.

Lan. Turne vpon your right hand at the next turning

ning, but at the next turning of all on your left; matric at the verienext turning, turne of no hand, but turn down indircle to the Jewes house.'

Gob. Be Gods fontier'twill be a hard waie to hit, can you tell me whether one Launcelet that dwels with him, dwell with him or no.

Lan. Talke you of yong Master Launcelet, marke me now, now will I raise the waters; talke you of yong Maister Launcelet?

Gob. No Maister sir, but a poore mans sonne, his Father though I say't is an honest excedding poore man, and God be thanked well to live.

Lan. Well, let his Father be what a will, wee talke of yong Maister Launcelet.

Gob. Your worships friend and Launcelet

Lan. But I praie you ergo old man, ergo I beseech you, talke you of yong Maister Launcelet

Gob. Of Launcelet, and please your mastership.

Lan. Ergo Maister Launcelet, talke not of maister Launcelet Father, for the yong gentleman according to fates and destinies, and such odde sayings, the sisters three, & such branches of learning, is indeede deceased, or as you would say in plaine tearmes, gone to heaven.

Gob. Marrie God forbid, the boy was the verie staffe of my age, my verie prop.

Lan. Do I look like a cadgell or a houell-post, a staffe or a prop doe you know me Father.

Gob. Alacke the day, I know you not yong Gentleman, but I praie you tell me, is my boy God rest his soule alive or dead

Lan. Doe you not know me Father.

Gob. Alacke sir I am fnd blinde, I know you not.

Lan. Nay, indeede if you had your eyes you might faile of the knowing me. it is a wile Father that knows his owne childe. Well, old man, I will tell you newes of your son, giue me your blessing, truth will come to light, murder cannot be hid long, a mans sonne may, but in the end truth will out.

Gob. Praie you sit stand vp, I am sure you are not Launcelet my boy

Lan. Praie you let s have no more fooling about it, but giue mee your blessing. I am Launcelet your boy that was, your sonne that is, your childe that shall be.

Gob. I cannot thinke you are my sonne.

Lan. I know not what I shall thinke of that but I am Launcelet the Jewes man, and I am sure Margerie your wife is my mother.

Gob. Her name is Margerie indeede, Ile be sworne if thou be Launcelet, thou art mine owne flesh and blood: Lord worshipt might he be, what a beard hast thou got; thou hast got more haire on thy chin, then Dobbins my philhorse has on his taile

Lan. It should seeme then that Dobbins taile growes backward I am sure he had more haire of his taile then I haue of my face when I lost saw him.

Gob. Lord how art thou chang'd how doost thou and thy Master agree, I haue brought him a present, how gree you now?

Lan. Well, well, but for mine owne part, as I haue set vp my rest to run awaie, so I will not rest till I haue run some ground; my Maister's a verie Jew, giue him a present, giue him a halter, I am famisht in his seruice. You may tell euery finger I haue with my ribs: Father I am glad you are come, giue me your present to one Maister Bassanio, who indeede giues rare new Liueries, if I serue not him, I will run as far as God has anie ground. O rare fortune, here comes the man, to him Father, for I am a Jew if I serue the Jew anie longer.

Enter Bassanio with a follower or two.

Bass. You may doe so, but let it be so halted that supper be readie at the farthest by five of the clocke: see these Letters deliuered, put the Liueries to making, and desire Gratiano to come anoneto my lodging

Lan. To him Father.

Gob. God blesse your worship.

Bass. Gramercie, would'st thou ought with me.

Gob. Here's my sonne sir, a poore boy.

Lan. Not a poore boy sir, but the rich Jewes man that would sir as my Father shall specifie.

Gob. He hath a great infection sir, as one would say to serue.

Lan. Indeeede the short and the long is, I serue the Jew, and haue a desire as my Father shall specifie

Gob. His Maister and he (sauing your worships reuerence) are scarce catercolins

Lan. To be brieft, the verie truth is, that the Jew hauing done me wrong, doth cause me as my Father being I hope an old man shall frutifie vnto you

Gob. I haue here a dish of Doves that I would bestow vpon your worship, and my suite is.

Lan. In verie brieft, the suite is impertinent to my selfe, as your worship shall know by this honest old man, and though I say it, though old man, yet poore man my Father

Bass. One speake for both, what would you?

Lan. Serue you sir.

Gob. That is the verie defect of the matter sir.

Bass. I know thee well, thou hast obtain'd thy suite, Shylocke thy Maister spoke with me this daie, And hath prefer'd thee, if it be preferment To leaue a rich Jewes seruice, to become The follower of so poore a Gentleman.

Clo. The old prouerbe is verie well parted betweene my Maister Shylocke; and you sir, you haue the grace of God sir and he hath enough.

Bass. Thou speake it well; go Father with thy Son, Take leaue of thy old Maister, and enquire My lodging out, giue him a Liuerie More garded then his fellows see it done.

Clo. Father in, I cannot get a seruice, no, I haue nere a tongue in my head, well: if anie man in Italie haue a fairer table which doth offer to sweare vpon a booke, I shall haue good fortune; goe too, here's a simple line of life, here's a small trifle of wiues, alas, fiftene wiues is nothing, a leuen widdowes and nine maides is a simple comming in for one man, and then to scape drowning thrice, and to be in perill of my life with the edge of a featherbed, here are simple scapes. well, if Fortune be a woman, she's a good wench for this gere: Father come, Ile take my leaue of the Jew in the twinkling.

Exit Clowne.

Bass. I praie thee good Leonardo thinke on this, These things being bought and orderly bestowed Returne in halfe, for I doe feast to night My best esteemd acquaintance, hie thee goe.

Leon. My best endeavors shall be done herein. Exit Leon.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Where's your Maister.

Leon. Yonder

Leon. Yonder sir he walkes.

Gra. Signior Bassanio.

Bass. Gratiano.

Gra. I haue a sute to you.

Bass. You haue obtain'd it.

Gra. You must not denie me. I must goe with you to Belmont

Bass. Why then you must but heare thee Gratiano, Thou art to wilde, to rude, and bold of voyce, Parts that become thee happily enough, And in such eyes as ours appeare not faults; But where they are not knowne, why there they show Some hing too liberall, pray thee take paine To allay with some cold drops of modestie Thy skipping spirit, least through thy wilde behaviour I be misconfiderd in the place I goe to, And loose my hopes.

Gra. Signor Bassanio, heare me, If I doe not put on a sober habite, Talke with respect, and sweare but now and then, Weare prayer bookes in my pocket looke demurely, Nay more, while grace is saying hood mine eyes Thus with my hat, and sigh and say Amen: Vse all the obseruance of ciuillitie Like one well studied in a sad ostent To please his Grandam, neuer trust me more.

Bass. Well, we shall see your bearing.

Gra. Nay but I barre to night, you shall not gage me By what we doe to night.

Bass. No that were pittie, I would intertreat you rather to put on Your boldest suite of mirth, for we haue friends That purpose merriment but far you well, I haue some businesse.

Gra. And I must to Lorenzo and the rest, But we will visite you at supper time. Exit.

Enter Iessica and the Clowne

Ies. I am sorry thou wilt leaue my Father so, Our house is hell, and thou a merrie diuell Didst rob it of some taste of tediousnesse; But far thee well, there is a ducat for thee, And Lancelot, soone at supper shalt thou see Lorenzo, who is thy new Maisters guest, Give him this Letter, doe it secretly, And so farwell: I would not haue my Father See me talke with thee

Clo. Adue, teares exhibit my tongue, most beautifull Pagan, most sweete Iew, if a Christian doe not play the knaue and get thee, I am much deceiued; but adue, these foolish drops doe somewhat drowne my manly spirit adue. Exit

Ies. Farewell good Lancelot Alacke, what hainous sinne is it in me To be ashamed to be my Fathers childe, But though I am a daughter to his blood, I am not to his manners: O Lorenzo, If thou keepe promise I shall end this strife, Become a Christian, and thy louing wife. Exit.

Enter Gratiano, Lorenzo, Sclarno, and Salanio.

Lor. Nay, we will slinke away in supper time, Disguise vs at my lodging, and returne all in an houre.

Gra. We haue not made good preparation.

Sal. We haue not spoke vs yet of Torch-bearers.

Ies. 'Tis vile vnlesse it may be quaintly ordered, And better in my minde not vnderstooke.

Lor. 'Tis now but foure of clock, we haue two houres To furnish vs; friend Lancelot what is the newes

Enter Lancelot with a Letter

Lan. And it shall please you to breake vp this, shall it seeme to signifie

Lor. I know the hand, in faith 'tis a faire hand And whither then the paper it writ on, I the faire hand that writ.

Gra. Loue newes in faith.

Lan. By your leaue sir.

Lor. Whither goest thou?

Lan. Marry sir to bid my old Master the Jew to sup to night with my new Master the Christian

Lor. Hold here, take this, tell gentle Iessica

I will not faile her, speake it priuately;

Go Gentlemen, will you prepare you for this Maske to night,

I am prouided of a Torch-bearer. Exit. Clowne.

Sal. I marry, ile be gone about it straight

Sol. And so will I

Lor. Meete me and Gratiano at Gratianos lodging Some houre hence

Sol. 'Tis good we do so. Exit.

Gra. Was not that Letter from faire Iessica?

Lor. I must needs tell thee all, she hath directed How I shall take her from her Fathers house, What gold and jewels she is furnished with, What Pages suite she hath in readinesse. If ere the Jew her Father come to heauen, It will be for his gentle daughters sake; And neuer dare misfortune crosse her foote, Vnlesse she doe it vnder this excuse, That she is issue to a faithlesse Jew Come goe with me, peruse this as thou goest, Faire Iessica shall be my Torch bearer Exit.

Enter Jew, and his man that was the Clowne.

Jew. Well, thou shalt see, thy eyes shall be thy iudge, The difference of old Shyloke and Bassanio; What Iessica, thou shalt not gutmandize As thou hast done with me: what Iessica? And sleepe, and snore, and rend apparel out. Why Iessica I say

Clo. Why Iessica

Shy. Who bids thee call? I do not bid thee call.

Clo. Your worship was wont to tell me I could doe nothing without bidding.

Enter Iessica

Ies. Call you? what is your will?

Shy. I am bid forth to supper Iessica, There are my Keyes: but wherefore should I go? I am not bid for out, they flatter me; But yet Ile goe in hate, to feede vpon The prodigall Christian. Iessica my gentle, Looke to my house, I am right loath to goe, There is some ill a brewing towards my rest, For I did dreame of money bags to night.

Clo. I beseech you sir goe, my yong Master Doth expect your reproach.

Shy. So doe I his.

Clo. And they haue conspired together, I will not say you shall see a Maske, but if you doe, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a bleeding on blacke thunday last, last, at six a clock, in the morning, falling out with you, were on a shewnday was four, were in the afternoon.

Shy. What are these misdeeds done by you my Jessica?
Lock vp my doores, and when you heare the drum
And the vile squealing of the wry-neckt fife,
Clamber not you up to the casements then,
Nor thrust your head into the publique streete
To gaze on Christian footes with varnish'd faces:
But stop my houses eares, I meane my casements,
Let not the sound of shallow fopperie enter
My sober house. By Jacobs staffe I sweare,
I haue no minde of sailing forth to night:
But I will goe: goe you before me sirra,
Say I will come.

Clo. I will goe before sir.
Mistress looke out at window for all this;
There will come a Christian by,
Will be worth a Iewes eye.

Shy. What saies that foole of Hagars off-spring?
ha.

Jes. His words were farewell mistress, nothing else.

Shy. The patch is kinde enough, but a huge feeder:
Snail-slow in profit, but he sleepest by day
More then the wilde-cat. dromes hue not with me,
Therefore I part with him, and part with him
To one that I would haue him helpe to waste
His borrowed purse. Well Jessica goe in,
Perhaps I will returne immediately:
Doe as I bid you, shut doores after you, fast binde, fast
finde,

A prouerbe neuer false in thirtie minde. Exit.

Jes. Farewell, and if my fortune be not crost,
I haue a Father, you a daughter lost. Exit.

Enter the Maskers, Gratiano and Salino.

Gra. This is the penthouse vnder which Lorenzo
Desired vs to make a stand.

Sal. His house is almost past.

Gra. And it is meruaile he out dwells his house,
For louers euer run before the clocke.

Sal. O ten times faster Pennis Pidgeons flye
To steale loues bonds new made, then they are wont
To keepe obliged faith vnforfeited.

Gra. That euer holds, who riseth from a feast
With that keene appetite that he sits downe?
Where is the horse that doth vntread againe
His tedious measures with the vnbadet fire,
That he did pace them first: all things that are,
Are with more spirit chased then enioy'd.
How like a yonger or a prodigall
The skarfed barke puts from her native bay,
Hudg'd and embraced by the straggling winde -
How like a prodigall doth she retrace
With ouer-wither'd ribs and ragged sailes,
Leane, rent, and begger'd by the sturmpet winde?

Enter Lorenzo.

Salmo. Heere comes Lorenzo, more of this hereafter.

Lor. Sweete friends, your patience for my long abode,

Not I, but my affaires haue made you wait.
When you shall please to play the theues for wluces
If watch as long for you then: approach

Here dwells my father Iew. How, who's within?

Jessica alone.

Jes. Who are you? tell me for more certainty,
Albeit I sweare that I do know your tongue.

Lor. Lorenzo, and thy Loue.

Jes. Lorenzo certaine, and my loue indeed,
For who loue I so much? and now who knowes
But you Lorenzo, whether I am yours?

Lor. Heauen and thy thoughts are witness that thou art.

Jes. Heere, catch this casket, it is worth the paines,
I am glad 'tis night, you do not looke on me,
For I am much ashamed of my exchange:
But loue is blinde, and louers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit,
For if they could, Cupid himselfe would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy.

Lor. Descend, for you must be my torch-bearer.

Jes. What, must I hold a Candle to my shames?
They in themselves goodsooth are too too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discouery Loue,
And I should be obscur'd.

Lor. So you are sweet,
Euen in the lovely garnish of a boy but come at once,
For the close night doth play the run-away,
And we are staid for at Bassanio's feast

Jes. I will make fast the doores and guild my selfe
With some more ducats, and be with you straight

Gra. Now by my hood, a gentle, and no Iew.

Lor. Belshew me but I loue her heartily.
For she is wise, if I can iudge of her,
And faire she is, if that mine eyes be true,
And true she is, as she hath prou'd her selfe:
And therefore like her selfe, wise, faire, and true,
Shall she be placed in my constant soule.

Enter Jessica.

What, art thou come? on gentlemen, ay y,
Our masking mates by this time for vs stay. Exit.

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Who's there?

Gra. Signior Antonio?

Ant. Fie, fie, Gratiano, where are all the rest?
'Tis nine a clocke, our friends all stay for you,
No maske to night, the winde is come about,
Bassanio presently will goe aboard,
I haue sent twenty out to seeke for you.

Gra. I am glad on't, I desire no more delight
Then to be vnder saile, and gone to night. Exeunt.

Enter Portia with Nerreche, and both their traines.

Por. Goe, draw aside the curtaines, and discouer
The feuerall Caskets to this noble Prince:
Now make your choise

Ner. The first of gold, who this inscription beares,
Who chooseth me, shall gaine what men desire.
The second siluer, which this promise carries,
Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he deserves.
This third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt,
Who chooseth me, must giue and hazard all he hath.
How shall I know if I doe choose the right?

Por. The

How shall I know if I doe choofe the right.

Por. The one of them containes my picture Prince, If you choofe that, then I am yours withall.

Mor. Some God direct my iudgements, let me see, I will suruay the inscriptions, backe againe:

What saies this leaden casket?

Who chooseth me, must giue and hazard all he hath.

Must giue, for what? for lead, hazard for lead?

This casket threatens men that hazard all

Doe it in hope of faire aduantages

A golden minde stoopes not to shewes of drosse,

He then nor giue nor hazard ought for lead

What saies the Silver with her virgin hue?

Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he deserues.

As much as he deserues, pause there Afercho,

And weigh thy value with an euen hand,

If thou bee't rayed by thy estimation

Thou doost deserue enough, and yet enough

May not extend so farre as to the Ladie:

And yet to be asfeard of my deseruing,

Were but a weake disabling of my selfe.

As much as I deserue, why that's the Ladie.

I doe in birth deserue her, and in fortunes,

In graces, and in qualities of breeding:

But more then these, in loue I doe deserue.

What if I strai'd no farther, but chose here?

Let's see once more this saying grau'd in gold

Who chooseth me shall gaine what many men desire

Why that's the Ladie, all the world desires her:

From the foure corners of the earth they come

To kisse this shrine, this mortall breathing Saint.

The Hircanian deserts, and the waste wildes

Of wide Arabia are as throughfares now

For Princes to come view faire Portia.

The waterie Kingdome, whose ambitious head

Spets in the face of heauen, is no barre

To stop the forraine spirits, but they come

As ore a brooke to see faire Portia.

One of these three containes her heavenly picture.

It's like that Lead containes her? were damnation

To thinke so base a thought, it were too grosse

To rib her searcloath in the obscure graue.

Or shall I thinke in Silver she's immur'd

Being ten times vnderuallued to tripe gold;

O sinfull thought, neuer so rich a Iem

Was set in worse then gold? They haue in England

A coyne that beares the figure of an Angell

Stamp't in gold, but that's insculpt vpon:

But here an Angell in a golden bed

Lies all within. Deliuer me the key.

Here doe I choofe, and thrue I as I may

Por. There take it Prince, and if my forme lye there

Then I am yours:

Mor. O hell! what haue we here, a carrion death,

Within whose emptie eye there is a written scroule;

He reade the writing

All that glisters is not gold,
Often haue you heard that told;
Many a man his life hath sold
But my outside to behold;
Gilded tumber doe wormes infold:
Had you beene as wise as bold,
Young in limbe, in iudgement old,
Your answer had not beene unsold,
For younwell, your suite is cold,

Mor. Cold indeede and bitter lof,
Then farewell heate, and welcome frost:

Portia adew, I haue too grieu'd a heart
To take a tedious leaue: thus loofers part

Exit:

Por. A gentle riddance: draw the curtaines, go
Let all of this complexion choofe me so.

Enter Salanio and Solanio.

Flo. Cornets.

Sal. Why man I saw Bassanio vnder saile,
With him is Gratiano gone along;
And in their ship I am sure Lorenzo is not.

Sol. The villaine Jew with outcries rais'd the Duke
Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship.

Sal. He comes too late, the ship was vnder saile,
But there the Duke was giuen to vnderstand
That in a Gondilo were leene together
Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica.

Besides, Antonio certified the Duke
They were not with Bassanio in his ship.

Sol. I neuer heard a passion so confus'd,
So strange, outragious, and so variable,
As the dogge Jew did vter in the streets;
My daughter, O my ducats, O my daughter,
Fled with a Christian, O my Christian ducats!
Iustice, the law, my ducats, and my daughter;
A sealed bag, two sealed bags of ducats,
Of double ducats, stolne from me by my daughter,
And iewels, two stones, two rich and precious stones,
Stolne by my daughter. Iustice, finde the girle,
She hath the stones vpon her, and the ducats.

Sal. Why all the boyes in Venice follow him,
Crying his stones, his daughter, and his ducats.

Sol. Let good Antonio looke he keepe his day
Or he shall pay for this

Sal. Marry well remembered,
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me, in the narrow seas that part
The French and English, there miscaried
A vessell of our countrey richly fraught
I thought vpon Antonio when he told me,
And wisht in silence that it were not his.

Sol. You were best to tell Antonio what you heare.
Yet doe not suddainely, for it may grieue him.

Sal. A kinder Gentleman treads not the earth,
I saw Bassanio and Antonio part,
Bassanio told him he would make some speede
Of his returne: he answered, doe not so,
Slubber not businesse for my sake Bassanio,
But stay the very riping of the time,
And for the Jewes bond which he hath of me,
Let it not enter in your minde of loue:
Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such faire ostents of loue
As shall conveniently become you there;
And euen there his eye being big with teares,
Turning his face, he put his hand behinde him,
And with affection wondrous sensible
He wrung Bassanio's hand, and so they parted.

Sol. I thinke he onely loues the world for him,
I pray thee let vs goe and finde him out
And quicken his embraced beaumeffe
With some delight or other.

Sal. Doe we so.

Exeunt:

Enter Nerissa and a Seruiture.

Ner. Quick, quick I pray thee, draw the curtain strait,
The

The Prince of Arragon hath line his oath,
And comes to his election presently.

Enter Arragon, his traine, and Portia.
Flor. Cornets.

Por. Behold, there stand the caskets noble Prince
If you choose that wherein I am contain'd,
Straight shall our nuptiall rights be solemniz'd:
But if thou follow, without more speech my Lord,
You must be gone from hence immediately.

Ar. I am enoynd by oath to observe three things,
First, neither to chuse nor to any one,
Which casket 'twas I chose; next, if I faile
Of the right casket, neuer in my life
To wooe a maide in way of marriage:
Lastly, if I doe faile in fortune of my choise,
Immediately to leaue you, and be gone.

Por. To these injunctions euerie one doth sweare
That comes to hazard for my worthlesse selfe.

Ar. And so haue I addrest me, fortune now
To my hearts hope: gold, siluer, and base lead.
Who chooseth me must giue and hazard all he hath.
You shall looke fairer ere I giue or hazard.
What saies the golden chest; ha, let me see.
Who chooseth me, shall gaine what many men desire:
What many men desire, that many may be meant
By the foole multitude that choose by show,
Not learning more then the fond eye doth teach,
Which pries not to the interior, but like the Martlet
Builds in the weather on the outward wall,
Euen in the force and roade of casuallie.
I will not choose what many men desire,
Because I will not iumpe with common spirits,
And ranke me with the barbarous multitudes.
Why then to thee thou Siluer treasure house,
Tell me once more, what title thou doost beare;
Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves.
And well said too; for who shall goe about
To cozen Fortune, and be honourable
Without the stampe of meritt, let none presume
To weare an vnderferued dignitie:
O that estates, degrees, and offices,
Were not deriu'd corruptly, and that cleare honour
Were purchast by the merits of the wearer;
How many then should couer that stand bare?
How many be commended that command?
How much low pleasantrie would then be gleaned
From the true seede of honor? And how much honor
Pickt from the chaffe and ruine of the times,
To be new warmsht. Well, but to my choise.
Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves.
I will assume desert; giue me a key for this,
And instantly vnlocke my fortunes here.

Por. Too long a pause for that which you finde there.

Ar. What's here, the portrait of a blinking idiot
Presenting me a scedule, I will reade it:
How much vnlike art thou to Portia?
How much vnlike my hopes and my desertings?
Who chooseth me, shall haue as much as he deserves.
Did I deserve no more then a foolles head,
Is that my prize, are my deserts no better?

Por. To offend and iudge are distinct offices,
And of opposed natures.

Ar. What is here?

The first seauen times tried this,

*Seauen times tried this, and when he is,
That had neuer chose a wife,
Some there be that findes his life,
Others haue had a finders blisse:
There be foales aliue in his
Siluer's ore, and some this:
Take what is with you will to bed
I will enter by your head:
So be gone, you are sped*

Ar. Still more foole I shall appeare
By the time I linger here,
With one foolles head I came to wooe,
But I goe away with two.
Sweet adue, hee keepe my oath,
Patiently to beare my wifeth.

Por. Thus hath the candle sing'd the moths:
O these deliberate foolles when they doe choose,
They hate the wisdom by their wit to loose.

Ner. The ancient saying is no heresie,
Hanging and wiving goes by destinie.

Por. Come draw the curtaine Nerissa

Enter Messenger.

Mes. Where is my Lady?

Por. Here, what would my Lord?

Mes. Madam, there is a-lighted at your gate
A yong Venetian, one that comes before
To signifie th'approaching of his Lord,
From whom he bringeth feasible regreets;
To wit (besides commendes and curious breath)
Gifts of rich value, yet I haue not scene
So likely an Embassador of loue
A day in Aprill neuer came so sweete
To show how costly Sommer was at hand,
As this fore-spurrer comes before his Lord.

Por. No more I pray thee, I am halfe a-fear'd
Thou wilt say anone he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend it such high-day wit in praising him:
Come, come Nerissa, for I long to see
Quicke Cyprius Post, that comes so mannerly
Ner. Daiana Lord, loue if thy will it be. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Enter Solanio and Salanio.

Sol. Now, what newes on the Ryalto?

Sal. Why yet it liues there vncheckt, that Anthony hath a ship of rich lading wrackt on the narrow seas, the Goodwins I thinke they call the place, a very dangerous flat, and fatall, where the carcasses of many a tall ship, lye buried, as they say, if my gossip report be an honest woman of her word.

Sol. I would she were as lying a gossip in that, as euer
knapc Ginger, or made her neighbours beleue she wept for the death of a third husband: but it is true, without any slips of prolixity, or crossing the plaine high-way of talke, that the good Anthony, the honest Antony; o that I had a title good enough to keepe his name company!

Sal. Come, the full stop.

Sol. Ha, what sayest thou, why the end is, he hath lost a ship.

Sal. I

Sal I would it might proue the end of his losses.

Sal. Let me say Amen betimes, least the diuell crosse my prayer, for here he comes in the likeness of a Jew. How now Shylcke, what newes among the Merchants?

Enter Shylcke.

Shy You knew none so well, none so well as you, of my daughters flight.

Sal That's certaine, I for my part knew the Tailor that made the wings she flew withall.

Sal. And Shylcke for his own part knew the bird was fledg'd, and then it is the complexion of them all to leaue the dam

Shy She is damn'd for it.

Sal That's certaine, if the diuell may be her Iudge

Shy. My owne flesh and blood to rebell.

Sal. Out vpon it old carter, rebels it at these yeeres

Shy I say my daughter is my flesh and blood

Sal There is more difference betwene thy flesh and hers, then betwene lea and luorne, more betwene your bloods, then there is betwene red wine and senniss. but tell vs, doe you heare whether Arithenio haue had any losse at sea or no?

Shy. There I haue another bad match, a bawd out, a prodigall, who dare scarce shee vish ad on the Ryale, a begger that was vnd to come so fong vpon the Mart let him look to his bond, he was wont to call in a Vintner, let him look to his bond, he was wont to lend money for a Christian easie, let him look to his bond

Sal Why I am sure if he so faite, thou wilt not take his flesh, v hat's that good for?

Shy To baite fish withall, if it will feede nothing else, it will feede my reuenge; he hath disgrac'd me, and hindred me halfe a million in light at my losses, mockt at my gaires, scorned my Nation, thwarted my bargaines, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies, and what's the reason? I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions, fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subiect to the same diseases, healed by the same meanes, warmed and cooled by the same Winter and Sommer as a Christian is? if you prick vs doe we not bleed? if you tickle vs, doe we not laugh? if you poison vs doe we not die? and if you wrong vs shall we not reuenge? if we are like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a Jew wrong a Christian, what is his humility, reuenge? If a Christian wrong a Jew, v hat should his sufferance be by Christian example, why reuenge? The villanie you teach me I will execute, and it shall goe hard but I will better the instruction.

Enter a man from Anthonio

Gentlemen, my master Anthonio is at his house, and desires to speake with you both

Sal. We haue beene vp and downe to seeke him.

Enter Tuball.

Sal Here comes another of the Tribe, a third cannot be march, vnlesse the diuell himselfe turne Jew.

Exeunt Gentlemen.

Shy. How now Tuball, what newes from Genowa? hast thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often came where I did heare of her, but cannot finde her.

Shy. Why there, there, there, there, a diamond gone cost me two thousand ducats in Frankford, the curfe neuer fell vpon our Nation till now, I neuer felt it till now, two thousand ducats in that, and other precious, precious iewels: I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the iewels in her care: would she were harr'd at my foote, and the duckets in her coffin: no newes of them, why so? and I know not how much is spent in the search? why thou losse vpon losse, the theefe gone with so much, and so much to finde the theefe, and no satisfaction, no reuenge, nor no ill luck stirring but what lightens a my shoulders, no sighes but a my breathing, no teares but a my shedding.

Tub. Yes, other men haue ill lucke too, Arithenio as I heard in Genowa?

Shy. What, what, what, ill lucke, ill lucke

Tub. Hath an Argosie cast away comming from Tripolis.

Shy. I thanke God, I thanke God, is it true, is it true?

Tub I spoke with some of the Seylers that escaped the wrecke.

Shy. I thanke thee good Tuball, good newes, good newes ha, ha, here in Genowa.

Tub Your daughter spent in Genowa, as I heard, one night fourescore ducats

Shy. Thou stickst a dagger in me, I shall neuer see my gold againe, fourescore ducats at a sitting, fourescore ducats

Tub. There came diuers of Arithenios creditors in my company to Venice, that sweare hee cannot choose but breake

Shy. I am very glad of it, ile plague him, ile torture him, I am glad of it.

Tub One of them shew'd me a ring that nee had of your daughter for a Monkie

Shy. Out vpon her, thou torturest me Tuball, it was my Turkie, I had it of Leab when I was a Bachelor: I would not haue giuen it for a wilderness of Monkies

Tub But Arithenio is certainly vndone

Shy. Nay, that stee, that's very true, goe Tuball, see me an Officer, bespeake him a tommight before, I will haue the heart of him if he forset, for were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandize I will goe Tuball, and meete me at our Sinagogue, goe good Tuball, at our Sinagogue Tuball.

Exeunt

Enter Bassanio, Portia, Gratiano, and all their traine.

Por. I pray you tarry, pause a day or two

Before you hazard, for in choosing wrong

I loose your company; therefore forbear a while,

There's something tells me (but it is not loue)

I would not loose you, and you know your selfe,

Hate counsailes not in such a qualitie;

But least you should not vnderstand me well,

And yet a maiden hath no tongue, but thought,

I would detain you here some month or two

Before you venture for me. I could teach you

How to choose right, but then I am forsworne;

So will I neuer be, so may you misse me;

But if you doe, youle make me wish a sinne,

That I had beene forsworne. Bestrow your eyes,

They haue ore-lookt me and deuided me,

One halfe of me is yours, the other halfe yours;

Mine owne I would say: but of mine then yours,

And so all yours; O these naughty times

Put bars betwene the owners and their rights.

And so though yours, not yours (proue it so)

Let Fortune goe to hell for it, not I.

I speake too long, but 'tis to prize the time,

To rich it, and to draw it out in length,

To stay you from election.

P 3

Bass. Let

Bass. Let me choose,
For as I am, I live vpon the racke.

Por. Vpon the racke Bassanio, then confesse
What treason there is mingled with your loue.

Bass. None but that vglie treason of mistrust,
Which makes me feare the enioying of my loue:
There may as well be amitie and life,
Twene snow and fire, as treason and my loue:

Por. I, but I feare you speake vpon the racke,
Where men enforced doth speake any thing.

Bass. Promise me life, and ile confesse the truth.

Por. Well then, confesse and live.

Bass. Confesse and loue

Had beene the verie turn of my confession
Ohappie torment, when my torturer
Doth teach me answers for deliuerance
But let me to my fortune and the caskets.

Por. Away then, I am lockt in one of them,
If you doe loue me, you will finde me out.
Neryssa and the rest, it ind all aloofe,
Let musicke sound while he doth make his choise,
Then if he loofe he makes a Swan-like end,
Fading in musique. That the companion
May stand more proper, my eye shall be the streame
And watrre death-bed for him: he may win,
And what is musique than? Than musique is Euen as the flourish, when true subiects bowe
To a new crowned Monarch: Such it is,
As are those dulcet sounds in breake of day,
That creepe into the dreaming bride-groomes care,
And summon him to marriage. Now he goes
With no lesse presence, but with much more loue
Then yong Aleides, when he did redeeme
The virgine tribute, paid by howling Troy
To the Sea-monster: I stand for sacrifice,
The rest aloofe are the Dardanian wiues
With bleared visages come forth to view
The issue of th'exploit. Goe Hercules,
Live thou, I live with much more dilinay
I view the fight, then thou that mak'st the fray.

Here Musicke

A Song the whilst Bassanio comments on the Caskets to himselfe.

*Tell me where is fancie bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head:
How begot, how nourished.
It is engendred in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and Fancie dies,
In the cradle where it lies
Let us all ring Fancies knell.
He begin it.
Ding dong, bell.
All Ding, dong, bell.*

Reple, reple.

Bass. So may the outward shewes be least themselves
The world is still deceiu'd with ornament
In Law, what Plea so tainted and corrupt,
But being season'd with a gracious voice,
Obscures the show of euill? In Religion,
What damned error, but some sober brow
Will blesse it, and approue it with a text,
Hiding the grossenesse with faire ornament:
There is no voice so simple, but assumes
Some marke of vertue on his outward parts;

How manie cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As flayers of sand, weare yet vpon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars,
Who inward searcht, haue lyuers white as milke,
And these assume but valors extrement,
To render them redoubted. Look on beautie,
And you shall see 'tis purchast by the weight,
Which therein workes a miracle in nature,
Making them lightest that weare most of it:
So are those crisped snakie golden locke,
Which makes such wanton gambols with the winde
Vpon supposed fairenesse, often knowne
To be the dowie of a second head,
The scull that bred them in the Sepulcher,
Thus ornament is but the guiled shore
To a most dangerous sea: the beauntious scarfe
Vailing an Indian beautie; In a word,
The seeming truth which cunning times put on
To intrap the wisest. Therefore then thou gaudie gold,
Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee,
Nor none of thee thou pale and common drudge
Twene man and man: but thou, thou meager lead
Which rather threatnest then dost promise ought,
Thy palenesse moues me more then eloquence,
And here choose I, to be the consequence

Por. How all the other passions fleet to ayre,
As doubtfull thoughts, and rash imbrace d despaire.
And shuddring feare, and Greene-eyed ieaousie.
O loue be moderate, allay thy extasie,
In measure raine thy ioy, scant this excessse,
I feele too much thy blessing, make it lesse,
For feare I surfeit.

Bass. What finde I here?

Faire Portia counterfeite What demie God
Hath come to mine ere creation? moue these eyes?
Or whether riding on the balls of mine
Seeme they in motion? Here are seuer'd lips
Parted with finger breath, to sweet a barre
Should sunder such sweet friends: here in her haire
The Painter plaies the Spider, and hath wouen
A golden mesh t' intrap the hearts of men
Faster then gnats in cobwebs: but her eyes,
How could he see to doe them? hauing made ore,
Me thinks it should haue power to scale both his
And leaue it selfe vnfurnisht: Yet looke how faire
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In vnderprising it, to farre this shadow
Doth limpe behinde the substance Here's the scroule,
The content, and summarie of my fortune

*You that choose not by the view
Chance as fure, and choose as true:
Since this fortune falls to you,
Be content, and seeke no new
If you be well pleas'd with this,
And hold your fortune for your blisse,
Turne you where your Lady is,
And claime her with a louing kisse.*

Bass. A gentle scroule Faire Lady, by your leaue,
I come by note to giue, and so receiue,
Like one of two contending in a prize
That thinks he hath done well in peoples eyes:
Hearing applause and vniuersall shout,
Giddie in spirit, still gazing in a doubt
Whether those peales of praise be his or no.

So

So thrice faire Lady stand I euen so,
As doubtfull whether what I see be true,
Vntill confirm'd, sign'd, ratified by you.

Por You see my Lord Bassanio where I stand,
Such as I am; though for my selfe alone
I would not be ambitious in my wish,
To wish my selfe much better, yet for you,
I would be trebled twenty times my selfe,
A thousand times more faire, ten thousand times
More rich, that onely to stand high in your account,
I might in vertues, beauties, livings, friends,
Exceed account. but the full summe of me
Is sum of nothing which to terme in grosse,
Is an vnlesioned girl, vnchool'd, vnpractiz'd,
Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learne happier then this,
Shee is not bred so dull but she can learne;
Happiest of all, is that her gentle spirit
Commits it selfe to yours to be directed,
As from her Lord, her Gouverneur, her King
My selfe, and what is mine, to you and yours
Is now conuerted. But now I was the Lord
Of this faire mansion, master of my seruants,
Queene ore my selfe and euen now, but now,
This house, these seruants, and this same my selfe
Are yours, my Lord, I giue them with this ring,
Which when you part from, loose, or giue away,
Let it presage the ruine of your house,
And be my vantage to exclaime on you

Bass. Maddam, you haue bereft me of all words,
Onely my blood speakes to you in my vaines,
And there is such confusion in my powers,
As after some oration fauely spoke
By a beloued Prince, there doth appeare
Among the buzzing pleased multitude,
Where euery something being blent together,
Turnes to a wilde of nothing, saue of ioy
Exprest, and not exprest but when this ring
Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence,
O then be bold to say Bassanio's dead.

Ner. My Lord and Lady, it is now our time
That haue stood by and seene our wishes prosper,
To cry good ioy, good ioy my Lord and Lady

Gra. My Lord Bassanio, and my gentle Lady,
I wish you all the ioy that you can wish.
For I am sure you can wish none from me:
And when your Honours meane to solemnize
The bargaine of your faith. I doe beseech you
Euen at that time I may be married too.

Bass. With all my heart, so thou canst get a wife.

Gra. I thanke your Lordship, you haue got me one
My eyes my Lord can looke as swift as yours:
You saw the mistres, I beheld the maid:
You lou'd, I lou'd for intermission,
No more pertaines to me my Lord then you;
Your fortune stood vpon the caskets there,
And so did mine too, as the matter falls.
For wooing heere vntill I sweet againe,
And swearing till my very rough was dry
With oathes of loue, at last, if promise last,
I got a promise of this faire one heere
To haue her loue. prouided that your fortune
Attch'd her mistresse.

Por. Is this true Nerissa?

Ner. Madam it is so, so you stand pleas'd withall.

Bass. And doe you Gratiano meane good faith?

Gra. Yes faith my Lord.

Bass. Our feast shall be much honored in your marriage.

Gra. Weele play with them the first boy for a thousand ducats

Ner. What and stake downe?

Gra. No, we shal nere win at that sport, and stake downe.

But who comes heere? Lorenzo and his Infidell?

What and my old Venetian friend Salerio?

Enter Lorenzo, Iessica, and Salerio.

Bass. Lorenzo and Salerio, welcome hether,
If that the youth of my new interest heere
Haue power to bid you welcome: by your leaue
I bid my verie friends and Countremer
Sweet Portia welcome.

Por. So do I my Lord, they are intirely welcome.

Lor. I thanke your honor; for my part my Lord,
My purpose was not to haue seene you heere,
But meeting with Salerio by the way,
He did intreate mee past all saying nay
To come with him alonge

Sal. I did my Lord,
And I haue reason for it, Signior Antonio
Commends him to you.

Bass. Ere I ope his Letter

I pray you tell me how my good friend doth.

Sal. Not sicke my Lord, vnlesse it be in minde,
Nor wel, vnlesse in minde his Letter there
Wil shew you his estate.

Opens the Letter.

Gra. Nerissa, cheere yond stranger, bid her welcome,
Your liand Salerio, what's the newes from Venice?
How doth that royal Merchant good Antonio;
I know he wil be glad of our successe
We are the Trojans, we haue won the fleece.

Sal. I would you had vpon the fleece that hee hath lost

Por. There are some shrewd contents in yond same Paper,

That steales the colour from Bassanio's cheek,
Some deere friend dead, else nothing in the world
Could turne so much the constitution
Of any constant man. What, worse and worse?
With leaue Bassanio I am halfe your selfe,
And I must freely haue the halfe of any thing
That this same paper brings you.

Bass. O sweet Portia,
Heere are a few of the vnpleasant'st words
That euer blotted paper. Gentle Ladie
When I did first impart my loue to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had
Ran in my vaines: I was a Gentleman,
And then I told you true: and yet deere Ladie,
Rating my selfe at nothing, you shall see
How much I was a Braggart, when I told you
My state was nothing, I should then haue told you
That I was worse then nothing: for indeede
I haue ingag'd my selfe to a deere friend,
Ingag'd my friend to his meere enemie
To feede my meanes. Heere is a Letter Ladie,
The paper is the bodie of my friend,
And euery word in it a gaping wound
Issuing life blood. But is it true Salerio;

Hath

Hath all his ventures faild, what not one hit,
From Tripolis, from Mexico and England,
From Lisbon, Barbary, and India,
And not one vessell scape the dreadfull touch
Of Merchant-marring rocks?

Sal. Not one my Lord.

Besides, it should appeare, that if he had
The present money to discharge the Jew,
He would not take it: neuer did I know
A creature that did beare the shape of man
So keene and greedy to confound a man.
He plies the Duke at morning and at night,
And doth impeach the freedome of the state
If they deny him iustice. Twenty Merchants,
The Duke himselfe, and the Magnificoes
Of greatest port haue ail perswaded with him,
But none can driue him from the enuious plea
Of forfeiture, of iustice, and his bond.

Ieffi. When I was with him, I haue heard him sweare
To Triball and to Chiu, his Countri-men,
That he would rather haue Anthonio's flesh,
Then twenty times the value of the summe
That he did owe him: and I know my Lord,
If law, authoritie, and power denie not,
It will goe hard with poore Anthonio.

Por. Is it your deere friend that is thus in trouble?

Bass. The deereft friend to me, the kindest man,
The best condition'd, and vnwearied spirit
In doing curtesies: and one in whom
The ancient Romane honour more appeares
Then any that drawes breath in Italie.

Por. What summe owes he the Jew?

Bass. For me three thousand ducats.

Por. What, no more?

Pay him fixe thousand, and deface the bond.
Double fixe thousand, and then treble that,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a haire through Bassanio's fault.
First goe with me to Church, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend.
For neuer shall you lie by Portias side
With an vnquiet soule: You shall haue gold
To pay the petty debt twenty times ouer.
When it is payd, bring your true friend along,
My maid Nerrissa, and my selfe meane time
Will liue as maids and widdowes, come away,
For you shall hence vpon your wedding day.
Bid your friends welcome, show a merry cheere,
Since you are deere bought, I will loue you deere
But let me heare the letter of your friend.

Sweet Bassanio, my ships haue all miscarried, my Creditors grow cruell, my estate is very low, my bond to the Jew is forfeit, and since in paying it, it is impossible I should liue, all debts are cleerd betwene you and I, if I might see you at my death notwithstanding, use your pleasure, if your lane does not perswade you to come, let not my letter.

Por. O loue! dispatch all busines and be gone.

Bass. Since I haue your good leaue to goe away,
I will make hasty but till I come againe,
No bed shall ere be guilty of my stay,
Nor rest be interposer twixt vs twaine. Exeunt.

Enter the Jew, and Solanio, and Anthonio, and the T aylor.

Jew. T aylor, looke to him, tell not me of mercy,

This is the foole that lends out money gratis.
T aylor, looke to him.

Ant. Heare me yet good Shylok.

Jew. He haue my bond, speake not against my bond,
I haue sworne an oath that I will haue my bond:
Thou call'st me dog before thou hadst a cause,
But since I am a dog, beware my phangs,
The Duke shall grant me iustice, I do wonder Thou naughty T aylor, that thou art so fond
To come abroad with him at his request.

Ant. I pray thee heare me speake.

Jew. He haue my bond, I will not heare thee speake,
He haue my bond, and therefore speake no more,
He not be made a soft and dull ey'd foole,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yeeld
To Christian intercessors. follow not,
He haue no speaking, I will haue my bond. Exit Jew.

Sol. It is the most impenetrable curie
That euer kept with men.

Ant. Let him alone,

He follow him no more with bootlesse prayers:
He seeks my life, his reason well I know;
I oft deliuer'd from his forfeitures
Many that haue at times made mone to me,
Therefore he hates me.

Sol. I am sure the Duke will neuer grant
this forfeiture to hold.

Ant. The Duke cannot deny the course of law:
For the com-mo-ditie that strangers haue
With vs in Venice, if it be denied,
Will much impeach the iustice of the State,
Since that the trade and profit of the city
Consisteth of all Nations. Therefore goe,
These greefes and losses haue so bated mee,
That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh
To morrow, to my bloody Creditor.
Well T aylor, pray God Bassanio come
To see me pay his debt, and then I care not. Exeunt.

Enter Torris, Nerrissa, Lorenzo, Ieffica, and a man of Portia.

Lor. Madam, although I speake it in your presence,
You haue a noble and a true conceit
Of god-like amity, which appeares most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your Lord
But if you knew to whom you shew this honour,
How true a Gentleman you send releefe,
How deere a louer of my Lord your husband,
I know you would be prouder of the worke
Then custumary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I neuer did repent for doing good,
Nor shall not now: for in companions
That do conuerse and waste the time together,
Whose soules doe beare an egal yoke of loue,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lymaments, of manners, and of spirit;
Which makes me thinke that this Anthonio
Being the bosome louer of my Lord,
Must needs be like my Lord. If it be so,
How little is the cost I haue bestowed
In purchasing the semblance of my soule;
From out the state of hellish cruelty,
Thus comes too neere the praising of my selfe;
Therefore no more of it: heere other things
Lorenzo I commit into your hands,

The

The husbandry and mannage of my house,
Vntill my Lords returne; for mine owne part
I haue toward heauens breath'd a secret vow,
To liue in prayer and contemplation,
Onely attended by Nerrissa heere;
Vntill her husband and my Lords returne:
There is a monastery two miles off,
And there we will abide: I doe desire you
Not to denie this imposition,
The which my loue and some necessity
Now layes vpon you.

Loren. Madame, with all my heart,
I shall obey you in all faire commands

Per. My people doe already know my minde,
And will acknowledge you and Iessica
In place of Lord Bassanio and my selfe.
So far you well till we shall meete againe.

Lor. Faire thoughts & happy houres attend on you.

Iessi. I wish your Ladiship all hearts content

Per. I thanke you for your wish, and am well pleas'd
To wish it backe on you faryouwell Iessica. Exeunt
Now Balthasar, as I haue euer found thee honest true,
So let me finde thee still. take this same letter,
And vse thou all the industrie of a man,
In speed to Mantua, see thou render this
Into my cosins hand, Doctor Belario,
And looke what notes and garments he doth giue thee,
Bring them I pray thee with imagin'd speed
Vnto the Trane, to the common Ferrie
Which trades to Venice; waste no time in words,
But get thee gone, I shall be there before thee.

Balth. Madam, I goe with all conuenient speed

Per. Come on Nerrissa, I haue worke in hand
That you yet know not of, wee'll see our husbands
Before they thinke of vs?

Nerrissa. Shall they see vs?

Portia. They shall Nerrissa. but in such a habit,
That they shall thinke we are accomplished
With that we lacke; Ile hold thee any wager
When we are both accoutered like yong men,
Ile proue the prettier fellow of the two,
And weare my dagger with the brauer grace,
And speake betwene the change of man and boy,
With a reede voyce, and turne two minling steps
Into a manly stride, and speake of frayes
Like a fine bragging youth and tell quaint lies
How honourable Ladies sought my loue,
Which I denying, they fell sicke and died
I could not doe withall then Ile repent,
And wish for all that, that I had not kil'd them;
And twentie of these punie lies Ile tell,
That men shall sweare I haue discontinued schoole
About a twelue moneth. I haue within my minde
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Iacks,
Which I will practise.

Nerriss. Why, shall wee turne to men?

Portia. Fie, what a questions that?

If thou wert nere a lewd interpreter:

But come, Ile tell thee all my whole device
When I am in my coach, which staves for vs
At the Parke gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenue miles to day.

Exeunt.

Enter Clowne and Iessica.

Clown. Yes truly; for looke you, the sinnes of the Father are to be lard vpon the children, therefore I promise you, I feare you, I was alwaies plaine with you, and so now I speake my agitation of the matter: therefore be of good cheere, for truly I thinke you are damn'd, there is but one hope in it that can doe you any good, and that is but a kinde of bastard hope neither.

Iessica. And what hope is that I pray thee?

Clow. Marrie you may partlie hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jewes daughter.

Ies. That were a kinde of bastard hope indeed, so the sins of my mother should be visited vpon me.

Clow. Truly then I feare you are damned both by father and mother: thus when I thun Scilla your father, I fall into Charibdis your mother; well, you are gone both waies.

Ies. I shall be sau'd by my husband, he hath made me a Christian.

Clow. Truly the more to blame he, we were Christians enow before, e ne as many as could well liue one by another: this making of Christians will raise the price of Hogs, if wee grow all to be porke-eaters, wee shall not shortlie haue a rasher on the coales for money.

Enter Lorenzo

Ies. Ile tell my husband Lancelet what you say, heere he comes.

Loren. I shall grow ielous of you shortly Lancelet,
if you thus get my wife into corners?

Ies. Nay, you need not feare vs Lorenzo, Lancelet and I are out, he tells me flatly there is no mercy for mee in heauen, because I am a Jewes daughter: and hee saies you are no good member of the common wealth, for in conuerting Jewes to Christians, you raise the price of Porke.

Loren. I shall answere that better to the Commonwealth, than you can the getting vp of the Negroes bellie the Moore is with childe by you Lancelet?

Clow. It is much that the Moore should be more then realon. but if she be lesse then an honest woman, shee is indeed more then I tooke her for.

Loren. How euerie foole can play vpon the word, I thinke the best grace of witte will shortly turne into silence, and discourse grow commendable in none onely
but Parrats. goe in sirra, bid them prepare for dinner?

Clow. That is done sir, they haue all stomacks?

Loren. Goodly Lord, what a witte-snapper are you,
then bid them prepare dinner

Clow. That is done to sir, onely couer is the word

Loren. Will you couer than sir?

Clow. Not so sir neither, I know my dutie.

Loren. Yet more quarrelling with occasion, wilt thou shew the whole wealth of thy wit in an instant; I pray thee vnderstand a plaine man in his plaine meaning goe to thy fellows, and bid them couer the table, serue in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Clow. For the table sir, it shall be seru'd in, for the meat sir, it shall bee couered, for your comming in to dinner sir, why let it be as humors and conceits shall gouerne.

Exit Clowne.

Lor. O deare discretion, how his words are suted,
The foole hath planted in his memory
An Armie of good words, and I doe know
A many fooles that stand in better place,
Garnisht like him, that for a truckie word
Desie the matter, how cheere'st thou Iessica,
And now good sweet say thy opinion,

How

How dost thou like the Lord Bassanio's wife?

Ieffi. Past all expressing, it is very meete
The Lord Bassanio liue an vpright life
For hauing such a blessing in his Lady,
He findes the ioyes of heauen heere on earth,
And if on earth he doe not meane it, it
Is reason he should neuer come to heauen?
Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match,
And on the wager lay two earthly women,
And Portia one: there must be something else
Paund with the other, for the poore rude world
Hath not her fellow

Loren. Even such a husband
Hast thou of me, as she is for a wife.

Ieff. Nay, but aske my opinion to of that?

Lor. I will anone, first let vs goe to dinner?

Ieff. Nay, let me praise you while I haue a stomacke?

Lor. No pray thee, let it serue for table talke,
Then how som ere thou speakest 'mong other things,
I shall digest it?

Ieffi. Well, Ile set you forth.

Exeunt

Actus Quartus.

Enter the Duke, the Magnifico, Antonio, Bassanio, and Gratiano

Duke. What, is Antonio heere?

Ant. Ready, to please your grace?

Duke. I am sorry for thee, thou art come to answere
A stonie aduersary, an inhumane wretch,
Vncapable of pittie, voyd, and empty
From any dram of mercie.

Ant. I haue heard

Your Grace hath tane great paines to qualifie
His rigorous course: but since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawfull mesnes can carrie me
Out of his enuies reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury, and am arm'd
To suffer with a quietnesse of spirit,
The very tyranny and rage of his.

Du. Go one and cal the Jew into the Court.

Sal. He is ready at the doore, he comes my Lord.

Enter Shylocke.

Du. Make roome, and let him stand before our face.

Shylocke. the world thinks, and I thinke so to
That thou but ledest this fashion of thymallice
To the last houre of act, and then 'tis thought
Thou'lt shew thy mercy and remorse more strange,
Than is thy strange apparant cruelty;
And where thou now exact'st the penalty,
Which is a pound of this poore Merchants flesh,
Thou wilt not onely loose the forfeiture,
But touch'd with humane gentlenesse and loue:
Forgiue a noytie of the principall,
Glancing an eye of pittie on his losses
That haue of late so huddled on his backe,
Enow to presse a royall Merchant downe;
And plucke commiseration of his state
From brassie bosomes, and rough hearts of flints,
From stubborne Turkes and Tarters neuer traird

To offices of tender curtesie,
We all expect a gentle answer Iew?

Jew. I haue possesst your grace of what I purpose,
And by our holy Sabbath haue I sworne
To haue the due and forfeit of my bond.
If you denie it, let the danger light
Vpon your Charter, and your Cities troedome.
You'l aske me why I rather choose to haue
A weight of carrion flesh, then to receiue
Three thousand Ducats? Ile not answer that:
But say it is my humor; Is it answered?
What if my house be troubled with a Rat,
And I be pleas'd to giue ten thousand Ducates
To haue it bair'd? What, are you answer'd yet?
Some men there are loue not a gaping Pigge:
Some that are mad, if they behold a Cat:
And others, when the bag-pipe sings 'th nose
Cannot containe their Vrine for affection.
Masters of passion swayes it to the moode
Of what it likes or loaths, now for your answer.
A, there is no firmer reason to be rendred
Why he cannot abide a gaping Pigge?
Why he a harmlesse necessarie Cat?
Why he a woollen bag-pipe, but of force
Must yerld to such ineuitable shame,
As to offend himselfe being offended:
So can I giue no reason, nor I will not,
More then a lodg'd hate, and a certaine loathing
I beare Antonio, that I follow thus
A loosing suite against him? Are you answered?

Biss. This is no answer thou vnseling man.

To excuse the currant of thy cruelty

Jew. I am not bound to please thee with my answer.

Biss. Do all men kil the things they do not loue?

Jew. Hates any man the thing he would not kill?

Bass. Euerie offence is not a hate at first.

Jew. What wouldst thou haue a Serpent sting thee twice?

Ant. I pray you thinke you question with the Jew:

You may as well go stand vpon the beach,
And bid the maineflood baite his vsuall height,
Or euen is well vs question with the Wolfe,
The Ewe bleate for the Lambe.

You may as well forbid the Mountaine Pines
To wagge their high tops, and to make no noise
When they are fretted with the gusts of heauen.

You may as well do any thing most hard,
As seeke to soften that, then which what harder?
His Iewish heart. Therefore I do beseech you
Make no more offers, vse no farther meanes,
But with all brieft and plaine conueniencie
Let me haue iudgement, and the Iew his will.

Bass. For thy three thousand Ducates heere is six

Jew. If euerie Ducat in fixe thousand Ducates
Were in fixe parts, and euerie part a Ducate,
I would not draw them, I would haue my bond?

Du. How shalt thou hope for mercie, rendring none?

Jew. What iudgement shall I dread doing no wrong?
You haue among you many a purchast slave,
Which like your Asse, and your Dogs and Mules,
You vse in abiect and in slauish parts,
Because you bought them. Shall I say to you,
Let them be free, marrie them to your heires?
Why sweate they vnder burthens? Let their beds
Be made as soft as yours: and let their pallats
Be season'd with such Viands: you will answer

The

The slaues are ours. So do I answer you.
The pound of flesh which I demand of him
Is dearly bought, 'tis mine, and I will haue it.
If you deny me, sic vpon your Law,
There is no force in the decrees of Venice;
I stand for iudgement, answer, Shall I haue it?

Dn. Vpon my power I may dismisse this Court,
Vnlesse Bellario a learned Doctor,
Whom I haue sent for to determine this,
Come heere to day.

Sal. My Lord, heere stayes without A Messenger with Letters from the Doctor,
New come from Padua.

Dn. Bring vs the Letters, Call the Messengers.

Bass. Good cheere Antonio What man, corage yet:
The Iew shall haue my flesh, blood, bones, and all,
Ere thou shalt loofe for me one drop of blood

Ant. I am a tainted Weather of the flocke,
Meetest for death, the weakest kinde of fruite
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me;
You cannot better be employ'd Bassanio,
Then to liue still, and write mine Epitaph.

Enter Nerissa

Dn. Came you from Padua from Bellario?
Ner. From both.

My Lord Bellario greets your Grace

Bass. Why dost thou whet thy knife so earnestly?

Jew. To cut the forfeiture from that bankrout there,

Gra. Not on thy soale, but on thy soule harsh Iew
Thou mak'st thy knife keene. but no metall can,
No, not the hangmans Axe beare halfe the keenesse
Of thy sharpe enuy. Can no prayers pierce thee?

Jew. No, none that thou hast wit enough to make.

Gra. O be thou damn'd, inexecrable dogge,
And for thy life let iustice be accus'd
Thou almost mak'st me wauer in my faith;
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That soules of Animals insule themselves
Into the trunks of men. Thy currish spirit
Gouern'd a Wolfe, who hang'd for humane slaughter,
Euen from the gallows did his fell soule flee,
And whil' st thou layest in thy vnhalloved dam,
Infus'd it selfe in thee: For thy desires
Are Woluish, bloody, steru'd, and rauenous.

Jew. Till thou canst raise the scale from off my bond
Thou but offend'st thy Lungs to speake so loud
Repaire thy wit good youth, or it will fall
To endlesse ruine. I stand heere for Law

Dn. This Letter from Bellario doth commend
A yong and Learned Doctor in our Court;
Where is he?

Ner. He attendeth heere hard by
To know your answer, whether you'll admit him.

Dn. With all my heart. Some three or four of you Go giue him courteous conduct to this place,
Meane time the Court shall heare Bellarios Letter.

Your Grace shall vnderstand, that at the request of your Letter I am very sicke but in the instant that your messenger came, on loving visitation, was with me a yong Doctor of Rome, his name is Balthazar: I acquainted him with the cause in Controuersie, betwene the Iew and Antonio
the Merchant. We turn'd ore many Bookes together: hee furnished with my opinion, which buttred with his owne learning, the greatest whereof I cannot enough commend, commit

with him at my importunity, to fill up your Graces request in my stead. I beseech you, let his lacke of years be no impediment to let him lacke a reuerend estimation: for I neuer knewe so yong a body, with so old a head. I leave him to your gracious acceptance, whose trial shall better publish his commendation

Enter Portia for Balthazar

'Duke. You heere the learn'd Bellario what he writes,
And heere (I take it) is the Doctor come.
Giue me your hand. Came you from old Bellario?

Por. I did my Lord

Dn. You are welcome: take your place;
Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the Court

Por. I am enformed througly of the cause
Which is the Merchant heere? and which the Iew?

Dn. Antonio and old Shylocke, both stand forth.

Por. Is your name Shylocke?

Jew. Shylocke is my name.

Por. Of a strange nature is the sute you follow,
Yet in such rule, that the Venetian Law
Cannot impugne you as you do proceed
You stand within his danger, do you not?

Ant. I, so he sayes

Por. Do you confesse the bond?

Ant. I do.

Por. Then must the Iew be mercifull.

Jew. On what compulsion must I? Tell me that.

Por. The quality of mercy is not strain'd,
It droppeth as the gentle raine from heauen
Vpon the place beneath. It is twice blest,
It blesseth him that giues, and him that takes,
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest, it becomes
The throned Monarch better then his Crowne.
His Scepter shewes the force of temporall power,
The attribute to awe and Maiestie,
Wherein doth sit the dread and feare of Kings.
But mercy is above this sceptred sway,
It is enthroned in the hearts of Kings,
It is an attribute to God himselfe;
And earthly power doth then shew like Gods
When mercie seasons iustice. Therefore Iew,
Though iustice be thy plea, consider this,
That in the course of iustice, none of vs
Should see saluation: we do pray for mercie,
And that same prayer, doth teach vs all to tender
The deeds of mercie. I haue spoke thus much
To mitigate the iustice of thy plea:
Which if thou follow, this strict course of Venice
Must needes giue sentence 'gainst the Merchant there
Shy. My deeds vpon my head, I craue the Law,
The penalty and forfeite of my bond.

Por. Is he not able to discharge the money?

Bass. Yes, heere I tender it for him in the Court,
Yea, twice the summe, if that will not suffice,
I will be bound to pay it ten times ore,
On forfeit of my hands; my head, my heart;
If this will not suffice, is most appeare
That malice beares downe truth. And I beseech you
Wrest once the Law to your authority,
To do a great right, do a little wrong,
And curbe this cruell dweller with his will

Por. It must not be, there is no power in Venice
Can alter a decree established:
'Twill be recorded for a Preident,

And

And many an error by the same example,
Will rush into the state. It cannot be.

Jew. A Daniel come to iudgement, yea a Daniel.

O wise young Iudge, how do I honour thee.

Por. I pray you let me looke vpon the bond.

Jew. Heere 'tis most reuerend Doctor, heere it is.

Por. Shyllocke, there's thrice thy monie offered thee.

Shy. An oath, an oath, I haue an oath in heauen:

Shall I lay periuerie vpon my soule?

No not for Venice.

Por. Why this bond is forfeit,

And lawfully by this the Iew may claime

A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off

Neereft the Merchants heart; be mercifull,

Take thrice thy money, bid me teare the bond

Jew. When it is paid according to the tenure.

It doth appeare you are a worthy Iudge:

you know the Law, your exposition

Hath bene most found. I charge you by the Law,

Where of you are a well-deseruing pillar,

Proceede to iudgement. By my soule I sweare,

There is no power in the tongue of man

To alter me. I stay heere on my bond.

An. Most heartily I do beseech the Court

To giue the iudgement.

Por. Why then thus it is.

you must prepare your boosome for his knife.

Jew. O noble Iudge, O excellent yong man.

Por. For the intent and purpose of the Law

Hath full relation to the penaltie,

Which heere appeareth due vpon the bond.

Jew. 'Tis verie true. O wise and vpright Iudge,

How much more elder art thou then thy looks?

Por. Therefore lay bare your bolome.

Jew. I, his brest,

So sayes the bond, doth it not noble Iudge?

Neereft his hart, those are the very words

Por. It is so. Are there ballance heere to weigh the flesh?

Jew. I haue them ready.

Por. Haue by some Surgeon Shyllocke on your charge
To stop his wounds, least he should bleede to death.

Jew. It is not nominated in the bond?

Por. It is not so exprest. but what of that?

'Twere good you do so much for charitie.

Jew. I cannot finde it, 'tis not in the bond

Por. Come Merchant, haue you any thng to say?

An. But little. I am arm'd and well prepar'd.

Giue me your hand Bassanio, fare you well.

Greene not that I am false to this for you:

For heerein fortune shewes her selfe more kinde

Then is her custome. It is still her vse

To let the wretched man out-lue his wealth,

To view with hollow eye, and wrinkled brow

An age of povertie. From which lingring penance

Of such miserie, doth she cut me off:

Commend me to your honourable Wife,

Tell her the proccesse of Antonio's end:

Say how I lou'd you, speake me faire in death

And when the tale is told, bid her be iudge,

Whether Bassanio had not once a Loue:

Repent not you that you shall loose your friend,

And he repents not that he payes your debt.

For if the Iew do out-bui deepe enough,

He pay it instantly, with all my heart.

Bass. Antonio, I am married to a wife,

Which is as deere to me as life it selfe,
But life it selfe, my wife, and all the world,
Are not with me esteem'd above thy life.
I would loose all, I sacrifice them all
Heere to this deuill, to deliuer you.

Por. Your wifewould giue you little thanks for that
If she were by to heare you make the offer.

Gra. I haue a wife whom I protest I loue,

I would she were in heauen, so she could

Intreat some power to change this currish Iew

Ner. 'Tis well you offer it behinde her backe,

The wish would make else an vnquiet house. (ter

Jew. These be the Christian husbands I haue a daugh-

Would any of the stocke of Barrabas

Had bene her husband, rather then a Christian.

We tittle time, I pray thee pursue sentence

Por. A pound of that same marchants flesh is thine,

The Court awards it, and the law doth giue it.

Jew. Most rightfull Iudge.

Por. And you must cut this flesh from off his brest,

The Law allowes it, and the Court awards it.

Jew. Most learned Iudge, a sentence, come prepare.

Por. Tarry a little, there is something else,

This bond doth giue thee heere no jot of bloud,

The words expresse are a pound of flesh:

Then take thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh,

But in the cutting it, if thou dost shed

One drop of Christian bloud, thy lands and goods

Are by the Lawes of Venice confiscate

Vnto the state of Venice

Gra. O vpright Iudge,

Marke Iew, o learned Iudge.

Shy. Is that the law?

Por. Thy selfe shalt see the Act:

For as thou vrgest iustice, be assur'd

Thou shalt haue iustice more then thou desirest.

Gra. O learned Iudge, mark Iew, a learned Iudge.

Jew. I take this offer then, pay the bond thrice,

And let the Christian goe

Bass. Heere is the money.

Por. Soft, the Iew shall haue all iustice, soft, no haste,

He shall haue nothing but the penalty.

Gra. O Iew, an vpright Iudge, a learned Iudge.

Por. Therefore prepare thee to cut off the flesh,

Shed thou no bloud, nor cut thou lesse nor more

But iust a pound of flesh: if thou tak'st more

Or lesse then a iust pound, be it so much

As makes it light or heavy in the substance,

Or the deuision of the twentieth part

Of one poore scruple, nay if the scale doe turne

But in the estimation of a hayre,

Thou diest, and all thy goods are confiscate.

Gra. A second Daniel, a Daniel Iew,

Now infidell I haue thee on the hip.

Por. Why doth the Iew pause, take thy forfeiture.

Shy. Giue me my principall, and let me goe.

Bass. I haue it ready for thee, heere it is.

Por. He hath refus'd it in the open Court,

He shall haue meerly iustice and his bond.

Gra. A Daniel still say I, a second Daniel,

I thanke thee Iew for teaching me that word.

Shy. Shall I not haue barely my principall?

Por. Thou shalt haue nothing but the forfeiture,

To be taken so at thy perill Iew.

Shy. Why then the Deuill giue him good of it.

He say no longer question

Por. Tarry

Por. Tarry Iew,
The Law hath yet another hold on you.
It is enacted in the Lawes of Venice,
If it be proued against an Alien,
That by direct, or indirect attempts
He seek the life of any Citizen,
The party gainst the which he doth contriue,
Shall seaze one halfe his goods, the other halfe
Comes to the prauie coffer of the State,
And the offenders life lies in the mercy
Of the Duke onely, gainst all other voice.
In which predicament I say thou standst:
For it appears by manifest proceeding,
That indirectly, and directly to,
Thou hast contriue'd against the vety life
Of the defendant. and thou hast incur'd
The danger formerly by me rehearst.
Downe therefore, and beg mercy of the Duke.
Gra. Beg that thou maist haue leaue to hang thy selfe,
And yet thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord,
Therefore thou must be hang'd at the states charge.

Duk. That thou shalt see the difference of our spirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou aske it:
For halfe thy wealth, it is Antonio's,
The other halfe comes to the generall state,
Which humbleness may driue into a fine.

Por. I for the state, not for Antonio
Shy. Nay, take my life and all, pardon not that,
You take my house, when you do take the prop
That doth sustaine my house: you take my life
When you doe take the meanes whereby I liue.

Por. What mercy can you render him Antonio?
Gra. A halter gratis, nothing else for Gods sake
Ant. So please my Lord the Duke, and all the Court
To quit the fine for one halfe of his goods,
I am content: so he will let me haue
The other halfe in vse, to render it
Vpon his death, vnto the Gentleman
That lately stole his daughter.
Two things prouided more, that for this fauour
He presently become a Christian.
The other, that he doe record a gift
Heere in the Court of all he dres posselt
Vnto his sonne Lorenzo, and his daughter.

Duk. He shall doe this, or else I doe recant
The pardon that I late pronounced heere.

Por. Art thou contented Iew? what dost thou say?
Shy. I am content
Por. Clarke, draw a deed of gift.
Shy. I pray you giue me leaue to goe from hence,
I am not well, send the deed after me,
And I will signe it.

Duk. Get thee gone, but doe it.
Gra. In christning thou shalt haue two godfathers,
Had I been iudge, thou shouldst haue had ten more,
To bring thee to the gallows, not to the font. Exit.

Du. Sir I intreat you with me home to dinner.
Por. I humbly doe desire your Grace of pardon,
I must away this night toward Padua,
And it is meete I presently set forth.

Duk. I am sorry that your leysure serues you not:
Antonio, gratifie this gentleman,
For in my minde, you are much bound to him.

Exit Duke and his traine.

Bass. Most worthy gentleman, I and my friend

Haue by your wisdom beene this day acquitted
Of greuous penalties, in lieu whereof,
Three thousand Ducats due vnto the Iew
We freely cope your curteous paines withall!

Ant. And stand indebted ouer and aboue,
In loue and seruice to you euermore

Por. He is well paid that is well satisfied,
And I deliucting you, am satisfied,
And therein doe account my selfe well paid,
My minde was neuer yet more mercenarie
I pray you know me when we meete againe,
I wish you well, and so I take my leaue.

Bass. Deare sir, of force I must attempt you further,
Take some remembrance of vs as a tribute,
Not as fee: grant me two things, I pray you
Not to denie me, and to pardon me.

Por. You presse mee farre, and therefore I will yeeld, Giue me your gloues, Ile weare them for your sake,
And for your loue Ile take this ring from you,
Doe not draw backe your hand, Ile take no more,
And you in loue shall not deny me this?

Bass. This ring good sir, alas it is a trifle,
I will not shame my selfe to giue you this.

Por. I wil haue nothing else but onely this,
And now methinks I haue a minde to it

Bass. There's more depends on this then on the valew,
The dearest ring in Venice will I giue you,
And finde it out by proclamation,
Onely for this I pray you pardon me.

Por. I see sir you are liberall in offers,
You taught me first to beg, and now me thinkes
You teach me how a beggar shou'd be answer'd.

Bass. Good sir, this ring was giuen me by my wife,
And when she put it on, she made me vow
That I should neither sell, nor giue, nor lose it.

Por. That cause serues many men to saue their gifts,
And if your wife be not a mad woman,
And know how well I haue deseru'd this ring,
Shee would not hold out enemy for euer
For giuing it to me well, peace be with you. Exeunt.

Ant. My L Bassanio, let him haue the ring,
Let his desertings and my loue withall
Be valued against your wiuers commendement.

Bass. Goe Gratiano, run and ouer-take him,
Giue him the ring, and bring him if thou canst,
Vnto Antonios house, away, make haste Exit Grat.
Come, you and I will thither presently,
And in the morning early will we both
Flee toward Belmont, come Antonio. Exeunt

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. Enquire the Iewes house out, giue him this deed,
And let him signe it, wee'll away to night,
And be a day before our husbands home:
This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Faire sir, you are well ore-tane -
My L Bassanio vpon more aduice,
Hath sent you heere this ring, and doth intreat
Your company at dinner.

Por. That cannot be;
His ring I doe accept most thankfully,
And so I pray you tell him: furthermore,
I pray you shew my youth old Shyllocks house.

Gra. That will I doe.

Ner. Sir, I would speake with you:

Q

He

The Merchant of Venice.

He see if I can get my husbands ring
Which I did make him sweare to keepe for euer.
Por. Thou maist I warrant, we shal haue old swearing
That they did giue the rings away to men;
But wee le out-face them, and out-sweare them to:
Away, make haste, thou know'st where I will tarry.
Ner. Come good sir, will you shew me to this house.
Exit.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Lorenzo and Iessica.
Lor. The moone shines bright. In such a night as this,
When the sweet winde did gently kisse the trees,
And they did make no nnyse, in such a night
Troilus me thinks mounted the Trojan walls,
And sigh'd his soule to ward the Greecian tents
Where Cressid lay that night.

Ies. In such a night
Did Thubis fearefully ore-trip the dewe,
And saw the Lyons shadow ere himselfe,
And ranne dismayed away.

Loren. In such a night
Stood Dido with a Willow in her hand
Vpon the wilde sea bankes, and waite her Loue
To come againe to Carthage.

Ies. In such a night
Medea gathered the enchanted hearbs
That did renew old Eson.

Loren. In such a night
Did Iessica steale from the wealthy Iewe,
And with an Vnthrifit Loue did runne from Venice
As farre as Belmont.

Ies. In such a night
Did young Lorenzo sweare he lou'd her well,
Stealing her soule with many rowes of faith,
And nere a true one.

Loren. In such a night
Did pretty Iessica (like a little shrow)
Slander her Loue, and he forgau'e it her.
Iessi. I would out-night you did no body come:
But harke, I heare the footing of a man.

Enter Messenger.

Lor. Who comes so fast in silence of the night?
Mes. A friend. (friend)

Loren. A friend, what friend? your name I pray you

Mes. Stephano is my name, and I bring word
My Mistrisse will before the breake of day
Be heere at Belmont, she doth stray about
By holy crosses where she kneeles and prayes
For happy wedlocke houres.

Loren. Who comes with her?

Mes. None but a holy Hermit and her maid:
I pray you it my Master yet return'd?

Loren. He is not, nor we haue not heard from him,
But goe we in I pray thee Iessica,
And ceremoniously let vs vs prepare
Some welcome for the Mistrisse of the house,

Enter Clowne.

Clo. Sola, sola: wo ha ho, sola, sola.

Loren. Who calls?

Clo. Sola, did you see M. Lorenzo, & M. Lorenzo, sola, (sola,
Lor. Leau'e hollowing man, heere.

Clo. Sola, where, where?
Lor. Heere?

Clo. Tel him ther's a Post come from my Master, with his home full of good newes, my Master will be here ere morning sweet soule.

Loren. Let's in, and there expect their comming.
And yet no matter: why should we goe in?

My friend Stephen, signifie pray you
Within the house, your Mistrisse is at hand,
And bring your musique forth into the ayre.
How sweet the moone-light sleepes vpon this banke,
Heere will we sit, and let the sounds of musicke
Creepe in our eares soft stiles, and the night

Become the turtches of sweet harmonie:
Sit Iessica, looke how the floore of heaven

Is thicke inlayed with pattens of bright gold,
There's not the smallest orbe which thou beholdest
But in his motion like an Angell sings,

Still quiring to the young eyed Cherubins;
Such harmonie is in immortall soules,
But whilst this muddy vesture of decay

Doth grossly close in it, we cannot heare it
Come hoe, and wake Diana with a hymne,
With sweetest turtches pearce your Mistrisse eare,
And draw her home with musicke.

Iessi. I am neuer merry when I heare sweet musicke
Play musicke

Lor. The reason is, your spirits are attentiu:
For doe but note a wilde and wanton heard
Or race of youthful and vnhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud,
Which is the hot condition of their blood,
If they but heare perchance a trumpet sound,
Or any ayre of musicke touch their eares,
You shall perceiue them make a mutuall stand,
Their sauage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of musicke: therefore the Poet
Did saie that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods.
Since naught so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But musicke for time doth change his nature,
The man that hath no musicke in himselfe,
Nor is not moued with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoiles,
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections darke as Erebus,
Let no such man be trusted marke the musicke.

Enter Portia and Nerissa

Por. That light we see is burning in my hall:
How farre that little candell throwes his beames,
So shines a good deed in a naughty world. (dile)

Ner. When the moone shone we did not see the can

Por. So doth the greater glory dim the lesse,
A substitute shines brightly as a King
Vntill a King be by, and then his state

Empties it selfe, as doth an inland brooke
Into the maine of waters: musicke, harke, Musicke.
Ner. It is your musicke Madame of the house

Por. Nothing is good I see without respect,
Methinks it sounds much sweeter then by day?
Ner. Silence bestowes that vertue on it Madam.

Por. The Crow doth sing as sweetly as the Lark
When

When neither is attended : and I thinke
The Nightingale if she should sing by day
When every Goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a Musitian then the Wren?
How many things by season, season'd are
To their right praise, and true perfection :
Peace, how the Moone sleeps with Endimion,
And would not be awak'd.

Musicke ceases.

Lor. That is the voice,
Or I am much deceiv'd of Portia.

Por. He knowes me as the blinde man knowes the Cuckow by the bad voice?

Lor. Deere Lady welcome home?

Por. We have bene praying for our husbands welfare
Which speed we hope the better for our words,
Are they return'd?

Lor. Madam, they are not yet.
But there is come a Messenger before
To signifie their coming.

Por. Go in Nerrissa,
Give order to my servants, that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence,
Nor you Lorenzo, Jessica nor you.

A Tucket sounds.

Lor. Your husband is at hand, I heare his Trumpet,
We are no tell-tales Madam, feate you not.

Por. This night methinkes is but the daylight sicke.
It lookes a little paler, 'tis a day,
Such as the day is, when the Sun is hid.

Enter Bassanio, Antonio, Gratiano, and their Followers

Bas. We should hold day with the Antipodes,
If you would walke in absence of the sunne

Por. Let me glie light, but let me not belight,
For a light wife doth make a heavie husband
And neuer be Bassanio so for me,
But God sort all you are welcome home my Lord.

Bass. I thank you Madam, give welcom to my friend
This is the man, this is Antonio,
To whom I am so infinitely bound.

Por. You should in all sence be much bound to him,
For as I heare he was much bound for you

Anth. No more then I am wel acquitted of.

Por. Sir, you are verie welcome to our house.
It must appeare in other waies then words,
Therefore I scant this breathing curtisie.

Gra. By yonder Moone I sweare you do me wrong,
In faith I gaue it to the Iudges Clarke,
Would he were gelt that had it for my part,
Since you do take it Loue so much at hart.

Por. A quarrel hoe already, what's the matter?

Gra. About a hope of Gold, a paltry Ring
That she did give me, whose Poetrie was
For all the world like Curers Poetry
Vpon a kniffe; Loue mee, and leaue mee not.

Ner. What talke you of the Poetrie or the walew.

You swore to me when I did give it you,
That you would weare it til the houre of death,
And that it should lye with you in your graue,
Though not for me, yet for your vehement oaths,
You should haue bene respectiue and haue kept it.
You give it a Iudges Clarke. but wel I know
The Clarke wil nere weare haire on's face that had it.

Gra. He wil, and if he liue to be a man,

Nerrissa. I, if a Woman liue to be a man.

Gra. Now by this hand I gaue it to a youth;
A kinde of boy, a little scrubbed boy,
No higher then thy selfe, the Iudges Clarke,
A prating boy that begg'd it as a Fee,
I could not for my heart deny it him.

Por. You were too blame, I must be plaine with you,
To part so slightly with your wifes first gift,
A thing sticke on with oathes vpon your finger,
And so riueted with faith vnto your flesh.
I gaue my Loue a Ring, and made him sweare
Neuer to part with it, and here he stands :
I dare be sworn for him, he would not leaue it;
Nor plucke it from his finger, for the wealth
That the world masters. Now in faith Gratiano,
You giue your wife too vnkinde a cause of griefe,
And 'twere to me I should be mad at it.

Bass. Why I were best to cut my left hand off,
And sweare I lost the Ring descending it.

Gra. My Lord Bassanio gaue his Ring away
Vnto the Iudge that beg'd it, and indeede
Defer'd it too and then the Boy his Clarke
That tooke some paines in writting, he begg'd mine,
And neyther man nor master would take ought
But the two Rings.

Por. What Ring gaue you my Lord?
Not that I hope which you receiv'd of me.

Bass. If I could adde a lie vnto a fault,
I would deny it but you see my finger
Hath not the Ring vpon it, it is gone.

Por. Even so voide is your false heart of truth.
By heauen I wil nere come in your bed
Vntil I see the Ring.

Ner. Nor I in yours, til I againe see mine.

Bass. Sweet Portia,
If you did know to whom I gaue the Ring,
If you did know for whom I gaue the Ring,
And would conceiue for what I gaue the Ring,
And how vnwillingly I left the Ring,
When nought would be accepted but the Ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure?

Por. If you had knowne the vertue of the Ring,
Or halfe her worthinesse that gaue the Ring,
Or your owne honour to containe the Ring,
You would not then haue parted with the Ring:
What man is there so much vnreasonable,
If you had pleas'd to haue defended it
With any termes of Zeale wanted the modestie
To vtter the thing held as a ceremonie:
Nerrissa teaches me what to beleue,
He die for't, but some Woman had the Ring?

Bass. No by mine honor Madam, by my soule
No Woman had it, but a ciuill Doctor,
Which did refuse three thousand Ducates of me,
And beg'd the Ring, the which I did denie him,
And suffer'd him to go displeas'd away.
Even he that had held vp the verie life
Of my deere friend. What should I say sweete Lady?
I was inforc'd to send it after him,
I was beset with shame and curtisie,
My honor would not let ingratitude
So much besmeare it. Pardon me good Lady,
And by these blessed Candles of the night,
Had you bene there, I thinke you would haue beg'd
The Ring of me, to giue the worthie Doctor?

Q:

Por. Let not that Doctor ere come neere my house,
 Since he hath got the iewel that I loued,
 And that which you did sweare to keepe for me,
 I will become as liberall as you,
 Ile not deny him any thing I haue,
 No, not my body, nor my husbands bed:
 Know him I shall, I am well sure of it.
 Lie not a night from home. Watch me like Argas,
 If you doe not, if I be left alone,
 Now by mine honour which is yet mine owne,
 Ile haue the Doctor for my bedfellow.

Nerrissa. And I his Clarke: therefore be well aduis'd
 How you doe leaue me to mine owne protection.

Gra. Well, doe you so: let not me take him then,
 For if I doe, ile mar the yong Clarks pen.

Ant. I am th'vnhappy subiect of these quarrels.

Por. Sir, grieue not you,
 You are welcome notwithstanding.

Bass. Portia, forgie me this enforced wrong,
 And in the hearing of these manie friends
 I sweare to thee, euen by thine owne faire eyes
 Wherein I see my selfe

Por. Marke you but that?
 In both my eyes he doubly sees himselfe:
 In each eye one, sweare by your double selfe,
 And there's an oath of credit

Bass. Nay, but heare me.
 Pardon this fault, and by my soule I sweare
 I neuer more will breake an oath with thee.

Anth. I once did lend my bodie for thy wealth,
 Which but for him that had your husbands ring
 Had quite miscarried. I dare be bound againe,
 My soule vpon the forfeit, that your Lord
 Will neuer more breake faith aduis'd lie

Por. Then you shall be his suretie. giue him this,
 And bid him keepe it better then the other.

Ant. Heere Lord Bassanio, swear to keep this ring.

Bass. By heauen it is the same I gaue the Doctor.

Por. I had it of him pardon Bassanio,
 For by this ring the Doctor lay with me.

Ner. And pardon me my gentle Gratiano,
 For that same scrubbed boy the Doctors Clarke
 In lieu of this, last night did lye with me

Gra. Why this is like the mending of high waies
 In Sommer, where the waies are faire enough.
 What, are we Cuckolds ere we haue deseru'd it.

Por. Speake not so grossely, you are all amaz'd;
 Heere is a letter, read it at your leysure,

 And I haue better newes in store for you
 Then you expect. vnseale this letter soone,
 There you shall finde three of your Argosies
 Are richly come to harbour sodainlie.
 You shall not know by what strange accident
 I chanced on this letter.

Antho. I am dumbe.

Bass. Were you the Doctor, and I knew you not?

Gra. Were you the Clark that is to make me cuckold.

Ner. I, but the Clark that neuer meanes to doe it,
 Vnlesse he liue vntill he be a man.

Bass. (Sweet Doctor) you shall be my bedfellow,
 When I am absent, then lie with my wife.

Ant. (Sweet Ladie) you haue giuen me life & liuing;
 For heere I reade for certaine that my ships
 Are safelie come to Rode.

Por. How now Lorenzo?
 My Clarke hath some good comforts to for you.

Ner. I, and Ile giue them him without a fee.

 After his death, of all he dies possess'd of.

Loren. Faire Ladies you drop Manna in the way

Por. It is almost morning,
 And yet I am sure you are not satisfied
 Of these euents at full Let vs goe in,
 And charge vs there vpon intergatories,
 And we will answer all things faithfully.

Gra. Let it be so, the first intergatory
 That my Nerrissa shall be sworne on, is,
 Whether till the next night she had rather stay,
 Or goe to bed, now being two houres to day,
 But were the day come, I should wish it darke,
 Till I were couching with the Doctors Clarke.
 Well, while I liue, Ile feare no other thing
 So sore, as keeping safe Nerrissas ring.

Exeunt.

Actus primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Orlando and Adam

Orlando

AS I remember Adam, it was vpon this fashion bequeathed me by will, but poore a thousand Crownes, and as thou sittest, charged my brother on his blessing to breed mee well and there begins my sadnesse. My brother Iaques he keeps at schoole, and report speakes goldenly of his profit: for my part, he keepes me rustically at home, or (to speake more properly) staies me heere at home vnkept for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an Oxe? his horses are bred better, for besides that they are faire with their feeding, they are taught their mannage, and to that end Riders deerely hir'd: but I (his brother) gaine nothing vnder him but growth, for the which his Animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I besides this nothing that he so plentifully giues me, the something that nature gaue mee, his countenance seemes to take from me: hee lets mee feede with his Hindes, barres mee the place of a brother, and as much as in him lies, munes my gentility with my education. This is it Adam that grieues me, and the spirit of my Father, which I thinke is within mee, begins to mutinie against this seruitude. I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to auoid it.

Enter Oliuer

Adam. Yonder comes my Master, your brother.

Orlan. Goe a-part Adam, and thou shalt heare how he will shake me vp

Oli. Now Sir, what make you heere?

Orl. Nothing I am not taught to make any thing

Oli. What mar you then sir?

Orl. Marry sir, I am helping you to mar that which God made, a poore vnworthy brother of yours with idlenesse.

Oliuer. Marry sir be better employed, and be naught a while.

Orlan. Shall I keepe your hogs, and eat huskes with them? what prodigall portion haue I spent, that I should come to such penury?

Oli. Know you where you are sir?

Orl. O sir, very well heere in your Orchard.

Oli. Know you before whom sir?

Orl. I, better then him I am before knowes mee: I know you are my eldest brother, and in the gentle condition of blood you should so know me the courtesie of nations allows you my better, in that you are the first borne, but the same tradition takes not away my blood, were there twenty brothers betwixt vs: I haue as much of my father in mee, as you, albeit I confesse your coming before me is neerer to his reuerence.

Oli. What Boy. (this.)

Orl. Come, come elder brother, you are too yong in

Oli. Wilt thou lay hands on me villaine?

Orl. I am no villaine. I am the yongest sonne of Sir Rowland de Boys, he was my father, and he is thrice a villaine that saies such a father begot villaines. wert thou not my brother, I would not take this hand from thy throat, till this other had puld out thy tongue for saying so, thou hast raisd on thy selfe.

Adam. Sweet Masters bee patient, for your Fathers remembrance, be at accord

Oli. Let me goe I say.

Orl. I will not till I please you shall heare mee. my father charg'd you in his will to giue me good education. you haue train'd me like a pezan, obscuring and hiding from me all gentleman-like qualities. the spirit of my father growes strong in mee, and I will no longer endure it therefore allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or giue mee the poore allottery my father left me by testament, with that I will goe buy my fortunes.

Oli. And what wilt thou do? beg when that is spent? Well sir, get you in I will not long be troubled with you you shall haue some part of your will, I pray you leaue me.

Orl. I will no further offend you, then becomes mee for my good.

Oli. Get you with him, you olde dogge

Adam. Is old dogge my reward most true, I haue lost my teeth in your seruice God be with my olde master, he would not haue spoke such a word. Ex. Orl. Ad

Oli. Is it euen so, begin you to grow vpon me? I will physicke your ranchenesse, and yet giue no thousand crownes neyther. holla Dennis

Enter Dennis.

Den. Calls your worship?

Oli. Was not Charles the Dukes Wrafflet heere to speake with me?

Den. So please you, he is heere at the doore, and importunes access to you.

Oli. Call him in 'twill be a good vay and to morrow the wraffling is.

Enter Charles.

Eba. Good Morrow to your worship

Oli. Good Mounfier Charles: what is the new newes at the new Court?

Charles. There's no newes at the Court Sir, but the olde newes that is, the old Duke is banished by his yonger brother the new Duke, and three or foure louing

Q3

Lords

Ref. Where learned you that oath foole?
Clo. Of a certaine Knight, that swore by his Honour they were good Pan-cakes, and swore by his Honor the Mustard was naught: Now Ile stand to it, the Pancakes were naught, and the Mustard was good, and yet was not the Knight forsworne.

Cel. How proude you that in the great heape of your knowledge?

Ref. I marry, now vnmuzzle your wisdom.

Clo. Stand you both forth now: stroke your chinnes, and sweare by your beards that I am a knaue.

Cel. By our beards (if we had them) thou art

Clo. By my knauerie (if I had it) then I were: but if you sweare by that that is not, you are not forsworn: no more was this knight swearing by his Honor, for he neuer had anie, or if he had, he had sworne it away, before euer he saw those Pancakes, or that Mustard.

Cel. Prethee, who is't that thou means't?

Clo. One that old Fredericke your Father loues

Ref. My Fathers loue is enough to honor him enough, speake no more of him, you'll be whipt for taxation one of these daies

Clo. The more pittie that fooles may not speak wisely, what Wisemen do foolishly

Cel. By my troth thou saiest true: For, since the little wit that fooles haue was silenced, the little foolerie that wise men haue makes a great shew, Heere comes Monsieur the Ben

Enter le Beau.

Ref. With his mouth full of newes.

Cel. Which he vill put on vs, as Pigeons feed their young.

Ref. Then shal we be newes-cram'd.

Cel. All the better we shalbe the more Marketable.
Beau. Your Monsieur le Ben, what s the newes?

Le Ben. Faire Princeesse, you haue lost much good sport

Cel. Sport of what colour?

Le Ben. What colour Madame? How shall I answer you?

Ref. As wit and fortune will

Clo. Or as the destinies decrees.

Cel. Well said, that was laid on with a trowell

Clo. Nay, if I keepe not my ranke.

Ref. Thou loofest thy old smell

Le Ben. You amaze me Ladies I would haue told you of good wrastring, which you haue lost the sight of.

Ref. Yet tell vs the manner of the Wrastring

Le Ben. I wil tell you the beginning: and if it please your Ladships, you may see the end, for the best is yet to doe, and heere where you are, they are comming to performe it.

Cel. Well, the beginning that is dead and buried.

Le Ben. Theré comes an old man, and his three sons

Cel. I could match this beginning with an old tale.

Le Ben. Three proper yong men, of excellent growth and presence

Ref. With bils on their neckes: Be it knowne vnto all men by these presents.

Le Ben. The eldest of the three, wrastring with Charles the Dukes Wrastringer, which Charles in a momemt threw him, and broke three of his ribbes, that there is little hope of life in him: So he seru'd the second; and so the third: yonder they lie, the poore old man their Father, making such pittifull dole over them, that all the beholders take his part with weeping.

Ref. Alas.

Clo. But what is the sport Monsieur, that the Ladies haue lost?

Le Ben. Why this that I speake of

Clo. Thus men may grow wiser euery day It is the first time that euer I heard breaking of ribbes was sport for Ladies.

Cel. Or I, I promise thee.

Ref. But is there any else longs to see this broken Musicke in his sides? Is there yet another doates vpon rib-breaking? Shall we see this wrastring Cosin?

Le Ben. You must if you stay heere, for heere is the place appointed for the wrastring, and they are ready to performe it.

Cel. Yonder sure they are comming Let vs now stay and see it.

Flourish Enter Duke, Lords, Orlando, Charles, and Attendants.

Duke. Come on, since the youth will not be intreated His owne perill on his forwardnesse.

Ref. Is yonder the man?

Le Ben. Euen he, Madam

Cel. Alas, he is too yong yet he looks successiefully

Du. How now daughter, and Cousin

Are you crept hither to see the wrastring?

Ref. I my Liege, so please you giue vs leaue

Du. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you there is such oddes in the man: In pittie of the challengers youth, I would faine dissuade him, but he will not bee entreated. Speake to him Ladies, see if you can moue him

Cel. Call him hether good Monsieur Le Ben

Duke. Do so Ile not be by

Le Ben. Monsieur the Challenger, the Princeesse calls for you.

Orl. I attend them with all respect and dutie

Ref. Youngman, haue you challeng'd Charles the Wrastringer?

Orl. No faire Princeesse he is the generall challenger, I come but in as others do, to try with him the strength of my youth

Cel. Yong Gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your yeeres: you haue teene cruell p'dose of this mans strength, if you saw your selfe with your eyes, or knew your selfe with your judgment, the feare of your aduerture would counsel you to a more equall enterprise: We pray you for your owne sake to embrace your own safetie, and giue over this attempt.

Ref. Do yong Sir, your reputation shall not therefore be misprised: we wil make it our suite to the Duke, that the wrastring might not go forward.

Orl. I beseech you, punish mee not with your harde thoughts, wherein I confesse me much guiltie to denie so faire and excellent Ladies anie thing. But let your faire eyes, and gentle wishes go with mee to my triall; wherein if I bee foild, there is but one sham'd that vvas neuer gracious: if kil'd, but one dead that is willing to be so: I shall do my friends no wrong, for I haue none to lament me: the world nor iniurie, for in it I haue nothing: onely in the world I sit vp a place, which may bee better supplied, when I haue made it empty.

Ref. The little strength that I haue, I would it were with you.

Cel.

Cel. And mine to ecke out here.

Ref. Fare you well: praise heaven I be deceiv'd in you.

Cel. Your hearts desires be with you.

Char. Come, where is this yong gallant, that is so desirous to lie with his mother earth?

Orl. Readie Sir, but his will hath in it a more modest working.

Duk. You shall trie but one fall.

Char. No, I warrant your Grace you shall not entreat him to a second, that have so mightilie perswaded him from a first.

Orl. You meane to mocke me after - you should not have mockt me before - but come your waies.

Ref. Now Hercules, be thy speede yong man.

Cel. I would I were invisible, to catch the strong fellow by the legge.

Ref. Oh excellent yong man.

Cel. If I had a thunderbolt in mine eie, I can tell who should downe.

Duk. No more, no more.

Orl. Yes I beseech your Grace. I am not yet well breath'd.

Duk. How do'st thou Charies?

Le Ben. He cannot speake my Lord.

Duk. Beare him awaie:

What is thy name yong man?

Orl. Orlando my Liege, the yongest sonne of Sir Rowland de Boys.

Duk. I would thou hadst beene son to some man else, The world esteem'd thy father honourable, But I did finde him still mine enemy; Thou should'st have better pleas'd me with this deede, Hadst thou descended from another house - But fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth, I would thou had'st told me of another Father.

Cel. Were I my Father (Coze) would I do this?

Orl. I am more proud to be Sir Rolands sonne, To be adopted heire to Fredricke.

Ref. My Father lov'd Sir Roland as his soule, And all the world was of my Fathers minde, Had I before knowne this yong man his sonne, I should have given him teares vnto entreaties, Ere he should thus have ventur'd.

Cel. Gentle Cosen, Let vs goe thanke him, and encourage him - My Fathers rough and envious disposition Sticks me at heart - Sir, you have well deseru'd, If you doe keepe your promises in loue; But rustly as you have exceeded all promise, Your Mistis shall be happy.

Ref. Gentleman, Weare this for me: one out of suites with fortune That could giue more, but that her hand lacks meanes. Shall we goe Coze?

Cel. I: fare you well faire Gentleman.

Orl. Can I not say, I thanke you? My better parts Are all throwne downe, and that which here stands vp Is but a quintune, a meere liuelisse blocke.

Ref. He calls vs back: my pride fell with my fortunes; He aske him what he would: Did you call Sir? Sir, you have wrastled well, and overthrowne More then your enemies.

Cel. Will you goe Coze?

Ref. Haue with you: fare you well.

Exit.

Orl. What passion hangs these waights vpon my tongue? I cannot speake, to her, yet she'st yong conference.

Enter Le Ben.

O poore Orlando! thou art overthrowne Or Charles, or something weaker masters thee. Le Ben. Good Sir, I do in friendship counsaile you To leaue this place; Albeit you have deseru'd High commendation, true applause, and loue; Yet such is now the Dukes condition, That he misconsters all that you haue done.

The Duke is humorous, what he is indeede More suites you to conceiue, then I to speake of.

Orl. I thanke you Sir; and pray you tell me this, Which of the two was daughter of the Duke, That here was at the Wrastling?

Le Ben. Neither his daughter, if we iudge by manners, But yet indeede the taller is his daughter, The other is daughter to the banish'd Duke, And here detain'd by her vsurping Vncle To keepe his daughter companie, whose loues Are deerer then the naturall bond of Sisters. But I can tell you, that of late this Duke Hath tane displeasure 'gainst his gentle Neece, Grounded vpon no other argument, But that the people praise her for her vertues, And pittie her, for her good Fathers sake, And on my life his malice 'gainst the Lady Will sodainly breake forth. Sir, fare you well, Hereafter in a better world then this, I shall desire more loue and knowledge of you.

Orl. I rest much bounden to you: fare you well. Thus must I from the smoake into the smother, From tyrant Duke, vnto a tyrant Brother, But heauenly Rosaline.

Exit.

Scena Tertius.

Enter Celia and Rosaline.

Cel. Why Cosen, why Rosaline: Cupid haue mercie, Not a word?

Ref. Not one to throw at a dog.

Cel. No, thy words are too precious to be cast away vpon curs, throw some of them at me, and let me see with reasons.

Ref. Then there were two Cosen laid vp, when the one should be lam'd with reason, and the other mad without any.

Cel. But is all this for your Father?

Ref. No, some of it is for my chilles Father - Oh how full of briers is this working day world.

Cel. They are but burs, Cosen, throwne vpon thee in holiday foolerie, if we walke not in the trodden paths our very petty-coates will catch them.

Ref. I could shake them off my coate, these burs are in my heart.

Cel. Hem them away.

Ref. I would try if I could cry hem, and haue him.

Cel. Come, come, wrastle with thy affections.

Ref. O they take the path of a better wrastler then my selfe.

Cel. O, a good wish vpon you: you will trie in time.

in dispiſt of a fall: but turning theſe iſſues out of ſervice, let vs talke in good earneſt: Is it poſſible on ſuch a ſo- daine, you ſhould fall into ſo ſtrong a liking with old Sir Rowland's yongelt ſonne?

Roſ. The Duke my Father lou'd his Father deereſie.

Cel. Doth it therefore enſue that you ſhould loue his Sonne deereſie? By this kinde of chaſe, I ſhould hate him, for my father hated his father deereſy; yet I hate not Orlando.

Roſ. No faith, hate him not for my ſake.

Cel. Why ſhould I not? doth he not deſerue well?

Enter Duke with Lords.

Roſ. Let me loue him for that, and do you loue him Becauſe I doe. Looke, here comes the Duke.

Cel. With his eyes full of anger

Duk. Miſtris, diſpatch you with your ſafeſt haſte, And get you from our Court.

Roſ. My Vncle

Duk. You Colen,

Within theſe ten daies if that thou beeſt found So neere our publike Court as twentie miles, Thou dieſt for it

Roſ. I doe beſeech your Grace

Let me the knowledge of my fault beare with me.

If with my ſelfe I hold intelligence,

Or haue acquaintance with mine owne deſires,

If that I doe not dreame, or be not franke,

(As I doe truſt I am not) then deere Vncle,

Neuer ſo much as in a thought vnborne,

Did I offend your highneſſe

Duk. Thus doe all Traitors,

If their purgation did conſiſt in words,

They are as innocent as grace it ſelfe,

Let it ſuffice thee that I truſt thee not

Roſ. Yet your miſtruſt cannot make me a Traitor,

Tell me whereon the likelihoods depends?

Duk. Thou art thy Fathers daughter, there's enough

Roſ. So was I when your highneſſe took his Dukedome,

So was I when your highneſſe baniſht him,

Treason is not inherited my Lord,

Or if we did deriue it from our friends,

What's that to me, my Father was no Traitor,

Then good my Leige, miſtake me not ſo much,

To thinke my pouertie is treacherous

Cel. Deere Sovereigne heare me ſpeake.

Duk. I Celia, we ſtaid her for your ſake,

Elſe had ſhe wiſh her Father rang'd along.

Cel. I did not then intreat to haue her ſtay,

It was your pleaſure, and your owne remouſe,

I was too yong that time to value her,

But now I know her if ſhe be a Traitor,

Why ſo am I we ſtill haue ſlept together,

Roſe at an inſtant, learn'd, plaid, eate together,

And whereſoere we went, like Iunior Swans,

Still we went coupled and inſeperable

Duk. She is too ſubtile for thee, and her ſmoothneſſe,

Her verie ſilence, and perpatience,

Speake to the people, and they pittie her:

Thou art a foole, ſhe robs thee of thy name,

And thou wiſt ſhow more bright, & ſeem more vertuous

When ſhe is gone then open not thy lips

Firme, and irrevocable is my doombe,

Which I haue paſt ypon her; ſhe is baniſht.

Cel. Pronounce that ſentence then on me my Leige,

I cannot lue out of her companie.

Duk. You are a foole: you Neice prouide your ſelfe, If you out-ſtay the time, vpon mine honor, And in the greaſneſſe of my word you die.

Exit Duke, &c.

Cel. O my poore Rosaline, whether wilt thou goe?

Wilt thou change Fathers? I will giue thee mine:

I charge thee be not thou more grieu'd then I am.

Roſ. I haue more cauſe.

Cel. Thou haſt not Coſen,

Prethee be cheerefull; know'ſt thou not the Duke

Hath baniſht me his daughter?

Roſ. That he hath not

Cel. No, hath not? Rosaline lacks then the loue

Which teacheth thee that thou and I am one,

Shall we be ſunderd? ſhall we part ſweete girle?

No, let my Father ſeek another heire

Therefore deuſe with me how we may ſlie

Whether to goe, and what to beare with vs,

And doe not ſeek to take your change vpon you,

To beare your griefes your ſelfe, and leaue me out:

For by this heauen, now at our ſorrowes pale;

Say what thou canſt, Ile goe along with thee.

Roſ. Why, whether ſhall we goe?

Cel. To ſeek my Vncle in the Forreſt of Arden

Roſ. Alas, what danger will it be to vs,

(Maides as we are) to trauell forth ſo farre?

Beautie prouoketh thee ſooner then gold.

Cel. Ile put my ſelfe in poore and meane attire,

And with a kinde of vmbre ſmurch my face,

The like doe you, ſo ſhall we paſſe along,

And neuer ſtir aſſailants.

Roſ. Were it not better,

Becauſe that I am more then common tall,

That I did ſuite me all points like a man,

A gallant curtelaſ vpon my thigh,

A bore-ſpeare in my hand, and in my heart

Lye there what hidden womans feare there will,

Weele haue a ſwaſhing and a marſhall outſide,

As manie other mannish cowards haue,

That doe outface it with their ſemblances.

Cel. What ſhall I call thee when thou art a man?

Roſ. Ile haue no worſe a name then Iones owne Page,

And therefore looke you call me Ganymed.

But what will you by call'd?

Cel. Something that hath a reference to my ſtate:

No longer Celia, but Aliena.

Roſ. But Coſen, what if we aſſaid to ſteale

The clowniſh Foole out of your Fathers Court

Would he not be a comfort to our trauaile?

Cel. Heele goe along ore the wide world with me,

Leaue me alone to woe him; Let's away

And get our Iewels and our wealth together,

Deuiſe the fitteſt time, and ſafeſt way

To hide vs from purſuite that will be made

After my flight: now goe in we content

To libertie, and not to baniſhment

Exeunt

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Duke Senior: Anyens, and two or three Lords

like Forreſters

Duk. Sen. Now my Coe-mates, and brothers in exile:

Hath not old cuſtome made this life more ſweete

Then

Then that of painted pompe? Are not these woods
More free from penill then the envious Court?
Hoere feele we not the penaltie of Adam,
The seasons difference, as the Icie phange
And churlish chiding of the winters winde,
Which when it bites and blowes vpon my body
Euen till I shrinke with cold, I smile, and say
This is no flattery: these are counsellors
That feelingly perswade me what I am.
Sweet are the vses of aduersitie
Which like the road, ougly and venomous,
Weares yet a precious Iewell in his head
And this our life exen pt from publike haunt,
Findes tongues in trees, bookes in the running brookes,
Sermons in stones, and good in every thing.

Amen. I would not change it, happy is your Grace
That can translate the stubboinneesse of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a stile.

Du.Sen. Come, shall we goe and kill vs venison?
And yet it likes me the poore dappled fooles
Being native Burgers of this desert City,
Should in their owne confines with forked heads
Haue their round hanches gourd

1.Lord. Indeed my Lord
The melancholy Iaqnes grieues at that,
And in that kinde swears you doe more vsurpe
Then doth your brother that hath banish'd you
To day my Lord of Amen, and my selfe,
Did steale behinde him as he lay along
Vnder an oake, whose anucke roote peepes out
Vpon the brooke that brawles along this vood,
To the which place a poore sequestred Stag
That from the Hunters aime had tane a hurt,
Did come to languish; and indeed my Lord
The wretched animall heard feth such groanes
That their discharge did stretch his leathere coat
Almost to bustling, and the big round teares
Cours'd one another downe his innocent nose
In pittieous chate: and thus the haine foole,
Much marked of the melancholic Iaqnes,
Stood on the extreamest verge of the twist brooke,
Augmenting it with teares.

Du.Sen. But what said Iaqnes?
Did he not moralize this spectacle?

1.Lord. O yes, into a thousand similes.
First, for his weeping into the needlesse streame;
Poore Deere quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings doe, giuing thy sum of more
To that which had too must: then being there alone,
Left and abandoned of his velvet friend;
'Tis right quoth he, thus miserie doth part
The Fluxe of companie anon a carelesse heard
Full of the pasture, jumps along by him
And neuer stales to greet him. I quoth Iaqnes, Sweepe on you fat and greazie Citizens,
'Tis iust the fashion, wherefore doe you looke
Vpon that poore and broken bankrupt there?
Thus most inuicely he pierceth through
The body of Countrie, Citie, Court,
Yea, and of this our life, swearing that we
Are meere vsurpers, tyrants, and whats worse
To fight the Annimals, and to kill them vp
In their assign'd and nature dwelling place.

D.Sen. And did you leaue him in this contemplation?

2.Lord. We did my Lord, weeping and commenting Vpon the sobbing Deere.

Du.Sen. Show me the place,
I loue to cope him in these sullen fits,
For then he's full of matter.

1.Lord. He bring you to him straight.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Duke, with Lords.

Duk. Can it be possible that no man saw them?
It cannot be, some villaines of my Court
Are of consent and sufferance in this

1.Lord. I cannot heare of any that did see her,
The Ladies her attendants of her chamber
Saw her a bed, and in the morning early,
They found the bed vntreasur'd of their Mistress.

2.Lord. My Lord, the roynish Clown, at whom so oft,
Your Grace was wont to laugh is also missing,
Helia the Princesse Gentlewoman
Confesses that she secretly ore-lord
Your daughter and her Cosen much commend
The parts and graces of the Wrestler
That did but lately soile the Is, nor Ci, rest,
And she beleues where euer they are gone
That youth is surely in the company

Duk. Send to his brother, fetcht a gallant hither,
If he be absent, bring his Brother to me,
He make him finde him: do this sodainly,
And let not search and inquisition quail,
To bring againe these foolish runaways.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Orlando and 1. Lord

Orl. Who's there?

1.Lord. What my yong Master, oh n v gentle master,
Oh my sweet master, O you meritorie
Of old Sir Renard, why, what make you here?
Why are you vertuous? Why do people loue you?
And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant?
Why would you be so fond to overcome
The bonnie prifer of the humorous Duke?
Your praise is come too swiftly home before you Know you not Master, so seeme kinde of men,
Their graces serue them but as enemies,
No more doe yours: your vertues gentle Master
Are sanctified and holy traitors to you:
Oh what a world is this, when what is comely
Enuenuoms him that beares it?

Orl. Why, what's the matter?

1.Lord. O vnhappy youth,
Come not within these doores: within this rooffe
The enemy of all your graces liues
Your brother, no, no brother, yet the sonne
(Yet not the son, I will not call him son)
Of him I was about to call his Father,
Hath heard your praises, and this night he means
To burne the lodging where you vse to lye,
And you within it: if he faile of that

He

He will haue other meanes to cut you off;
Iouerheard him and his practises:
This is no place, this house is but a butcherie;
Abhorre it, feare it, doe not enter it

Ad. Why whether Adam would'st thou haue me go?

Ad. No matter whether, so you come not here.

Orl. What, would'st thou haue me go & beg my food,

Or with a bale and boistrous Sword enforce

A theeuish liuing on the common roade?

This I must do, or know not what to do.

Yet this I will not do, do how I can,

I rather will subiect me to the malice

Of a diuerted blood, and bloudie Brother,

Ad. But do not so I haue five hundred Crownes,

The thriftie hire I saued vnder your Father,

Which I did store to be my toiler Nurse,

When seruice should in my old limbs lie lame,

And vnregarded age in corners throwne,

Take that, and he that doth the Rauens feede,

Yea proudly caters for the Sparrow,

Be comfort to my age here is the gold,

All this I giue you, let me be your seruant,

Though I looke old, yet I am strong and lustie,

For in my youth I neuer did apply

Hot, and rebellious liquors in my blood,

Nor did not with vnashfull forehead woe,

The meanes of weaknesse and debilitie,

Therefore my age is as a lustie winter,

Frostie, but kindly; let me goe with you,

Ile doe the seruice of a yonger man

In all your businesse and necessitiues

Orl. Oh good old man, how well in thee appears

The constant seruice of the antique world,

When seruice sweate for dutie, not for meede

Thou art not for the fashion of these times,

Where none will sweate, but for promotion,

And hauing that do choake their seruice vp,

Euen with the hauing, it is not so with thee

But poore old man, thou prun'st a rotten tree,

That cannot so much as a blossome yeelde,

In lieu of all thy paines and husbandrie,

But come thy waies, wee le goe along together,

And ere we haue thy youthfull wages spent,

Wee le light vpon some settled low content.

Ad. Master goe on, and I will follow thee

To the last gaspe with truth and loyalty,

From seauentie yeeres, till now almost fourescore

Here liued I, but now liue here no more

At seauenteene yeeres, many their fortunes seeke

But at fourescore, it is too late a weeke,

Yet fortune cannot recompence me better

Then to die well, and not my Masters debter

Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Rosalind for Ganymed, Celia for Aliena, and Clowne, alias Touchstone

Ros. O Iupiter, how merry are my spirits?

Clo. I care not for my spirits, if my legges were not wearie.

Ros. I could finde in my heart to disgrace my mans apparell, and to cry like a woman: but I must comfort

the weaker vessell, as doublet and hose ought to show it selfe corragious to petty-coate, therefore courage, good Aliena

Cel. I pray you beare with me, I cannot goe no further.

Clo. For my part, I had rather beare with you, then beare you yet I should beare no crosse if I did beare
you, for I thinke you haue no money in your purse.

Ros. Well, this is the Forrest of Arden.

Clo. I, now am I in Arden, the more foole I, when I was at home I was in a better place, but Trauellers must be content.

Enter Corin and Silenus.

Ros. I, be so good Touchstone. Look you, who comes here, a yong man and an old in solemne talke

Cor. That is the way to make her scarce you still.

Sil. Oh Corin, that thou knew'st how I do loue her,

Cor. I partly guesse for I haue lou'd ere now

Sil. No Corin, being old, thou canst not guesse,
Though in thy youth thou wast as true a loue.

As euer sigh'd vpon a midnight pillow

But if thy loue were euer like to mine,

As sure I thinke did neuer man loue so.

How many actions most ridiculous,

Hast thou beene drawne to by thy fantasie?

Cor. Into a thousand that I haue forgotten

Sil. Oh thou didst then neuer loue so hartily,

If thou remembrest not the slightest folly,

That euer loue did make thee run into,

Thou hast not lou'd

Or if thou hast not far as I doe now,

Wearing thy hearer in thy Mistresse praise,

Thou hast not lou'd.

O if thou hast not broke from compaignie,

Abruptly as my passion now makes me,

I haue not lou'd

O Phebe, Phebe, Phebe

Exit

Ros. Alas poore Shepheard searching of they would,
I haue by hard aduenture found mine owne.

Clo. And I mine I remember when I was in loue, I broke my sword vpon a stone, and bid him take that for comming a night to Iane Smile, and I remember the kissing of her bruler, and the Cowes dugs that her prettie
chopt hands had milk'd, and I remember the wooing of a peascod instead of her, from whom I tooke two cods, and giuing her them againe, said with weeping teares, weare these for my sake wee that are true Lo-uers, runne into strange capers; but as all is mortall in nature, so is all nature in loue, mortall in folly

Ros. Thou speak'st wiser then thou art war of

Clo. Nay, I shall nere be ware of mine owne wit, till
I breake my shins against it.

Ros. Ioue, Ioue, this Shepherds passion,
Is much vpon my fashion

Clo. And mine, but it growes something stale with
mee.

Cel. I pray you, one of you question yon'd man,
If he for gold will giue vs any foode,
I faint almost to death.

Clo. Holla; you Clowne.

Ros. Peace foole, he's not thy kinsman

Cor. Who calls?

Clo. Your betters Sir.

Cor. Else are they very wretched

Ros. Peace

Ref. Peace I say; good euen to your friend
Cor. And to you gentle Sir, and to you all.

Ref. I prethee Shepheard, if that loue or gold
 Can in this desert place buy entertainment,
 Bring vs where we may rest our selues, and feed:
 Here's a yong maid with trauaile much oppressed,
 And faints for succour

Cor. Faire Sir, I pittie her,
 And wish for her sake more then for mine owne,
 My fortunes were more able to releue her:
 But I am shepheard to another man,
 And do not sheere the Fleeces that I graze.
 My master is of churlish disposition,
 And little wreakes to finde the way to heauen
 By doing deeds of hospitalitie
 Besides his Coate, his Flockes, and bounds of feede
 Are now on sale, and at our sheep-coat now
 By reason of his absence there is nothing
 That you will feed on but what is, come see,
 And in my voice most welcome shall you be

Ref. What is he that shall buy his focke and pasture?

Cor. That yong Swaine that you saw heere but cre-while,

That little cares for buying any thing

Ref. I pray thee, if it stand with honestie,
 Buy thou the Cottage, pasture, and the focke,
 And thou shalt haue to pay for it of vs.

Cel. And we will mend thy wages:
 I like this place, and willingly could
 Waste my time in it.

Cor. Assuredly the thing is to be sold.
 Go with me, if you like vpon report,
 The soile, the profit, and this kinde of life,
 I will your very faithfull Feeder be,
 And buy it with your Gold right sodainly

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter, Amyens, Iaques, & others.

Song

*Vnder the greene wood tree,
 who loues to lye with mee,
 And turne his merrie Note,
 vnto the sweet Birds throte:
 Come hither, come hither, come hither
 Heere shall he see no enemie,
 But Winter and rough Weather.*

Iaq. More, more, I pre thee more.

Amy. It will make you melancholly Monsieur Iaques

Iaq. I thanke it: More, I prethee more,
 I can sucke melancholly out of a song,
 As a Weazel suckes egges: More, I pre thee more.

Amy. My voice is ragged, I know I cannot please
 you.

Iaq. I do not desire you to please me,
 I do desire you to sing.

Come, more, another stanza: Cal you em stanza's?

Amy. What you wil Monsieur Iaques.

Iaq. Nay, I care not for their names, they owe mee nothing. Wil you sin

Amy. More at your request, then to please my selfe.

Iaq. Well then, if euer I thanke any man, Ile thanke

you: but that they cal complement is like th encounter of two dog-Apes And when a man thankes me hartily, me thinkes I haue giuen him a penie, and he renders me
 the beggerly thanks. Come sing; and you that wil not hold your tongues.

Amy. Well, Ile end the song. Sirs, couer the while, the Duke wil drinke vnder this tree; he hath bin all this day to looke you.

Iaq. And I haue bin all this day to auoid him:
 He is too disputeable for my companie:
 I thinke of as many matters as he, but I giue
 Heauen thanks, and make no boast of them.
 Come, warble, come.

Song. Altogether heere,

*who doth ambition burne,
 and loues to lue's th Saune:*

*Seeking the food he eates,
 and pleas'd with what he gets.*

*Come hither, come hither, come hither,
 Heere shall he see, &c.*

Iaq. Ile giue you a verse to this note,
 That I made yesterday in despite of my Inuention.

Amy. And Ile sing it.

Amy. Thus it goes

*If it do come to passe, that any man turne Asse:
 Leauing his wealth and ease,
 A stubborne will to please,
 Ducdame, ducdame, ducdame
 Heere shall he see, grosse fooles as be,
 And if he will come to me.*

Amy. What's that Ducdame?

Iaq. 'Tis a Greeke inuocation, to call fooles into a circle Ile go sleepe if I can if I cannot, Ile raile against all the first borne of Egypt.

Amy. And Ile go seeke the Duke,
 His banquet is prepar d.

Exeunt

Scena Sexta.

Enter Orlando, & Adam.

Adam. Deere Master, I can go no further:
 O Idie for food Heere lie I downe,
 And measure out my graue. Farwel kinde maister.

Orl. Why how now Adam? No greater heart in thee?
 Liue a little, comfort a little, cheere thy selfe a little.
 If this vncouth Forrest yeeld any thing sauage,
 I wil either be food for it, or bring it for foode to thee:
 Thy conceite is neerer death, then thy powers.
 For my sake be comfortable, hold death a while
 At the armes end: I wil heere be with thee presently,
 And if I bring thee not something to eate,
 I wil giue thee leaue to die: but if thou diest
 Before I come, thou art a mocker of my labor.
 Wel said, thou look'st cheereely,
 And Ile be with thee quickly. yet thou liest
 In the bleake ake. Come, I wil beare thee
 To some shelter, and thou shalt not die
 For lacke of a dinner,
 If there liue any thing in this Desert.
 Cheerely good Adam.

*Exeunt
 Scena*

Scena Septima.

Enter Duke Sen. & Lords, like Out-laws.

Du. Sen. I thinke he be transform'd into a beast,
For I can no where finde him, like a man.

1. Lord. My Lord, he is but euen now gone hence,
Heere was he merry, hearing of a Song.

Du. Sen. If he compact of iarres, grow Musically,
We shall haue shortly discord in the Sphaeres:
Go seeke him, tell him I would speake with him.

Enter Jaques.

1. Lord. He saues my labor by his owne approach.

Du. Sen. Why how now Monsieur, what a life is this
That your poore friends must woe your companie,
What, you looke merrily

Iaq. A Foole, a foole: I met a foole i'th Forrest,
A motley Foole (a miserable world)
As I do live by fooles, I met a foole,
Who laid him downe, and bask'd him in the Sun,
And rail'd on Lady Fortune in good termes,
In good set termes, and yet a motley foole.
Good morrow foole (quoth I) no Sir, quoth he,
Call me not foole, till heaven hath sent me fortune,
And then he drew a diall from his poake,
And looking on it, with lacke-lustre eye,
Sayed, very wisely, it is ten a clocke.
Thus we may see (quoth he) how the world waggeth:

'Tis but an houre agoe, since it was nine,
And after one houre more, 'twill be eleuen,
And so from houre to houre, we ripe, and ripe,
And then from houre to houre, we rot, and rot,
And thereby hangs a tale. When I did heare
The motley Foole, thus morall on the time,
My Lungs began to crow like Chanticleere,
That Fooles should be so deepe contemplative.
And I did laugh, sans intermission
An houre by his diall. Oh noble foole,
A worthy foole. Motley's the onely weare.

Du. Sen. What foole is this?

Iaq. O worthise Foole. One that hath bin a Courtier
And sayes, if Ladies be but yong, and faire,
They haue the gift to know it and in his braue,
Which is as drie as the remainder bisket
After a voyage. He hath strange places cram'd
With obseruation, the which he vents
In mangled formes. O that I were a foole,
I am ambitious for a motley coat.

Du. Sen. Thou shalt haue one.

Iaq. It is my onely suite,
Provided that you weed your better iudgements
Of all opinion that growes ranke in them,
That I am wise. I must haue liberty
Winthall, as large a Charter as the winde,
To blow on whom I please, for so fooles haue:
And they that are most gaul'd with my folly,
They most must laugh. And why sir must they so?
The why is plaine, as way to Parish Church:
Hee, that a Foole doth very wisely hit,
Doth very foolishly, although he smart
Seeme senselesse of the bob. It nor,
The Wife-mans folly is anathomiz'd
Euen by the squandering glances of the foole.

Inuest me in my motley: Giue me leaue
To speake my minde, and I will through and through Cleanse the foule bodie of th' infected world,
If they will patiently receiue my medicine.

Du. Sen. Fie on thee. I can tell what thou wouldst do
Iaq. What, for a Counter, would I do, but good?

Du. Sen. Most mischeuous foule sin, in chiding sin:
For thou thy selfe hast bene a Libertine,
As sensuall as the brutish sting it selfe,
And all th'imbossed fores, and headed euils,
That thou with license of free foot hast caught,
Wouldst thou disgorge in't the generall world.

Iaq. Why who cries out on pride,
That can therein saue any priuate party.
Doth it not flow as hugely as the Sea,
Till that the wearie verie meanes do ebbe,
What woman in the Citie do I name,
When that I say the City woman beares
The cost of Princes on vnworthy shoulders?
Who can come in, and say that I meane her,
When such a one as thee, such is her neighbor?
Or what is he of basest function,
That sayes his brauerie is not on my cost,
Thinking that I meane him, but therein suites
His folly to the mettle of my speech,
There then, how then, what then, let me see wherein
My tongue hath wrong'd him: if it do him right,
Then he hath wrong'd himselfe: if he be free,
why then my taxing like a wild-goose flies
Vnclamd of any man But who come here?

Enter Orlando.

Orl. Forbeare, and eate no more.

Iaq. Why I haue eate none yet.

Orl. Nor shalt not, till necessity be seru'd.

Iaq. Of what kinde should this Cocke come of?

Du. Sen. Art thou thus bolden'd man by thy distress?
Or else a rude despiser of good manners,
That in civility thou seem'st so empty?

Orl. You touch'd my veine at first, the thorny point
Of bare distresse, hath tane from me the shew
Of smooth civility: yet am I in-lane bred,
And know some nourtur: But forbeare, I say,
He dies that touches any of this fruite,
Till I, and my affaires are answered.

Iaq. And you will not be answer'd with reason,
I must dye

Du. Sen. What would you haue?
Your gentlenesse shall force, more then your force
Moue vs to gentlenesse.

Orl. I almost die for food, and let me haue it

Du. Sen. Sit downe and feed, & welcom to our table

Orl. Speake you so gently? Pardon me I pray you,
I thought that all things had bin sauage heere,
And therefore put I on the countenance
Of sterne commandment. But what ere you are
That in th's desert inaccessible,
Vnder the shade of melancholly boughes,
Loose, and neglect the creeping howes of time:
If euer you haue look'd on better dayes.
If euer beene where bells haue knell'd to Church:
If euer sat at any good mans feast:
If euer from your eye-lids wip'd a teare,
And know what 'tis to pittie, and be pittied:
Let gentlenesse my strong enforcement be,
In the which hope, I blush, and hide my Sword.

Du. S.

Du. Sen. True is it, that we haue seene better dayes,
And haue with holy bell bin knowld to Church,
And sat at good mens feasts, and wip'd our eies
Of drops, that sacred pity hath engendred:
And therefore sit you downe in gentlenessse,
And take vpon command, what helpe we haue
That to your wanting may be ministred.

Orl. Then but forbear your food a little while:
Whiles (like a Doe) I go to finde my Fawne,
And giue it food. There is an old poore man,
Who after me, hath many a weary steppe
Limpt in pure loue till he be first suffic'd,
Opprest with two weake euils, age, and hunger,
I will not touch a bit

Duke Sen. Go finde him out.
And we will nothing waste till you returne.

Orl. I thanke ye, and be blest for your good comfort

Du. Sen. Thou seest, we are not all alone vnhappye
This wide and vniuersall Theater
Presents more wofull Pageants then the Sceane
Wherein we play in

Ia. All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women, meere Players;
They haue their Exits and their Entrances,
And one man in his time plays many parts,
His Acts being seven ages At first the Infant,
Mewling, and puking in the Nurses armes
Then, the whining Schoole-boy with his Satchell
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
• unwillingly to schoole. And then the Loner,
Sighing like Furnace, with a wofull ballad
Made to his Mistresse eye-brow Then, a Soldier,
Full of strange oaths, and bearded like the Pard,
Jelous in honor, sodaine, and quicke in quarrell,
Seeking the bubble Reputation
Euen in the Canons mouth. And then, the Iustice,
In faire round belly, with good Capon lin'd,
With eyes seuer, and beard of formall cut,
Full of wise sawes, and moderne instances,
And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
Into the leane and slipper'd Pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side,
His youthfull hese • well iau'd, a world too wide,
For his shrunke shanke, and his biggemany voice,
Turning againe toward childish treble pipes,
And whistles in his sound. Last Scene of all,
That ends this strange eventfull historie,
Is second childishnesse, and meere oblivion,
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans euery thing

Enter Orlando with Alam

Du. Sen. Welcome set downe your venerable burthen, and let him feede.

Orl. I thanke you most for him.

Ad. So had you neede,
I scarce can speake to thanke you for my selfe.

Du. Sen. Welcome, fall too. I wil not trouble you,
As yet to question you about your fortunes:
Giue vs some Musicke, and good Cozen, sing.

Song

*Blow, blow, thou winter winde,
Thou art not so unkinde,
As mans ingratitude
Thy tooth is not so keene,
Because thou art not seene,
although thy breath be rude.*

*Heigh ho, sing heigh ho, vnto the Greene holly,
Most friendship, is fayning; most Loning, meere folly:
The heigh ho, the holly,
This Life is most folly.*

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter skie that dost not bight so nigh as benefitts forgot.

*Though thou the waters warpe, thy sting is not so sharpe,
as frend remembered not.

Duke Sen. If that you were the good Sir Rowlands son,
As you haue whisper'd faithfully you were,
And as mine eye doth his effigies witnesse,
Most truly limn'd, and liuing in your face,
Be truly welcome hither: I am the Duke
That lou'd your Father, the residue of your fortune,
Go to my Caue, and tell mee. Good old man,
Thou art right welcome, as thy masters is.
Support him by the arme. giue me your hand,
And let me all your fortunes vnderstand. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Duke, Lords, & Oliver.

Du. Not see him since? Sir, sir, that cannot be.
But were I not the better part made mercie,
I should not seeke an absent argument
Of my reuenge, thou present: but looke to it,
Finde out thy brother where soeuer he is,
Seeke him with Candle. bring him dead, or liuing
Within this tweluemonth, or turne thou no more
To seeke a liuing in our Territorie
Thy Lands: no all this: that thou dost call thine,
Worth seizer, do we seizer into our hands,
Till thou canst quit thee by thy brothers mouth,
Of what we thinke against thee.

Ol. Oh that your Highnesse knew my heart in this.
I neuer lou'd my brother in my life

Duke. More villaine thou Well push him out of dores
And let my officers of such a nature
Make an extort vpon his house and Lands.
Do this expediently, and turne him going. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Orlando.

Orl. Hang there my verse, in witnesse of my loue,
And thou thrice crowned Queene of night suruey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale spheare about Thy Huntresse name, that my full life doth sway.
O Rosalind, these Trees shall be my Bookes,
And in their barks my thoughts Ile character,
That euery eye, which in this Forrest lookes,
Shall see thy vertue written euery where.
Run, run Orlando, carue on euery Tree,
The faire, the chaste, and vnexpressiue sheet. Exit

Enter Corin & Clowne.

Co. And how like you this shepherds life Mr. Touchstone?
Cl.

Clo. Truly Shepheard, in respect of it selfe, it is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepherds life, it is naught. In respect that it is solitary, I like it verie well - but in respect that it is priuate, it is a very vild life. Now in respect it is in the fields, it pleaseth mee well: but in respect it is not in the Court, it is tedious. As it is a spare life (looke you) it fits my humor well: but as there is no more plentie in it, it goes much against my stomacke. Has't any Philosophie in thee shepheard?

Cor. No more, but that I know the more one sickens, the worse at ease he is: and that hee that wants money, meanes, and content, is without three good friends. That the propertie of raine is to wet, and fire to burne: That good pasture makes fat sheepe: and that a great cause of the night, is lacke of the Sunne. That hee that hath leasned no wit by Nature, nor Art, may complaine of good breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred.

Clo. Such a one is a naturall Philosopher.
Was't ever in Court, Shepheard?

Cor. No truly

Clo. Then thou art damn'd

Cor. Nay, I hope

Clo. Truly thou art damn'd, like an ill roasted Egge, all on one side.

Cor. For not being at Court? your reason.

Clo. Why, if thou neuer was't at Court, thou neuer saw'st good manners: if thou neuer saw'st good maners, then thy manners must be wicked, and wickednes is sin, and sinne is damnation. Thou art in a parlous state shepheard.

Cor. Not a whit. Tenchstone, those that are good manners at the Court, are as ridiculous in the Countrey, as the behauiour of the Countrie is most mockeable at the Court. You told me, you salute not at the Court, but you kisse your hands; that courtesie would be vncleanlie if Courtiers were shepherds.

Clo. Instance, briefly: come, instance.

Cor. Why we are still handling our Ewes, and their Fels you know are greasie

Clo. Why do not your Courtiers hands sweate? and is not the grease of a Mutton, as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallow, shallow. A better instance I say: Come.

Cor. Besides, our hands are hard

Clo. Your lips wil feele them the sooner. Shallow again. a more sounder instance, come.

Cor. And they are often tarr'd ouer, with the surgery of our sheepe: and would you haue vs kisse Tarre? The Courtiers hands are perfum'd with Ciuet.

Clo. Most shallow man. Thou wormes meate in respect of a good peece of flesh indeed. learne of the wise and perpend: Ciuet is of a baser birth then Taire, the verie vncleanly fluxe of a Cat. Mend the instance Shepheard.

Cor. You haue too Courtly a wit, for me, Ile rest

Clo. Wilt thou rest damn'd? God helpe thee. Shallow man: God make incision in thee, thou art raw

Cor. Sir, I am a true Labourer, I earne that I eate get that I weare, owe no man hate, enuie no mans happinesse. glad of other mens good content with my harme: and the greatest of my pride, is to see my Ewes graze, & my Lambes sucke.

Clo. That's another simple sinne in you, to bring the Ewes and the Rammes together, and to offer to get your liuing, by the copulation of Cattle, to be bay'd to a Bell-weather, and to betray a labe of a twelue month to a crooked-pated olde Cuckoldly Ramm, out of all reasonable match. If thou bee'st not damn'd for this, the diuell himselfe will haue no shepherds, I cannot see else how thou shouldst scape.

Cor. Heere comes young Mr. Ganimed, my new Mistresse Brother.

Enter Rosalinde

Ros. From the east to westerne Inde,

no sweet is like Rosalinde,

Her worth being mounted on the winde,
through all the world beares Rosalinde.

All the pillures fairest Linde,
are but blacke to Rosalinde.

Let no face be kept in mind,
but the faire of Rosalinde.

Clo. Ile time you so, eight yeares together; dinners, and suppers, and sleeping hours excepted: it is the right Butter-womens ranke to Market.

Ros. Out Foole

Clo. For a taste.

If a Hart doe lacke a Hinde,

Let him seeke out Rosalinde.

If the Crow will after kinde,

so be sure will Rosalinde

Wintred garments must be linde,

so must slender Rosalinde.

They that reap must sheafe and binde,

then to eare with Rosalinde

Sweetest nut, hath softest rinde,

such a nut is Rosalinde.

He that sweetest reefe will finde,

must finde Lones prick, & Rosalinde.

This is the verie false gallop of Verses, why doe you infect your selfe with them?

Ros. Peace you dull foole, I found them on a tree.

Clo. Truly the tree yeelds bad fruite.

Ros. Ile graffe it with you, and then I shall graffe it with a Medler: then it will be the earliest fruit in th' country for you. I be rotten ere you bee halfe ripe, and that's the right vertue of the Medler.

Clo. You haue said but whether wisely or no, let the Correst iudge

Enter Celia with a writing.

Ros. Peace, here comes my sister reading, stand aside

Cel. Why should this Deser bee,

for it is wrapp'd? Noe

Tongues Ile hang on euery tree, that shall euill sayings be.

Some, how briefe the Life of man runs his erring pilgrimage,

That the stretching of a span, buckles in his summe of age

Some of violated vowes,
twixt the scales of friend, and friend.

But upon the fairest bowes,
or at euery senter end;

Will I Rosalinde write,
teaching all that read, to know

The quintessence of euery sprite, heauen would in little show.

Therefore heauen Nature charg'd,

that one bodie should be fill'd
With all Graces wide enlarg'd, nature presents As thus

Helens cheekes, but not his heart, Cleopatra's Maieſtie.

*Attalanta's better part,
ſad Lucrecia's Modeſtie.*

*Thus Roſaline of many parts,
by Heauenly Synode was deus'd,
Of many faces, eyes, and hearts,
to haue the touches doeſt pri'd*

Heauen would that ſhee theſe gifts ſhould haue, and I to liue and die her ſlaine

Rof. O moſt gentle Iupiter, what tedious homilie of Louchaue you wearied your pariſhioners withall, and neuer cri'de, haue patience good people

Cel. How now backe friends Shepheard, go off a little. go with him firrah.

Clo. Come Shepheard, let vs make an honorable retreat, though not with bagge and baggage, yet with ſcrip and ſcrippage Exit.

Cel. Didſt thou heare theſe verſes?

Rof. O yes, I heard them all, and more too, for ſome of them had in them more ſeete then the Verſes would beare.

Cel. That's no matter: the feet might beare ſy verſes.

Rof. I, but the feet were lame, and could not beare themſelves without the verſe, and therefore ſtood ſlame-ly in the verſe.

Cel. But didſt thou heare without wondering, how thy name ſhould be hang'd and carued vpon .heſe trees?

Rof. I was ſeuen of the nine daies out of the wonder, before you came forlooke heere what I found on a Palme tree; I was neuer ſo berim'd ſince Pythagoras time that I was an Iriſh Rat, which I can hardly remember.

Cel. Tro you, who hath done this?

Rof. Is it a man?

Cel. And a chaine that you once wore about his neck: change you colour?

Rof. I pre'thee who?

Cel. O Lord, Lord, it is a hard matter for friends to meete; but Mountaines may bee remoou'd with Earth- quakes, and ſo encounter

Rof. Nay, but who is it?

Cel. Is it poſſible?

Rof. Nay, I pre'thee now, with moſt petitionary vehemence, tell me who it is.

Cel. O wonderfull, wonderfull, and moſt wonderfull wonderfull, and yet againe wonderfull, and after that out of all hooping

Rof. Good my complection, doſt thou think though I am capariſon'd like a man, I haue a doublet and hoſe in my diſpoſition? One inch of delay more, is a South-ſea of diſcouerie I pre'thee tell me, who is it quickly, and ſpeake apace I would thou couldſt ſtammer, that thou might'ſt powre this conceal'd man out of thy mouth, as Wine comes out of a narrow-mouth'd bottle: either too much at once, or none at all. I pre'thee take the Corke out of thy mouth, that I may drinke thy rydings.

Cel. So you may put a man in thy belly.

Rof. Is he of Gods making? What manner of man? Is his head worth a hat? Or his chin worth a beard?

Cel. Nay, he hath but a little beard.

Rof. Why God will ſend more, if the man will bee thankful. let me ſtay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.

Cel. It is yong Orlando, that tript vp the Wraſtlers heeles, and your heart, both in an inſtant.

Rof. Nay, but the diuell take mocking. ſpeake ſadde brow, and true maid

Cel. I'faith (Coz) tis he.

Rof. Orlando?

Cel. Orlando.

Rof. Alas the day, what ſhall I do with my doublet & hoſe? What did he when thou ſaw'ſt him? What ſayde he? How look'd he? Wherein went he? What makes hee heere? Did he aſke for me? Where remaines he? How parted he with thee? And when ſhalt thou ſee him againe? Answer me in one word.

Cel. You muſt borrow me Gargantuas mouth firſt: 'tis a Word too great for any mouth of this Ages ſize, to ſay I and no, to theſe particulars, is more then to answer in a Catechiſme.

Rof. But doth he know that I am in this Forreſt, and in mans apparrell? Looks he as freſhly, as he did the day he Wraſtled?

Cel. It is as eaſie to count Atomies as to reſolue the propoſitions of a Louer but take a taſte of my finding him, and reſiſt it with good obſeruance. I found him vnder a tree like a drop'd Acorne.

Rof. It may vvel be cal'd loues tree, when it droppes forth fruites.

Cel. Giue me audience, good Madam.

Rof. Proceed

Cel. There lay hee ſtretch'd along like a Wounded knight.

Rof. Though it be pittie to ſee ſuch a ſight, it vvel becomes the ground.

Cel. Cry holla, to the tongue, I prethee: it curuettes vnſeaſonably. He was furniſh'd like a Hunter.

Rof. O ominous, he comes to kill my Hart

Cel. I would ſing my ſong without a burthen, thou bring'ſt me out of tune.

Rof. Do you not know I am a woman, when I thinke, I muſt ſpeake. ſweet, ſay on.

Enter Orlando & Iaques.

Cel. You bring me out Soft, comes he not heere?

Rof. 'Tis he, ſinke by, and note him.

Iaq. I thanke you for your company, but good faith I had as lieſe haue bene my ſelfe alone.

Orl. And ſo had I but yet for faſhion ſake I thanke you too, for your ſocietie.

Iaq. God buy you, let's meet as little as we can.

Orl. I do deſire we may be better ſtrangers

Iaq. I pray you marre no more trees with Writing Loue-ſongs in their barkes

Orl. I pray you marre no moe of my verſes with reading them ill-fauouredly.

Iaq. Roſaline is your loues name? Orl. Yes, luſt.

Iaq. I do not like her name.

Orl. There was no thought of pleaſing you when ſhe was chriſten'd.

Iaq. What ſtature is ſhe of?

Orl. Luſt as high as my heart.

Iaq. You are ful of pretty answers haue you not bin acquainted with goldſmiths wives, & con'd the out of rings

Orl. Not ſo: but I answer you right painted cloath, from whence you haue ſtudied your queſtions.

Iaq. You haue a nimble wit; I thinke 'twas made of Attalanta's heeles. Will you ſitte downe with me, and wee two, will raile againſt our Miſtris the world, and all our miſerie.

Orl. I will thide no breather in the world but my ſelfe againſt against whom I know most faults.

Iaq. The worst fault you haue, is to be in loue.

Orl. 'Tis a fault I will not change, for your best vertue I am wearie of you.

Iaq. By my troth, I was seeking for a Foole, when I found you

Orl. He is drown'd in the brooke, looke but in, and you shall see him.

Iaq. There I shal see mine owne figure

Orl. Which I take to be either a foole, or a CIPHER

Iaq. Ile tarrie no longer with you, farewell good signior Loue

Orl. I am glad of your departure. Adieu good Monsieur Melancholly

Ref. I wil speake to him like a sawcie Lacky. and vnder that habit play the knaue with him, do you hear For-

Orl. Verie wel, what would you? (rester.

Ref. I pray you, what 'st a clocke?

Orl. You should aske me what time o'day: there's no clocke in the Forrest

Ref. Then there is no true Louer in the Forrest, else fighting euerie minute and groaning euerie houre would detect the lazie foot of time, is wel as a clocke

Orl. And why not the swift foote of time? Had not that bin as proper?

Ref. By no means sir, Time trauels in diuers paces, with diuers persons. Ile tel you who Time ambles withal, who Time trots withal, who Time gallops withal, and who he stands stil withal.

Orl. I prethee, who doth he trot withal?

Ref. Marry he trots hard with a yong maid, between the contract of her marriage, and the day it is solemnizd. if the interim be but a fennight, Times pace is so hard, that it seemes the length of seven years.

Orl. Who ambles Time withal?

Ref. With a Priest that lacks Latine, and a rich man that hath not the Gowt. for the one sleepest easily because he cannot study, and the other liues merrily, because he feelles no paine the one lacking the burthen of leane and wasteful Learning; the other knowing no burthen of heauie tedious penurie. These Time ambles withal

Orl. Who doth he gallop withal?

Ref. With a cheefe to the gallowes: for though hee go as softly as foot can fall, he thinks himselfe too soon there.

Orl. Who staires it stil withal?

Ref. With Lawyers in the vacation for they sleepe betweene Terme and Terme, and then they perceiue not how time moues.

Orl. Where dwell you prettie youth?

Ref. With this Shepheardesse my sister. heere in the skirts of the Forrest, like fringe vpon a petticoat.

Orl. Are you native of this place?

Ref. As the Conie that you see dwell where shee is kindled.

Orl. Your accent is something finer, then you could purchase in so remoued a dwelling.

Ref. I haue bin told so of many but indeed, an olde religious Vnckle of mine taught me to speake, who was in his youth an inland man, one that knew Courtship too well for there he fel in loue. I haue heard him read many Lectors against it, and I thanke God, I am not a Woman to be touch'd with so many giddie offences as hee hath generally tax'd their whole sex withal.

Orl. Can you remember any of the principall euils, that he laid to the charge of women?

Ref. There were none principal, they were all like one another, as halfe pence are, euerie one fault seeming monstrous, til his fellow-fault came to match it.

Orl. I prethee recount some of them

Ref. No I wil not cast away my physick, but on those that are sicke. There is a man haunts the Forrest, that abuses our yong plants with caruing Rosalinde on their barks; hangs Oades vpon Hawthornes, and Elegies on brambles; all (forsooth) defying the name of Rosalinde. If I could meet that Fancie-monger, I would giue him some good counsel, for he seemes to haue the Quotidian of Loue vpon him

Orl. I am he that is so Loue-shak'd, I pray you tel me your remedie

Ref. There is none of my Vnckles markes vpon you he taught me how to know a man in loue: in which dage of rushes, I am sure you are not prisoner.

Orl. What were his markes?

Ref. A leane cheeke, which you haue not - a blewieie and sunken, which you haue not: an vnquestionable spirit, which you haue not - a beard neglected, which you haue not (but I pardon you for that, for simply your haueing in beard, is a yonger brothers reuenew) then your hose should be vngarter'd, your bonnet vnbande'd, your sleue vnbutton'd, your shoe vnstie'd, and euerie thing about you, demonstrating a carelesse desolation but you are no such man; you are rather point deuice in your accoustrements, as louing your selfe, then seeming the Louer of any other. (I Loue.

Orl. Faire youth, I would I could make thee beleene

Ref. Me beleuee it? You may asloone make her that you Loue beleuee it, which I warrant she is apter to do, then to confesse she do: that is one of the points, in the which women stil giue the lie to their consciences. But in good sooth, are you he that hangs the verses on the Trees, wherein Rosalind is so admired?

Orl. I sweare to thee youth, by the white hand of Rosalind, I am that he, that vnfortunate he.

Ref. But are you so much in loue, as your times speak?

Orl. Neither time nor reason can expresse how much

Ref. Loue is merely a madnesse, and I tel you, deserves as wel a darke house, and a whip, as madmen do: and the reason why they are not so punish'd and cured, is that the Lunacie is so ordinarie, that the whippers are in loue too: yet I professe curing it by counsel.

Orl. Did you euer cure any so?

Ref. Yes one, and in this manner. Hee was to imagine me his Loue, his Mistis and I set him euerie day to woeme At which time would I, being but a moonish youth, greene, be effeminate, changeable, longing, and liking, proud, fantastical, apish, shallow, inconstant, full of teares, full of fumes, for euerie passion something, and for no passion truly any thing, as boyes and women are for the most part, cattle of this colour would now like him, now loath him then entertaine him, then forswear him. now weepe for him, then spit at him; that I draue my Sutor from his mad humor of loue, to a liuing humor of madnes, w was to forswear the full stream of f world, and to liue in a nooke merely Monastick and thus I cur'd him, and this way wil I take vpon mee to wash your Luer as cleane as a sound sheeps heart, that there shal not be one spot of Loue in't.

Orl. I would not be cured, youth.

Ref. I would cure you, if you would but call me Ref. - ind, and come euerie day to my Coat, and woe me.

R 3

Orl.

Orlan. Now by the faith of my lous, I will; Tel me wherētū is.

Ref. Go with me to it, and Ile shew it you and by the way, you shal tell me, where in the Forrest you lue: Wil you go?

Orl. With all my heart, good youth

Ref. Nay, you must call mee Rosalind Come lister, will you go? Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Clowne, Audrey, & Iaques:

Cl. Come apace good Audrey, I wil fetch vp your Goates, Audrey and how Audrey am I the min yet? Doth my simple feature content you?

And. Your features, I ord witrane vs what features?

Cl. I am heere with thee, and thy Goats, is the most capricious Poet honest Orl was among the Gothes.

Iaq. O knowledge ill inhabited, worse then loue in a thatch'd house.

Cl. When a mans verses cannot be vnderstood, nor a mans good wit seconded with the forward childe, vnderstanding, it strikes a man more dead then a great reckoning in a little roome truly, I would the Gods hadde made thee poeticall

And. I do not know what Poeticall is is it honest in deed and word is it a true thing?

Cl. No trulie. for the truest poetrie is the most faining, and Louers are giuen to Poetrie and what they sweare in Poetrie, may be laid as Louers, they do feigne.

And. Do you wish then that the Gods had made me Poeticall?

Clow. I do truly for thou swear'st to me thou art honest. Now if thou wert a Poet, I might haue some hope thou didst feigne

And. Would you not haue me honest?

Cl. No truly, vnlesse thou wert hard fauour'd. for honestie coupled to beautie, is to haue Honie a fawce to Sugar

Iaq. A materiall foole

And. Well, I am not faire, and therefore I pray the Gods make me honest

Cl. Truly, and to cast away honestie vppon a foule slut, were to put good meate into an vnleane dish.

And. I am not a slut, though I thanke the Goddess I am foule.

Cl. Well, praised be the Gods, for thy foulness, slutfulness may come heereafter. But be it, as it may bee, I wil marrie thee and to that end, I haue bin with Sir Oliuer Mar-text, the Vicar of the next village, who hath promiss'd to meete me in this place of the Forrest, and to couple vs

Iaq. I would faine see this meeting.

And Wel, the Gods giue vs ioy

Cl. Amen. A man may if he were of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt for heere wee haue no Temple but the wood, no assembly but horne-beasts. But what though? Courage. As hornes are odious, they are necessarie It is said, many a man knowes no end of his goods; right Many a man has good Hornes, and knows no end of them. Well, that is the dowie of his wife, 'tis none of his owne getting; hornes, euen so poore men alone:

No, no, the noblest Deere hath them as huge as the Rascal. Is the single man therefore blessed? No, as a wall'd Towne is more worthier then a village, so is the forehead of a married man, more honourable then the bare brow of a Batcheller. and by how much defence is better then no skill, by so much is a horne more precious then to want.

Enter Sir Oliuer Mar-text.

Heere comes Sir Oliuer: Sir Oliuer Mar-text you are wel met. Will you dispatch vs heere vnder this tree, or shal we go with you to your Chappell?

Ol. Is there none heere to giue the woman?

Cl. I wil not take her on giuft of any man.

Ol. Truly she must be giuen, or the marriage is not lawfull.

Iaq. Proceed, proceede. Ile giue her.

Cl. Good euen good Mr what ye call't how do you Sir, you are verie well met. goddild you for your last companie, I am verie glad to see you, euen a toy in hand heere Sir. Nay, pray be couer'd

Iaq. Wil you be married, Motley?

Cl. As the Oxe hath his bow sir, the horse his curb, and the Falcon her bels, so man hath his desires, and as Pigeons bill, so wedlocke would be nibbling

Iaq. And wil you (being a man of your breeding) be married vnder a bush like a begger? Get you to church, and haue a good Priest that can tel you what marriage is, this fellow wil but ioyne you together, as they ioyne Wainscot, then one of you wil proue a shrunke pannell, and like greene timber, warpe, warpe

Cl. I am not in the minde, but I were better to bee married of him then of another, for he is not like to marrie me wel and not being wel married, it wil be a good excuse for me heereafter, to leaue my wife.

Iaq. Goe thou with mee,

And let me counsel thee

Cl. Come sweete Audrey,

We must be married, or we must liue in baudrey: Farewel good Mr Oliuer Not Oli eet Oliuer. O braue Oliuer leane me not behind thee. But winde away, bee gone I say, I wil not to wedding with thee.

Ol. 'Tis no matter, Ne re a fantastical knaue of them all shal flout me out of my calling Exeunt

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Rosalind & Celia.

Ref. Neuer talke to me, I wil weepe.

Cel. Do I prethee, but yet haue the grace to consider, that teares do not become a man.

Ref. But haue I not cause to weepe?

Cel. As good cause as one would desire, Therefore weepe.

Ref. His very haire

Is of the dissembling colour.

Cel. Something browner then Iudasses: Marrie his kisses are Iudasses owne children

Ref. I'faith his haire is of a good colour.

Cel. An excellent colour:

Your Chessenut was euer the onely colour:

Ref. And his kissing is as ful of sanctiue, As the touch of holy bread

Cel.

Cel. Hee hath bought a paire of cast lips of Disana : a Nun of winters sisterhood kisses not more religiouslie, the very yeer of chastity is in their.

Ros. But why did hee sweare hee would come this morning, and comes not?

Cel. Nay certainly there is no truth in him.

Ros. Doe you thinke so?

Cel. Yes, I thinke he is not a pickt purse, nor a horse-stealer, but for his verity in loue, I doe thinke him as concaue as a couered goblet, or a Worme-eaten nut.

Ros. Not true in loue?

Cel. Yes, when he is in, but I thinke he is not in.

Ros. You haue heard him sweare downright he was

Cel. Was, is not is - besides, the oath of Louer is no stronger then the word of a Tapster, they are both the confirmers of false reckonings, he attends here in the forest on the Duke your father

Ros. I met the Duke yesterday, and had much question with him - he askt me of what parentage I was; I told him of as good as he, so he laugh'd and let mee goe. But what talke wee of Fathers, when there is such a man as Orlando?

Cel. O that's a braue man, hee writes braue verses, speakes braue words, sweares braue oathes, and breakes them brauely, quite trauers athwart the heart of his loue, as a puiſny Tilter, y<sup>e</sup> spurs his horse but on one side, breakes his staffe like a noble geese, but all's braue that youth mounts, and folly guides. who comes heere?

Enter Corin

Corin. Mistresse and Master, you haue oft enquired After the Shepheard that complain'd of loue, Who you saw sitting by me on the Turph, Praising the proud disdainfull Shepherdesse That was his Mistresse.

Cel. Well and what of him?

Cor. If you will see a pageant truly plaid Betweene the pale complexion of true Loue, And the red glowe of scorne and proud disdain, Goe hence a little, and I shall conduct you If you will marke it.

Ros. O come, let vs remoue, The sight of Louers feedeth those in loue: Bring vs to this sight, and you shall say Ile proue a busie actor in their play.

Exeunt

Scena Quinta.

Enter Siluius and Phebe.

Sil. Sweet Phebe doe not scorne me, do not Phebe Say that you loue me not, but say not so In bitterness; the common executioner Whose heart th' accustom'd sight of death makes hard Falls not the axe vpon the humbled neck, But first begs pardon - will you sterner be Then he that dies and liues by bloody drops?

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Corin.

Phe. I would not be thy executioner I flye thee, for I would not inure thee. Thou tellst me there is murder in mine eye, 'Tis pretty sure, and very probable;

That eyes that are the frailest, and softest things, Who shut their coward gates on atomies, Should be called tyrants, butchers, murderers. Now I doe frowne on thee with all my heart, And if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee: Now counterfeit to swoound, why now fall downe, Or if thou canst not, oh for shame, for shame, Lye not, to say mine eyes are murderers Now shew the wound mine eye hath made in thee, Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains Some scarre of it. Leane vpon a rush The Cicatrice and capable impressure Thy palme some moment keeps but now mine eyes Which I haue darted at thee, hurt thee not, No! I am sure there is no force in eyes That can doe hurt

Sil. O deere Phebe,

If euer (as that euer may be neere) You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancie, Then shall you know the wounds inuisible That Loues keene arrows make

Phe. But till that time

Come not thou neere me and when that time comes Afflict me with thy mockes, pitty me not, As till that time I shall not pitty thee

Ros. And why I pray you? who might be your mother That you insult, exult, and all at once Ouer the wretched? what though you hau no beauty As by my faith, I see no more in you Then without Candle may goe daie to bed Must you be therefore proud and pittilesse? Why what meanes this? why do you looke on me? I see no more in you then in the ordinary Of Natures sale-worke? 'ods my little life, I thinke she meanes to tangle my ties too. No faith proud Mistresse, hope not after it, 'Tis not your inkie browes, your blacke silke haire, Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream That can entame my spirits to your worship. You foolish Shepheard, wherefore do you follow her Like foggy South, puffing with winde and raine, You are a thousand times a properer man Then she a woman. 'Tis such fooles as you That makes the world full of ill-faour'd children: 'Tis not her glasse, but you that flatters her, And out of you she sees her selfe more proper Then any of her lineaments can shew her But Mistris, know your selfe, downe on your knees And thanke heauen, fasting, for a good mans loue. For I must tell you friendly in your eare, Sell when you can, you are not for all markets. Cry the man mercy, loue him, take his offer, Foule is most foule, being foule to be a scoffer. So take her to thee Shepheard, fare you well

Phe. Sweet youth, I pray you chide a yere together, I had rather here you chide, then this man wooe

Ros. Hees false in loue with your foulnesse, & shee'll Fall in loue with my anger If it be so, as fast As she answers thee with frowning lookes, ile saue Her with better words: why looke you so vpon me?

Phe. For no ill will I beare you.

Ros. I pray you do not fall in loue with mee, For I am falser then vowes made in wine: Besides, I like you not: if you will know my house, 'Tis at the tuft of Oliuer, here hard by: Will you goe Sister? Shepheard ply her hard.

Come

Come Sister: Shepherdesse, looke on him better
And be not proud, though all the world could see,
None could be so abus'd in sight as hee
Come, to our flocke,

Exit.

Phē. Dead Shepheard, now I find thy saw of might,
Who euer lov'd, that lov'd not at first sight?

Sil. Sweet Phēbe.

Phē. Hah: what saist thou Silvius?

Sil. Sweet Phēbe pittie me.

Phē. Why I am sorry for thee gentle Silvius.

Sil. Where euer sorrow is, reliefe would be:
If you doe sorrow at my griefe in loue,
By giuing loue your sorrow, and my griefe
Were both exterrin'd.

Phē. Thou hast my loue; is not that neighbourly?

Sil. I would haue you

Phē. Why that were couetousnesse.

Silvius: the time was, that I hated thee;
And yet it is not, that I beare thee loue,
But since that thou canst talke of loue so well,
Thy company, which erst was irkesome to me
I will endure; and Ile employ thee too:
But doe not looke for further recompence
Then thine owne gladnesse, that thou art employd.

Sil. So holy, and so perfect is my loue,
And I in such a pouerty of grace,
That I shall thinke it a most plenteous crop
To glean the broken eares after the man
That the maine haruest reapes loose now and then
A scattred smile, and that Ile lue vpon. (while?)

Phē. Knowst thou the youth that spoke to mee yere-

Sil. Not very well, but I haue met him oft,
And he hath bought the Cottage and the bounds
That the old Carlet once was Master of.

Phē. Thinke not I loue him, though I ask for him,
Tis but a peeuish boy, yet he talkes well,
But what care I for words? yet words do well
When he that speaks them pleases those that heare:
It is a pretty youth, not very prettie,
But sure hee's proud, and yet his pride becomes him;
Hee'll make a proper man the best thing in him
Is his complexion: and faster then his tongue
Did make offence, his eye did heale it vp:
He is not very tall, yet for his yeeres hee's tall:
His leg is but so fo, and yet 'tis well.
There was a pretty fednesse in his lip,

A little ripper, and more lustie red
Then that mixt in his cheek: 'twas iust the difference
Betwixt the constant red, and mingled Damaske.

There be some women Silvius, had they markt him
In parcells as I did, would haue gone neere
To fall in loue with him: but for my part
I loue him not, nor hate him not: and yet
Haue more cause to hate him then to loue him,
For what had he to doe to chide at me?

He said mine eyes were black, and my haire blacke,

And now I am remembred, scorn'd at me:

I maruell why I answer'd not againe,

But that's all one: omittance is no quittance:

Ile write to him a very ranting Letter,

And thou shalt beare it, wilt thou Silvius?

Sil. Phēbe, with all my heart.

Phē. Ile write it strait:

The matter's in my head, and in my heart,
I will be bitter with him, and passing short;

Goe with me Silvius.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Rosalind, and Celia, and Iaques.

Iaq. I prethee, pretty youth, let me better acquainted with thee.

Ros. They say you are a melancholly fellow.

Iaq. I am so: I doe loue it better then laughing.

Ros. Those that are in extremity of either, are abhominable fellowes, and betray themselues to euery moderne censure, worse then drunkards.

Iaq. Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing

Ros. Why then 'tis good to be a poete.

Iaq. I haue neither the Schollers melancholy, which is emulation: nor the Musicians, which is fantastical; nor the Courtiers, which is proud: nor the Souldiers, which is ambitious: nor the Lawiers, which is politick; nor the Ladies, which is nice. nor the Louers, which is all these: but it is a melancholy of mine owne, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and indeed the sundrie contemplation of my trauells, in which by often rumination, wraps me in a most humorous sadnesse.

Ros. A Traueller: by my faith you haue great reason to be sad: I feare you haue sold your owne Lands, to see other mens; then to haue seene much, and to haue nothing, is to haue rich eyes and poore hands.

Iaq. Yes, I haue gain'd my experience

Enter Orlando.

Ros. And your experience makes you sad. I had rather haue a foole to make me merrie, then experience to make me sad, and to trauaile for it too.

Orl. Good day, and happinesse, deere Rosalind

Iaq. Nay then God buy you, and you talke in blanke verse.

Ros. Farewell Mounseieur Traueller: looke you lipe, and weare strange suites; disable all the benefits of your owne Countrie. be out of loue with your naturitie, and almost chide God for making you that countenance you are; or I will scarce thinke you haue swam in a Gundello. Why how now Orlando, where haue you bin all this while? you a lover? and you serue me such another trick, neuer come in my sight more.

Orl. My faire Rosalind, I come within an houre of my promise.

Ros. Breake an houres promise in loue? hee that will diuide a minute into a thousand parts, and breake but a part of the thousand part of a minute in the affairs of loue, it may be said of him that Cupid hath clapt him oth' shoulder, but Ile warrant him heart hole.

Orl. Pardon me deere Rosalind.

Ros. Nay, and you be so tardie, come no more in my sight, I had as lief be woo'd of a Snail.

Orl. Of a Snail?

Ros. I, of a Snail: for though he comes slowly, hee carries his house on his head; a better ioynture I thinke then you make a woman: besides, he brings his destinie with him

Orl. What's that?

Ros. Why hornes: & such as you are faine to be beholding to your wiues for; but he comes armed in his fortune, and prevents the slander of his wife.

Orl. Vertue

Orl. Vertue is no horne-maker . and my Rosalind is vertuous.

Ros. And I am your Rosalind.

Col. It pleases him to call you so: but he hath a Rosalind of a better leere then you.

Ros. Come, wooe mee: for now I am in a holy-day humor, and like enough to consent. What would you say to me now, and I were your verie, verie Rosalind?

Orl. I would kisse before I spoke

Ros. Nay, you were better speake first, and when you were grauel'd, for lacke of matter, you might take occasion to kisse verie good Orators when they are out, they will spit, and for louers, lacking (God swarne vs) matter, the cleanliest shift is to kisse.

Orl. How if the kisse be denide?

Ros. Then she puts you to entreatie, and there begins new matter.

Orl. Who could be out, being before his beloued Mistress?

Ros. Marrie that should you if I were your Mistress, or I should thinke my honestie ranker then my wit.

Orl. What, of my suite?

Ros. Not out of your apparrell, and yet out of your suite.

Am not I your Rosalind?

Orl. I take some ioy to say you are, because I would batakling of her

Ros. Well, in her person, I say I will not haue you.

Orl. Then in mine owne person, I die

Ros. No faith, die by Attorney the poore world is almost six thousand yeeres old, and in all this time there was not anie man died in his owne person (videlicet) in a loue cause Troilus had his braines dash'd out with a Grecian club, yet he did what hee could to die before, and he is one of the patternes of loue Leander, he would haue liu'd manie a faire yeere though Hero had turn'd Nun, if it had not bin for a hot Midfomer-night, for (good youth) he went but forth to wash him in the Hellespont, and being taken with the crampe, was drown'd, and the foolish Chronoclers of that age, found it was Hero of Cestos But these are all lies, men haue died from time to time, and wormes haue eaten them, but not for loue.

Orl. I would not haue my right Rosalind of this mind, for I protest her frowne might kill me

Ros. By this hand, it will not kill a sinner but come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more comings-on disposition. and aske me what you will, I will grant it.

Orl. Then loue me Rosalind.

Ros. Yes faith will I, fridaies and saterdaies, and all.

Orl. And wilt thou haue me?

Ros. I, and twentie such.

Orl. What fairest thou?

Ros. Are you not good?

Orl. I hope so

Rosalind. Why then, can one desire so much of a good thing. Come sister, you shall be the Priest, and marrie vs I glue me your hand Orlando: What doe you say sister?

Orl. Pray thee marrie vs.

Col. I cannot say the words.

Ros. You must begin, will you Orlando.

Col. Goe too: wil you Orlando haue to wife this Rosalind?

Orl. I will,

Ros. I, but when?

Orl. Why now, as fast as she can marrie vs.

Ros. Then you must say, I take thee Rosalind for wife.

Orl. I take thee Rosalind for wife.

Ros. I might aske you for your Commission, But I doe take thee Orlando for my husband. there's a girle goes before the Priest, and certainly a Womans thought runs before her actions

Orl. So do all thoughts, they are wing'd.

Ros. Now tell me how long you would haue her, after you haue posselt her?

Orl. For euer, and a day.

Ros. Say a day, without the euer no, no Orlando, men are Aprill when they woe, December when they wed. Maides are May when they are maides, but the sky changes when they are wiues. I will bee more icalous of thee, then a Barbary cocke-pidgeon ouer his hen, more clamorous then a Parrat against raine, more new-fangled then an ape, more giddy in my desires, then a monkey: I will weepe for nothing, like Diana in the Fountaine, & I wil do that when you are dispos'd to be merry. I will laugh like a Hyen, and that when thou art inclin'd to sleepe

Orl. But will my Rosalind doe so?

Ros. By my life, she will doe as I doe.

Orl. O but she is wife.

Ros. Or else shee could not haue the wit to doe this. the wiser, the waywarder make the doores vpon a Womans wit, and it will out at the casement. That that, and 'twill out at the key-hole. stop that, 'twill flie with the smoake out at the chimney

Orl. A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say, wit whether wil't?

Ros. Nay, you might keepe that checke for it, till you met your wiues wit going to your neighbours bed.

Orl. And what wit could wit haue, to excuse that?

Rosa. Marry to say, she came to lecke you there you shall neuer take her without her answer, vnlesse you take her without her tongue. O that woman that cannot make her fault her husbands occasion, let her neuer nurse her childe her selfe, for she will breed it like a foole

Orl. For these two houres Rosalind, I wil leaue thee

Ros. Alas, deere loue, I cannot lacke thee two houres,

Orl. I must attend the Duke at dinner, by two a clock I will be with thee againe.

Ros. I, goe your waies, goe your waies. I knew what you would proue, my friends told mee as much, and I thought no lesse that flattering tongue of yours wonne me 'tis but one cast away, and so come death. two o'clockes is your howre.

Orl. I, sweet Rosalind.

Ros. By my troth, and in good earnest, and so God mend mee, and by all pretty oathes that are not dangerous, if you breake one iot of your promise, or come one minute behinde your howre, I will thinke you the most pathetically, breake-promise, and the most hollow louer and the most vnworthy of her you call Rosalind, that may bee chosen out of the grosse band of the vnfaithfull: therefore beware my censure, and keep your promise.

Orl. With no lesse religion, then if thou wert indeed my Rosalind: I so adieu!

Ros. Well, Tame the olde Iustice that examines all such offenders, and let little try: adieu! Exit.

Col. You haue simply misad our sex in your foue-prate.

prate : we must haue your doublet and hose pluckt ouer your head, and shew the world what the bird hath done to her owne nest.

Ros. O coz,coz,coz my pretty little coz, that thou didst know how many fathome deepe I am in loue : but it cannot bee sounded my affection hath an vnknowne bottome,like the Bay of Portugall.

Cel. Or rather bottomlesse, that as fast as you poure affection in, it runs out.

Ros. No, that same wicked Bastard of Venus, that was begot of thought, concei'd of spleene, and borne of madnesse, that blinde rascally boy, that abuses euery ones eyes, because his owne are out, let him bee iudge, how deepe I am in loue. He tell thee Aliena, I cannot be out of the sight of Orlando. He goe finde a shadow, and sigh till he come.

Cel. And he sleepe

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Iaques and Lords, Forresters.

Iaq. Which is he that killed the Deare?

Lord. Sir, it was I.

Iaq. Let's present him to the Duke like a Romane Conquerour, and it would doe well to set the Deares horns vpon his head, for a branch of victory, haue you no song Forrester for this purpose?

Lord. Yes Sir.

Iaq. Sing it: 'tis no matter how it bee in tune, so it make noyse enough.

Musicke, Song

What shall he haue that kild the Deare?

His Leather skin, and hornes to weare

Then sing him home, the rest shall beare this burthen;

Take thou no scorn to weare the horne,

It was a crest ere thou wast borne,

Thy fathers father wore it,

And thy father bore it,

The horne, the horne, the lusty horne,

Is not a thing to laugh to scorne.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Rosalind and Celis.

Ros. How say you now, is it not past two a clock? And heere much Orlando.

Cel. I warrant you, with pure loue, & troubled brain,

Enter Siluius.

He hath tane his bow and arrowes, and is gone forth To sleepe looke who comes heere

Sil. My errand is to you, faire youth, My gentle Phebe, did bid me giue you this. I know not the contents, but as I guesse By the sterne brow, and waspish action Which she did vse, as she was writing of it, It beares an angry reure; pardon me, I am but as a guiltlesse messenger.

Ros. Patience her selfe would startle at this letter,

And play the swaggerer, beare this, beare all: Shee saies I am not faire, that I lacke manners, She calls me proud, and that she could not loue me Were man as rare as Phenix: 'od's my will, Her loue is not the Hare that I doe hunt, Why writes she so to me? well Shepheard, well, This is a Letter of your owne deuice.

Sil. No, I protest, I know not the contents, Phebe did write it.

Ros. Come, come, you are a foole, And turn'd into the extremity of loue. I saw her hand, she has a leatherne hand, A freestone coloured hand. I verily did thinke That her old gloues were on, but 'twas her hands: She has a huswifes hand, but that's no matter. I fry she neuer did inuent this letter, This is a mans inuention, and his hand.

Sil. Sure it is hers.

Ros. Why, tis a boysterous and a cruell stile, A stile for challengers why, she defies me, Like Turke to Christian womens gentle braine Could not drop forth such giant rude inuention, Such Ethiop words, blacker in their effect Then in their countenance will you heare the letter?

Sil. So please you, for I neuer heard it yet: Yet heard too much of Phebes crueltie

Ros. She Phebes me marke how the tyrant writes.

Read. Art thou god, to Shepheard turn'd?

That a maidens heart hath burn'd

Can a womans raile thus?

Sil. Call you this railing?

Ros. Read Why, thy gadhead laid a part, Warst thou with a womans heart?

Did you euer heare such railing?

Whiles the eye of man did wooe me,

That could do no vengeance to me.

Meaning me a beast

If the scorne of your bright eies

Hane power to raise such loue in mine,

Alacke, in me, what strange effect

Would they worke in milde aspect?

Whiles you chid me, I did loue,

How then might your prayers moue?

He that brings this loue to thee,

Little knowes this Loue in me

And by him seale up thy minde,

Whether that thy youth and kinde

Will the faithfull offer take

Of me, and all that I can make,

Or else by him my loue denie,

And then he studie how to die.

Sil. Call you this chiding?

Cel. Alas poore Shepheard

Ros. Doe you pittie him? No, he deserues no pittie: wilt thou loue such a woman? what to make thee an instrument, and play false straines vpon thee? not to be endur'd. Well, goe your way to her, (for I see Loue hath made thee a tame snake) and say this to her; That if she loue me, I charge her to loue thee. if she will not, I will neuer haue her, vnlesse thou intreat for her if you bee a true louer hence, and not a word; for here comes more company.

Exit. Sil.

Enter Oliuer.

know)

Oliu. Good morrow, faire ones: pray you, (if you Where in the Purlews of this Forrest, stands

A

A sheep-coat, fence'd about with Oliue-trees.

Cel. West of this place, down in the neighbor bottom
The ranke of Oziers, by the murmuring streame
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place:
But at this howre, the house doth keepe it selfe,
There's none within

Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue,
Then should I know you by description,
Such garments, and such yeeres: the boy is faire,
Of small fauour, and bestowes himselfe
Like a ripe sister: the woman low
And browner then her brother. are not you
The owner of the house I did enquire for?

Cel. It is no boast, being ask'd, to say we ate.

Oli. Orlando doth commend him to you both,
And to that youth hee calls his Rosalind,
He sends this bloudy napkin; are you he?

Ros. I am. what must we vnderstand by this?

Oli. Some of my shame, if you will know of me
What man I am, and how, and why, and where
This handkercher was stain'd.

Cel. I pray you tell it.

Oli. When last the yong Orlando parted from you,
He left a promise to returne againe
Within an houre, and pacing through the Forrest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancie,
Loe vvhath befell. he threw his eye aside,
And marke vvhath object did present it selfe
Vnder an old Oake, whose bows were moss'd with age
And high top, bald with drie antiquitie:
A wretched ragged man, ore-growne with haire
Lay sleeping on his back; about his necke
A Greene and guiled snake had wreath'd it selfe,
Who with her head, nimble in threats approach'd
The opening of his mouth: but sodainly
Seeing Orlando, it vnlink'd it selfe,
And with indented glides, did slip away
Into a bush, vnder which bushes shade
A Lyonnesse, with vdders all drawne drie,
Lay cowering head on ground, with catlike watch
When that the sleeping man should stirre, for 'tis
The royall disposition of that beast
To prey on nothing, that doth seeme as dead:
This scene, Orlando did approach the man,
And found it was his brother, his elder brother

Cel. O I haue heard him speake of that same brother,
And he did render him the most vnnaturall
That liu'd amongst men.

Oli. And well he might so doe,
For well I know he was vnnaturall

Ros. But to Orlando did he leaue him there
Food to the suck'd and hungry Lyonnesse?

Oli. Twice did he turne his backe, and purpos'd so:
But kindnesse, nobler euer then reuenge,
And Nature stronger then his iust occasion,
Made him giue battell to the Lyonnesse:
Who quickly fell before him, in which hurtling
From miserable slumber I awaked.

Cel. Are you his brother?

Ros. Was't you he rescu'd?

Cel. Was't you that did so oft contriue to kill him?

Oli. 'Twas I. but 'tis not I: I doe not shame
To tell you what I was, since my conuersion

So sweetly tastes, being the thing I am

Ros. But for the bloody napkin?

Oli. By and by:

When from the first to last betwixt vs two,
Teares our recountments had most kindly bath'd,
As how I came into that Desert place.

I briefe, he led me to the gentle Duke.

Who gaue me fresh aray, and entertainment,

Committing me vnto my brothers loue,

Who led me instantly vnto his Court;

There stript himselfe, and heere vpon his arme

The Lyonnesse had torne some flesh away,

Which all this while had bled; and now he fainted,

And cride in fainting vpon Rosalinde.

Briefe, I recouer'd him, bound vp his wound,

And after some small space, being strong at heart,

He sent me hither, stranger as I am

To tell this story, that you might excuse

His broken promise, and to giue this napkin

Died in this blood, vnto the Shepheard youth,

That he in sport doth call his Rosalind.

Cel. Why how now Ganymed, sweet Ganymed.

Oli. Many will swoone when they do look on blood.

Cel. There is more in it, Cosen Ganymed.

Oli. Looke, he recouers.

Ros. I would I were at home

Cel. Wee'll lead you thither.

I pray you will you take him by the arme.

Oli. Be of good cheere youth: you a man?

You lacke a mans heart.

Ros. I doe so, I confesse it:

Ah, sirra, a body would thinke this was well counterfeited,
I pray you tell your brother how well I counterfeited
heigh-ho

Oli. This was not counterfeit, there is too great testimony in your complexion that it was a passion of earnest

Ros. Counterfeit, I assure you

Oli. Well then, take a good heart, and counterfeit to be a man

Ros. So I doe: but yfaith, I should haue beene a woman
by right

Cel. Come, you looke paler and paler. pray you draw homewards: good sir, goe with vs.

Oli. That will I: for I must beare answere backe

How you excuse my brother, Rosalind.

Ros. I shall deuise something: but I pray you commend my counterfeiting to him: will you goe?

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Clowne and Awdrie.

Clow. We shall finde a time Awdrie, patience gentle Awdrie.

Awd. Faith the Priest was good enough, for all the olde gentlemen saying.

Clow. A most wicked Sir Oliuer, Awdrie, a most vile
Mar-text. But Awdrie, there is a youth heere in the Forrest layes claime to you

Awd. I, I know who 'tis: he hath no interest in mee in the world: here comes the man you meane.

Enter William.

Clow. It is meat and drinke to me to see a Clowne, by my

my troth, we that haue good wits, haue much to answer for: we shall be flouting. we cannot hold.

Will. Good eu'n Audrey.

And. God ye good eu'n William.

Will. And good eu'n to you Sir.

Clo. Good eu'n gentle friend. Couer thy head, couer thy head Nay prethee bee couer'd How olde are you Friend?

Will. Fiue and twentie Sir.

Clo. A ripe age. Is thy name William?

Will. William, sir.

Clo. A faue name Was't borne i th Forrest heere?

Will. I sir, I thank God.

Clo. Thank God: A good answer:

Art rich?

Will. Faith sir, so, so

Clo. So, so, is good, very good, very excel'ent good.
and yet it is not, it is but so, so:
Art thou wise?

Will. I sir, I haue a prettie wit.

Clo. Why, thou saist well I do now remember a saying. The Fooles doth thinke he is wise, but the witeman knowes himselfe to be a Foole. The Herthen Philosopher, when he had a desire to cate a Grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth, meaning thereby, that Grapes were made to cate, and lippes to open
You do loue this maid?

Will. I do sir

Clo. Giue me your hand. Art thou Learned?

Will. No sir.

Clo. Then learne this of me, To haue, s to haue For it is a figure in Rhetoricke, that drink being pour'd out of a cup into a glasse, by filling the one, doth empty the other. For all your Wretches do consent, that ipse is hee.
now you are not ipse, for I am he.

Will. Which he sir?

Clo. He sir, that must marrie this woman. Therefore you Clowne, abandon which is in the vulgar, leaue the society. which in the boorish, is companie of this se-male, which in the common, is woman. which to gether, is, abandon the society of this Female, or Clowne thou perishest: or to thy better vnderstanding, dyest, or (to wit) I kill thee, make thee way, translate thy selfe into death, thy libertie into bondage I will deale n' boy-son with thee, or in ballinado, or in Steele I will bandy with thee in fashion, I will ore-run thee with police: I will kill thee a hundred and fifty waues, therefore tremble and depart.

And. Do good William.

Will. God rest you merry sir

Enter Corin

Exit

Cor. Our Master and Mistresse seekes you: come away, away.
Clo. Trip Audrey, trip Audrey, I attend,
I attend.

Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Orlando & Oliver.

Orl. Is't possible, that on so little acquaintance you should like her? that, but seeing, you should loue her?

And louing wooe and wooing, she should graunt? And will you perseuer to enioy her?
Ol. Neither call the giddynesse of it in question; the pouertie of her, the small acquaintance, my sodaine wooing, nor sodaine consenting: but say with mee, I loue
Aliena. say with her, that she loues mee; consent with both, that we may enioy each other: it shall be to your good: for my fathers house, and all the reuennew, that was old Sir Rowlands will I estate vpon you, and heere liue and die a Shepherd

Enter Rosalind

Orl. You haue my consent
Let your Wedding be to morrow thither will I
I wite the Duke, and all's contented followers
Go you, and prepare Aliena, for looke you,
Heere comes my Rosalinde.
Ros. God saue you brother.
Ol. And you faire sister.
Ros. Oh my deere Orlando, how it greeues me to see thee weare thy heart in a scarfe
Orl. It is my arme.
Ros. I thought thy heart had beene wounded with the clawes of a Lion

Orl. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a Lady:
Ros. Did your brother tell you how I courtierfeyted to found, when he shew'd me your handkercher?

Orl. I, and greater wonders the: that.

Ros. O, I know where you are: nay, tis true. there was neuer any thing so sodaine, but the sight of two Rammes, and Cesars I hiraformall bragge of I came, saw, and ouercome. For your brother, and my sister, no sooner met, but they look'd no so'ner look'd, but they lou'd, no sooner lou'd, but they sigh'd, no sooner sigh'd but they ask'd one another the reason. no sooner knew the reason, but they sought the remedie. and in these degrees, haue they made a purre of flares to marriage, which they will climbe incontinent, or else bee incontinent before marriage, they are in the verie wrath of loue, and they will together. Clubbes cannot part them

Orl. They shall be married to morrow. . . and I will bid the Duke to the Nuptiall But O, how a bitter a thing
it is, to looke into happines through another mans eyes by so much the more shall I to morrow be at the height of heart heauynesse. by how much I shal thinke my brother happie, in hauing what he wishes for.

Ros. Why then to morrow, I cannot serue your turne for Rosalind?

Orl. I can liue no longer by thinking.
Ros. I will wearie you then no longer with idle talk-king. Know of me then (for now I speake to some purpose) that I know you are a Gentleman of good conceit
I speake not this, that you should beare a good opinion of my knowledge: in somuch (I say) I know you are neither do I labor for a greater esteeme then may in some little measure draw a beleefe from you, to do your selfe good, and not to grace me. Beleeue then, if you please, that I can do strange things. I haue since I was three yeare old conuers't with a Magitian, most profound in his Art, and yet not damnable. If you do loue Rosalinde so neere the hart, as your gesture cries it out when your brother marries Aliena, shall you marrie her I know into what straights of Fortune she is driuen, and it is not impossible to me, if it appeare not inconuenient to you, to set her before your eyes to morrow, humane as she is, and without any danger.

Orl. Speak'th thou in sober meanings?

Ref. By my life I do, which I tender dearly, though I say I am a Magitian. Therefore put you in your best array, bid your friends: for if you will be married to morrow, you shall. and to Rosalind if you will.

Enter Silvius & Phebe.

Looke, here comes a Lover of mine, and a louet of hers.

Phe. Yorth, you haue done me much vngentlenesse, To shew the letter that I writ to you

Ref. I care not if I haue: it is my studie To seeme despightfull and vngentle to you: you are there followed by a faithful shepheard, Looke vpon him, loue him: he worships you.

Phe. Good shepheard, tell this youth what 'tis to loue

Sil. It is to be all made of sighes and teares,

And so am I for Phebe

Phe. And I for Ganimed.

Orl. And I for Rosalind.

Ref. And I for no woman

Sil. It is to be all made of faith and seruice,

And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And I for Ganimed.

Orl. And I for Rosalind.

Ref. And I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of fantasie,

All made of passion, and all made of withes

All adoration, dutie, and obseruance,

All humblenesse, all patience, and impatience,

All puritie, all triall, all obseruance

And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And so am I for Ganimed.

Orl. And so am I for Rosalind.

Ref. And so am I for no woman

Phe. If this be so, why blame you me to loue you?

Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to loue you?

Orl. If this be so, why blame you me to loue you?

Ref. Why do you speake too, Why blame you mee to loue you

Orl. To her, that is not here, nor doth not heare

Ref. Pray you no more of this, 'tis like the howling of Irish Wolues against the Moone. I will helpe you if I can. I would loue you if I could. To morrow meet me altogether. I wil marrie you, if euer I marrie Woman, and Ile be married to morrow. I will satisfie you, if euer I satisfid man, and you shall be married to morrow. I wil content you, if what pleases you contents you, and you shal be married to morrow: As you loue Rosalind meet, as you loue Phebe meet, and as I loue no woman, Ile meet. (so fare you wel) I haue left you commands.

Sil. Ile not faile, if I lue.

Phe. Nor I.

Orl. Nor I

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Clowne and Audrey.

Cl. To morrow is the ioyfull day Audrey, to morrow will we be married.

Aud. I do desire it with all my heart. and I hope it is no dishonour to desire, to desire to be a woman of y world?

Heere come two of the banish'd Dukes Pages.

Enter two Pages.

1. Pa. Wel met honest Gentleman.

Cl. By my troth well met: come, sit, sit, and a song.

2. Pa. We are for you, sit i'th middle.

1. Pa. Shal we clap into't roundly, without hauking, or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the onely prologues to a bad voice.

2. Pa. I faith, y'faith, and both in a tune like two gypsies on a horse.

Song.

*It was a Louer, and his lasse,
With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
That o're the greene come fild did passe,
In the spring time, the onely pretty rang time,
When Birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding.
Sweet Louers loue the spring,
And therefore take the present time,
With a hey, & a ho, and a hey nonino,
For loue is crown'd with the prime,
In spring time, &c.*

*Betweene the acres of the Rye,
With a hey, and a ho, & a hey nonino -
These prettie Country folks would lie,
In spring time, &c.*

*This Carroll they began that morn,
With a hey and a ho, & a hey nonino:
How that a life was but a Flower,
In spring time, &c.*

Cl. Truly yong Gentlemen, though there vvas no great matter in the dutie, yet y note was very vntunable

1. Pa. you are deceiud Sir, we kept tyme, we lost not our time.

Cl. By my troth yes: I count it but timelost to heare such a foolish song. God buy you, and God mend your voices. Come Audrey.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Jaques, Orlando, Oliver, Celio.

Du Sen. Dost thou beleeue Orlando, that the boy Can do all this that he hath promised?

Orl. I sometimes do beleeue, and sometimes do not, As those that feare they hope, and know they feare.

Enter Rosalinde, Silvius, & Phebe.

Ref. Patience once more, whiles our compact is vrg'd. You say, if I bring in your Rosalinde, You will bestow her on Orlando heere?

Du Se. That would I, had I kingdoms to give with hir.

Ref. And you say you wil haue her, when I bring hir?

Orl. That would I, were I of all kingdoms King.

Ref. You say, you'l marrie me, if I be willing.

Phe. That will I, should I die the houre after

Ref. But if you do refuse to marrie me,

You'l give your selfe to this most faithfull Shepheard.

Phe. So is the bargain.

Ref. You say that you'l haue Phebe if she will

Sil. Thought to haue her and death, were both one thing.

S

Ros. I haue promis'd to make all this matter euen - Keepe you your word, O Duke, to giue your daughter,
 You yours Orlando, to receiue his daughter.
 Keepe you your word Phoebe, that you'll marrie me,
 Or else refusing me to wed this sheheard
 Keepe your word Siluius, that you'll marrie her
 If she refuse me, and from hence I go

To make these doubts all euen Exit Ros. and Celia

Du. Sen. I do remember in this sheheard boy,
 Some liuely touches of my daughters fauour

Orl. My Lord, the first time that I euer saw him,
 Me thought he was a brother to your daughter
 But my good Lord, this Boy is Forrest borne,
 And hath bin tutor'd in the rudiments
 Of many desperate studies, by his vnckle,
 Whom he reports to be a great Magitian.

Enter Clowne and Audrey.

Obscured in the circle of this Forrest

Iaq. There is sure another flood toward, and these couples are comming to the Arke Here comes a payre of verie strange beasts, which in all tongues, are call'd Fooles

Clo. Salutation and greeting to you all

Iaq. Good my Lord, bid him welcome. This is the Motley-minded Gentleman, that I haue so often met in the Forrest. he hath bin a Courtier he swears.

Clo. If any man doubt that, let him put mee to my purgation, I haue trod a measure, I haue flattered a Lady,
 I haue bin politicke with my friend, smooth with mine
 euemie, I haue vndone three Tailors, I haue had foure quarrels, and like to haue fought one.

Iaq. And how was that tane vp?

Clo. Faith we met, and found the quarrel was vpon
 the seuenth cause.

Iaq. How seuenth cause? Good my Lord, like this fellow

Du. Se. I like him very well.

Clo. God ild you sir, I desire you of the like. I presse in heere sir, amongst the rest of the Country copulatiues to sweare, and to forswear, according as marriage binds and blood breakes a poore virgin sir, an il fauor'd thing sir, but mine owne, a poore humour of mine sir, to take that that no man else will vich honestie dwels like a miser sir, in a poore house, as your Pearle in your foule oyster.

Du. Se. By my faith, he is very swift and sententious

Clo. According to the fooles bolt sir, and such dulcet diseases

Iaq. But for the seuenth cause. How did you finde the quarrell on the seuenth cause?

Clo. Vpon a lye, seuen times remoued. (beare your bodie more seeming Audrey) as thus sir. I did dislike the cut of a certaine Courtiers beard. he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, hee was in the minde it was. this is call'd the retort courteous. If I sent him word againe, it was not well cut, he wold send me word he cut it to please himselfe this is call'd the quip modest.
 If againe, it was not well cut, he disabled my iudgment:
 this is call'd the reply churlish. If againe it was not well cut, he would answer I spake not true. this is call'd the reproofe valiant. If againe, it was not well cut, he wold say, I lie. this is call'd the counter-checke quarrellsome.
 and so to lye circumstantiall, and the lye direct.

Iaq. And how oft did you say his beard was not well cut?

Clo. I durst go no further then the lye circumstantiall:

nor he durst not giue me the lye direct. and so wee measur'd swords, and parted

Iaq. Can you nominate in order now, the degrees of the lye.

Clo. O sir, we quarrel in print, by the booke. as you haue bookes for good manners. I will name you the degrees. The first, the Retort courteous: the second, the Quip-modest. the third, the reply Churlish: the fourth,
 the Reproofe valiant: the fift, the Counterchecke quarrelsome the sixt, the Lye with circumstance: the seau-enth, the Lye direct. all these you may auoyd, but the Lye direct. and you may auoide that too, with an If. I knew when seuen Iustices could not take vp a Quarrell, but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an If, as if you saide so, then I saide so:
 and they shooke hands, and swore brothers. Your If, is the onely peace-maker: much vertue in if

Iaq. Is not this a rare fellow my Lord? He's as good at any thing, and yet a foole.

Du. Se. He vles his folly like a stalking-horse, and vnder the presentation of that he shoots his wit.

Enter Hymen, Rosalind, and Celia.

Still Musick.

Hymen. Then is there mirth in heauen,
 When earthly things made eauen atone together.

*Good Duke receiue thy daughter,
 Hymen from heauen brought her,
 Tea brought her hether*

*That thou mightst ioine his hand with his,
 Whose heart within his bosome is.*

Ros. To you I giue my selfe, for I am yours.

To you I giue my selfe, for I am yours.

Du. Se. If there be truch in sight, you are my daughter.

Orl. If there be truch in sight, you are my Rosalind.

Phoebe If sight & shape be true, why then my loue adieu

Ros. Ile haue no Father, if you be not he.

Ile haue no Husband, if you be not he Nor ne're wed woman, if you be not shee.

Hy. Peace hoa I barre confusion,

'Tis I must make conclusion
 Of these most strange euent.

Here's eight that must take hands,

To ioine in Hymens bands,

If truch holds true contents.

You and you, no crosse shall part;

You and you, are hart in hart.

You, to his loue must accord,

Or haue a Woman to your I ord.

You and you, are sure together,

As the Winter to fowle Weather:

Whiles a Wedlocke Hymne we sing,

Feede your selues with questioning.

That reason, wonder may diminish

How thus we met, and these things finish.

Song

*Wedding is great Iunos crowne,
 O blessed bond of boord and bride*

'Tis Hymen peoples euery towne,

High wedlock then be honored:

Honor, high honor and renowne

To Hymen, God of euery Towne.

Du. Sr. O my deere Neece, welcome thou art to me,
 Euen daughter welcome, in no lesse degree.

Phoe.

Pho I wil not eate my word, now thou art mine,
Thy faith, my fancie to thee doth combine.

Enter Second Brother.

2. Bro Let me haue audience for a word or two.

I am the second sonne of old Sir Rowland,
That bring these tidings to this faire assembly.
Duke Frederick hearing how that euerie day,
Men of great worth resorted to this forrest,
Addrest a mightie power, which were an hoste
In his owne conduct, purposely to take
His brother heere, and put him to the sword
And to the skirts of this wilde Wood he came,
Where, meeting with an old Religious man,
After some question with him, was conuerted
Both from his enterprize, and from the world.
His crowne bequeathing to his banish'd Brother,
And all their Lands restor'd to him againe
That were with him e'ild' This to be true,
I do engage my life.

Du. Se Welcome yong man:

Thou offer it fairely to thy brothers wedding.
To one his lands with-held, and to the other
A land it selfe at large, a potent Dukedome
First, in this Forrest, let vs do those ends
That heere were well begun, and wel begot.
And after, euery of this happie number
That haue endur'd shrew'd daies, and nights with vs,
Shal share the good of our returned fortune,
According to the measure of their states.
Meane time, forget this new-falne dignitie,
And fall into our Rusticke Reuelrie.
Play Musicke, and you Brides and Bride-groomes all,
With measure heap'd in ioy, to'th Measures fall.

Iaq. Sir, by your patience if I heard you rightly,
The Duke hath put on a Religious life,
And throwne into neglect the pompous Court.

2. Bro. He hath.

Iaq. To him will I out of these conuertites,
There is much matter to be heard, and learn'd:
you to your former Honor, I bequeath your patience, and your vertue, well deserues it.
you to a loue, that your true faith doth merit.
you to your land, and loue, and great allies.
you to a long, and well-deserued bed
And you to wrangling, for thy louing voyage
Is but for two moneths, which all'd So to your pleasures,
I am for other, then for dancing measures

Du. Se. Stay, Iaq. stay.

Iaq. To see no pastime, I what you would haue,
He stay to know, at your abandon'd caue

Du. Se. Proceed, proceed: we'l begin these rights,
As we do trust, they'tend in true delight.

Ref. It is not the fashion, to see the Ladie the Epilogue but it is no more vnhandsome, then to see the Lord the Prologue If it be true, that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true, that a good play needes no Epilogue.
Yet to good wine they do vse good bushes and good playes proue the better by the helpe of good Epilogues
What a case am I in then, that am neither a good Epilogue, nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalfe of a good play? I am not furnish'd like a Begger, therefore to begge will not become mee My way is to conuere you, and He begun with the Women I charge you (O women) for the loue you beare to men, to like as much of this Play, as please you And I charge you (O men) for the loue you beare to women (as I perceiue by, your simpling, none of you hates them) that betweene you, and the women, the play may please. If I were a Woman, I would kisse as many of you as had beards that pleas'd me, complexions that lik'd me, and breaths that I defi'de not And I am sure as many as haue good beards, or good faces, or sweet breiths, will for my kind offer, when I make cur'tsie, bid me farewell.

FINIS.

THE Taming of the Shrew.

Actus primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Begger and Hostes, Christophero Sly.

Begger

BLe pheeze you infaith.

Host. A paire of stockes you rogue.

Beg. Yare a baggage, the Slyes are no Rogues. Looke in the Chronicles, we came in with Richard Conqueror, therefore Pancas pallabrus, let the world slide - Sessia.

Host. You will not pay for the glassees you haue burst?

Beg. No, nor a deniere. go by S Inonime, goeto thy cold bed, and warme thee.

Host. I know my remedie, I must go fetch the Head-borough.

Beg. Third, or fourth, or fift Borough, Ile answer him by Law. Ile not budge an inch boy Let him come, and kindly.

Falles asleepe.

Winde hornes. Enter a Lord from hunting, with his traine

Lo. Huntsman I charge thee, tender wel my hounds, Brach Meriman, the poore Curre is imboist, And couple Clowder with the deepe-mouth'd brach, Saw'ft thou not boy how Siluer made it good At the hedge corner, in the couldest fault, I would not loose the dogge for twentie pound.

Huntf. Why Belman is as good as he my Lord, He cried vpon it at the meereft losse, And twice to day pick'd out the dullest sent, Trust me, I take him for the better dogge.

Lord. Thou art a Foole, if Eccho were as fleet, I would esteeme him worth a dozen such But sup them well, and looke vnto them all, To morrow I intend to hunt againe.

Huntf. I will my Lord

Lord. What's heere? One dead, or drunke? See doth he breath?

2 Hun. He breath's my Lord. Were he not warm'd with Ale, this were a bed but cold to sleep so soundly.

Lord. Oh monstrous beast, how like a swine he lyes. Grim death, how soule and loathsome is thine image: Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man What thinke you, if he were conuey'd to bed, Wrap'd in sweet cloathes Rings put vpon his fingers: A most delicious banquet by his bed, And braue attendants nee'd him when he wakes, Would not the begger then forget himselfe?

1 Hun. Beleeue me Lord, I thinke he cannot choofe.

2 H. It would seem strange vnto him when he wak'd.

Lord. Euen as a flatter'ing dreame, or worthless fante.

Then take him vp, and manage well the rest: Carrie him gently to my fairest Chamber, And hang it round with all my vnton pictures. Balme his soule head in warme distilled waters, And burne sweet Wood to make the Lodging sweete: Procure me Musicke readie when he vvakes, So make a dulcet and a heavenly sound. And if he chance to speake, be readie straigh (And with a lowe submissiue reuerence) Say, what is it your Honor vvil command: Let one attend him vvith a siluer Bason Full of Rose-water, and bestrew'd with Flowers, Another beare the Ewer: the third a Diaper, And say wilt please your Lordship coole your hands. Some one be readie with a costly suite, And aske him what apparel he will weare. Another tell him of his Hounds and Horse, And that his Ladie mournes at his disease, Perswade him that he hath bin Lunaticke, And when he sayes he is, say that he dreames, For he is nothing but a mightie Lord: This do, and do it kindly, gentle sir, It wil be pastime passing excellent, If it be husbanded with modestie

1 Huntf. My Lord I warrant you we wil play our part As he shall thinke by our true diligence He is no lesse then what we say he is.

Lord. Take him vp gently, and to bed with him, And each one to his office when he wakes.

Sound trumpets.

Sirrah, go see what Trumpet 'tis that sounds, Belike some Noble Gentleman that meanes (Trauelling some journey) to repose him heere

Enter Servingman.

How now? who is it?

Ser. An't please your Honor, Players That offer seruice to your Lordship.

Enter Players.

Lord. Bid them come neere: Now fellowes, you are welcome.

Players. We thanke your Honor

Lord. Do you intend to stay with me to night?

2 Player. So please your Lordshippe to accept our dutie.

Lord. With all my heart. This fellow I remember, Since once he plaide a Farmers eldest sonne, 'Twas where you woo'd the Gentlewoman so well: I haue forgot your name: but sure that part

Was

Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform'd.

Sincklo I thinke 'twas Soto that your honor meates

Lord. Tis verie true, thou didst it excellent :

Well you are come to me in happie times;

The rather for I haue some sport in hand,

Wherein your cunning can assist me much.

There is a Lord will heare you play to night;

But I am doubtfull of your modesties,

Least (ouer-seeing of his odde behaviour,

For yet his honor neuer heard a play)

You breake into some merrie passion,

And so offend him : for I tell you sir,

If you should smile, he growes impatient.

Flas. Feare not my Lord, we can contain our selues,

Were he the veniest anticke in the world.

Lord. Go sirra, take them to the Butterie,

And giue them friendly welcome euerie one,

Let them want nothing that my house affords

Exit one with the Players.

Sirra go you to Bartholmew my Page,

And see him dress'd in all suites like a Ladie :

That done, conduct him to the drunkards chamber,

And call him Madam, do him obeisance :

Tell him from me (as he will win my loue)

He beare himselfe with honourable action,

Such as he hath obseru'd in noble Ladies

Vnto their Lords, by them accomplished,

Such dutie to the drunkard let him do.

With soft lowe tongue, and lowly curtesie,

And say : What is't your Honor will command,

Wherein your Ladie, and your humble wife,

May shew her dutie, and make knowne her loue.

And then with kinde embracements, tempting kisses,

And with declining head into his bosome

Bid him shed teares, as being ouer-joyed

To see her noble Lord restor'd to health,

Who for this seuen yeares hath esteemed him

No better then a poore and loathsome begger :

And if the boy haue not a womans guift

To raine a shower of commanded teares,

An Onion wil do well for such a shift,

Which in a Napkin (being close conuey'd)

Shall in despatch enforce a waterie e

See this dispatch'd with all the hast thou canst,

Anon Ile giue thee more instructions

Exit a servingman.

I know the boy will wel vsurpe the grace,

Voice, gate, and action of a Gentlewoman :

I long to heare him call the drunkard husband,

And how my men will stay themselves from laughter,

When they do homage to this simple peasant,

Ile in to counsell them haply my presence

May well abate the ouer-merrie spleene,

Which otherwise would grow into extreames.

Enter also the drunkard with attendants, some with apparel,

Basen and Emer, & other apparutenances, & Lord.

Beg. For Gods sake a pot of small Ale

1 Ser. Wilt please your Lord drink a cup of sacke ?

2 Ser. Wilt please your Honor taste of these Conserues ?

3 Ser. What raiment wil your honor weare to day.

Beg. I am Christopher Sly, call not mee Honour nor Lordship. I ne're drank sacke in my life; and if you giue me any Conserues, giue me conserues of Beeset; nere ask me what raiment Ile weare, for I haue no more doub-lers then hackes ; no more stockings then legges nor no more shooes then feet, nay sometime more feete then shooes, or such shooes as my toes looke through the ouer-leather.

Lord. Heauen cease this idle humor in your Honor.

Oh that a mightie man of such descent,

Of such possessions, and so high esteeme

Should be infused with so foule a spirit.

Beg. What would you make me mad? Am not I Chris- topher Sly, old Sies sonne of Burton-heath, by byrth a Pedler, by education a Cardmaker, by transmutation a Beare-herd, and now by present profession a Tinker.
Aske Marrion Hacker the fat Alewife of Wincot, if shee know me not. If she say I am not xiiii.d. on the score for sheere Ale, score me vp for the lying knaue an Christen dome. What I am not bestraught : here's —

3 Man Oh this it is that makes your Ladie mourne.

2 Mar. Oh this is it that makes your seruants droop.

Lord. Hence comes it, that your kindred shuns your

Oh Noble Lord, bethinke thee of thy birth,

Call home thy ancient thoughts from banishment,

And banish hence these abiect lowlie dreames :

Looke how thy seruants do attend on thee,

Each in his office readie at thy becke.

Wilt thou haue Musicke? Harke Apollo plaies, Banck

And twentie caged Nightingales do sing.

Or wilt thou sleepe? Wee'l haue thee to a Couch,

Softer and sweeter then the lustfull bed

On purpose trim'd vp for Semiramis.

Say thou wilt walke. we wil bestrow the ground.

Or wilt thou ride? Thy horses shal be trap'd,

Their harnesse studded all with Gold and Pearle

Dost thou loue hawking? Thou hast hawkes will soare

Above the morning Larke. Or wilt thou hunt,

Thy hounds shall make the Welkin answer them

And fetch shrill ecchoes from the hollow earth.

And how she was beguiled and surpriz'd,

As luelie painted, as the deede was done.

Scratching her legs, that one shal sweare she bleeds,

And at that sight thal sad Apollo weepe,

So workmanlike the blood and teares are drawne.

Thou hast a Ladie farre more Beautifull,

Then any woman in this waiting age.

Like enuious fouds ore-run her lovely face,

She was the fairest creature in the world,

And yet shee is inferiour to none.

Beg. Am I a Lord, and haue I such a Ladie ?

Or do I dreame? Or haue I dream'd till now?

I do not sleepe I see, I heare, I speake.

I smel sweet sauours, and I feel soft things :

Vpon my life I am a Lord in deede,

And not a Tinker, nor Christopher Sly.

Well, bring our Ladie hither to our sight,

And once againe a pot o'th smallest Ale.

Man. Wilt please your mightinesse to wash your hands.

Oh how we joy to see your wit reitor d,
Oh that once more you knew but what you are
These fifteene yeeres you haue bin in a dreame
Or when you wak'd; so wak'd as if you slept.

Beg. These fifteene yeeres, by my fay, a goodly nap,
But did I neuer speake of all that tithe

1. Man. Oh yes my Lord, but verie idle woros,
For though you lay heere in this goodlie chamber,
Yet would you say ye were beate[n] out of doore,
And traile vpon the Hostesse of the house,
And say you would present her at the Leete,
Because she brought stone-Jugs; and no seal'd quarts.
Sometimes you would call out for Cicely Hacker

Beg. I, the womans maide of the house.

3. man. Why is you know no house, nor no such maide
Nor no such men as you haue reckon'd vp,
As Stephen She, and old Iohn Naps of Greece,
And Peter Tuxph, and Henry Pimpernell,
And twentie more such names and men as these,
Which neuer were, nor no man euer saw

Beg. Now Lord be thanked for my good amends.

All. Amen.

Enter Lady with Attendants

Beg. I thanke thee, thou shalt not loose by it

Lady. How fares my noble Lord?

Beg. Marrie I fare well, for heere is cheere enough.
Where is my wife?

La. Heere noble Lord, what is thy will with her?

Beg. Art you my wife, and wilt not cal me husband?
My men should call me Lord, I am your good-man.

La. My husband and my Lord, my Lord and husband
I am your wife in all obedience.

Beg. I know it well, what must I call her?

Lord. Madam

Beg. Alas Madam, or Ione Madam?

Lord. Madam, and nothing else, so Lords cal Ladies

Beg. Madams wife, they say that I haue dream'd,
And slept about some fifteene yeare or more

Lady. I, and the time seeme's thirty vnto me,
Being all this time abandon'd from your bed.

Beg. 'Tis much, seruants leaue me and her alone
Madam vndresse you, and come now to bed

La. Thrice noble Lord, let me intreat of you

To pardon me yet for a night or two
Or if not so, vntill the Sun be set.

For your Physitians haue expressly charg'd,
In perill to incurre your former malady,

That I should yet absent me from your bed
I hope this reason stands for my excuse

Beg. I, it stands so that I may hardly tarry so long
But I would be loth to fall into my dreames againe. I wil therefore tarrie in despite of the flash & the blood

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Your Honors Players hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleasant Comedie,
For so your doctors hold it very meete,
Seeing too much sadnesse hath congeal'd your blood,
And melancholly is the Nurse of frenzie,
Therefore they thought it good you heare a play,
And frame your minde to mirth and merriment,
Which barres thousand harmes, and lengthens life

Beg. Marrie I will let them play, it is not a Comon-tie, a Christmas gambold, or a tumbling trick?

Lady. No my good Lord, it is more pleasing stuffe.

Beg. What household stuffe?

Lady. It is a kinde of history

Beg. Well, we'll see't.

Come Madam wife sit by my side,
And let the world slip, we shall nere be vnder

Flourish. Enter Lucentio, and his man Tranio.

Luc. Tranio, since for the great desire I had
To see faire Padua, nurserie of Arts,
I am arriv'd for fruitfull Lumbardie,
The pleasant garden of great Italy,
And by my fathers loue and leaue am arm'd
With his good will, and thy good companie.
My trustie seruant well approv'd in all,
Heere let vs breath, and haply institute
A course of Learning, and ingenious studies.
Pisa renowned for graue Citizens
Gau me my being, and my father first
A Merchant of great Trafficke through the world:
Vincenzio's come of the Bentivoly,
Vincenzio's sonne, brough vp in Florence,
It shall become to serue all hopes conceiu'd
To decke his fortune with his vertuous deedes.
And therefore Tranio, for the time I studie,
Vertue and that part of Philosophie
Will I applie, that treats of happinesse,
By vertue specially to be archieu'd.
Tell me thy munde, for I haue Pisa left,
And am to Padua come, as he that leaues
A shallow plash, to plunge him in the deepe,
And with facietie seekes to quench his thirst.

Tra. Alc Pardonato, gentle master mine-
I am in all affected as your selfe,
Glad that you thus continue your resolute,
To sucke the sweets of sweete Philosophie,
Onely (good master) while we do admire
This vertue, and this morall discipline,
I let's be no Stoickes, nor no stockes I pray,
Or so deuote to Aristotles checkes
As Ouid, be an out-cast quite abiu'd
Balke Lodgicke with acquaintance that you haue,
And practise Rhetoricke in your common talke,
Musicke and Poesie vs, to quicken you,
The Mathematickes, and the Metaphysickes
Fall to them as you finde your stomacke serues you
No profit growes, where is no pleasure tane
In brieft sit, studie what you most affect.

Luc. Gramercies Tranio, well dost thou aduise,
If Biondello thou wert come ashore,
We could at once put vs in readinesse,
And take a Lodging fit to entertaine
Such friends (as time) in Padua shall beget.
But stay a while, what companie is this?

Tra. Master some shew to welcome vs to Towne.

Enter Baptista with his two daughters, Katerina & Bianca, Gremio a Pantelowne, Hortensio sister to Bianca.

Lucen. Tranio, stand by

Bap. Gentlemen, importune me no farther,
For how I firmly am resolu'd you know:
That is, not to bestow my yongest daughter,
Before I haue a husband for the elder:
If either of you both loue Katherina,

Because

Because I know you well, and loue you well,
Leaue shall you haue to court her at your pleasure.

Gre To carther rather. She's to rough for mee,
There, there Hortensio, will you any Wife?

Kate, I pray you fir, is it your will
To make a stale of me amongst these mates?

Hor. Mates maid, how meane you that?
No mates for you,
Vnlesse you were of gentler milder mould.

Kate I'faith fir, you shall neuer neede to feare,
I-wis it is not halfe way to her heart
But if it were, doubt not, her care should be,
To combe your noddle with a three-legg'd stoole,
And paint your face, and vse you like a foole.

Hor. From all such diuels, good Lord deliuer vs
Gre, And me too, good Lord.

Tra Husht master, heres some good pastime toward,
That wench is starke mad, or wonderfull froward.

Lucen But in the others silence do I see,
Maids milde behaviour and sobrietie,
Peace Tranio.

Tra. Well said Mr. mum, and gaze your till
Bap. Gentlemen, that I may soone make good

What I haue said, Bianca get you in,
And let it not displease thee good Bianca,
For I will loue thee nere the lesse my girl

Kate. A pretty peate, it is best put finger in the eye, and she knew why.

Bian. Sister content you, in my discontent.
Sir, to your pleasure humbly I subscribe.
My bookes and instruments shall be my companie,
On them to looke, and practise by my selfe

Luc. Harke Tranio, thou maist heare Minerua speak.

Hor. Signior Baptista, will you be so strange,
Sorrow am I that our good will effects
Bianca's griefe.

Gre. Why will you mew her vp (Signior Baptista) for this fiend of hell,
And make her beare the pennance of her tongue.

Bap. Gentlemen content ye I am resould:
Go in Bianca.

And for I know she taketh most delight
In Musike, Instruments, and Poetry,
Schoolemasters will I keepe within my house,
Fit to instruct her youth If you Hortensio,
Or signior Gremio you know any such,
Preferre them hither: for to cunning men,
I will be very kinde and liberall,
To mine owne children, in good bringing vp,
And so farewell. Katherina you may stay,
For I haue more to commune with Bianca Exit.

Kate Why, and I trust I may go too, may I not?
What shall I be appointed houres, as though (Belike) I knew not what to take,
And what to leaue? Ha. Exit

Gre. You may go to the duels dam - your guits are so good here; none will holde you Their loue is not so great Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fast it faileth out Our cakes dough on both sides.
Farewell: yet for the loue I beare my sweet Bianca, if I can by any means light on a fit man to teach her that wherein she delights, I will wish him to her father.

Hor. So will I signior Gremio. but a word I pray:
Though the nature of our quarrell yet neuer brook'd parle, know now vpon aduice; it toucheth vs both, that we may yet againe haue access to our faire Mistress, and be happie riuals in Bianca's loue, to labour and effect

one thing specially.

Gre. What's that I pray?

Hor. Marrie fir to get a husband for her Sister;

Gre. A husband - a duell.

Hor. I say a husband

Gre I say, a duell: Think it thou Hortensio, though her father be verie rich, any man is so verie a foole to be married to hell?

Hor. Tush Gremio: though it passe your patience & mine to endure her lowd alarums, why man there bee good fellows in the world, and a man could light on them, would take her with all faults, and money enough.

Gre I cannot tell: but I had as lief take her dowrie with this condition, To be whipt at the hie cross the next morning

Hor. Faith (as you say) there's small choise in rotten apples but come, since this bar in law maketh vs friends, it shall be so farre forth friendly maintain'd; till by helping Baptistas eldest daughter to a husband, wee see his yongest free for a husband, and then haue too refresh:
Sweet Bianca, happy man be his dole - hee that rundes fastest, gets the Ring. How say you signior Gremio?

Grem. I am agreed, and would I had giuen him the best horse in Padua to begin his woiing that would thoroughly wooe her, wed her, and bed her, and ridde the house of her. Come on

Exeunt ambo Manet Tranio and Lucentio

Tra I pray fir tel me, is it possible
That loue should of a sodaine take such hold

Luc. Oh Tranio, till I found it to be true,
I neuer thought it possible or likely.

But see, while idely I stood looking on,
I found the effect of Loue in idleness,

And now in plainnesse do confesse to thee
That art to me as secret and as deepe

As Anna to the Queene of Carthage was:
Tranio I burne, I pine, I perish Tranio,

If I atchieue not this yong modest gyrl:
Counsaile me Tranio, for I know thou canst.

Assist me Tranio, for I know thou wilt.

Tra. Master, it is no time to chide you now.
Affection is not rated from the heart.

If loue haue touch'd you, naught remains but so,
Redime te captam quam queas minimo,

Luc Gramercies Lad - Go forward, this contents
The rest wil comfort, for thy counsels sound.

Tra Master, you look'd so longly on the maide
Perhaps you mark'd not what's the pith of all.

Luc Oh yes, I saw sweet beaurie in her face,
Such as the daughter of Agchor had,

That made great Ioue to humble him to her hand,
When with his knees he kist the Cretan stond

Tra Saw you no more? Mark'd you not how his sister
Began to scold, and raise vp such a storme,

That mortal eares might hardly indure the din.

Luc Tranio, I saw her corral lips to moue,
And with her breath she did perfume the ayre,

Sacred and sweet was all I saw in her.

Tra Nay, then 'tis time to stirre him frō his trance.
I pray awake fir if you loue the Maide,

Bend thoughts and wits to atcheuee her. Thus it stands;
Her elder sister is so curst and shrew'd,
That til the Father rid his hands of her,
Master, your Loue must liue a maide at hope,

And therefore has he closely mō'd her vp,
Because

Because she will not be annoy'd with suiters.

Luc. Ah Tranio, what a cruell Fathers he.
But art thou not aduis'd, he tooke some care
To get her cunning Schoolemasters to instruct her.

Tra. I marry am I sir, and now 'tis plotted.

Luc. I haue it Tranio.

Tra. Master, for my hand,
Both our iunc-tions meet and iumpe in one.

Luc. Tell me thine first

Tra. You will be schoole-master,
And vnder take the teaching of the maid:
That's your deuice.

Luc. It is. May it be done?

Tra. Not possible for who shall beare your part,
And be in Padua heere Vincentio's sonne,
Keepe house, and ply his booke, welcome his friends,
Visit his Countermen, and banquet them?

Luc. Bassio, content thee: for I haue it full
We haue not yet bin seene in any house,
Nor can we be distinguish'd by our faces,
For man or master then it followes thus;
Thou shalt be master, Tranio in my sted:
Keepe house, and port, and seruants, as I should,
I will some other be, some Florentine,
Some Napopolitan, or meaner man of Fisa.
'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so. Tranio a once
Vncase thee take my Conlord hat and cloake,
When Biondello comes, he waites on thee,
But I will charme him first to keepe his tongue.

Tra. So had you neede
In breefe Sir, sith it your pleasure is,
And I am tyed to be obedient,
For so your father charg'd me at our parting:
Be seruiceable to my sonne (quoth he)
Although I thinke 'twas in another sence,
I am content to bee Lucentio,
Because so well I loue Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio be so, because Lucentio lo'es,
And let me be a slave, r'atcheue that maide,
Whose sodaine sight hath thral'd my wounded eye.

Enter Biondello.

Heere comes the rogue. Sirra, where haue you bin?

Bion. Where haue I beene? Nay how now, where are you? Master, ha's my fellow Tranio stolne your cloathes, or you stolne his, or both? Pray what's the newes?

Luc. Sirra come hither, 'tis no time to iest,
And therefore frame your manners to the time
Your fellow Tranio heere to save my life.
Puts my apparrell, and my count'nance on,
And I for my escape haue put on his.
For in a quarrell since I came a shore,
I kill'd a man, and feare I was descried:
Waite you on him, I charge you, as becomes:
While I make way from hence to saue my life:
You vnderstand me?

Bion. I sir, ne're a whit.

Luc. And not a lot of Tranio in your mouth,
Tranio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Bion. The better for him, would I were so too.

Tra. So could I: faith boy, to haue the next with after, that Lucentio indeede had Baptistas yongest daughter. But sirra, not for my sake, but your masters, I ad-uise you vse your manners discretely in all kind of companies: When I am alone, why then I am Tranio but in all places else, you master Lucentio.

Luc. Tranio let's go!

One thing more rests, that thy selfe execute,
To make one among these wooers: if thou ask me why,
Sufficieth my reasons are both good and waighy.

I. Man. My Lord you nod, you do not minde the play

Beg. Yes by Saint Anne do I, a good matter surely:
Comes there any more of it?

Lady. My Lord, 'tis but begun

Beg. 'Tis a verie excellent peece of worke, Madame Ladie. would 'twere done. They sit and mark.

Enter Petruchio, and his man Grumio.

Petr Verona, for a while I take my leaue,
To see my friends in Padua; but of all
My best beloued and approved friend
Hortensio & I trow this is his house:
Heere sirra Grumio, knocke I say.

Grumio. Knocke sir? whom should I knocke? Is there any man ha's rebus'd your worship?

Petr. Villaine I say, knocke me heere soundly

Grumio. Knocke you heere sir? Why sir, what am I sir, that I should knocke you heere sir.

Petr. Villaine I say, knocke me at this gate,
And rap me well, or Ile knocke your knaues pate.

Grumio. My Ma' is growne quarrelsome:
I should knocke you first,

And then I know after who comes by the worst.

Petr. Will it not be?

Faith sirrah, and you'll not knocke, Ile ring it,
Ile trie how you can Sol, Fa, and sing it.

He rings him by the eares

Grumio. Helpe mistis helpe, my master is mad.

Petr. Now knocke when I bid you. sirrah villaine

Enter Hortensio

Hor. How now, what's the matter? My olde friend
Grumio, and my good friend Petruchio? How do you all at Verona?

Petr. Signior Hortensio, come you to part the fray?
Contutus le ore bene trobato, may I say.

Hor. Alla nostra casa bene uenuto molto honorata signior mio Petruchio

Rise Grumio we, we will compound this quarrell

Grumio. Noy 'tis no matter sir, what he leges in Latine
If this be not a lawfull cause for me to leaue his seruice, looke you sir He bid me knocke him, & rap him soundly sir Well, was it fit for a seruant to vse his master so, being perhaps (for ought I see) two and thirty, a peepe out? Whom would to God I had well knockt at first, then had not Grumio, come by the worst.

Petr. A sencelesse villaine: good Hortensio,

I bad the rascall knocke vpon your gate,
And could not get him for my heart to do it

Grumio. Knocke at the gate? O heauens: spake you not these words plaine? Sirra, Knocke me heere: rappeme heere knocke me well, and knocke me soundly? And come you now with knocking at the gate?

Petr. Sirra be gone, or talke not I aduise you.

Hor. Petruchio patience, I am Grumio's pledge:
Why this a heauie chance twixt him and you,
Your ancient trustie pleasant seruant Grumio:
And tell me now (sweet friend) what happie gale
Blowes you to Padua heere, from old Verona?

Petr. Such wind as scatters yongmen throgħ y world,

To

To seeke their fortunes farther then at home,
Where small experience growes but in a few.
Signior Hortensio, thus it stands with me,
Antonio my father is deceast,
And I haue thrust my selfe into this maze,
Happily to wive and thrive, as best I may.
Crownes in my purse I haue, and goods at home,
And so am come abroad to see the world

Hor. Petruchio, shall I then comperoundly to thee,
And with thee to a shrew'd ill-fauour'd wife?
Thou'dst thanke me but a little for my counsell
And yet Ile promise thee she shall be rich,
And verie rich; but thou'rt too much my friend,
And Ile not with thee to her,

Petr. Signior Hortensio, 'twixt such friends as wee,
Few words suffice: and therefore, if thou know
One rich enough to be Petruchio's wife
(As wealth is burthen of my woiing dance)
Be she as foule as was Florentine Loue,
As old as Sibell, and as curst and shrow'd
As Socrates Zentippe, or a worse
She moues me not, or not remoues at least Affections edge in me. Were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriaticke seas
I come to wive it wealthily in Padua:
If wealthily, then happily in Padua.

Grm. Nay looke you sir, hee tels you flatly what his minde is. why giue him Gold enough, and marrie him to a Puppet or an Aglet babie, or an old trot with ne're a tooth in her head, though she haue as manie diseases as two and fiftie horses. Why nothing comes amisse, so monie comes withall.

Hor. Petruchio, since we are steep thus farre in,
I will continue that I broach'd in iest,
I can Petruchio helpe thee to a wife
With wealth enough, and yong and beautilous,
Brought vp as best becomes a Gentlewoman.
Her onely fault, and that is faults enough,
Is, that she is intollerable curst,
And shrow'd, and froward, so beyond all measure,
That were my state farre worser then it is,
I would not wed her for a mine of Gold

Petr. Hortensio peace: thou knowst not golds effect,
Tell me her fathers name, and 'tis enough
For I will boord her, though she chide as loud
As thunder, when the clouds in Autumne cracke

Hor. Her father is Baptista Minola,
An affable and courteous Gentleman,
Her name is Katherine Minola,
Renow'd in Padua for her scolding tongue.

Petr. I know her father, though I know not her,
And he knew my deceased father well:
I wil not sleepe Hortensio til I see her,
And therefore let me be thus bold with you,
To giue you ouer at this first encounter,
Vnlesse you wil accompanie me thither

Grm. I pray you Sir let him go while the humor lasts.
Amy word, and she knew him as well as I do, she would thinke scolding, would doe little good vpon him. Shee may perhaps call him halfe a score Knaues, or so: Why that's nothing; and he begin once, hee'll raile in his rope trickes. Ile tell you what sir, and she stand him but a litle, he wil throw a figure in her face, and so disfigure hir with it, that shee shall haue no more eyes to see withall
then a Cat: you know him not sir.

Hor. Tarry Petruchio, I must go with thee,

For in Baptista keepe my treasure is:
He hath the Iewel of my life in hold,
His yongest daughter, beautiful Bianca,
And her with-holds from me. Other more
Suters to her, and riualls in my Loue.
Supposing it a thing impossible,
For those defects I haue before rehearst,
That euer Katherine wil be woo'd:
Therefore this order hath Baptista tane,
That none shall haue access to Bianca,
Til Katherine the Curst, haue got a husband,

Grm. Katherine the curst,
A title for a maide, of all titles the worst.

Hor. Now shal my friend Petruchio do me grace,
And offer me disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoole-master
Well scene in Musicke, to instruct Bianca,
That so I may by this deuice at least
Haue leaue and leisure to make loue to her,
And vn suspected court her by her selfe.

Enter Grmio and Lucentio disguised.

Grm. Heere's no knauerie. See, to beguile the oldefolkes, how the yong folkes lay their heads together.
Master, master, looke about you: Who goes there? ha

Hor. Peace Grmio, it is the riuall of my Loue,
Petruchio stand by a while

Grmio. A proper stripling, and an amorous.

Grmio. O very well, I haue perus'd the note:
Hearke you sir, Ile haue them verie fairely bound,
All bookes of Loue, see that at any hand,
And see you reade no other Lectures to her:
You vnderstand me.ouer and beside Signior Baptista's liberalitie,
Ile mend it with a Largeesse. Take your paper too,
And let me haue them verie wel perfum'd;
For she is sweeter then perfume it selfe
To whom they go to. what wil you reade to her.

Lnc. What ere I reade to her, Ile pleade for you,
As for my patron, stand you so assur'd,
As firmly as your selfe were still in place,
Yea and perhaps with more successfull words
Then you, vnlesse you were a schooller sir.

Gr. Oh this learning, what a thing it is

Grm. Oh this Woodcocke, what an Ass it is.

Petr. Peace sirra.

Hor. Grmio mum. God saue you signior Grmio

Gr. And you are wel met, Signior Hortensio.

Trow you whither I am going? To Baptista Minola,
I promise to enquire carefully

About a schoolemaster for the faire Bianca,
And by good for une I haue lighted well
On this yong man: For learning and behauiour
Fit for her turne, well read in Poetrie
And other bookes, good ones, I warrant ye.

Hor. 'Tis well. and I haue met a Gentleman
Hath promist me to helpe one to another,
A fine Musitian to instruct our Mistis,
So shal I no whit be behinde in dute
To faire Bianca, so beloued of me.

Gr. Beloued of me, and that my deeds shal proue.

Grm. And that his bags shal proue.

Hor. Grmio, 'tis now no time to vent our loue,
Listen to me, and if you speake me faire,
Ile tel you newes indifferent good for either
Heere is a Gentleman whom by chance I met

Vpon

Vpon agreement from vs to his liking,
Will vndertake to woo curst Katherine,
Yea, and to marrie her, if het downe please.

Gre So said, so done, is well.

Hortensio, haue you told him all her faults?

Petr. I know she is an irksome bawling scold

If that be all Masters, I heare no harme

Gre No, sayst me so, friend? What Countreyman?

Petr. Borne in Verona, old Brutus sonne.

My father dead, my fortune liues for me,

And I do hope, good dayes shal long, to see.

Gre Oh sir, such a life with such a wife, were strange:

But if you haue stomacke, doo't a Gods name,

You shal haue me assisting you in all.

But will you woo this Wilde cat?

Petr. Will I lue?

Gre Will he woo her? or he haugher.

Petr Why came I hither, but to that intent?

Thinke you, a litle dinne can daunt mine eares?

Haue I not in my time heard Iorns rore?

Haue I not heard the sea, pufft vp with windes,

Rage like an angry Boare, chased with sweat?

Haue I not heard great Ordnance in the field?

And heauens Artillerie thunder in the skies?

Haue I not in a pitched battell heard

Loud larmes, neighing steeds, & trumpets clangue?

And do you tell me of a womans tongue?

That giues not halfe so great a blow to heare,

As wil a Chesse-nut in a Farmers fire,

Tush, tush, feare boyes with bugs.

Gre For he feares none.

Gremio. Hortensio hearken:

This Gentleman is happily arriv'd,

My minde presumes for his owne good, and yours.

Hor. I promise we would be Contributors,

And beare his charge of wooing whatsoever.

Gremio And so we wil, provided that he win her.

Gre. I would I were as sure of a good dinner

Enter Tranio brane, and Biondello.

Tra. Gentlemen God saue you If I may be bold

Tell me I beseech you, which is the readiest way

To the house of Signior Baptista Minola?

Bion. He that ha's the two faire daughters: ist he you meane?

Tra. Euen he Biondello.

Gre. Hearke you sir, you meane not her to —

Tra Perhaps him and her sir, what haue you to do?

Petr. Nor he that chides sir, at my hand I pray.

Tranio I loue no chiders sir Biondello, let's away.

Luc Well begun Tranio

Hor. Sir, a word ere you go:

Are you a sutor to the Maid you talke of, yea or no?

Tra And if I be sir, is it any offence?

Gremio No: if without more words you will get you hence

Tra. Why sir, I pray are not the threats as free
For me, as for you?

Gre But so is not she

Tra For what reason I beseech you.

Gre. For this reason if you know,

That she's the choise loue of Signior Gremio.

Hor That she's the chosen of Signior Hortensio.

Tra Softly my Masters: If you be Gentlemen

Do me this right: heare me with patience,

Baptista is a noble Gentleman,

To whom my Father is not all vnknowne,
And were his daughter fairer then she is,
She may more sutors haue, and me for one.
Fairst Ladaes daughter had a thousand wooers
Then well one more may faire Bianca haue;
And so she shall: Lucutio shal make one,
Though Paris castie, in hope to speed alone.

Gre. What, this Gentleman will out-talk vs all.

Luc. Sir giue him head, I know hee'l proue a Iade.

Petr. Hortensio, to what end are all these words?

Hor Sir, let me be so bold as to ask you,

Did you yet euer see Baptista daughter?

Tra No sir, but heere I do that he hath two:

The one, as famous for a scolding tongue,

As is the other, for beauteous modestie

Petr. Sir, sir, the first's for me, let her go by

Gre. Yea, leaue that labour to great Hercules,
And let it be more then Alcides twelue.

Petr. Sir vnderstand you this of me (insooth)

The yongest daughter whom you hearken for,

Her father keeps from all access of sutors,

And will not promise her to any man,

Vntill the elder sister first be wed.

The yonger then is free, and not before.

Tranio If it be so sir, that you are the man

Must speed vs all, and me amongst the rest

And if you breake the ice, and do this seeke,

Attchieue the elder: let the yonger free,

For our access, whose hap shall be to haue her,

Will not so gracelesse be, to be ingrate

Hor. Sir you say wel, and wel you do conceiue,

And since you do profess to be a sutor,

You must as we do, gratifie this Gentleman,

To whom we all rest generally beholding.

Tranio. Sir, I shal not be slacke, in signe whereof,

Please yee we may contriue this afternoone,

And quaffe carowles to our Mistresse health,

And do as aduersaries do in law,

Striue mightily, but eate and drinke as friends.

Gre. Bion. Oh excellent motion fellowes let's be gon

Hor. The motions good indeed, and be it so,

Petruchio, I shal be your Beene ven Enter

Enter Katherine and Bianca.

Bian. Good sister wrong me not, nor wrong your self,

To make a bondmaide and a slaue of mee,

That I disdain: but for these other goods,

Vnbinde my hands, Ile pull them off my selfe,

Yea all my raiment, to my petticoate,

Or what you will command me, wil I do,

So well I know my dutie to my elders.

Kate. Of all thy sutors heere I charge tel

Whom thou lou'st best: see thou dissemble not.

Bianca Beleue me sister, of all the men aliue,

I neuer yet beheld that speciall face,

Which I could fancie, more then any other.

Kate Minion thou lye'st: Is't not Hortensio?

Bian. If you affect him sister, heere I swear
Ile pleade for you my selfe, but you shal haue him.

Kate. Oh then belike you fancie riches more,

You wil haue Gremio to keepe you faire.

Bian Is it for him you do enuie me so?

Nay then you left, and now I wel perceiue

You haue but iested with me all this while:

I prethee sister Kate, vnnie my hands.

Kate. If that be iest, then all the rest was so. Strikes her
Enter

Enter Baptista

Bap. Why how now Dame, whence growes this insolence?

Bianca stand aside, poore gyrl she weepes:
Go ply thy Needle, meddle not with her.
For shame thou Hilding of a diuellish spirit,
Why dost thou wrong her, that did nere wrong thee?
When did she crosse thee with a bitter word?

Kate. Her silence flouts me, and Ile be reueng'd

Flies after Bianca

Bap. What in my sight? Bianca get thee in. Exit.

Kate. What will you not suffer me Nay now I see
She is your treasure, she must haue a husband,
I must dance bare-foot on her wedding day,
And for your loue to her, leade Apes in hell.
Talk not to me, I will go sit and weepe,
Till I can finde occasion of reuenge.

Bap. Was euer Gentleman thus green'd as I?
But who comes heere.

Enter Gremio, Lucentio, in the habit of a Roman man, Petruchio with Tranio, with his boy
bearing a Lute and Booke

Gre. Good morrow neighbour Baptista

Bap. Good morrow neighbour Gremio God saue
you Gentlemen

Pet. And you good sir pray haue you not a daughter, cal'd Katerina, faire and vertuous

Bap. I haue a daughter sir, cal'd Katerina

Gre. You are too blunt, go to it orderly

Pet. You wrong me signior Gremio, giue me leaue
I am a Gentleman of Verona sir,
That hearing of her beautie, and her wit,
Her affability and bashfull modestie
Her wondrous qualities, and milde behaviour,
Am hold to shew my selfe a forward guest
Within your house, to make mine eye the witnessse
Of that report, which I so oft haue heard
And for an entrance to my entertainment,
I do present you with a man of mine
Cunning in Musicke, and the Mathematickes,
To instruct her fully in those sciences,
Whereof I know she is not ignorant,
Accept of him, or else you do me wrong.
His name is Lisio, borne in Montana.

Bap. You are welcome sir, and he for your good sake.
But for my daughter Katerina, this I know,
She is not for your turne, the more my griefe

Pet. I see you do not meane to part with her,
Or else you like not of my companie

Bap. Mistake me not, I speake but as I finde,
Whence are you sir? What may I call your name.

Pet. Petruchio is my name, Antonio's sonne,
A man well knowne throughout all Italy

Bap. I know him well you are welcome for his sake.
Gre. Sauing your tale Petruchio, I pray let vs that are poore petitioners speake too? Bianca, you are mesurous forward

Pet. Oh, Pardon me signior Gremio, I would faine be doing.

Gre. I doubt it not sir. But you will curse
Your wooing neighbors: this is a guile
Very gratefull, I am sure of it, to expresse
The like kindeesse my selfe, that haue bene
More kindly beholding to you then any.

Freely giue vnto this yong Scholler, that hath Beene long studying at Rhemes, as cunning
In Greeke, Latine, and other Languages,
As the other in Musicke and Mathematickes?
His name is Cambio. pray accept his seruice.

Bap. A thousand thanks signior Gremio:
Welcome good Cambio. But gentle sir,
Me thinkes you walke like a stranger,
May I be so bold, to know the cause of your comming?

Tra. Pardon me sir, the boldnesse is mine owne,
That being a stranger in this Citie heere,
Do make my selfe a suitor to your daughter,
Vnto Bianca, faire and vertuous
Nor is your firme resolute vknowne to me,
In the preferment of the eldest sister.

This libertie, is all that I request,
That vpon knowledge of my Parentage,
I may haue welcome amongst the rest that woo,
And free access and sauaour as the rest.

And to haue the education of your daughters.
I heere bestow a simple instrument,
And this small packet of Greeke and Latine bookes.
If you accept them, then their worth is great.

Bap. Lucentio is your name, of whence I pray.

Tra. Of Pisa sir, sonne to Vincenzo

Bap. A mightie man of Pisa by report,
I know him well: you are verie welcome sir.
Take you the lute, and you the set of bookes,
You shall go see your Pupils presently.
Holla, within.

Enter a Seruant.

Sirrah, leade these Gentlemen
To my daughters, and tell them both
These are their Tutors, bid them vse them well,
We will go walke a litle in the Orchard,
And then to dinner: you are passing welcome,
And so I pray you all to thinke you felices.

Pet. Signior Baptista, my businesse maketh haste,
And euery day I cannot come to you,
You know my father well, and in him me,
Left sol cheere to all his Lands and goods,
Which I haue bettered rather then decreast,
Then tell me, if I get your daughters loue,
What dowrie shall I haue with her to wife.

Bap. After my death, the one halfe of my Lands
And in possession twentie thousand Crownes.

Pet. And for that dowrie, Ile assure her of Her widdow-hood, be it that she suruiue me
In all my Lands and Leases whatsoeuer,
Let specialities be therefore drawne betwene vs,
That couenants may be kept on either hand

Bap. I, when the special thing is well obtained,
That is her loue. for that is all in all.

Pet. Why that is nothing: for I tell you father,
I am as peremptorie as the proud minded:
And where two raging fires meete together,
They do consume the thing that feedes their furie.
Though little fire growes great with little winde,
yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all
So I to her, and so she yeelds to me,
For I am rough, and woo not like a babe.

Bap. Well maist thou woo, and happy be thy speed
But be thou arm'd for some vnhappie words

Pet. I to the proofe, as Mountaine are for windes,
That shakes not, though they blow perpetually

Enter Hortensio with his head broke.

Bp

Bap. How now my friend, why dost thou looke so pale?

Her. For feare I promise you, if I looke pale.

Bap. What, will my daughter proue a good Musitian?

Her. I thinke she l sooner proue a souldier,
Iron may hold with her, but neuer Lutes.

Bap. Why then thou canst not break her to the Lute?

Her. Why no, for she hath broke the Lute to me:
I did but tell her she mistooke her frets,
And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering,
When (with a most impatient diuellish spirit)
Frets call you these? (quoth she) Ile fume with them:
And with that word she strooke me on the head,
And through the instrument my pate made way,
And there I stood amazed for a while,
As on a Pillorie, looking through the Lute,
While she did call me Rascall, Fidler,
And twangling 'acae, with twentie such vilde tearmes,
As had she studied to misse me so

Pet. Now by the world, it is a lustie Wench,
I loue her tentimes more then ere I did,
Oh how I long to haue some chat with her

Bap. Wel go with me, and be not so discomfited.
Proceed in practise with my yonger daughter,
She's apt to learne, and thankesfull for good turnes:
Signior Petruchio, will you go with vs,
Or shall I send my daughter Kate to you.

Exit. Manet Petruchio.

Pet. I pray you do. Ile attend her heere,
And woo her with some spirit when she comes,
Say that she saile, why then Ile tell her plaine,
She sings as sweetly as a Nightingale:
Say that she frowne, Ile say she lookes as cleere
As morning Roses newly washt with dew:
Say she be mute, and will not speake a word,
Then Ile commend her volubility,
And say she vttereth piercing eloquence:
If she do bid me packe, Ile giue her thanks,
As though she bid me stay by her a weeke:
If she denie to wed, Ile craue the day
When I shall aske the banes, and when be married.
When I shall aske the banes, and when be married.
But heere she comes, and now Petruchio speake.

Enter Katherine.

Good morrow Kate, for thats your name I heare

Kate. Well haue you heard, but something hard of hearing:

They call me Katharine, that do talke of me.

Pet. You lye in faith, for you are call'd plaine Kate,
And bony Kate, and sometimes Kate the curst:
But Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendome,
Kate of Kate-hall, my super-daintie Kate,
For dainties are all Kates, and therefore Kate
Take this of me, Kate of my consolation,
Hearing thy mildnesse praised in euery Towne,
Thy vertues spoke of, and thy beautie sounded,
Yet not so deeply as to thee belongs,
My selfe am mou'd to woo thee for my wife.

Kate. Mou'd, in good time, let him that mou'd you hether

Remoue you hence. I knew you at the first
You were a mouable.

Pet. Why, what's a mouable?

Kat. A ioynd floole.

Pet. Thou hast hit it: come sit on me.

Kate. Asses are made to beare, and so are you.

Pet. Women are made to beare, and so are you.

Kate. No such lade as you, if me you meane.

Pet. Alas good Kate, I will not burthen thee,
For knowing thee to be but yong and light.

Kate. Too light for such a swaine as you to catch,
And yet as heauie as my waight should be.

Pet. Should be, should: buzze.

Kate. Well tane, and like a buzzard.

Pet. Oh slow-wing'd Turtle, shal a buzzard take thee?

Kat. I for a Turtle, as he takes a buzzard.

Pet. Come, come you Waspe, y'faith you are too angrie.

Kate. If I be waspish, best beware my sting.

Pet. My remedy is then to plucke it out.

Kate. I, if the foole could finde it where it lies.

Pet. Who knowes not where a Waspe does weare his sting? In his taile.

Kate. In his tongue?

Pet. Whose tongue.

Kate. Yours if you talke of tales, and so farewell

Pet. What with my tongue in your taile.

Nay, come againe, good Kate, I am a Gentleman,

Kate. That Ile trie.

Pet. I sweare Ile cuffe you, if you strike againe.

Kate. So may you loose your armes,
If you strike me, you are no Gentleman,
And if no Gentleman, why then no armes.

Pet. A Herald Kate? Oh put me in thy bookes.

Kate. What is your Crest, a Coxcombe?

Pet. A combleesse Cocke, so Kate will be my Hen.

Kate. No Cocke of mine, you crow too like a crauen
Pet. Nay come Kate, come: you must not looke so sowre.

Kate. It is my fashion when I see a Crab.

Pet. Why heere's no crab, and therefore looke not
sowre

Kate. There is, there is.

Pet. Then shew it me

Kate. Had I a glasse, I would.

Pet. What, you meane my face.

Kate. Well ayen'd of such a yong one.

Pet. Now by S George I am too yong for you.

Kate. Yet you are wither'd.

Pet. 'Tis with cares.

Kate. I care not

Pet. Nay heare you Kate. Insooth you scape not so.

Kate. I chafe you if I tarrie. Let me go.

Pet. No, not a whit, I finde you passing gentle:

'Twas told me you were rough, and coy, and fullen,
And now I finde report a very liar:

For thou art pleasant, gamesome, passing courteous,
But slow in speech: yet sweet as spring-time flowers.

Thou canst not frowne, thou canst not looke a sence,
Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will,

Nor hast thou pleasure to be crosse in talke:

But thou with mildnesse entertain'st thy wooers,
With gentle conference, soft, and affable.

Why does the world report that Kate doth limpe?

Is straight, and slender, and as browne in hue

As hazle nuts, and sweeter then the kernels:

Oh let me see thee walke: thou dost not halt.

Kate. Go foole, and whom thou keep'st command.

Pet. Did euer Dion so become a Groue

As Kate this chamber with her princely gate:

O be thou Dion, and let her be Kate,

And

And then let Kate be chaste, and Dian sportfull.

Kate. Where did you study all this goodly speech?

Petr. It is extempore, from my mother wit.

Kate. A witty mother, witlesse else her sonne.

Petr. Am I not wise?

Kat. Yes, keepe you warme.

Petr. Marry so I meane sweet Katherine in thy bed:

And therefore setting all this chat aside,
Thus in plaine termes your father hath consented
That you shall be my wife; your dowry greed on,
And will you, nill you, I will marry you
Now Kate, I am a husband for your turne,
For by this light, whereby I see thy beauty,
Thy beauty that doth make me like thee well,
Thou must be married to no man but me,

Enter Baptista, Gremio, Trayro.

For I am he am borne to tame you Kate,
And bring you from a wilde Kate to a Kate
Conformable as other household Kates
Heere comes your father, neuer make deniall,
I must, and will haue Katherine to my wife (daughter?)

Bap. Now Signior Petruchio, how speed you with my

Petr. How but well sir, how but well?
It were impossible I should speed amisse. (dumps?)

Bap. Why how now daughter Katherine, in your

Kat. Call you me daughter? now I promise you
You haue shewd a tender fatherly regard,
To wish me wed to one halfe Lunaticke,
A mad-cap ruffian, and a swearing lacke,
That thinkes with oathes to face the matter out.

Petr. Father, 'tis thus, your selfe and all the world
That talk'd of her, haue talk'd amisse of her:

If she be curst, it is for pollicie,

For shee's not froward, but modest as the Dove,

Shee is not hot, but temperate as the morne,

For patience shee will proue a second Grissell,

And Romane Lucrece for her chastitie

And to conclude, we haue greed so well together,

That vpon sonday is the wedding day

Kate. Hee see thee hang'd on sonday first (first)

Gre. Hark Petruchio, she saies shee'll see thee hang'd

Tr. Is this your speedin' nay the godnight our part

Petr. Bepatient gentlemen, I choose her for my selfe,
If she and I be pleas'd, what's that to you?

'Tis bargain'd twixt vs twaine being alone,

That she shall still be curst in company.

Itell you 'tis incredible to beleuee

How much she loues me oh the kindest Kate,

Shee hur'g about my necke, and kisse on kisse

Shee w'd so fast, protesting oath on oath,

That in a twinke shee won me to her loue

Oh you are nouices, 'tis a world to see

How tame when men and women are alone,

A meacocke wretch can make the curstest shrew:

Giue me thy hand Kate, I will vnto Venice

To buy apparell 'gainst the wedding day,

Prouide the feast father, and bid the guests,

I will be sure my Katherine shall be fine

Bap. I know not what to say, but giue me your hands,

God send you ioy, Petruchio, 'tis a match.

Gre. Tr. Amen. say we, we will be witnesses.

Petr. Father, and wife, and gentlemen adieu.

I will to Venice, sonday comes apace,

We will haue rings, and things, and fine array,

And kisse me Kate, we will be married a sorday.

Exit Petruchio and Katherine.

Gre. Was euer match clapt vp so sodainly?

Bap. Faith Gentlemen now I play a marchants part,
And venture madly on a desperate Marr.

Tr. I was a commodity lay fretting by you,

'Twill bring you gaine, or perish on the seas

Bap. The gaine I seeke, is quiet me the match.

Gre. No doubt but he hath got a quiet catch:

But now Baptista, to your yonger daughter,

Now is the day we long haue looked for,

I am your neighbour, and was suter first.

Tr. And I am one that loue Bianca more

Then words can witnesse, or your thoughts can guesse.

Gre. Yongling thou canst not loue so deare as I.

Tr. Gray-beard thy loue doth freeze

Gre. But thine doth fric,

Skipper stand backe, 'tis age that nourisheth

Tr. But youth in Ladies eyes that flourisheth

Bap. Content you gentlemen, I will copound this strife

'Tis deeds must win the prize, and he of both

That can assure my daughter greatest dower,

Shall haue my Biancas loue.

Say signior Gremio, what can you assure her?

Gre. First, as you know, my house within the City

Is richly furnished with plate and gold,

Basons and ewers to laue her dainty hands.

My hangings all of trian tapestry

In luory colers I haue stuf my crownes

In Cypres chests my arras counterpoints,

Costly apparell, rents, and Canopies,

Fine Linnen, Turky cushions boist with pearle,

Vallens of Venice gold, in needle worke.

Pewter and brasse, and all things that belongs

To house or house-keeping then at my farme

I haue a hundred milch-kine to the pale,

Six score fat Oxen standing in my stalls,

And all things answerable to this portion.

My selfe am strooke in yeeres I must confesse,

And if I die to morrow this is hers,

If whil' I lue she will be onely mine

Tr. That only came well in sir, list to me,

I am my fathers heyre and onely sonne,

If I may haue your daughter to my wife,

He leaue her houses three or foure as good

Within rich Pisa walls, as any one

Old Signior Gremio has in Padua,

Besides, two thousand Duckets by the yeere

Off fruitfull land, all which shall be her ioynter

What, haue I pincht you Signior Gremio?

Gre. Two thousand Duckets by the yeere of land,

My Land amounts not to so much in all:

That she shall haue, besides an Argosie

That now is lying in Marcellus roade.

What, haue I choakt you with an Argosie?

Tr. Gremio, 'tis knowne my father hath no lesse

Then three great Argosies, besides two Gallies

And twelue more Gallies, these I will assure her,

And twice as much what ere thou offerst next

Gre. Nay, I haue offered all, I haue no more,

And she can haue no more then all I haue,

If you like me, she shall haue me and mine.

Tr. Why then the maid is mine from all the world

By your firme promise, Gremio is out vied.

Bap. I must confesse your offer is the best,

And let your father make her the assurance,

T

Shee

Shce is your owne, else you must pardon me:

If you should die before him, where's her dower?

Tri. That's but a caull - he is olde, I young.

Gre. And may not yong men die as well as old?

Bap. Well gentlemen, I am thus resolu'd,
On sonday next, you know

My daughter Katherine is to be married:

Now on the sonday following, shall Bianca

Be Bride to you, if you make this assurance

If not, to Signior Gremio

And so I take my leaue; and thanke you both Exit.

Gre. Adieu good neighbour now I feare thee not.

Sirra, yong gamester, your father were a foole

To giue thee all, and in his wayning age

Set foot vnder thy table tut, a toy,

An olde Italian foxe is not to kinde my boy Exit.

Tra. A vengeance on your crasy withered hude,

Yet I haue fac'd it with a card of ten

Tis in my head to doe my master good:

I see no reason but suppos'd Lucentio

Must get a father, call'd suppos'd Vincentio,

And that's a wonder father's commonly

Doe get their children but in this case of woing,

A childe shall get a fire, if I faile not of my cunning, Exit

Actus Tertia.

Enter Lucentio, Hortensio, and Bianca.

Luc. Fidler forbeare you grow too forward Si-

Haue you so soone forgot the entertainment

Her sister Katherine welcom'd you withall

Hort. But wrangling pedant, this is

The patronesse of heavenly harmony:

Then giue me leaue to haue prerogatiue,

And when in Musicke we haue spent an houre,

Your Lecture shall haue leisure for as much.

Luc. Preposterous Assie that neuer read so farre,

To know the cause why musicke was ordain'd

Was it not to refresh the minde of man

After his studies, or his vsuall paine?

Then giue me leaue to read Philology,

And while I pause, serue in your harmony

Hort. Sirra, I will not beare thele braues of thine

Bianc. Why gentlemen you doe me double wrong,

To strue for that which resteth in my choice

I am no breeching scholler in the schooles,

Ile not be tied to howres, nor pointed times,

But learne my Lessons as I please, my selfe,

And to cut off all strife heere sit we downe,

Take you your instrument, play you the whiles,

His Lecture will be done ere you haue tun'd.

Port. You'll leaue his Lecture vhen I am in tune?

Luc. That will be neuer, tune your instrument.

Bian. Where left we last?

Luc. Heere Madam Hic Ibi Simois, hic est sigeria tellus, hic steterat Priami regia Celsa senus.

Bian. Conster them.

Luc. Hic Ibat, as I told you before, Simois, I am Lucentio, hic est, sonne vnto Vincentio of Pisa, Sigeria tellus, disguised thus to get your loue, hic steterat, and that Lucentio that comes a wooing, priami, is my man Tranio, regia, bearing my port, Celsa senus that we might beguile the old Pantalowne.

Hort. Madam, my Instrument's in tune.

Bian. Let's heare, oh sic, the treble tarres.

Luc. Spit in the hole man, and tune againe.

Bian. Now let mee see if I can conster it. Hic Ibat simois, I know you not, hic est sigeria tellus, I trust you not, hic steterat priami, take heede he heare vs not, regia presume not, Celsa senus, despaire not.

Hort. Madam, tis now in tune.

Luc. All but the base.

Hort. The base is right, 'tis the base knaue that sars.

Luc. How fiery and forward our Pedant is,
Now for my life the knaue doth court my loue,

Pedafente, Ile watch you better yet?

In time I may beleue, yet I mistrust.

Bian. Mistrust it not, for sure Encides

Was Ajax cald so from his grandfather.

Hort. I must beleuee my master, else I promise you,

I should be arguing still vpon that doubt,

But let it rest, now Listo to you.

Good master take it not vnkindly pray

That I haue beene thus pleasant with you both.

Hort. You may go walk, and giue me leaue a while,

My Lessons make no musike in three parts.

Luc. Are you so formall sir, well I must waite

And watch withall, for but I be deceu'd,

Our fine Musitian groweth amorous.

Hort. Madam, before you touch the instrument,

To learne the order of my fingering,

I trust begin with rudiments of Art,

To teach you gamoth in a briefer sort,

More pleasant, pithy, and effectually,

Then hath beene taught by any of my trade,

And there it is in writing fairely drawne.

Bian. Why, I am past my gamouth long agoe.

Hort. Yet read the gamouth of Hortensio

Bian. Gamouth I am, the ground of all accord:

Ave, to plead Hortensio's passion.

Breme, Bianca take him for thy Lord

Cfist, that loues with all affection

Dsolre, one Clitte, two notes haue I,

Elams, shew pittie or I die.

Call you this gamouth? tut I like it not,

Old fashions please me best, I am not to nice

So charge true rules for old inuenuens.

Enter a Messenger

Nicle. Mistresse, your father prayes you leaue your

And helpe to dresse your sisters chamber vp, (books,

You know to morrow is the wedding day

Bian. Farewell sweet matters both, I must be gone.

Luc. Faith Mistresse then I haue no cause to stay

Hort. But I haue cause to pry into this pedant,

Methinkes he lookes as though he were in loue

Yet if thy thoughts Bianca be so humble

To cast thy wandering eyes on every stale

Seize thee that List, if once I finde thee ranging,

Hortensio will be quit with thee by changing Exit.

Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, Katherine, Bianca, and others attendants

Bap. Signior Lucentio, this is the pointed day

That Katherine and Petruchio should be married,

And yet we heare not of our sonne in Law.

What will be said, what mockery will it be?

To want the Bride-groome when the Priest attends

To speake the ceremoniall rites of marriage?

What saies Lucentio to this shame of ours?

No

Kate. No shame but mine, I must forsooth be forst
To giue my hand oppos'd against my heart
Vnto a mad-braine rudesby, full of spleene,
Who woo'd in haste, and meanes to wed at leysure:
I told you I, he was a franticke foole,
Hiding his bitter iests in blunt behaviour,
And to be noted for a merry man,
Hee'll wooe a thousand, point the day of marriage,
Make friends, inuite, and proclaime the banes,
Yet neuer meanes to wed where he hath v.oo'd
Now must the world point at poore Katherine.
And say, loe, there is mad Petruchio's wife
Vnto would please him come and marry her.

Tra. Patience good Katherine and Baptista too,
Vpon my life Petruchio meanes but v. ell,
Whateuer fortune staves him from his word,
Though he be blunt, I know him passing wise,
Though he be merry, yet withall he's honest

Kate. Would Katherine had neuer seen him though.

Exit weeping

Bap. Goe girl, I cannot blame thee now to weep,
For such an iniurie would vex a very faint,
Much more a shrew of impatient humour

Enter Biondello.

Bion. Master, master, newes, and such newes as you
neuer heard of,

Bap. Is it new and olde too? how may that be?

Bion. Why, is it not newes to hear of Petruchio's

Bap. Is he come? (comming?)

Bion. Why no sir.

Bap. What then?

Bion. He is comming

Bap. When will he be heere?

Bion. When he stands where I am, and sees you there.

Tra. But say, what to thine olde newes?

Bion. Why Petruchio is comming, in a new hat and an old jerkin, a paire of olde breeches thrice turn'd; a paire of bootes that haue beene candle-cases, one buckled, another lac'd: an olde rusty sword tane out of the Towne Armory, with a broken hilt, and chapeleffe with two broken points: his horse hip'd with an olde mo-thy saddle, and stirrups of no kindred besides posselt with the glanders, and like to mose in the chine, troubled with the Lampasse, infected with the fashions, full of Windegalls, sped with Spauins, raied with the Yel-lowes, past cure of the Furies, starke spoyl'd with the Staggers, begnawne with the Bots, Waid in the backe, and shoulder-shotten, neere leg'd before, and with a halfe-cheek Bitte, & a headstall of sheepes leather, which being restrain'd to keepe him from stumbling, hath been often burst, and now repaired with knots: one girth sixe times peec'd, and a womans Crupper of velure, which hath two letters for her name, fairly set down in studs,
and heere and there peec'd with packthred.

Bap. Who comes with him?

Bion. Oh sir, his Lackey, for all the world Caparison'd like the horse, with a linnen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other, garted with a red and blew lift, an old hat, & the humor of forty fancies prickt in't for a feather: a monster, a very monster in apparell,
& not like a Christian foot-boy, or a gentlemans Lackey.

Tra. 'Tis some od humor pricks him to this fashion,
Yet oftentimes he goes but meane apparell'd.

Bap. I am glad he's come, howsoere he comes.

Bion. Why sir, he comes not.

Bap. Didst thou not say hee comes?

Bion. Who, that Petruchio came?

Bap. I, that Petruchio came. (backe.)

Bion. No sir, I say his horse comes with him on his

Bap. Why that's all one

Bion. Nay by S. lavy, I hold you a penny, a horse and a man is more then one, and yet not many.

Enter Petruchio and Grumio

Pet. Come, where be these gallants? who's at home?

Bap. You are welcome sir.

Petr. And yet I come not well,

Bap. And yet you halt not.

Tra. Not so well apparell'd as I wish you were,

Petr. Were it better I should rush in thus:

But where is Kate? where is my louely Bride?
How does my father? gentles methinks you frowne,
And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some Comet, or vnusall prodigie?

Bap. Why sir, you know this is your wedding day:
First were we sad, fearing you would not come,
Now sadder that you come so vnprovided.
Fie, doff this habit, shame to your estate,
An eye-fore to our solemne festiuall.

Tra. And tell vs what occasion of import
Hath all so long detain'd you from your wife,
And sent you hither so vnlike your selfe?

Petr. Tedious it were to tell, and harsh to heare,
Sufficeth I am come to keepe my word,
Though in some part inforced to digresse,
Which at more leysure I will so excuse,
As you shall well be satisfied with all
But where is Kate? I stay too long from her,
The morning weares, 'tis time we were at Church.

Tra. See not you? Biide in these vnreuerent robes,
Goe to my chamber, put on clothes of mine

Petr. Not I, beleewe me, thus Ile visit her

Bap. But thus I trust you will not marry her (words,

Petr. Good sooth euen thus: therefore ha done with
To me she married, not vnto my cloathes:
Could I repaire what she will weare in me,
As I can change these poore accoutrements,
'Twere well for Kate, and better for my selfe.
But what a foole am I to chat with you,
When I should bid good morrow to my Bride?
And seale the title with a louely kisse. Exit.

Tra. He hath some meaning in his mad attire,
We will perswade him be it possible,
To put on better ere he goe to Church.

Bap. Ile after him, and see the event of this. Exit.

Tra. But sir, Loue concerneth vs to adde
Her fathers liking, which to bring to passe
As before imparted to your worship,
I am to get a man what ere he be,
It skills not much, weele fit him to our turne,
And he shall be Vincenzio of Pisa,
And make assurance heere in Padua
Of greater summes then I haue promised,
So shall you quietly enioy your hope,
And marry sweet Bianca with consent.

Luc. Were it not that my fellow schoolemaster
Doth watch Bianca's steps so narrowly:
'Twere good me-thinkes to sleale out marriage,
Which once perform'd, let all the world say no,
Ile keepe mine owne despite of all the world.

Tra. That by degrees we meane to looke into,

T 2

And

And watch our vantage in this businesse,
Wee'll ouer-reach the grey beard Grumio,
The narrow prying father Mindola,
The quaint Musician, amorous Lutio,
All for my Masters sake Lucentio.

Enter Grumio

Signior Grumio, came you from the Church?

Gre. As willingly as ere I came from schoole.

Tra. And is the Bride & Bridegroom coming home?

Gre. A bridegroom say you? 'tis a groom indeed,
A grumling groom, and that the girl shall finde.

Tra. Curster then she, why 'tis impossible.

Gre. Why hee's a deuill, a deuill, a very fiend

Tra. Why she's a deuill, a deuill, the deuils damme.

Gre. Tur, she's a Lambe, a Dove, a foole to him.

He tell you sir Lucentio; when the Priest
Should aske if Katherine should be his wife,
I, by goggs woones quoth he, and swore so loud,
That all amaz'd the Priest let fall the booke,
And as he stoop'd againe to take it vp,
This mad-brain'd bridegroom tooke him such a cuffe,
That downe fell Priest and booke, and booke and Priest,
Now take them vp quoth he, if any list

Tra. What said the wench when he rose againe?

Gre. Trembled and shooke for why, he stamp'd and swore, as if the Vicar meant to cozen him. but after many ceremonies done, hee calls for wine, a health quoth
he, as if he had beene aboard carowing to his Mates after a storme, quast off the Muscadell, and threw the sops all in the Sextons face. hauing no other reason, but that his beard grew thinne and hungerly, and seem'd to aske him sops as hee was drinking. This done, hee tooke the Bride about the necke, and kist her lips with such a clamorous smacke, that at the parting all the Church did eccho. and I seeing this, came thence for very shame, and after mee I know the rout is comming, such a mad mar-ryage neuer was before. harke, harke, I heare the minstrels play.

Musicke playes.

Enter Petruchio, Kate, Bianca, Hortensio, Baptista

Petr. Gentlemen & friends, I thank you for your pains,
I know you thinke to dine with me to day,
And haue prepar'd great store of wedding cheere,
But so it is, my haste doth call me hence,
And therefore heere I meane to take my leaue.

Bap. Is't possible you will away to night?

Pet. I must away to day before night come,
Make it no wonder if you knew my businesse,
You would intreat me rather goe then stay.
And honest company, I thank you all,
That haue beheld me giue away my selfe
To this most patient, sweet, and vertuous wife,
Dine with my father, drinke a health to me,
For I must hence, and farewell to you all.

Tra. Lets intreat you stay till after dinner

Pet. It may not be

Gre. Let me intreat you.

Pet. It cannot be

Kat. Let me intreat you

Pet. I am content.

Kat. Are you content to stay?

Pet. I am content you shall entreat me stay,
But yet not stay, entreat me how you can

Kat. Now if you loue me stay.

Pet. Grumio, my horse.

Gre. I sir, they be ready, the Oates haue eaten the horses.

Kate. Nay then,

Doc what thou canst, I will not goe to day,
No, nor to morrow, not till I please my selfe,
The dore is open sir, there lies your way,
You may be iogging whiles your bootes are greene:
For me, Ile not be gone till I please my selfe,
'Tis like you'll proue a iolly surly groom, e,
That take it on you at the first so roundly

Pet. O Kate content thee, prethee be not angry.

Kat. I will be angry, what hast thou to doe?
Father, be quiet, he shall stay my leisure.

Gre. I marry sir, now it begins to worke

Kat. Gentlemen, forward to the bridall dinne
I see a woman may be made a foole
If she had not a spirit to resist.

Pet. They shall goe forward Kate at thy command,
Obey the Bride you that attend on her.

Goe to the feast, reuell and domineere,
Carowfe full measure to her maiden-head,
Be madde and merry, or goe hang your selues.
But for my bonny Kate, she must with me.

Nay, looke not big, nor stampe, nor stare, nor fret,

I will be master of what is mine owne,
Shee is my goods, my chattels, she is my house,
My household-stuffe, my field, my barne,
My horse, my ox, my asse, my any thing,
And heere she stands, touch her who euer dare,
Ile bring mine action on the proudest he

That stops my way in Padua Grumio
Draw forth thy weapon, we are befer with theeues,
Rescue thy Mistresse if thou be a man:

Fear not sweet, wench, they shall not touch thee Kate, Ile buckler thee against a Million. Exeunt. P. Kat.

Bap. Nay, let them goe, a couple of quiet ones. (ing

Gre. Went they not quickly, I should die with laugh-

Tra. Of all mad matches neuer was the like.

Luc. Mistresse, what's your opinion of your sister?

Bian. That being mad her selfe, she's madly mated.

Gre. I warrant him Petruchio is Kated

Bap. Neighbours and friends, though Bride & Bride-
For to supply the places at the table, (groom wants
You know there wants no iunkets at the feast
Lucentio, you shall supply the Bridegroomes place,
And let Bianca take her sisters come.

Tra. Shall sweet Bianca practise how to bride it?

Bap. She shall Lucentio come gentlemen lets goe.

Enter Grumio

Exeunt.

Gre. Fie fie on all tired Iades, on all mad Masters, & all foule waies: was euer man so beaten? was euer man so raide? was euer man so weary? I am sent before to make a fire, and they are comming after to warme them.
now were not I a little pot, & soone hot; my very lippes might freeze to my teeth, my tongue to the rooffe of my mouth, my heart in my belly, ere I should come by a fire to chaw me, but I with blowing the fire shall warme my selfe: for considering the weather, a taller man then I will take cold. Holla, ho! Curtis.

Enter Curtis.

Curt. Who is that calls so coldly?

Gre. A piece of Ice: if thou doubt it, thou maist slide from my shoulder to my heele, with no greater greater a run but my head and my necke. A fire good Curtis

Cur. Is my master and his wife comming Grumio?

Grn. Oh I Curtis I, and therefore fire, fire, cast on no water.

Cur. Is she so hot a shrew as she's reported
Grn. She was good Curtis before this frost but thou know'st winter tames man, woman, and beast. for it hath tam'd my old master, and my new mistress, and my selfe fellow Curtis.

Grn. Away you three inch foole, I am no beast
Cur. Am I but three inches? Why thy borne is a foot and so long am I at the least. But wilt thou make a fire, or shall I complaine on thee to our mistress, whose hand (she being now at hand) thou shalt soone feelee, to thy cold comfort, for being slow in thy hot office.

Cur. I prethee good Grumio, tell me, how goes the world?

Grn. A cold world Curtis in every office but thine, & therefore fire - do thy duty, and haue thy dutie, for my Master and mistress are almost frozen to death.

Cur. There's fire readie, and therefore good Grumio the newes.

Grn. Why Iacke boy, ho boy, and as much newes as wilt thou

Cur. Come, you are so full of conicatching.

Grn. Why therefore fire, for I haue caught extreme cold. Where's the Cooke, is supper ready, the house trim'd, rushes strew'd, cobwebs swept, the seruingmen in their new suttian, the white stockings, and every officer his wedding garment on? Be the Iackes faire within, the Gals faire without, the Carpets laide, and euery thing in order?

Cur. All readie and therefore I pray thee newes.

Grn. First know my horse is tired, my master & mistress false out. Cur. How?

Grn. Out of their saddles into the durt, and thereby hangs a tale

Cur. Let's ha't good Grumio.

Grn. Lend thine eare.

Cur. Heere.

Grn. There.

Cur. This 'tis to feelee a tale, not to heare a tale.

Grn. And therefore 'tis call'd a sensible tale - and this Cuffe was but to knocke at your eare, and beseech listening: now I begin, Inprimis wee came downe a fowle hill, my Master riding beninde my Mistress.

Cur. Both of one horse?

Grn. What's that to thee?

Cur. Why a horse.

Grn. Tell thou the tale: but hadst thou not crost me, thou shouldst haue heard how her horse fel, and she vnder her horse. thou shouldst haue heard in how merry a place, how she was bemoid'd, how hee left her with the horse vpon her, how he beat me because her horse stumbled, how she waded through the durt to plucke him off me how he swore, how she prai'd, that neuer prai'd before: how I cried, how the horses ranne away, how her bridle was burst how I lost my crupper, with manie things of worthy memorie, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou returne vnexperienc'd to thy gtaue.

Cur. By this reckning he is more shrew than she.

Grn. I, and that thou and the proudest of you all shall finde when he comes home But what talke I of this? Call forth Nathaniel, Ioseph, Nicholas, Philipp, Walter, Sugersop and the rest: let their heads bee slickely comb'd, their blew coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit, let them curtisie with their left legges, and not presume to touch a haire of my Masters horse-taile, till they kisse their hands. Are they all readie?

Cur. They are.

Grn. Call them forth.

Cur. Do you heare ho? you must meete my master to countenance my mistress.

Grn. Why she hath a face of her owne.

Cur. Who knowes not that?

Grn. Ihou it seemes, that calls for company to countenance her

Cur. I call them forth to credit her.

Enter foure or five seruingmen.

Grn. Why she comes to borrow nothing of them.

Nat. Welcome home Grumio.

Phil. How now Grumio.

Ios. What Grumio?

Nick. Fellow Grumio?

Nat. How now old lad.

Grn. Welcome you how now you: what you fellow you - and thus much for greeting. Now my spruce companions, is all readie, and all things ready?

Nat. All things is readie, how neere is our master?

Gie. E'neat hand, alighted by this - and therefore be not - Cokes passion, silence, I heare my master.

Enter Petruchio and Kate

Pet. Where be these knaues? What no man at doore To hold my stirrop, nor to take my horse?

Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philipp.

All ser. Heere, heere sir, heere sir.

Pet. Heere sir, heere sir, heere sir, heere sir You logger-headed and vnpolisht groomes:

What? no attendance? no regard? no dutie?

Where is the foolish knaue I sent before?

Grn. Heere sir, as foolish as I was before.

Pet. You pezant, swain, you horion malt-horse drudge Did I not bid thee meete me in the Parke,

And bring along these rascal knaues with thee?

Grumio. Nathaniels coat sir was not fully made,

And Gabrels punipes were all vnpinkt i'th heele.

There was no Linke to colour Peters hat,

And Walters dagger was not come from sheathing.

There were none fine, but Adam, Rafe, and Gregory,

The rest were ragged, old, and beggerly,

Yet as they are, heere are they come to meete you

Pet. Go rascals, go, and fetch my supper in. Ex. Ser

Where is the life that late I led?

Where are those? Sit downe Kate,

And welcome Soud, soud, soud, soud.

Enter seruants with supper.

Why when I say? Nay good sweete Kate be merrie.

Off with my boots, you rogues. you villaines, when?

It was the Friar of Orders gray,

As he forth walked on his way

Out you rogue, you plucke my foote awrie,

Take that, and mend the plucking of the other.

Be merrie Kate Some water heere - what hoa.

Enter one with water.

Where's my Spaniel Trullius? Sutra, get you hence,

And bid my cozen Ferdinand come hither

One Kate that you must kisse, and be acquainted with.

Where are my Slippers? Shall I haue some water?

Come Kate and wash, & welcome heartily:

you horsou villaine, will you let it fall?

The Taming of the Shrew.

Stand by, and marke the manner of his teaching.
Enter Bianca.

Hor. Now Mistress, profit you in what you reade?
Bian. What Master reade you first, resolue me that?
Hor. I reade, that I professe the Art to loue.
Bian. And may you proue fir Master of your Art.
Lnc. While you sweet deere proue Mistress of my heart.

Hor. Quicke proceeders marry, now tel me I pray,
 you that durst swear that yout mistress Bianca
 Lou'd me in the World so wel as Lucentio.

Tra. Oh despighful Loue, vnconstant womankind,
 I tel thee Lisio this is wonderfull.

Hor. Mistake no more, I am not Lisio,
 Nor a Musitian as I seeme to bee,
 But one that seeme to lue in this disguise,
 For such a one as leaues a Gentleman,
 And makes a God of such a Cullion;
 Know sir, that I am cal'd Hortensio.

Tra. Signior Hortensio, I haue often heard
 Of your entire affection to Bianca,
 And since mine eyes are witnessse of her lightnesse,
 I wil with you, if you be so contented,
 Forswear Bianca, and her loue for euer.

Hor. See how they kisse and court: Signior Lucentio,
 Heere is my hand, and heere I firmly vow
 Neuer to woo her more, but do forswear her
 As one vnworthie all the former fauours
 That I haue fondly flatter'd them withall.

Tra. And heere I take the like vnfaigned oath,
 Neuer to marrie with her, though she would intreate,
 For on her, tee how beaflly she doth court him!
Hor. Would all the world but he had quite forsworn

For me, that I may surely keepe mine oath.
 I wil be married to a wealthy Widdow,
 Ere three dayes passe, which hath as long lou'd me,
 As I haue lou'd this proud disdainful Haggard,
 And so farewell signior Lucentio,
 Kindnesse in women, not their brauteous lookes
 Shal win my loue, and so I take my leaue:

In resolution, as I swore before.
Tra. Mistress Bianca, blesse you with such grace,
 As longeth to a Louers blessed case:
 Nay, I haue eane you napping gentle Loue,
 And haue forsworne you with Hortensio.

Bian. Tranio you left, but haue you both forsworne
 mee?
Tra. Mistress we haue.
Lnc. Then we are rid of Lisio.

Tra. Faith hee'l haue a lustie Widdow now,
 That shalbe woo'd, and wedded in a day.
Bian. God giue him ioy.

Tra. I, and hee'l tame her.
Bianca. He sayes so Tranio.
Tra. Faith he is gone vnto the taming schoole.
Bian. The taming schoole? what is there such a place?
Tra. I mistress, and Petruchio is the master,
 That teacheth trickes eleuen and twentie long,
 To tame a shrew, and charme her chattering tongue.

Enter Brindello.
Bian. Oh Master, master I haue watcht so long,
 That I am dogge-wearie, but at last I spied
 An ancient Angel comming downe the hill,
 Wil serue the tume.
Tra. What is he Brindello?
Bio. Master, a Mercantant, or a pedant,

Kate. Patience I pray you, 'twas a fault vnwilling.
Pet. A horson beetle-headed flap-ear'd knaue:
 Come Kate sit downe, I know you haue a stomacke,
 Will you giue thanks, sweete Kate, or else shall I?
 What's this, Mutton?

Ser. I.
Pet. Who brought it?

Pet. I.
Pet. 'Tis burnt, and so is all the meate:
 What dogges are these? Where is the rascall Cooke?
 How durst you viltaines bring it from the dresser
 And serue it thus to me that loue it not?

There, take it to you, trenchers, cups, and all.
 You heedlesse iolt-heads, and vnmaner'd slaues.
 What, do you grumble? He be with you straight.
Kate. I pray you husband be not so discontented.

The meate was well, if you were so contented.
Pet. I tel thee Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away,
 And I expressly am forbid to touch it.

For it engenders chollier, planteth anger,
 And better 'twere that both of vs did fast,
 Since of our selues, our selues are cholliericke,
 Then feede it with such ouer-rosted flesh.
 Be patient, to morrowe't shalbe mended,
 And for this night we'l fast for companie.
 Come I wil bring thee to thy Bridall chamber Exeunt.

Enter Servants generally.
Nath. Peter didst euer see the like
Peter. He kills her in her owne humor.

Grumio. Where is he?
Enter Curio, a Servant.
Cur. In her chamber, making a sermon of continen-cie to her, and railes, and swears, and rates, that free (poore soule) knowes not which way to stand, to looke, to speake, and sits as one new rilen from a dreame Away, away, for he is comming hither.

Enter Petruchio.
Pet. Thus haue I politicke begun my reigne,
 And 'tis my hope to end successfullly
 My Faulcon now is sharpe, and passing emptie,
 And til she stoope, she must not be full gorg'd,
 For then she neuer lookes vpon her lure.
 Another way I haue to man my Haggard,
 To make her come, and know her keepers call.
 I haue, to watch her, as we watch thele Kites,
 That baite, and beate, and will not be obedient.
 She eate no meate to day, nor none shall eate
 Last night she slept not, nor to night she shall not:
 As with the meate, some vnderferued fault
 He finde about the making of the bed,
 And heere he sling the pillow, there the boulder,
 This way the Couerlet, another way the sheets.
 I, and amid this hurle I intend,
 That all is done in reuerend care of her,
 And in conclusion, she shal watch all night,
 And if she chance to nod, he raile and brawle,
 And with the clamor keepe her stil awake
 And with the way to kil a Wife with kindnesse,
 This is a way to kil a Wife with kindnesse,
 And thus he curbe her mad and headstrong humor
 He that knowes better how to tame a shrew,
 Now let him speake, 'tis charity to shew.

Enter Tranio and Hortensio.
Tra. Is't possible friend Lisio, that mistress Bianca
 Doth fancie any other but Lucentio,
 I tel you sir, she beares me faire in hand.
Lnc. Sir, to satisfie you in what I haue said,

I know not what, but formall in apparrell,
In gate and countenance surely like a Father.

Enc. And what of him Tranio?

Tra. If he be credulous, and trust my tale,
He make him glad to see me Vincentio,
And give assurance to Baptista Minola.
As if he were the right Vincentio.

Par. Take me your loue, and then let me alone.

Enter a Pedant

Ped. God saue you sir

Tra. And you sir, you are welcome,
Trauaile you farre on, or are you at the farthest?

Ped. Sir at the farthest for a weeke or two,
But then vp farther, and as farre as Rome,
And so to Tripolie, if God lend me life.

Tra. What Countreyman I pray?

Ped. Of Mantua.

Tra. Of Mantua Sir, marrie God forbid,
And come to Padua carelesse of your life

Ped. My life sir? how I pray? for that goes hard.

Tra. 'Tis death for any one in Mantua
To come to Padua, know you not the cause?
Your ships are staid at Venice, and the Duke
For priuate quarrel 'twixt your Duke and him,
Hath publish'd and proclaim'd it openly
'Tis meruaile, but that you are but newly come,
you might haue heard it else proclaim'd about.

Ped. Alas sir, it is worse for me then so,
For I haue bills for monie by exchange
From Florence, and must heere deliuer them

Tra. Wel sir, to do you courtesie,
This wil I do, and this I wil aduise you,
First tell me, haue you euer bene at Pisa?

Ped. I sir, in Pisa haue I often bin,
Pisa renowned for graue Citizens.

Tra. Among them know you one Vincentio?

Ped. I know him not, but I haue heard of him.
A Merchant of incomparable wealth.

Tra. He is my father sir, and sooth to say,
In count'nance somewhat doth resemble you.

Bion. As much as an apple doth an oyster, & all one

Tra. To saue your life in this extremitie,
This fauor wil I do you for his sake,
And thinke it not the worst of all your fortunes,
That you are like to Sir Vincentio.
His name and credite shal you vndertake,
And in my house you shal be friendly lodg'd, Looke that you take vpon you as you should,
you vnderstand me sir so shal you stay
Til you haue done your businesse in the Citie:
If this be court'sie sir, accept of it

Ped. Oh sir I do, and wil repute you euer
The patron of my life and libertie.

Tra. Then go with me, to make the matter good,
This by the way I let you vnderstand,
My father is heere look'd for euerie day,
To passe assurance of a dower in marriage
'Twixt me, and one Baptista daughter heere:
In all these circumstances He instruct you,
Go with me to cloath you as becomes you. Exeunt.

Grm. No, no forsooth I dare not for my life.

Ka. The more my wrong, the more his spite appears.

What, did he marrie me to famish me?
Beggars that come vnto my fathers doore,
Vpon intreatie haue a present almes,
If not, elsewhere they meere with charitie:
But I, who neuer knew how to intreat,
Nor neuer needed that I should intreat,
Am staru'd for meate, giddie for lacke of sleepe:
With oathes kept waking, and with brawling fed,
And that which spights me more then all these wants,
He does it vnder name of perfect loue:
As who should say if I should sleepe or eate!
'Twere deadly sicknesse, or else present death.
I prether go, and get me some repast,
I care not what, so it be holosome soode

Grm. What say you to a Neats foote?

Kate. 'Tis paising good, I prethee let me haue it

Grm. I feare it is too chollick a meate.

How say you to a fat Tripe finely broyl'd?

Kate. I like it well, good Grumio fetch it me.

Grm. I cannot tell, I feare 'tis chollick.

What say you to a peece of Beefe and Mustard?

Kate. A dish that I do loue to feede vpon

Grm. I, but the Mustard is too hot a little.

Kate. Why then the Beefe, and let the Mustard rest.

Grm. Nay then I wil not, you shal haue the Mustard
Or else you get no beefe of Grumio.

Kate. Then both or one, or any thing thou wilt.

Grm. Why then the Mustard without the beefe.

Kate. Go get thee gone, thou false deluding slave,
Beats him.

That feed'st me with the verie name of meate.
Sorrow on thee, and all the packe of you
That triumph thus vpon my misery.
Go get thee gone, I say.

Enter Petruchio, and Hortensio with meate.

Petr. How fares my Kate, what sweetening all a-mort?

Hor. Mistis, what cheere?

Kate. Faith as cold as can be.

Petr. Plucke vp thy spirits, looke cheerfully vpon me.
Heere Loue, thou seest how diligent I am,
To dresse thy meate my selfe, and bring it thee
I am sure sweet Kate, this kindnesse merites thanks.
What, not a word? Nay then, thou lou'st it not:
And all my paines is sort'd to no prooffe.
Heere take away this dish.

Kate. I pray you let it stand

Petr. The poorest seruice is repaid with thanks,
And so shall mine before you touch the meate.

Kate. I thanke you sir.

Hor. Signior Petruchio, fie you are too blame:
Come Mistis Kate, He beare you companie.

Petr. Eate it vp all Hortensio, if thou louest mee:
Much good do it vnto thy gentle heart.

Kate. eate apace; and now my honie Loue,
Will we returne vnto thy Fathers house,
And reuell it as brauely as the best,
With silken coats and caps, and golden Rings,
With Ruffes and Cuffes, and Fardingales, and things:
With Scarfes, and Fannes, & double change of brau'ry,
With Amber Bracelets, Beades, and all this knau'ry.
What hast thou din'd? The Tailor staves thy leasure,
To decke thy bodie with his ruffling treasure.

Enter Tailor.

Come

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Katherine and Grumio

Come Tailor, let vs see these ornaments.

Enter Haberdasher.

Lay forth the gowne. What newes with you sir?

Pet. Heere is the cap your Worship did bespeake.

Pet. Why this was moulded on a pdrrenger,

A Veluer dish: Fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy,

Why 'tis a cockle or a walnut-shell,

A knacke, a toy, a trick, a babies cap.

Away with it, 'tome let me haue a bigger.

Kate. Ile haue no bigger, this doth fit the time,

And Gentlewomen weare such caps as these

Pet. When you are gentle, you shall haue one too,

And not till then

Hor. That will not be in hast.

Kate. Why sir I trust I may haue leaue to speake,

And speake I will I am no childe, no babe,

Your betters haue indur'd me say my minde,

And If you cannot, best you stop your eares.

My tongue will tell the anger of my heart,

Or els my heart concealing it wil breake,

And rather then it shall, I will be free,

Euen to the vttermost as I please in words.

Pet. Why thou saist true, it is paltrie cap,

A custard coffen, a bauble, a silken pic,

I loue thee well in that thou lik'st it not

Kate. Loue me, or loue me nor, I like the cap,

And it I will haue, or I will haue none.

Pet. Thy gowne, why I come Tailor let vs see't

Oh mercie God, what masking stiffe is heere?

Whats this? a sleeue? 'tis like demi cannon,

What, vp and downe caru'd like an apple Tart?

Hears snip, and nip, and cut, and slash and slash,

Like to a Censor in a barbers shoppe:

Why what a devils name Tailor call'st thou this?

Hor. I see thees like to haue neither cap nor gowne.

Tai. You bid me make it orderlie and well,

According to the fashion, and the time,

Pet. Marrie and did: but if you be remembred,

I did not bid you marre it to the time.

Go hop me ouer euery kennell home,

For you shall hop without my custome sir:

Ile none of it, hence, make your best of it.

Kate. I neuer saw a better fashion'd gowne,

More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commendable:

Belike you meane to make a puppet of me.

Pet. Why true, he meanes to make a puppet of thee.

Tail. She saies your Worship meanes to make a puppet of her

Pet. Oh monstrous arrogance

Thou lye'st, thou thred, thou thimble,

Thou yard three quarters, halfe yard, quarter, naile,

Thou Flea, thou Nit, thou winter cricket thou:

Brau'd in mine owne house with a skome of thred:

Away thou Ragg'd, thou quantitie, thou remnant,

Or I shall so be-mete thee with thy yard,

As thou shalt thinke on prauing whilst thou liu'st:

I tell thee I, that thou hast marr'd her gowne.

Tail. Your worship is deceiu'd, the gowne is made

Iust as my master had direction

Grumio gaue order how it should be done.

Grum. I gaue him no order, I gaue him the stiffe.

Tail. But how did you desire it should be made?

Grum. Marrie sit with needle and thred.

Tail. But did you not request to haue it cut?

Grum. Thou hast fac'd many things.

Tail. I haue.

Grum. Face not mee: 'thou hast brau'd manie men braue not me; I will neither bee fac'd nor brau'd. I say vnto thee, I bid thy Master cut out the gowne, but I did not bid him cut it to peeces. Ergo thou liest.

Tail. Why heere is the note of the fashion to testify.

Pet. Read it.

Grum. The note lies in's thbare if he say I said so.

Tail. Inprimis, a loose bodied gowne.

Grum. Master, if euer I said loose-bodied gowne, sow me in the skirts of it, and beate me to death with a bot-tome of browne thred: I said a gowne.

Pet. Proceede.

Tai. With a small compast cape.

Grum. I confesse the cape.

Tai. With a trunked sleeue

Grum. I confesse two sleeves.

Tai. The sleeves curiously cur,

Pet. I there's the villanie.

Grum. Error i'th bill sir, error i'th bill? I commanded the sleeves should be cut out, and sow'd vp againe, and that Ile proue vpon thee, though thy little finger be armed in a thimble.

Tail. This is true that I say, and I had thee in place where thou shouldst know it.

Grum. I am for thee straight: take thou the bill, giue me thy meat-yard, and spare not fine

Hor. God-a-mercie Grumio, then hee shall haue no oddes.

Pet. Well sir in breefe the gowne is not for me.

Grum. You are i'th right sir, 'tis for my mistris.

Pet. Go take it vp vnto thy masters vse.

Grum. Villaine, not for thy life Take vp my Mistresse gowne for thy masters vse.

Pet. Why sir, what's your conceit in that?

Grum. Oh sir, the conceit is deeper then you think for:
Take vp my Mistris gowne to his masters vse.

Oh fie, fie, fie

Pet. Horatio, say thou wilt see the Tailor paid.

Go take it hence, be gone, and say no more.

Hor. Tailor, Ile pay thee for thy gowne to morrow,
Take no vnkindnesse of his hastie words.

Away I say, commend me to thy master Exit Tail.

Pet. Well, come my Kate, we will vnto your fathers,

Euen in these honest meane habiliments:

Our purses shall be proud, our garments poore:

For 'tis the minde that makes the bodie rich

And as the Sunne breakes through the darke clouds,

So honor peereth in the meanest habit.

What is the Iay more precious then the Larke?

Because his feathers are more beautifull.

Or is the Adder better then the Ecle,

Because his painted skin contents the eye.

Oh no good Kate: neither art thou the worse

For this poore furniture, and meane array.

If thou accountest it shame, lay it on me,

And therefore frolicke, we will hence forthwith,

To feast and sport vs at thy fathers house,

Go call my men, and let vs straight to him,

And bring our horses vnto Long-lane end,

There wil we mount, and thither walke on foote,

Let's see, I thinke 'tis now some seven a clocke,

And well we may come there by dinner time.

Kate. I dare assure you sir, 'tis almost two,

And 'twill be supper time ere you come there.

Pet. It shall be seuen ere I go to horse:

Looke what I speake, or do, or thinke to doe,

You

You are still crossing it, first let's alone,
I will not goe to day, and ere I doe,
It shall be what a clock I say it is.

Hor. Why so this gallant will command the sunne.

Enter Tranio, and the Pedant drest like Vincentio.

Tra. Sirs, this is the house, please it you that I call

Ped I what else, and but I be deceiued,

Signior Baptista may remember me

Neere twentie yeares agoe in Genoa

Tra. Where we were lodgers, at the Pegasus,

Tis well, and hold your owne in any case

With such austeritie as longeth to a father

Enter Biondello.

Ped I warrant you, but sir here comes your boy,
Twere good he were school'd

Tra Feare you not him sirra Biondello,

Now doe your dutie throughlie I aduise you -

Imagine twere the right Vincentio.

Bion. Tut, feare not me.

Tra But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista?

Bion I told him that your father was at Venice,

And that you look't for him this day in Padua,

Tra. Th'art a tall fellow, hold thee that to drinke,

Here comes Baptista. let your countenance sir.

Enter Baptista and Lucentio Pedant booted and bare headed.

Tra Signior Baptista you are happilie met:

Sir, this is the gentleman I told you of,

I pray you stand good father to me now,

Giue me Bianca for my patrimony.

Ped Soft son sir by your leaue, hauing com to Padua

To gather in some debts, my son Lucentio

Made me acquainted with a waighy cause

Of loue betweene your daughter and himselfe:

And for the good report I heare of you,

And for the loue he beareth to your daughter,

And she to him to stay him not too long,

I am content in a good fathers care

To haue him matcht, and if you please to like

No worse then I, vpon some agreement

Me shall you finde readie and willing

With one consent to haue her so bestow'd.

For curious I cannot be with you

Signior Baptista, of whom I heare so well.

Bap Sir, pardon me in what I haue to say,

Your plainnesse and your shortnesse please me well:

Right true it is your sonne Lucentio here

Doth loue my daughter, and she loueth him,

Or both dissemble deeply their affections:

And therefore if you say no more then this,

That like a Father you will deale with him,

And passe my daughter a sufficient dower,

The match is made, and all is done,

Your sonne shall haue my daughter with consent.

Tra I thanke you sir, where then doe you know best

We be affied and such assurance tane,

As shall with either parts agreement stand

Bap Not in my house Lucentio, for you know

Pitchers haue eares, and I haue manie seruants,

Besides old Gremio is harkning still,

And happilie we might be interrupted.

Tra. Then at my lodging, and it like you,

There doth my father lie: and there this night

Weele passe the businesse priuately and well:

Send for your daughter by your seruant here,

My Boy shall fetch the Scriuener presentlie,

The worst is this that at so slender warning,

You are like to haue a thin and slender pittance.

Bap. It likes me well:

Cambio hie you home, and bid Bianca make her readie straight:

And if you will tell what hath hapned,

Lucentio's Father is arriv'd in Padua,

And how she's like to be Lucentio's wife.

Biond. I praise the gods she may withall my heart

Exit.

Tra Dallie not with the gods; but get thee gone.

Enter Peter

Signior Baptista, shall I leade the way,

Welcome, one messe is like to be your cheere,

Come sir, we will better it in Pisa.

Bap. I follow you.

Exeunt.

Enter Lucentio and Biondello

Bion Cambio.

Luc What saist thou Biondello?

Biond You saw my Master winke and laugh vpon
you?

Luc. Biondello, what of that?

Biond. Faith nothing but has left mee here behinde to expound the meaning or morrall of his signes and tokens.

Luc I pray thee moralize them.

Biond Then thus Baptista is safe talking with the deceiuing Father of a deceitfull sonne.

Luc And what of him?

Biond His daughter is to be brought by you to the supper

Luc And then.

Bio. The old Priest at Saint Lukes Church is at your command at all houres

Luc And what of all this.

Bion I cannot tell, expect they are busied about a counterfeit assurance take you assurance of her, cum preuilegio ad Imprendendum solem, to th' Church take the Priest, Clarke, and some sufficient honest witnesses:

It this be not that you looke for, I haue no more to say,
But bid Bianca farewell for euer and a day.

Luc Hear'st thou Biondello?

Biond I cannot tarry I knew a wench married in an afternoone as shee went to the Garden for Parsley to stufte a Rabie, and so may you sir and so adew sir, my Master hath appointed me to goe to Saint Lukes to bid the Priest be readie to come against you come with your apparail

Exit.

Luc. I may and will, if she be so contented

She will be pleas'd, then wherefore should I doubt.

Hap what hap may, Ile roundly goe about her:

It shall goe hard if Cambio goe without her.

Exit.

Enter Petruchio, Kate, Hortentio

Petr Come on a Gods name, once more toward our fathers

Good Lord how bright and goodly shines the Moone.

Kate. The Moone, the Sunne it is not Moonelight now.

Pet I say it is the Moone that shines so bright.

Kate. I know it is the Sunne that shines so bright.

Fet. Now by my mothers sonne, and that's my selfe,

It

It shall be moone, or starre, or what I list.
Or ere I iourney to your Fathers house:
Goe on, and fetch our horses backe againe,
Euermore crost and crost, nothing but crost.

Hort. Say as he saies, or we shall neuer goe.

Kate. Forward I pray, since we haue come so farre,
And be it moone, or sunne, or what you please:
And if you please to call it a rush Candle,
Henceforth I vowe it shall be so for me.

Petr. I say it is the Moone.

Kate. I know it is the Moone.

Petr. Nay thou you lye. it is the blessed Sunne.

Kate. Then God be blest, it in the blessed sun,
But sunne it is not, when you say it is not,
And the Moone changes euen as your minde:
What you will haue it nam'd, euen that it is,
And so it shall be so for Katherine.

Hort. Petruchio, goe thy waies, the field is won

Petr. Well, forward, forward, thus the bowle should
And not vnluckily against the Bias. (run,
But soft, Company is comming here

Enter Vincentio.

Good morrow gentle Mistris, where away:
Tell me sweete Kate, and tell me truly too,
Hast thou beheld a fresher Gentlewoman:
Such warre of white and red within her cheekes:
What stars do spangle heauen with such beautie,
As those two eyes become that heavenly face?
Faile louely Maide, once more good day to thee:
Sweete Kate embrace her for her beauties sake.

Hort. He will make the man mad to make the woman
of him.

Kate. Yong budding Virgin, faire, and fresh, & sweet,
Whether away, or whether is thy aboade?
Happy the Parents of so faire a childe,
Happier the man whom fauourable stars
A lots thee for his louely bedfellow.

Petr. Why how now Kate, I hope thou art not mad,
This is a man old, wrinckled, faded, withered,
And not a Maiden, as thou saist he is.

Kate. Pardon old fathers my mistaking eyes,
That haue bin so bedazled with the sunne,
That euery thing I looke on seemeth greene:
Now I perceiue thou art a reuerent Father.
Pardon I pray thee for my mad mistaking.

Petr. Do good old grandfire, & withall make known
Which way thou trauellest, if along with vs,
We shall be ioyfull of thy companie.

Vinc. Faire Sir, and you my merry Mistris,
That with your strange encounter much amasde me.
My name is call'd Vincenzo, my dwelling Pisa,
And bound I am to Padua, there to visite
A sonne of mine, which long I haue not seene.

Petr. What is his name?

Vinc. Lucentio gentle sir

Petr. Happily met, the happier for thy sonne:
And now by Law, as well as reuerent age,
I may intitle thee my louing Father,
The sister to my wife, this Gentlewoman,
Thy Sonne by this hath married. wonder not,
Nor be not grieved, she is of good esteeme,
Her dowrie wealthie, and of worthie birth;
Beside, so qualified, as may befeeme
The Spouse of any noble Gentleman.
Let me embrace with old Vincenzo,

And wander we to see thy honest sonne,
Who will of thy annuall be full ioyous.

Vinc. But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant trauallors to breake a leif
Vpon the companie you ouertake?

Hort. I doe assure thee father so it is.

Petr. Come goe along and see the truth hercof,
For our first merriment hath made thee iekalous.

Hort. Well Petruchio, this has put me in heart;
Haue to my Widdow, and if she stroward,
Then hast thou taught Horatio to be vntoward. Exit.

Enter Biondello, Lucertio and Bianca, Gremio is cut before.

Biond. Softly and swiftly sir, for the Priest is ready.

Luc. I like Biondello, but they may chance to neede thee at home, therefore leaue vs. Exit.

Biond. Nay faith, Ile see the Church a your backe, and then come backe to my mistris as soone as I can
Gre. Inaruaile Carbio comes not all this while.

Enter Petruchio, Kate, Vincentio, Gremio with Attendants.

Petr. Sir heres the doore, this is Lucertio's house,
My Fathers beares more toward the Market-place,
Thither must I, and here I leaue you sir

Vinc. You shall not choose but drinke before you go,
I thinke I shall command your welcome here;
And by all likelihood some cheere is toward Knock

Grem. They're busie within, you were best knocke lower.

Pendant looks out of the window.

Ped. What's he that knockes as he would beat downe
the gate?

Vinc. Is Signior Lucentio within sir?

Ped. He's within sir, but not to be spoken withall.

Vinc. What if a man bring him a hundred pound or two to make merrie withall.

Ped. Keepe your hundred pounds to your selfe, hee shall neede none so long as I liue

Petr. Nay, I told you your sonne was well beloued in Padua doe you heare sir, to leaue frivolous circumstances, I pray you tell signior Lucentio that his Father is come from Pisa, and is here at the doore to ipeake with him.

Ped. Thou liest his Father is come from Padua, and here looking out at the window.

Vinc. Art thou his father?

Ped. I sir, so his mother saies, if I may beleue her.

Petr. Why how now gentleman why this is flat kna-uerie to take vpon you another mans name

Peds. Lay hands on the villaine, I beleue a meanes to cosen some bodie in this Citie vnder my countenance.

Enter Biondello.

Biond. I haue seene them in the Church together, God send 'em good shipping: but who is here? mine old Master Vincenzo now wee are vndone and brought to nothing.

Vinc. Come hither crackhempe.

Biond. I hope I may choose Sir.

Vinc. Come hither you rogue, what haue you forgot
mee?

Biond. Forgot you, no sir. I could not forget you, for
I neuer saw you before in all my life.

Vinc. What, you notorious villaine, didst thou neuer
see thy Mistris father, Vincenzo?

Biond. Whor

Bion What my old worshipfull old master? yes
marie sir see where he lookes out of the window.

Vin Ist so indeede. He beates Biondello.

Bion Helpe, helpe, helpe, here's a mad man will murder me.

Pedant. Helpe, sonne, helpe signior Baptista

Petr. Pree the Kate let's stand aside and see the end of this controuersie.

Enter Pedant with seruants, Baptista, Tranio

Tra Sir, what are you that offer to beare my seruants?

Vin What am I sir nay what are you sir: oh immortal Goddess: oh fine villaine, a tulken doubilet, a velvet hose, a scarlet closke, and a copataine hat: oh I am ydone, I am ydone: while I plaie the good husband at home, my sonne and my seruant spend all at the vniuersitie.

Tra. How now, what's the matter?

Bapt. What is the man lunaticke?

Tra. Sir, you seeme a sober ancient Gentleman by your habit: but your words shew you a mad man why sir, whaternes it you, if I weare Pearle and gold I thank my good Father, I am able to maintaine it

Vin. Thy father oh villaine, he is a Saile-maker in Bergamo.

Bap You mistake sir, you mistake sir, prae what do you thinke is his name?

Vin. His name, as if I knew not his name: I haue brought him vp euer since he was three yecres old, and his name is Tranio.

Ped Awaie, awaie mad asse, his name is Lucentio, and he is mine onelic sonne and heire to the Lands of me signior Vincentio.

Vin. Lucentio oh he hath muredred his Master, laie hold on him I charge you in the Dukes name. oh my sonne, my sonne: tell me thou villaine, where is my son Lucentio?

Tra. Call forth an officer Carrie this mad knaue to the laile father Baptista, I charge you see that hee be forth comming

Vin. Carrie me to the laile?

Gre Staie officer, he shall not go to prison

Bap. Talke not signior Gremio I saie he shall goe to prison.

Gre. Take heede signior Baptista, least you be catcht in this businesse: I dare sweare this is the right Vincentio.

Ped. Swear if thou dar'st

Gre Naie, I dare not sweare it.

Tran. Then thou wert best saie that I am not Lucentio

Gre Yes, I know thee to be signior Lucentio.

Bap. Awaie with the dotard, to the laile with him.

Enter Biondello, Lucentio and Bianca

Vin. Thus strangers may be haild and abusd oh monstrous villaine.

Bion. Oh we are spoil'd, and yonder he is, denie him, forswear him, or else we are all ydone

Exit Biondello, Tranio and Pedant as fast as may be.

Luc Pardon sweete father. Kneele.

Vin Lues my sweete sonne?

Bian. Pardon deere father.

Bap. How hast thou offended, where is Lucentio?

Luc. Here's Lucentio, right sonne to the right Vincentio.

That haue by marriage made thy daughter mine, While counterfeit supposes bleer'd thine eie.

Gre Here's packing with a witnesse to deceiue vs all.

Vin Where is that damned villaine Tranio, That fa'd and braued me in this matter so?

Bap. Why, tell me is not this my Cambio?

Bian Cambio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Luc. Loue wrought these miracles Biancas loue Made me exchange my state with Tranio, While he did beare my countenance in the towne, And happilie I haue arriued at the last Vnto the wished haue of my blisse What Tranio did, my selfe enforst him to; Then pardon him sweete Father for my sake.

Vin. Ile str the villaines nose that would haue sent me to the laile.

Bap. But doe you heare sir, haue you married my daughter without asking my good will?

Vin Feare not Baptista, we will content you, goe to. but I will in to be reueng'd for this villanie. Exit.

Bap. And I to sound the depth of this knauerie Exit.

Luc. Look not pale Bianca, thy father will not frown. Exeunt.

Gre. My cake is doug, h'but Ile in among the rest, Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast.

Kate Husband let's follow, to see the end of this adoe.

Petr First kisse me Kate, and we will.

Kate What in the midst of the streete?

Petr What art thou asham'd of me?

Kate. Mo sir, G'd 'orbid, but asham'd to kisse.

Petr. Why then let's home againe Come Sirra let's awaie.

Kate. Nay, I will giue thee a kisse, now prae thee Loue staie.

Petr. Is not this well? come my sweete Kate Better once then neuer, for neuer to late. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Baptista, Vincentio, Gremio, the Pedant, Lucentio, and Bianca Tranio, Biondello, Gremio, and Widow;

The Seruingmen with Tranio bringing in a Banquet

Luc At last, though long, our sarring notes agree, And time it is when raging warre is come, To smile at scapes and perils ouerblowne: My faire Bianca bid my lather welcome, While I with selfesame kindnesse welcome thine. Brother Petruchio, sister Katerina, And thou Hortensio with thy louing Widow Feast with the best, and welcome to my house, My Banket is to close our stomakes vp After our great good cheere: prae you sit downe, For now we sit to chat as well as eate.

Petr. Nothing but sit and sit, and eate and eate.

Bap. Padua affords this kindnesse, sonne Petruchio.

Petr. Padua affords nothing but what is kinde

Hor. For both our sakes I would that word were true.

Petr. Now for my life Hortensio feares his Widow.

Wid. Then neuer trust me if I be asfeard.

Petr. You are verie sensible, and yet you misse my sence:

I meane Hortensio is asfeard of you.

Wid. Ho

Wid. He that is giddie thinks the world turns round.

Petr. Roundlie replied.

Kat. Mistress, how meane you that?

Wid. Thus I conceive by him.

Petr. Conceives by me, how likes Hortensio that?

Hor. My Widdow saies, thus she conceives her tale

Petr. Verie well mended: kisse him for that good Widdow.

Kat He that is giddie thinks the world turnes round,
I praie you tell me what you meant by that.

Wid. Your housband being troubled with a shrew,
Measures my husbands sorrow by his woe:
And now you know my meaning.

Kate. A verie meane meaning.

Wid. Right, I meane you

Kat And I am meane indeede, respecting you.

Petr. To her Kate.

Hor To her Widdow.

Petr. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down

Hor That's my office

Petr. Spoke like an Officer: ha to the lvd.

Drinles to Hortensio.

Bap. How likes Gramio these quicke witted folkes?

Gre. Beleue me sir, they But together well.

Bian. Head, and but an halfe witted bodie,
Would say your Head and But were head and horne.

Vin I Mistress Bride, hath that awakened you?

Bian. I, but not frighted me, therefore Ile sleepe againe.

Petr. Nay that you shall not since you haue begun:
Haue at you for a better rest or too.

Bian. Am I your Bird, I meane to shifte my bush,
And then pursue me as you draw your Bow.
You are welcome all.

Exit Bianca.

Petr She hath preuented me, here signior Tranio,
This bird you aim'd at, though you hit her not,
Therefore a health to all that shot and mist.

Tri. Oh sir, Lucentio slip me like his Gray-hound,
Which runs himselfe, and catches for his Master

Petr. A good swift simile, but something currish

Tri 'Tis well fir that you hunted for your selfe:

'Tis thought your Deere doe hold you at a baie.

Bap. Oh, oh Petruchio, Tranio hits you now.

Luc. I thanke thee for that gird good Tranio.

Hor. Confesse, confesse, hath he not hit you here?

Petr. A has a little gald me I confesse:

And as the Iest did glaunce away from me,

'Tisten to one it mair'd you too out right.

Bap Now in good sadnesse Ionne Petruchio,
I thinke thou hast the veriest shrew of all.

Petr. Well, I say no and therefore sit assurance,

Let's each one send vnto his wife,

And he whose wife is most obedient,

To come at first when he doth send for her,

Shall win the wager which we will propose.

Hor Content, what's the wager?

Luc Twentie crownes.

Petr. Twentie crownes,

Ile venture so much of my Hawke or Hound,
But twentie times so much vpon my Wife.

Luc. A hundred then.

Hor. Content.

Petr. A match, 'tis done.

Hor. Who shall begin?

Luc. That will I.

Goe Biondello, bid your Mistress come to me.

Bio. I goe.

Bap. Sonne, Ile be your halfe, Bianca comes.

Luc. Ile haue no halues: Ile beare it all my selfe.

Enter Biondello.

How now, what newes?

Bio. Sir, my Mistress sends you word

That she is busie, and she cannot come.

Petr. How? she's busie, and she cannot come: is that an answer?

Gre. I, and a kinde one too:

Praie God fir your wife send you not a worse.

Petr. I hope better.

Hor. Sirra Biondello, goe and intreate my wife to come to me forthwith

Exit. Bion.

Petr. Oh ho, intreate her, nay then shee must needs come

Hor. I am affraid fir, doe what you can

Enter Biondello.

Yours will not be entreated: Now, where's my wife?

Bion. She saies you haue some goodly Iest in hand,
She will not come: she bids you come to her.

Petr. Worse and worse, she will not come:

Oh vilde, intollerable, not to be indur'd:

Sirra Gramio, goe to your Mistress,

Say I command her come to me.

Exit.

Hor. I know her answer.

Petr What?

Hor. She will not.

Petr. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end.

Enter Katherine.

Bap. Now by my hollidam here comes Katherine.

Kat. What is your will fir, that you send for me?

Petr. Where is your sister, and Hortensio wife?

Kate. They sit conferring by the Parler fire.

Petr Goe fetch them hither, if they denie to come,
Swainge me them soundly forth vnto their husbands:
Away I say, and bring them hither straight.

Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talke of a wonder.

Hor And so it is: I wonder what it boads

Petr. Martie peace it boads, and loue, and quiet life,
An awfull rule, and tight supremacie:

And to be short, what not, that's sweete and happie.

Bap. Now faire befall thee good Petruchio;

The wager thou hast v on, and I will adde

Vnto their losses twentie thousand crownes,

Another dowrie to another daughter,

For she is chang'd as she had neuer bin.

Petr. Nay, I will win my wager better yet,

And show more signe of her obedience,

Her new built vertue and obedience.

Enter Kate, Bianca, and Widdow.

See where she comes, and brings your forward Wines
As prisoners to her womanlie perswasion:

Katherine, that Cap of yours becomes you not.

Off with that bable, throw it vnderfoote.

Wid Lord let me neuer haue a cause to sigh.

Till I be brought to such a fillie passe.

Bian. Fie what a foolish dutie call you this?

Luc. I would your dutie were as foolish too:

The wisdom of your dutie saie Bianca,

Hath cost me five hundred crownes since supper time.

Bian. The more foole you for laying on my dutie

Petr. Katherine I charge thee tell these head-strong women, what dutie they doe owe their Lords and husbands.

Wid. Come,

Wid. Come, come, your mocking: we will haue no telling.

Pet. Come on I say, and first begin with her.

Wid. She shall not

Pet. I say she shall, and first begin with her.

Kate. Fie, fie, vnknit that threaning vnkinde brow,
And dart not scornfull glances from those eyes,
To wound thy Lord, thy King, thy Gouvernour.
It blots thy beautie, as frosts doe bite the Meads,
Confounds thy fame, as whirlwinds shake faire budds,
And in no sence it meeete or amiable.
A woman mou'd, is like a fountaine troubled,
Muddie, ill seeming, thicke, bereft of beautie,
And while it is so, none so dry or thirstie
Will daigne to sip, or touch one drop of it.
Thy husband is thy Lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy souldaigne: One that cares for thee,
And for thy maintenance. Commits his body
To painfull labour, both by sea and land
To watch the night in stormes, the day in cold,
Whil'st thou ly'st warme at home, secure and safe,
And craues no other tribute at thy hands,
But loue, faire lookes, and true obedience;
Too little payment for so great a debt.
Such dutie as the subiect owes the Prince,
Euen such a woman oweth to her husband
And when she is froward, peeuish, sullen, sowre,
And not obedient to his honest will,
What is she but a soule contending Rebel,
And gracelesse Traitor to her louing Lord?
I am asham'd that women are so simple,

To offer warre, where they should kneele for peace:
Or seeke for rule, supremacie, and sway,
When they are bound to serue, loue, and obey.
Why are our bodie soft, and weake, and smooth,
Vnsapt to toyle and trouble in the world,
But that our soft conditions, and our hearts,
Should well agree with our externall parts?
Come, come, you froward and vnble v. ormes,
My minde hath bin as bigge as one of yours,
My heart as great, my reason haplie more,
To bandie word for word, and trowne for frowne;
But now I see our Launces are but straws
Our strength as weake, our weal enesse past compare,
That seeming to be most, which we indeed least are.
Then vae your stomackes, for it is no boote,
And place your hands below your husbands foote:
In token of which dutie, if he please,
My hand is readie, may it do him ease

Pet. Why there's a wench Come on, and kisse mee
Kate

Luc. Well go thy wayes olde Lad for thou shalt ha'e.

Fin Tis a good hearing, when children are to ward.

Luc But a harsh hearing, when women are froward,

Pet. Come Kate, wee'll to bed,

We three are married, but you two are sped
Twas I wonne the wager, though you lut the white,
And being a winner, God giue you good night.

Exit Petruchio

Horten. Now geethy wayes, thou hast tam'd a curst
Shrow

Luc. Tis a wonder, by your leaue, she wil be tam'd so

FINIS.

V

ALL'S Well, that Ends Well.

Actus primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter yong Bertram Count of Rossilion, his Mother, and Helena, Lord Lafw, all in blacke

Mother.

IN deliuering my sonne from me, I burie a second husband.

Rof. And I in going Madam, weep ore my fathers death anew, but I must attend his maiesties command, to whom I am now in Ward, euermore in subiection.

Laf. You shall find of the King a husband Madame, you sir a father. He that so generally is at all times good, must of necessitie hold his vertue to you, whose worthnesse would stirre it vp where it wanted rather then lack it where there is such abundance.

Mo. What hope is there of his Maiesties amendment?

Laf. He hath abandon'd his Plaisitions Madam, vnder whose praesises he hath persecuted time with hope, and finds no other aduantage in the proceffe, but onely the loosing of hope by time.

Mo. This yong Gentlewoman had a father, O that had, how sad a passage tis, whose skill was almost as great as his honestie, had it stretch'd so far, would haue made nature immortall, and death should haue play for lacke of worke. Would for the Kings sake hee were liuing, I thinke it could be the death of the Kings disease.

Laf. How call'd you the man you speake of Madam?

Mo. He was famous sir in his profession, and it was his great right to be so Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent indeed Madam, the King very lately spoke of him admiringly, and mourningly hee was skilfull enough to haue hu'd stil, if knowledge could be set vp against mortallitie.

Rof. What is it (my good Lord) the King languishes of?

Laf. A Fistula my Lord

Rof. I heard not of it before

Laf. I would it were not notorious. Was this Gentlewoman the Daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

Mo. His sole childe my Lord, and bequeathed to my ouerlooking I haue those hopes of her good, that her education promises her dispositions shee inherits, which makes faire gifts fairer for where an vncleane mind carries vertuous qualities, there commendations go with pittie, they are vertues and traitors too in her they are the better for their simplicitie, she deriues her honestie, and atcheeues her goodnesse.

Lafw. Your commendations Madam get from her teares.

Mo. 'Tis the best brime a Maiden can season her praise in. The remembrance of her father neuer approaches her heart, but the tyranny of her sorrowes takes all liuelihood from her cheek. No more of this Helena, go too, no more least it be rather thought you affect a sorrow, then to haue—

Hell. I doe affect a sorrow indeed, but I haue it too

Laf. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive greefe the enemy to the liuing.

Mo. If the liuing be enemy to the greefe, the excesse makes it soone mortall

Rof. Maddam I desire your holie wishes.

Laf. How vnderstand we that?

Mo. Be thou blest Bertram, and succeed thy father in manners as in shape thy blood and vertue Contend for Empire in thee, and thy goodnesse Share with thy birth-right. Loue all, trust a few, Doe wrong to none: be able for thine enemy Rather in power then wise: and keepe thy friend Vnder thy owne lifes key. Be clecke for silence, But neuer tax'd for speech. What heauen more wil, That thee may furnish, and my prayers plucke downe, Fall on thy head. Farwell my Lord,

'Tis an vnseason'd Courtier, good my Lord Advise him.

Laf. He cannot want the best That shall attend his loue

Mo. Heauen blesse him: Farwell Bertram.

R. The best wishes that can be forg'd in your thoughts be seruants to you. be comfortable to my mother, your Mistis, and make much of her.

Laf. Farewell prettie Lady, you must hold the credit of your father.

Hell. O were that all, I thinke not on my father, And these great teares grace his remembrance more Then those I shed for him. What was he like?

I haue forgott him. My imagination Carries no fauour in't but Bertrams. I am vndone, there is no liuing, none, If Bertram be away. 'Twere all one, That I should loue a bright particuler starre, And think to wed it, he is so aboue me In his bright radiance and colateral light,

Must

Must I be comforted, not in his sphere;
Th'ambition in my loue thus plagues it selfe
The hind that would be mated by the Lion
Must die for loue 'Twas prettie, though a plague
To see him euerie houre to sit and draw
His arched browes, his hawking eye, his curles
In our hearts table - heart too capeable
Of euerie line and trick of his sweet fauour.
But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancie
Must sanctifie his Reliques. Who comes heere?

Enter Parrolles.

One that goes with him: I loue him for his sake,
And yet I know him a notorious Liar,
Thinke him a great way foole, folie a coward,
Yet these fixe evils sit so fit in him,
That they take place, when Vertues steely bones
Lookes bleake i'th cold wind. withall, full ofte we see
Cold wisdomed waighting on superfluous follie.

Par. Saue you faire Queene.

Hel. And you Monarch.

Par. No.

Hel. And no.

Par. Are you meditating on virginity?

Hel. I, you haue some staine of fouldier in you. Let mee aske you a question. Man is enemy to virginity, how may we barracado it against him?

Par. Keepe him out.

Hel. But he assailes, and our virginity though valiant, in the defence yet is weak: vnfold to vs some warlike resistance.

Par. There is none. Man setting downe before you, will vndermine you, and blow you vp.

Hel. Blesse our poore Virginity from vnderminers and blowers vp. Is there no Military policy how Virgins might blow vp men?

Par. Virginity being blowne downe, Man will quicklier be blowne vp marry in blowing him downe again, with the breach your selues made, you lose your Citty. It is not politike, in the Common-wealth of Nature, to preserve virginity. Losse of Virginity, is rationall encrease, and there was neuer Virgin got, till virginity was first lost. That you were made of, is mettall to make Virgins. Virginity, by being once lost, may be ten times found. by being euer kept, it is euer lost: tis too cold a companion. Away with't.

Hel. I will stand for't a little, though therefore I die a Virgin.

Par. There's little can bee saide in't, 'tis against the rule of Nature. To speake on the part of virginity, is to accuse your Mothers; which is most infallible disobedience.
He that hangs himselfe is a Virgin. Virginity murthers it selfe, and should be buried in high wayes out of all sanctified limits, as a desperate Offendresse against Nature. Virginity breeds mites, much like a Cheese, consumes it selfe to the very paying, and so dies with feeding his owne stomacke. Besides, Virginity is peeuish, proud, ydle, made of selfe-loue, which is the most inhibited sinne in the Cannon. Keepe it not, you cannot chooseth but loose by't. Out with't. within ten yeare it will make it selfe two, which is a goodly increase,
and the principall it selfe not much the worse.
Away with't.

Hel. How might one do sir, to loose it to her owne liking?

Par. Let mee see. Marry ill, to like him that ne're it likes. 'Tis a commodity will lose the glosse with lying:
The longer kept, the lesse worth. Off with't while 'tis vendible. Answer the time of request, Virginity like an olde Courtier, weares her cap out of fashion, richly futed, but vsfuteable, iust like the brooch & the tooth-pick, which were not now your Date is better in your Pye and your Porridge, then in your cheek: and your virginity, your old virginity, is like one of our French wither'd peares, it lookes ill, it eates drily, marry 'tis a wither'd peare it was formerly better, marry yet 'tis a wither'd peare. Will you any thing with it?

Hel. Not my virginity yet.

There shall your Master haue a thousand lours,
A Mother, and a Mistresse, and a friend,
A Phenix, Captaine, and an enemy,
A guide, a Goddesse, and a Soueraigne,
A Counsellor a Traitorresse, and a Deare:
His humble ambition, proud humility
His .arring, concord: and his discord, dulcet
His faith, his sweet disaster with a world
Of pretty fond adoptitious christendomes
That blinking Cupid gossips. Now shall he:
I know not what he shall, God send him well,
The Courts a learning place, and he is one

Par. What one saith?

Hel. That I wish well, 'tis pittie

Par. What's pittie?

Hel. That wishing well had not a body in't,
Which might be felt, that we the poorer borne,
Whose baser starres do shut vs vp in wishes,
Might vvith effects of them follow our friends,
And shew what vve alone must thinke, which neuer
Returnes vs thanks

Enter Page.

Page. Monsieur Parrolles,
My Lord calls for you.

Par. Little Helles farewell, if I can remember thee, I will thinke of thee at Court

Hel. Monsieur Parolles, you were borne vnder a charitable starre.

Par. Vnder Mars I

Hel. I especially thinke, vnder Mars.

Par. Why vnder Mars?

Hel. The warres hath so kept you vnder, that you must needs be borne vnder Mars.

Par. When he was predominant.

Hel. When he was retrograde I thinke rather

Par. Why thinke you so?

Hel. You go to much backward when you fight.

Par. That's for aduantage.

Hel. So is running away,
When feare proposes the safetie
But the composition that your valour and feare makes in you, is a vertue of a good wing, and I like the weare well

Parolles. I am so full of businesse, I cannot answere thee acutely. I will returne perfect Courtier, in the which my instruction shall serue to naturalize thee, so thou wilt be capeable of a Courtiers counsell, and vnderstand what aduice shall thrust vpon thee, else thou diest in thine vnthankfulness, and thine ignorance makes thee away, farewell. When thou hast leysure, say thy prayers: when thou hast none, remember thy Friends.

V 2

Ger

Get thee a good husband, and use him as he uses thee:
So farewell.

Hel. Our remedies oft in our selues do lye,
Which we ascribe to heauen: the fated skye
Giues vs free scope, onely doth backward pull
Our slow designes, when we our selues are dull.
What power is it, which mounes my loue so hye,
That makes me see, and cannot see mine eye?
The mightiest space in fortune, Nature brings
To soyne like, likes; and kisse like natue things.
Impossible be strange attempts to those
That weigh their paines in lence, and do suppose
What hath beene, cannot be. Who euer stroue
To shew her merit, that did misse her loue?
(The Kings disease) my proiect may deceiue me,
But my intents are fixt, and will not leaue me.

Flourish Cornets.
Enter the King of France with Letters, and diuers Attendants.

King. The Florentines and *Senoy*s are by th'eares, Hau'e fought with equall fortune, and continue
A brauing warre.

1 Lo G. So tis reported sir.

King. Nay tis most credible, we heere receiue it,
A certaintie vouch'd from our Cousin Anstris,
With caution, that the Florentine will moue vs
For speedie ayde: wherein our dearest friend
Preiudicates the businesse, and would seeme
To haue vs make demall.

1 Lo G. His loue and wisdom
Approvd so to your Maie'ty, may pleade
For amplest credence.

King. He hath arm'd our answer,
And Florence is deni'd before he comes
Yet for our Gentlemen that meane to see
The Tuscan seruice, freely haue they leaue
To stand on either part.

2 Lo E. It well may serue
A nurserie to our Gentrie, who are sick
For breathing, and exploit.

King. What's he comes heere.

Enter Bertram, Lafew, and Parolles.

1 Lo G. It is the Count Rosignoll my good Lord, Yong Bertram.

King. Youth, thou bear'st thy Fathers face,
Franke Nature rather curious then in hast
Hath well compos'd thee Thy Fathers morall parts
Maist thou inherite too: Welcome to Paris.

Ber. My thanks and dutie are your Maie'ties;
King. I would I had that corporall soundnesse now,
As when thy father, and my selfe, in friendship
First tri'd our souldiership: he did looke faire
Into the seruice of the time, and was Discipl'd of the brauest. He last'd long,
But on vs both did haggish Age steale on,
And wore vs out of act. It much repaires me;
To talke of your good father; in his youth
He had the wit, which I can well obserue
To day in our yong Lords: but they may rest
Till their owne scorne returne to them vnnoted
Ere they can hide their leuitie in honour.
So like a Courtier, contempt nor bitternesse

Were in his pride, or sharpnesse; if they were,
His equall had awak'd them, and his honour
Clocke to it selfe, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speake: and at this time
His tongue obey'd his hand. Who were below him,
He vs'd as creatures of another place,
And bow'd his eminent top to their low rankes,
Making them proud of his humilitie,
In their poore praise he humbled. Such a man
Might be a copie to these yonger times;
Which followed well, would demonstrate them now
But goes backward.

Ber. His good remembrance sir
Lies richer in your thoughts, then on his tombe:
So in approue liues not his Epitaph,
As in your royall speech.

King. Would I were with him he would alwaies say,
(Me thinks I heare him now) his plausiue words
He scatter'd not in eares, but grafted them
To grow there and to beare: Let me not lye,
This his good melancholly oft began
On the Catastrophe and heele of pastime
When it was out: Let me not lye (quoth hee)
After my flame lackes oyle, to be the snuffe
Of yonger spirits, whose apprehensiu sences
All but new things disdain; whose iudgements are Meere fathers of their garments: whose countenances
Expire before their fashions: this he wish'd.

I alter him, do after him wish too:
Since I nor wax nor home can bring home,
I quickly were dissolued from my liue
To gae some Labourers room.

2 Lo E. You'r loued Sir,
They that least lend it you, shall lacke you: It
King. I fill a place I know't: how long, Count
Since the Physician at your fathers died?
He was much fam'd.

Ber. Some six moneths since my Lord.
King. If he were liuing, I would try him yet.
Lend me an arme the rest haue worne me out
With feuerall applications Nature and sicknesse
Debate it at their leisure Welcome Count,
My sonne's no deeter

Ber. Thanke your Maie'ty.

Flourish

Exit

Enter Countesse, Steward, and Clewre

Count. I will now heare, what say you of this gentlewoman.

St. Maddam the care I haue had to euen your content, I with might be found in the Kalender of my past endeuours, for then we wound our Modestie, and make foule the clearenesse of our desertings, when of our selues we publish them.

Count. What doe's this knaue heere? Get you gone sirra: the complaints I haue heard of you I do not all beleeue, 'tis my slownesse that I doe not: For I know you lacke not folly to commit them, & haue abilitie enough to make such knaueries yours.

Cle. 'Tis not vnknown to you Madam, I am a poore fellow.

Count. Well sir.
Cle. No maddam,
'Tis not so well that I am poore, though manie
of

of the rich are damn'd, but if I may haue your Ladships good will to goe to the world, Isabel the woman and w will doe as we may.

Con. Wilt thou needes be a begger?

Clo. I doe beg your good will in this case.

Con. In what case?

Clo. In Isabel's case and mine owne: seruice is no heritadge, and I thinke I shall neuer haue the blessing of God, till I haue issue a my bodie: for they say barnes are blessings.

Con. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marrie?

Clo. My poore bodie Madam requires it, I am driuen onely the flesh, and hee must needes goe that the diuell driues.

Con. Is this all your worships reason?

Clo. Faith Madam I haue other holie reasons, such as they are

Con. May the world know them?

Clo. I haue beene Madam a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are, and indeede I doe marrie that I may repent

Con. Thy marriage sooner then thy wickednesse

Clo. I am our a friends Madam, and I hope to haue friends for my wifes sake.

Con. Such friends are thine enemies knaue

Clo. Y'are shallow Madam in great friends, for the knaues come to doe that for me which I am a wearie of. he that eres my Land, spares my teame, and giues mee leaue to Inne the crop. if I be his cuckold hee's my drudge, he that comfortes my wife, is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; hee that cherishes my flesh and blood, loues my flesh and blood; he that loues my flesh and blood is my friend ergo, he that kisses my wife is my friend: if men could be contented to be what they are, there were no feare in marriage, for yong Charbon the Puritan, and old Poyssam the Papist, how somere their hearts are seuer'd in Religion, their heads are both one, they may ioule horns together like any Deare's ch Herd.

Con. Wilt thou euer be a foule mouth'd and calumnious knaue?

Clo. A Prophet I Madam, and I speake the truth the next waite, for i the Ballad will repeate, which men full true shall finde, your marriage comes by destinie, your Cuckow sings by kinde.

Con. Get you gone sir, Ile talke with you more anon

Stew. May it please you Madam, that hee bid Hellen come to you, of her I am to speake.

Con. Sirra tell my gentlewoman I would speake with her, Hellen I meane

Clo. Was this faire face the cause, quoth she,

Why the Grecians sacked Troy,
Fond donee, donee, fond was this King Prisms toy,
With that she sighed as she stood, bis

And gaue this sentence then, among nine bad if one be good, among nine bad if one be good, there's yet one good in ten.

Con. What, one good in tenne? you corrupt the song sirra.

Clo. One good woman in ten Madam, which is a purifying ath' song would God would serue the world so all the yeere, weed finde no fault with the true woman if I were the Parson, one in ten quoth a? and wee might haue a good woman borne but pre euerie blazing staire, or at an earthquake, 'twould mend the Lotteriewell, & man may draw his heart out ere a plucke one;

Con. Youle begone sir knaue, and doe as I command you?

Clo. That man should be at womans footmand, and yet no hurt done, though honestie be no Puritan, yet it will doe no hurt, it will weare the Surplis of humilitie ouer the blacke-Gowne of a bigge heart: I am going forsooth, the businesse is for Helen to come hither.

Exit.

Con. Well now

Stew. I know Madam you loue your Gentlewoman intirely.

Con. Faith I doe. her Father bequeath'd her to mee, and she her selfe without other aduantage, may lawfully make title to as much loue as shee findes, there is more owing her then is paid, and more shall be paid her then shee demand

Stew. Madam, I was verie late more neere her then I thinke shee wisht mee, alone shee was, and did communicate to her selfe her owne words to her owne cares, shee thought, I dare vowe for her, they toucht not anie stranger sence, her matter was, shee loued your Sonne; Fortune shee said was no goddesse, that had put such difference betwixt their two estates. Ioue no god, that would not extend his might onlie, where qualities were leuell, Queene of Virgins, that would suffer her poore Knight surpris'd without rescue in the first assault or ransome afterward: This shee deliuer'd in the most bitter touch of sorow that ere I heard Virgin exclaime in, which I held my dutie speedily to acquaint you withall, sithence in the losse that may happen, it concernes you something to know it

Con. You haue discharg'd this honestie, keepe it to your selfe, manie likelihoods inform'd mee of this before, which hung so tottering in the ballance, that I could neither beleue nor misdoubt: prae you leaue mee, stall this in your bosome, and I thanke you for your honest care. I will speake with you further anon.

Exit Steward.

Enter Hellen.

Old Con. Euen so it was with me when I was yong: If euer we are natures, these are ours, this thorne Dorn to our Rose of youth rightlie belong Our blood to vs, this to our blood is borne, It is the show, and lease of natures truth, Where loues strong passion is imprest in youth, By our remembrances of daies forgon, Such were our faults, or then we thought them none, Her eie is sicke on't, I obserue her now.

Hell. What is your pleasure Madam?

Ol. Con. You know Hellen I am a mother to you.

Hell. Mine honorable Mistress.

Ol. Con. Nay a mother, why not a mother? when I fed a mother

Me thought you saw a serpent, what's in mother, That you start at it? I say I am your mother, And put you in the Catalogue of those That were enwomb'd mine, 'tis often seene Adoption strues with nature, and choise breeds A native slip to vs from forraine seedes: You nere oppress me with a mothers groane, Yet I expresse to you a mothers care, (Gods mercie maiden) does it curd thy blood To say I am thy mother? what's the matter, That this distemper'd messenger of wet?

V 3

The

The manie colours Iris rounds thine eye?

Why, that you are my daughter?

Hell. That I am not.

Old Cou. I say I am your Mother.

Hell. Pardon Madam.

The Count Rosillon cannot be my brother:
I am from humble, he from honored name:
No note vpon my Parents, his all noble,
My Master, my deere Lord he is, and I
His seruant liue, and will his vassall die:
He must not be my brother.

Ol. Cou. Nor I your Mother.

Hell. You are my mother Madam, would you were
So that my Lord your sonne were not my brother,
Indeede my mother, or were you both our mothers,
I care no more for, then I doe for heaven,
So I were not his sister, can't no other,
But I your daughter, he must be my brother.

Old Cou. Yes Hellen, you might be my daughter in law,
God shiuld you meane it not, daughter and mother
So strue vpon your pulse, what pale agen?
My feare hath catcht your fondnesse: now I see
The mistrie of your louelinese, and finde
Your salt teares head, now to all sence 'tis grosse.
You loue my sonne, inuention is asham'd
Against the proclamation of thy passion
To say thou doost not. therefore tell me true,
But tell me then 'tis so, for looke, thy cheekes
Confesse it 'ton tooth to th' other, and thine eyes
See it so grosely showne in thy behauiours,
That in their kinde they speake it, onely sinne
And hellish obstinacie tye thy tongue
That truth should be suspected, speake, ist so?
If it be so, you haue wound a goodly clewe
If it be not, forswear't how ere I charge thee,
As heauen shall worke in me for thine auail
To tell me true lie.

Hell. Good Madam pardon me.

Cou. Do you loue my Sonne?

Hell. Your pardon noble Mistris

Cou. Loue you my Sonne?

Hell. Doe not you loue him Madam?

Cou. Goenot about, my loue hath in't a bond

Whereof the world takes note. Come, come, disclose
The state of your affection, for your passions
Haue to the full appeach'd.

Hell. Then I confesse

Here on my knee, before high heauen and you,
That before you, and next vnto high heauen, I loue your Sonne:

My friends were poore but honest, so's my loue.

Be not offended, for it hurts not him

That he is lou'd of me; I follow him not

By any token of presumptuous suite,

Nor would I haue him, till I doe deserue him,

Yet neuer know how that desert should be.

I know I loue in vaine, strue against hope

Yet in this captious, and intemible Sine.

I still poure in the waters of my loue

And lacke not to loose still; thus Indian like

Religious in mine error, I adore

The Sunne that lookes vpon his worshipper,

But knowes of him no more. My deereft Madam,

Let not your hate incounter with my loue,

For louing where you doe; but if your selfe,

Whose aged honor cites a vertuous youth,

Did euer, in so true a flame of liking,
Wish chafly, and loue dearly, that your Dian
Was both her selfe and loue, O then giue pittie
To her whose state is such, that cannot choose
But lend and giue where she is sure to loose;
That seekes not to finde that, her search implies,
But riddle like, liues sweetely where she dies.

Cou. Had you not lately an intent, speake truly,
To goe to Paris?

Hell. Madam I had.

Cou. Wherefore tell true.

Hell. I will tell truth by grace it selfe I sweare:
You know my Father left me some prescriptions
Of rare and prou'd effects, such as his reading
And manifest experience, had collected
For generall soueraignie. and that he wil'd me
In heede full reseruation to bestow them,
As notes, whose faculties in clusue were,
More then they were in note. Amongst the rest,
There is a remedie, approu'd, set downe,
To cure the desperate languishings whereof
The King is render'd lost.

Cou. This was your motiue for Paris, was it, speake?

Hell. My Lord, your sonne, made me to think of this,
Else Paris, and the medicine, and the King,
Had from the conuersation of my thoughts,
Happily beene absent then.

Cou. But thinke you Hellen,

If you should tender your supposed aide,
He would receiue it? He and his Phisitions
Are of a minde, he, that they cannot helpe him:
I hey, that they cannot helpe, how shall they credit
A poore vnlearned Virgin, when the Schooles
Embowel'd of their doctrine, haue left off
The danger to it selfe.

Hell. There's something in't
More then my Fathers skill, which was the great'ft
Of his profession, that his good receipt,
Shall for my legacie be sanctified
Byth' luckiest stars in heauen, and would your honor
But giue me leaue to trie successe, I'd venture
The well lost life of mine, on his Graces cure,
By such a day, an houre.

Cou. Doo'st thou beleuee't?

Hell. I Madam knowingly.

Cou. Why Hellen thou shalt haue my leaue and loue,
Meanes and attendants, and my louing greetings
To thee of mine in Court, Ile staie at home
And praie Gods blessing into thy attempt:
Begot to morrow, and be sure of this,
What I can helpe thee to, thou shalt not misse. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter the King with diuers young Lords, taking leaue for the Florentine warre. Count, Rosse, and Parrolles. Florish Cornets.

King. Farewell young Lords, these warlike principles
Doe not throw from you, and you my Lords farewell.
Share the aduice betwixt you, if both gaine, all
The gust doth stretch it selfe as tis receiue'd,
And is enough for both.

Lord. G. 'Tis our hope sir,

After

After well entred souldiers, to retaine
And finde your grace in health.

King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart
Will not confesse he owes the mallady
That doth my life besiege. farwell yong Lords,
Whether I liue or die, be you the sonnes
Of worthy French men: let higher Italy
(Those bated that inherit but the fall
Of the last Moharchy) see that you come
Not to wooe honour, but to wed it, when
The brauest questant shrinkes. finde what you seeke,
That fame may cry you loud. I say farewell.

L. G. Health at your bidding serue your Maiesly.

King. Those girles of Italy, take heed of them
They say our French, lacke language to deny
If they demand beware of being Captiues
Before you serut.

Bo. Our hearts receiue your warnings

King. Farewell, come hether to me

1. Lo. G. Oh my sweet Lord y you wil stay behind vs

Parr. 'Tis not his fault the spark

2. Lo. E. Oh 'tis braue warres

Parr. Most admirable, I haue scene those warres

Rossill. I am commanded here, and kept a coyle with,
Too young, and the next yeere, and 'tis too early.

Parr. And thy minde stand too t boy,

Steale away brauely

Rossill. I shal stay here the for-horse to a smocke,
Creeking my shoes on the plaine Mafonry,
Till honour be bought vp, and no sword worne
But one to dance with by heauen, Ile steale away.

1. Lo. G. There shanour in the theft

Parr. Commit it Count

2. Lo. E. I am your accessory, and so farewell

Ref. I grow to you, & our parting is a tortur'd body.

1. Lo. G. Farewell Capitaine

2. Lo. E. Sweet Mounfier Parolles

Parr. Noble Heroes; my sword and yours are kinne, good sparkes and lustrous, a word good mettals You shall finde in the Regiment of the Spinij, one Capitaine Spinio his seatrice, with an Embleme of warre heere on his sinister cheeke; it was t'is very sword entrench'd it say to him I liue, and obserue his reports for me.

Lo. G. We shall noble Capitaine.

Parr. Mars doate on you for his nouices, what will ye doe?

Ross. Stay the King

Parr. Vie a more spacious ceremonie to the Noble Lords, you haue restrain'd your selfe within the List of too cold an idieu be more expresseive to them; for they weare themselves in the cap of the time, there do mustter true gate, ear, speake, and moue vnder the influence of the most receiud starre, and though the deuill leade the measure, such are to be followed after them, and take a more dilated farewell.

Ross. And I will doe so

Parr. Worthy fellows, and like to prouoe most fi-newie sword-men

Exeunt.

Enter Lafew.

L. Laf. Pardon my Lord for mee and for my tidings

King. Ile see thee to stand vp. (pardon,

L. Laf. Then heres a man stands that has brought his
I would you had kneel'd my Lord to aske me mercy.

And that at my bidding you could so stand vp.

King. I would I had, so I had broke thy pate

And askt thee mercy for't.

Laf. Goodfaith a-crosse, but my good Lord 'tis thus,
Will you be cur'd of your infirmities?

King. No.

Laf. O will you eat no grapes my royall foxe?
Yes but you will, my noble grapes, and if
My royall foxe could reach them. I haue seen a medicine
That's able to breath life into a stone,
Quicken a rocke, and make you dance Canari
With sprightly fire and motion, whose simple touch
Is powerfull to araise King Peppen, nay
To giue great Charlemaine a pen in's hand
And write to her a loue-line.

King. What her is this?

Laf. Why doctor she my Lord, there's one arriu'd,
If you will see her now by my faith and honour,
If seriously I may conuay my thoughts
In this my light deliuerance, I haue spoke
With one, that in her sexe, her yeeres, profession,
Wisedome and constancy, hath amaz'd mee more
Then I dare blame my weakenesse. will you see her?
For that is her demand, and know her businesse?
That done, laugh well at me.

King. Now good Lafew,
Bring in the admiration, that we with thee
May spend our wonder too, or take off thine
By wondering how thou tookst it.

Laf. Nay Ile fit you,

And not be all day neither.

King. Thus he his speciall nothing euer prologues.

Laf. Nay, come your waie.

Enter Hellett

King. This haste hath wings indeed.

Laf. Nay, come your waies,
This is his Maieslie, say your minde to him,
A Traitor you doe looke like, but such traitors
His Maieslie seldome feares, I am Cresseds Vncle,
That dare leaue two together, far you well. Exit.

King. Now faire one, do's your busines follow vs?

Hel. My good Lord,
Gerard de Narbon was my father,
In what he did professe, well found.

King. I knew him.

Hel. The rather will I spare my praises towards him,
Knowing him is enough: on's bed of death,
Many recents he gaue me, chiefe one,
Which as the dearest issue of his practice
And of his olde experience, th'onlie darling,
He bad me store vp, as a triple eye,
Safer then mine owne two more deare I haue so,
And hearing your high Maieslie is toucht
With that malignant cause, wherein the honour
Of my deare fathers gift, stands cheefe in power,
I come to tender it, and my appliance,
With all bound humbleness.

King. We thank you maiden,
But may not be so credulous of cure,
When our most learned Doctors leaue vs, and
The congregated Colledge haue concluded,
That labouring Art can neuer ransom nature
From her inaydible estate: I say we must not
So staine our iudgement, or corrupt our hope,
To prostitute our past-cure malladie
To empericks, or to disseuer so
Our great selfe and our credit, to esteeme
A sencelesse helpe; when helpe past sence we deeme.

Hel. My

Hel. My dutie then shall pay me for my paines :
I will no more enforce mine office on you ,
Humbly intreating from your royall thoughts,
A modest one to beare me backe againe.

King. I cannot giue thee lesse to becal'd gratefull:
Thou thoughtst to helpe me, and such thanks I giue,
As one neere death to those that wish him liue:
But what at full I know, thou knowst no part,
I knowing all my perill, thou no Art

Hel. What I can doe, can doe no hurt to try,
Since you set vp your rest 'gainst remedie .
He that of greatest workes is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister:
So holy Writ, in babes hath iudgement showne,
When Iudges haue bin babes; great fouds haue flowne
From simple sources . and great Seas haue dried
When Miracles haue by the great't beene denied.
Oft expectation failes, and most oft there
Where most it promises and oft it hits,
Where hope is coldest, and despaire most shifts.

King. I must not heare thee, fare thee wel kind maide,
Thy paines not vs'd, must by thy selfe be paid,
Proffers not tooke, reape thanks for their reward.

Hel. Inspired Merit so by breath is bard,
It is not so wight him that all things knowes
As 'tis with vs, that square our guesse by shoues
But most it is presumption in vs, when
The help of heauen we count the act of men.
Deare sir, to my endeavors giue consent,
Of heauen, not me, make an experiment.
I am not an Imposture, that proclaime
My selfe against the leuill of mine aime ,
But know I thinke, and thinke I know most sure,
My Art is not past power, nor you past cure.

King. Art thou so confident? Within what space
Hopt thou my cure?

Hel. The greatest grace lending grace,
Ere twice the horses of the sunne shall bring
Their fiery torcher his diurnall ring,
Ere twice in murke and occidentall dampe
Most Hesperus hath quench'd her sleepey Lampe:
Or foure and twenty times the Pylots glasse
Hath told the theewist minutes, how they passe:
What is in time, from your sound parts shall flie,
Health shall liue free, and sickenesse freely dye.

King. Vpon thy certainty and confidence,
What dar'st thou venter?

Hel. Taxe of impudence,
A strumpets boldnesse, a diuulged shame
Traduc'd by odious ballads . my maidens name
Seard otherwise, ne worfe of worst extended
With vildest torture, let my life be ended

King. Methinks in thee some blessed spirit doth speak
His powerfull found, within an organ weak:
And what impossibility would slay
In common fence, fence saues another way:
Thy life is deere, for all that life can rate
Worth name of life, in thee hath estimate:
Youth, beauty, wisdom, courage, all
That happines and prime, can happy call:
Thou this to hazard, needs must intimate
Skill infinite, or monstrous desperate,
Sweet praefiser, thy Physicke I will try,
That ministers thine owne death if I die.

Hel. If I breake time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, vnspittued let me die,

And well deseru'd: not helping, death's my fee,
But if I helpe, what doe you promise me.

King. Make thy demand.

Hel. But will you make it euen?

King. I by my Scepter, and my hopes of helpe.

Hel. Then shalt thou giue me with thy kingly hand
What husband in thy power I will command:
Exempted be from me the arrogance
To choose from forth the royall bloud of France,
My low and humble name to propagate
With any branch or image of thy state:
But such a one thy vassall, whom I know
Is free for me to aske, thee to bestow.

King. Heere is my hand, the premises obscur'd
Thy will by my performance shall be seru'd:
So make the choice of thy owne time, for I
Thy resolv'd Patient, on thee still relye:
More should I question thee, and more I must,
Though more to know, could not be more to trust:
From whence thou cam'st, how tended on, but rest
Vnquestion'd welcome, and vndoubted blest.
Giue me some helpe heere hoz, if thou proceed,
As high as word, my deed shall match thy deed.

Flourish.

Exit.

Enter Countesse and Clowne.

Lady. Come on sir, I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clowne. I will shew my selfe highly fed, and lowly taught, I know my businesse is but to the Court

Lady. To the Court, why what placemake you speciall, when you put off that with such contempt, but to the Court?

Clowne. Truly Madam, if God haue lent a man any manners, hee may easilie put it off at Court: hee that cannot make a legge, put off's cap, kisse his hand, and say nothing, has neither legge, hands, lippe, nor cap; and indeede such a fellow,
to say precisely, were not for the Court, but for me, I haue an answer will serue all men.

Lady. Marry that's a bountifull answer that fits all questions

Clowne. It is like a Barbers chaire that fits all buttockes, the pin buttocke, the quatch-buttocke, the brawn buttocke,
or any buttocke.

Lady. Will your answer serue fit to all questions?

Clowne. As fit as ten groats is for the hand of an Attorney, as your French Crowne for your raffety punke, as this ruff for Tom's fore-finger, as a pancake for Shrovetuesday, a Morris for May-day, as the naile to his hole, the Cuckold to his home, as a scolding queane to a wrangling knaue, as the Nuns lip to the Friars mouth, nay as the pudding to his skin.

Lady. Haue you, I say, an answer of such fitnessse for all questions?

Clowne. From below your Duke, to beneath your Constable,
it will fit any question.

Lady. It must be an answer of most monstrous size,
that must fit all demands.

Clowne. But a trifle neither in good faith, if the learned should speake truth of it: heere it is, and all that belongs to't. Aske mee if I am a Courtier, it shall doe you no harme to learne.

Lady. To be young againe if we could: I will bee a foole in question, hoping to bee the wiser by your answer.

Lady.

La. I pray you fir, are you a Gourmer?
Clo. O Lord fir, theſe a ſimple putting off: more,
more, a hundred ſifters.

La. Sir I am a poore ſcoundrell, that loſes you.
Clo. O Lord fir, thicke, thicke, ſpare not me.

La. I thinke fir, you can't eate none of this kindly meate

Clo. O Lord fir, ſay put me too, I warrant you.

La. You were lately whipt fir as I thinke

Clo. O Lord fir, ſpare not me

La. Doe you erie O Lord fir at your whipping, and pare not me? Indeed your O Lord fir, is very ſequent to your whipping: you would anſwer very well to a whipping if you were but bound too.

Clo. I nere had worſe lucke in my life in my O Lord
fir. I fee things may ſerue long, but not ſerue euer

La. I play the noble huſwife with the time, to enter-taine it ſo merrily with a ſoole

Clo. O Lord fir, why nere't ſerues well agen

La. And end fir to your buſineſſe give Hellen this,
And vrge het to a preſent anſwer backe,
Commend me to my kinfmen, and my ſonne,
This is not much.

Clo. Not much commendation to them.

La. Not much imploymeſt for you, you vnderſtand me

Clo. Moſt fruitfully, I am there, before my legges

La. Haſt you agen. Exeunt

Enter Conſt, Lafew, and Perolles.

Ol. Laf. They ſay miracles are paſt, and we haue our Philophicall perſons, to make moderne and familiar things ſupernaturall and cauſeleſſe Hence is it, that we make trifles of terrours, enſconcing our ſelues into ſeem-ing knowledge, when we ſhould ſubmit our ſelues to an vknowne feare

Par. Why 'tis the rareſt argument of wonder, that hath ſhot out in our latter times

Per. And ſo 'tis.

Ol. Laf. To be reliquiſht of the Artiſts

Par. So I ſay both of Galen and Paracelſus.

Ol. Laf. Of all the learned and authentick fellows.

Par. Right ſo I ſay.

Ol. Laf. That gaue him out incurable.

Par. Why there 'tis, ſo ſay I too

Ol. Laf. Not to be help'd.

Par. Right, as 'twere a man aſſur'd of a——

Ol. Laf. Vncertaine life, and ſure death

Par. Juſt, you ſay well ſo would I haue ſaid.

Ol. Laf. I may truly ſay, it is a noueltie to the world.

Par. It is indeede if you will haue it in ſhewing, you ſhall reade it in what do ye call there

Ol. Laf. A ſhewing of a heavenly effect in an earthly Actor

Par. That's it, I would haue ſaid, the verie ſame

Ol. Laf. Why your Dolphin is not luſtier: ſore mee
I ſpeake in reſpect——

Par. Nay 'tis ſtrange, 'tis very ſtrange, that is the breefe and tedious of it, and he's of a moſt facinerous ſpirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the——

Ol. Laf. Very hand of heauen

Par. I, ſo I ſay.

Ol. Laf. In a moſt weak——

Par. And debile miniſter great power, great tran-cendence, which ſhould indeede giue vs a further viſe to be made, then alone the recou'ry of the king, as to bee

Ol. Laf. Generally thankfull.

Enter King, Hellen, and attendants.

Par. I would haue ſaid it, you ſay well: heere comes the King.

Ol. Laf. Luſſique, as the Dutchman ſaies: Ile like a maide the Better whilſt I haue a tooth in my head why he's able to leade her a Carranto.

Par. Mor du vniager, is not this Helen?

Ol. Laf. Fore God I thinke ſo.

King. Goe call before mee all the Lords in Court,

Sit my preſeruer by thy patients ſide,

And with this healthfull hand whoſe baniſht ſence

Thou haſt repeal'd, a ſecond time receyue

The confirmation of my promis'd guiſt,

Which but attends thy naming.

Enter 3 or 4 Lords.

Faire Maide ſend forth thine eye, this youthfull parcell

Of Noble Batchellors, ſtand at my beſtowing,

Ore whom both Soueraigne power, and fathers voice

I haue to vſe, thy franke election make,

Thou haſt power to chooſe, and they none to forſake.

Hel. To each of you, one faire and vertuous Miſtris;

Fall when loue pleaſe, marry to each but one.

Ol. Laf. I'de giue bay curtall, and his ſumme

My mouth no more were broken then theſe boyes,

And writ as little beard

King. Peruſe them well:

Not one of theſe, but had a Noble father

She addreſſes her to a Lord

Hel. Gentlemen, heauen hath through me, ſeſtor'd
the king to health

All. We vnderſtand it, and thanke heauen for you.

Hel. I am a ſimple Maide, and therein wealthieſt

That I proteſt, I ſimply am a Maide.

Pleaſe it your Maieſtie, I haue done already

The bluſhes in my cheekes thus whiſper mee,

We bluſh that thou ſhouldeſt chooſe, but be refus'd;

Let the white death ſit on thy cheek for euer,

Wee'l nere come there againe

King. Make choiſe and ſee,

Who ſhuns thy loue, ſhuns all his loue in mee.

Hel. Now Dian from thy Altar do I fly,

And to imperiall loue, that God moſt high

Do my hieſt ſtreame Sir, wil you heare my ſuite?

1 Lo And grant it.

Hel. Thankes fir, all the reſt is mute.

Ol. Laf. I had rather be in this choiſe, then throw

Amef-ace for my life

Hel. The honor fir that flames in your faire eyes,

Before I ſpeake too threatningly replies

I oue make your fortunes twentie times above

Her that ſo wiſhes, and her humble loue.

2 Lo No better if you pleaſe.

Hel. My wiſh receive,

Which great loue grant, and ſo I take my leaue.

Ol. Laf. Do all they denie her? And they were ſons of mine, I'de haue them whipt, or I would ſend them
to'th Turke to make Eunuches of.

Hel. Be not afraid that I your hand ſhould take,

Ile neuer do you wrong for your owne ſake.

Bleſſing vpon your vowe, and in your bed

Finde fairer fortune, if you euer wed.

Ol. Laf. Theſe boyes are boyes of Ice, they'le none haue

haue heere: sure they are bastards to the English, the French nere got em.

La. You are too young, too happie, and too good To make you selfe a sonne out of my blood.

41. Lord. Fairer now, I thinke not so.

Ol. Lord. There's one gape yet, I am sure thy father drunke wine, But if thou be'st not an asse, I am a yowth offourtee: I haue knowne thee already.

Hel. I dare not say I take you, but I'goue Me and my seruice; euer whilst I liue Into your guiding power: This is the man.

King. Why then young Bertram take her shee's thy wife.

Ber. My wife my Lord? I shal beseech your highnes In such a busines, giue me leaue to vse The helpe of mine owne eyes.

King. Know'st thou not Bertram what shee ha's done for mee?

Ber. Yes my good Lord, but neuer hope to know why I should marrie her

King. Thou know'st shee ha's rais'd me from my sickly bed.

Ber. But followes it my Lord, to bring me downe Must answer for your raising? I knowe her well. Shee had her breeding at my fathers charge A poore Physicians daughter my wife? Disdaine Rather corrupt me euer.

King. Tis onely title thou disdaint in her, the which I can build vp. strange is it that our bloods Of colour, waight, and heat, pour'd all together, Would quite confound distinction: yet stands off In differences so mightie. If she bee All that is vertuous (saue what thou dislik'st) A poore Physicians daughter, thou dislik'st Of vertue for the name. but doe not so. From lowest place, whence vertuous things proceed, The place is dignified by th' doers deede. Where great additions swell's, and vertue none, It is a dropied honour Good alone, Is good without a name? Vilenesse is so: The proprietie by what is is, should go, Not by the title. Shee is young, wise, faire, In these, to Nature shee's immediate heire. And these breed honour that is honours scorne, Which challenges it selfe, as honours borne, And is not like the fire Honours thrine, When rather from our acts we them deriue Then our fore-goers the meere words, a flauie Deboish'd on euerie tombe, on euerie graue. A lying Trophee, and as oft is dumbe, Where dust, and damnd oblivion is the Tombe. Of honour'd bones indeed, what should be saide? If thou canst like this creature, as a maide, I can create the rest Vertue, and shee Is her owne dower Honour and wealth, from mee.

Ber. I cannot loue her, nor will strue to doo't

King. Thou wrong'st thy selfe, if thou shold'st strue to choos.

Hel. That you are well restor'd my Lord, I'me glad: Let the rest go.

King. My Honor's at the stake, which to defeat I must produce my power Heere, take her hand,

Proud scornfull boy, vnworthie this good gift, That dost in vile misprision shackle vp

My loue, and her desert: that canst not dreame, We poizing vs in her defectiue scale,

Shall weigh thee to the brame: That wilt not know, It is in Vs to plant thine Honour, where We please to haue it grow. Checke thy conceipt: Obey Our will, which traualles in thy good:

Beleeue not thy disdaine, but presentlie

Do thine owne fortunes that obedient right Which both thy dutie owes, and Our power claimes,

Or I will throw thee from my care for euer Into the staggers, and the carelessse lapse.

Of youth and ignorance: both my reuenge and hate Looking vpon thee, in the name of iustice, Withour all termes of pittie. Speake, thine answer.

Ber. Pardon my gracious Lord: for I submit My fancie to your eyes, when I consider

What great creation, and what dole of honour Flies where you bid it: I finde that shee which last

Was in my Nobler thoughts, most base, is now The praised of the King, who so ennobled,

Is as'twere borne so

King. Take her by the hand, And tell her shee is thine: to whom I promise A counterpoize: If not to thy estate,

A ballance more repleat.

Ber. I take her hand.

King. Good fortune, and the fauour of the King Smile vpon this Contract: whose Ceremonie

Shall seeme expedient on the now borne briefe, And be perform'd to night: the soleme Feast

Shall more attend vpon the coming space, Expecting absent friends. As thou lou'st her,

Thy loue's to me Religious: else, do's erre. Exeunt

Parolles and Lafew stay behind, commenting of this wedding.

Laf. Do you heare Monsieur? A word with you.

Par. Your pleasure sir.

Laf. Your Lord and Master did well to make his recantation

Par. Recantation? My Lord? my Master?

Laf. I: Is it not a Language I speake?

Par. A most harsh one, and not to bee vnderstoode without bloudie succeeding My Master?

Laf. Are you Companion to the Count Rosillion?

Par. To any Count, to all Counts: to what is man.

Laf. To what is Counts man: Counts maister is of another stile.

Par. You are too old sir: Let it satisfie you, you are too old.

Laf. I must tell thee sirrah, I write Man: to which title age cannot bring thee.

Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.

Laf. I did thinke thee for two ordinaries: to bee a prettie wise fellow, thou didst make tollerable vent of thy trauell, it might passe: yet the scarffes and the bannerets about thee, did manifoldlie disswade me from beleeuing thee a vessell of too great a burthen. I haue now found thee, when I loofe thee againe, I care not: yet art thou good for nothing but taking vp, and that th' ourt scarce worth.

Par. Hadst thou not the priuiledge of Antiquity vp-on thee.

Laf. Do not plundge thy selfe to farre in anger, least thou hasten thy triall: which if, Lord haue mercie on thee for a hen, so my good window of Lettice fare thee well, thy casement I neede not open, for I look through thee. Giue me thy hand.

Par. My Lord, you giue me most egregious indignity

Laf.

Laf. I with all my heart, and thou art worthy of it.

Par. I haue not my Lord deseru'd it.

Laf. Yes good faith, eu'ry dramme of it, and I will not beare thee a scruple.

Par. Well, I shall be wiser.

Laf. Eu'n as soone as thou can'st, for thou hast to pull at a smacke a'th contrarie. If euer thou bee'st bound in thy skarfe and beaten, thou shall finde what it is to be proud of thy bondage, I haue a desire to holde my acquaintance with thee, or rather my knowledge, that I may say in the default, he is a man I know.

Par. My Lord you do me most insupportable vexation.

Laf. I would it were hell paines for thy sake, and my poore doing eternall. for doing I am past, as I will by thee, in what motion age will giue me leaue. Exit

Par. Well, thou hast a sonne shall take this disgrace off me; scuruy, old, filthy, scuruy Lord. Well, I must be patient, there is no fettering of authority. He beate him (by my life) if I can meete him with any conuenience, and he were double and double a Lord. He haue no more pittie of his age then I would haue of——He beate him, and if I could but meet him agen.

Enter Lafew.

Laf. Sirra, your Lord and masters married, there's newes for you - you haue a new Mistress.

Par. I most vnfeignedly beseech your Lordshippe to make some reseruatiou of your wrongs. He is my good Lord, whom I serue aboute is my master.

Laf. Who? God

Par. I sir.

Laf. The deuill it is, that's thy master why doest thou garter vp thy armes a this fashion? Dost make hose of thy sleeves? Do o'ther seruants so? Thou wert best set thy lower part where thy nose stands. By mine Honor, if I were but two houres yonger, I'de beate thee mee-think'st thou art a generall offence, and euery man shold beate thee. I thinke thou wast created for men to breath themselves vpon thee.

Par. This is hard and vndeserued measure my Lord.

Laf. Go too sir, you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernell out of a Pomgranat, you are a vagabond, and no true traoueller. you are more sawcie with Lordes and honourable personages, then the Commission of your birth and vertue giues you Heraldry. You are not worth another word, else I'de call you knaue. I leaue you. Exit

Enter Count Rossillion.

Par. Good, very good, it is so then. good, very good, let it be conceal'd awhile.

Ros. Vndone, and forsented to cares for euer.

Par. What's the matter sweet-heart?

Rossil. Although before the solemne Priest I haue sworne, I will not bed her.

Par. What? what sweet heart?

Ros. O my Parolles, they haue married me: He to the Tuscan warres, and neuer bed her.

Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits, The tread of a mans foot: too th warres.

Ros. There's letters from my mother: What th'importun. I know not yet.

Par. I that would be knowne: too th warres my boy, too th warres:

He weares his honor in a boxe vnscene,
That hugges his kicke wicke heare at home,
Spending his manlie marrow in her armes
Which should sustaine the bound and high curuet
Of Maries fierie steed: to other Regions,
France is a stable, wee that dwell in't lades,
Therefore too th warre.

Ros. It shall be so, He send her to my house,
Acquaint my mother with my hate to her,
And wherefore I am fled: Write to the King
That which I durst not speake. His present gift
Shall furnish me to those Italian fields
Where noble fellows strike. Warres is no strife
To the darke house, and the detested wife

Par. Will this Caprichio hold in thee, art sure?

Ros. Go with me to my chamber, and aduise me.
He send her straight away: To morrow,
He to the warres, she to her single sorrow

Par. Why these bals bound, ther's noise in it. Tis hard
A yong man married, is a man that's mard.
Therefore away, and leaue her brauely go,
The King ha's done you wrong: but hush 'tis so. Exit

Enter Helena and Clowne.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly, is she well?

Cl. She is not well, but yet she has her health, she's very merrie, but yet she is not well: but thanks be giuen she's very well, and wants nothing i'th world, but yet she is not well

Hel. If she be verie wel, what do's she sayle, that she's not verie well?

Cl. Truly she's very well indeed, but for two things

Hel. What two things?

Cl. One, that she's not in heauen, whether God send her quickly - the other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly.

Enter Parolles.

Par. Bless you my fortunate Ladie.

Hel. I hope sir, I haue your good will to haue mine owne good fortune.

Par. You had my prayers to leade them on, and to keepe them on, haue them still. O my knaue, how do's my old Ladie?

Cl. So that you had her wrinkles, and I her money, I would she did as you say.

Par. Why I say nothing.

Cl. Marry you are the wiser man, for many a mans tongue shakes out his masters vndoing - to say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and so haue nothing, is to be a great part of your title, which is within a verie little of nothing.

Par. Away, th'art a knaue.

Cl. You should haue said sir before a knaue, th'art a knaue, that's before me th'art a knaue: this had beene truth sir.

Par. Go too, thou art a wittie fool, I haue found thee.

Cl. Did you finde me in your selfe sir, or were you taught to finde me?

Gla. The search sir was profitable, and much Foole may you find in you, euen to the worlds pleasure, and the encrease of laughter.

Par. A good knaue faith, and well fed.
Madam, my Lord will go awaie to night,

A verie serious businesse call's on him :

The great prerogative and rite of loue,
Which as your due time claimes, he do's acknowledge,
But puts it off to a compell'd restraint:
Whose want, and whose delay, is strew'd with sweets
Which they distill now in the curbed time,
To make the coming houre overflow with ioy,
And pleasure drowne the brim.

Hel. What's his will else?

Par. That you will take your instant leaue a'th king,
And make this hast as your owne good proceeding,
Strengthened with what Apologie you thinke
May make it probable neede

Hel. What more commands hee?

Par. That hauing this obtain'd, you presentlie
Attend his further pleasure.

Hel. In euery thing I waite vpon his will

Par. I shall report it so.

Ex t Par.

Hel. I pray you come firrah.

Exit

Enter Lafew and Bertram.

Laf. But I hope your Lordshippe thinkes not him a souldier.

Ber. Yes my Lord and of verie valiant approofe.

Laf. You haue it from his owne deliuerance

Ber. And by other warrantied testimonie.

Laf. Then my Diall goes not true, I tooke this Larke for a bunting.

Ber. I do assure you my Lord he is very great in knowledge, and accordinglie valiant.

Laf. I haue then sinn'd against his experience, and transgressed against his valour, and my state that way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart to repent.
Heere he comes, I pray you make vs freinds, I will pursue the amitie.

Enter Parolles

Par. These things shall be done sir

Laf. Pray you sir whose his Tailor?

Par. Sir?

Laf. O I know him well, I sir, hee sirs a good worke-man, a verie good Tailor.

Ber. Is shee gone to the king?

Par. Shee is

Ber. Will shee away to night?

Par. As you'le haue her.

Ber. I haue writ my letters, casketted my treasure,
Giuén order for our horses, and to night,
When I should take possession of the Bride,
And ere I doe begin.

Laf. A good Trauailer is something at the latter end of a dinner, but on that lies three thirds, and vses a known truth to passe a thousand nothings with, should bee oncehard, and thrice beaten. God saue you Captaine.

Ber. Is there any vnkindnes betweene my Lord and you Monsieur?

Par. I know not how I haue deserued to run into my Lords displeasure.

Laf. You haue made shift to run into't, bootes and spurres and all like him that leapt into the Custard, and out of it you'le runne againe, rather then suffer question for your residence.

Ber. It may bee you haue mistakn him my Lord.

Laf. And shall doe so euery though I tooke him at's prayers. Fare you well my Lord, and beleue this of me, there can be no kernell in this light Nur: the soule of this man is his clothes: Trust him not in matter of heauie consequence: I haue kept of them tame, & know their natures. Farewell Monsieur, I haue spoken better of you, then you haue or will to deserue at my hand, but we must do good against euill.

Par. An idle Lord, I sweare.

Ber. I thinke so.

Par. Why do you not know him?

Ber. Yes, I do know him well, and common speech
Gues him a worthy passe. Heere comes my clog.

Enter Helena.

Hel. I haue sir as I was commanded from you
Spoke with the King, and haue procur'd his leaue
For present parting, onely he desires
Some priuate speech with you

Ber. I shall obey his will.

You must not meruaile Helena at my course,
Which holds not colour with the time, nor does
The ministraton, and required office
On my particular. Prepar'd I was not
For such a businesse, therefore am I found
So much vnseel'd This driues me to intreate you,
That presently you take your way for home,
And rather muse then aske why I intreate you,
For my respects are better then they seeme,
And my appointments haue in them a neede
Greater then shewes it selfe at the first view,
To you that know them not This to my mother,
'Twill be two daies ere I shall see you, so
I leaue you to your wisdome.

Hel. Sir, I can nothing say,

But that I am your most obedient seruant.

Ber. Come, come, no more of that.

Hel. And euer shall

With true obseruance seeke to ecke out that
Wherein toward me my homely starres haue faild
To equall my great fortune.

Ber. Let that goe. my hast is verie great Farewell.
Hie home.

Hel. Pray sir your pardon.

Ber. Well, what would you say?

Hel. I am not worthe of the wealth I owe,
Nor dare I say 'tis mine: and yet it is,
But like a timorous theefe, most faine would steale
What law does vouch mine owne.

Ber. What would you haue?

Hel. Something, and scarce so much: nothing indeed,
I would not tell you what I would my Lord: Faith yes,
Strangers and foes do sunder, and not kisse

Ber. I pray you stay not, but in hast to horse.

Hel. I shall not breake your bidding, good my Lord:
Where are my other men? Monsieur, farewell. Exit.

Ber. Go thou toward home, where I will neuer come,
Whilst I can shake my sword, or heare the drumme:
Away, and for our flight

Par. Brauely, Coragio.

Actus Tertius.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, the two Frenchmen, with a troope of souldiers.

Duke. So that from point to point, now haue you heard
The

The fundamentall reasons of this warre,
Whose great decision hath much blood let forth
And more thrusts after.

1 Lord Holy seemes the quarrell
Vpon your Graces part: blacke and fearefull
On the opposer

Duke. Therefore we meruaile much our Cofin France
Would in so iust a businesse, shut his bosome
Against our borrowing prayers.

French E. Good my Lord,
The reasons of our state I cannot yeelde,
But like a common and an outward man,
That the great figure of a Counsaile frames,
By selfe vnable motion, therefore dare not Say what I thinke of it, since I haue found
My selfe in my incertaine grounds to faile
As often as I guest

Duke. Be it his pleasure.

Fren. G. But I am sure the yonger of our nature,
That surset on their ease, will day by day
Come heere for Physicke

Duke. Welcome shall they bee.
And all the honors that can flye from vs,
Shall on them settle - you know your places well,
When better fall, for your auayles they fell,
To morrow to'th the field. Flourish.

Enter Countesse and Clowne

Count. It hath happen'd all, as I would haue had it, saue that he comes not along with her.

Clo. By my troth I take my young Lord to be a ve-rie melancholly man

Count. By what obseruance I pray you.

Clo. Why he will looke vpon his boote, and sing:
mend the Ruffe and sing, aske questions and sing, picke his teeth, and sing: I know a man that had this tricke of melancholy hold a goodly Mannor for a song.

Lad. Let me see what he writes, and when he meanes
to come.

Clow. I haue no minde to Isbell since I was at Court.
Our old Lings, and our Isbels a th Country, are nothing like your old Ling and your Isbels a th Court the brains of my Cupid's knock'd out, and I beginne to loue, as an old man loues money, with no stomacke.

Lad. What haue we heere?

Clo. In that you haue there. exit

A Letter.

I haue sent you a daughter-in-Law, shee hath recovered the King, and undone me I haue wedded her, not bedded her, and sworne to make she not eternall. You shall heare I am runne away, know it before she report come. If there bee breath enough in the world, I will hold a long distance My duty to you. Your unfortunate sonne, Bertram.

This is not well rash and vnbridled boy,
To flye the fauours of so good a King,
To plucke his indignation on thy head,
By the misprising of a Maide too vertuous
For the contempt of Empire.

Enter Clowne.

Clow O Madam, yonder is heauenewes within be-twene two souldiers, and my yong Ladie.

Lad. What is the matter.

Clo. Nay there is some comfort in the newes, some comfort, your sonne will not be kild so soone as I thought he would.

La. Why should he be kill'd?

Clo. So say I Madame, if he runne away, as I heare he does, the danger is in standing too't, that's the losse of men, thought it be the getting of children. Heere they come will tell you more. For my part I onely heare your sonne was run away.

Enter Hellen and two Gentlemen.

French E. Saue you good Madam.

Hel. Madam, my Lord is gone, for euer gone.

French G. Do not say so.

La. Thinke vpon patience, pray you Gentlemen,
I haue felt so many quirkes of ioy and greefe,
That the first face of neither on the state
Can woman me vntoo't Where is my sonne I pray you?

Fren G. Madam he's gone to serue the Duke of Florence,

We met him thitherward, for thence we came:
And after some dispatch in hand at Court,
Thither we bend againe.

Hel. Looke on his Letter Madam, here's my Pasport

*When thou shalt get the Ring vpon my finger, which neuer shall come off, and shew mee a childe begotten of thy bodie, that I am father too, then call me husband, but in such a (then)
I write a Neuer.*

This is a dreadfull sentence

La. Brought you this Letter Gentlemen?

1 G. I Madam, and for the Contents take are sorrie for our paines.

Old La. I prethee Ladie haue a better cheere,
If thou engroffest, all the greefes are thine,
Thou robst me of a moiety He was thy sonne,
But I do wash his name out of my blood,
And thou art all my childe. Towards Florencé is he?

Fren. G. I Madam,

La. And to be a souldier.

Fren G. Such is his noble purpose, and belceu't
The Duke will lay vpon him all the honor
That good conuenience claimes.

La. Returne you thither.

Fren. E. I Madam, with the swiftest wing of speed.

Hel. Till I haue no wife, I haue nothing in France,
'Tis bitter.

La. Finde you that there?

Hel. I Madam

Fren E. 'Tis but the boldnesse of his hand haply, which his heart was not consenting too

Lad. Nothing in France, vntill he haue no wife:
There's nothing heere that is too good for him
But onely she, and she deserues a Lord
That twenty such rude boyes might tend vpon,
And call her hourelly Mistis. Who was with him?

Fren E. A seruant onely, and a Gentleman. which I haue sometime knowne

La. Parolles was it not?

Fren. E. I my good Ladie, hee

La. A vaine tainted fellow, and full of wickednesse,
My sonne corrupts a well seru'd nature
With his inducement.

Fren. E. Indeed good Ladie the fellow has a deale of that, too much, which holds him much to haue.

La. Yare welcome Gentlemen, I will intreate you when you see my sonne, to tell him that his sword can neuer winne the honor that he loofes: more Ile intreate

X

you

you written to beare along.

Exe. G. We serue you Madam in that and all your worthiest assures.

Ls. Not so, but as we change our courtesies, Will you draw neere? Exit.

Hel. Till I haue no wife I haue nothing in France.

Nothing in France vntill he has no wife -
Thou shalt haue none Rossillion, none in France,
Then hast thou all againe: poore Lord, is't I
That chase thee from thy Countrey, and expose
Those tender limbes of thine, to the euent
Of the none-sparing warre? And is it I,
That driue thee from the sportiue Court, where thou
Was't shor't with faire eyes, to be the marke
Of smokie Muskets? O you leaden messengers,
That ride vpon the violent speede of fire,
Fly with false ayme, moue the still-peering aie
That sings with piercing, do not touch my Lord:
Who euer shoots at him, I see him there.
Who euer charges on his forward brest
I am the Causse that do hold him too't,
And though I kill him not, I am the cause
His death was so effected: Better 'twere
I met the rauine Lyon when he roar'd
With sharpe constraint of hunger: better 'twere,
That all the miseries which nature owes
Were mine at once. No come thou home Rossillion,
Whence honor but of danger winnes a scarre,
As oft it looses all. I will be gone.
My being heere it is, that holds thee heere,
Shall I stay heere to doo't? No, no, although
The ayre of Paradise did fan the house,
And Angles offic'd all: I will be gone,
That pittifull rumour may report my flight
To console thine care. Come night, end day,
For with the darke (poore theefe) Ile steale away. Exit.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, Rossillion, drums and trumpets, soldiers, Parrolles.

Duke. The Generall of our horse thou art, and we Great in our hope, lay our best loue and credence
Vpon thy promising fortune.

Ber. Sir it is

A charge too heauy for my strength, but yet
Wee'l strue to beare it for your worthy sake,
To th' extreme edge of hazard

Duke. Then go thou forth,

And fortune play vpon thy prosperous helme
As thy auspicious mistis

Ber. This very day

Great Mars I put my selfe into thy file,
Make me but like my thoughts, and I shall proue
A loner of thy drumme, hater of loue. Exeunt omnes

Enter Countesse & Steward.

Ls. Alas! and would you take the letter of her -
Might you not know she would do, as she has done,
By sending me a Letter. Read it agen.

Letter.

I am S Iagues Pilgrim, ibisher gone:
Ambitious loue hath so in me offended,
That bare-foot plod I the cold ground vpon
With iunited vow my faultes to haue amended

Write, write, that from the bloodie course of warre,
My dearest Master your deare soune, may live,
Blesse him at home in peace. Whilst I from farre,
His name with zealous feruour sanctifie:
His taken labours bid him me forgiue:
I his despighfull Inno sent him forth,
From Courtly friends, with Campyng foes to line,
Where death and danger dogges the heeles of worst.
He is too good and faire for death, and mee,
Whom I my selfe embrace, to set him free.

Ah what sharpe stings are in her mildest words?
Rynaldo, you did neuer lacke aduice so much,
As letting her passe so: had I spoke with her,
I could haue well diuerted her intents,
Which thus she hath preuented.

Sir. Pardon me Madam,
If I had giuen you this at ouer-night,
She might haue beene ore-tane and yet she writes
Pursuue would be but vaine.

Ls. What Angell shall
Blesse this vnworthy husband, he cannot thrue,
Vnlesse her prayers, whom heauen delights to heare
And loue to grant, repreece him from the wrath
Of greatest Iustice. Write, write Rynaldo,
To this vnworthy husband of his wife,
Let euery word waigh heauie of her worth,
That he does waigh too light: my greatest greefe,
Though little he do feele it, set downe sharply.
Dispatch the most conuenient messenger,
When haply he shall heare that she is gone,
He will returne, and hope I may that shee
Hearing so much, will speede her foote againe,
Led hither by pure loue: which of them both
Is dearest to me, I haue no skill in sence
To make distinction. prouide this Messenger:
My heart is heauie, and mine age is weake,
Greefe would haue teares, and sorrow bids me speake. Exeunt

A Tucket of a ure off.

Enter old Widdow of Florence, her daughter, Violantia and Mariana, with other Citizens.

Widdow. Nay come,
For if they do approach the Citty,
We shall loose all the sight.

Diana. They say, the French Count has done
Most honourable seruice.

Wid. It is reported,
That he has taken their great'st Commander,
And that with his owne hand he slew
The Dukes brother: we haue lost our labour,
They are gone a contrarie waye harte,
you may know by their Trumpets.

Maria. Come lets returne againe,
And suffice our selues with the report of it.
Well Diana, take heed of this French Esle,
The honor of a Maide is her name,
And no Legacie is so rich
As honestie.

Widdow. I haue told my neighbour
How you haue beene solicited by a Gentleman
His Companion.

Maria

Maria I know that knave, hang him, one Parolles, a filthy Officer he is in those suggestions for the young Earle, beware of them Diana; their promises, enticements, oathes, tokens, and all these engines of lost, are not the things they go vnder: many a maide hath beene seduced by them, and the miserie is example, that so terrible shewes in the wracke of maiden-hood, cannot for all that dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twigges that threatens them. I hope I neede not to aduise you further, but I hope your owne grace will keepe you where you are, though there were no further danger knowne, but the modestie which is so lost.

Dia. You shall not neede to feare me

Enter Helles.

Wid. I hope so: looke here comes a pilgrim, I know she will lye at my house, thither they send one another, Ile question her God saue you pilgrim, whether are bound?

Hel. To S. Iaques la grand
Where do the Palmers lodge, I do beseech you?

Wid. At the S. Francis heere beside the Port.

Hel. Is this the way? A march a farre.

Wid. I marrie ist Harke you, they come this way: If you will carrie holy Pilgrime But till the troopes come by, I will conduct you where you shall be lodg'd, The rather for I thinke I know your hostesse As ample as my selfe.

Hel. Is it your selfe?

Wid. If you shall please so Pilgrime.

Hel. I thank you, and will stay vpon your leisure

Wid. you came I thinke from France?

Hel. I did so

Wid. Heere you shall see a Countiman of yours That has done worthy seruice.

Hel. His name I pray you?

Dia. The Count Rossillion know you such a one?

Hel. But by the eare that heares most nobly of him: His face I know not.

Dia. What somere he is He's brauely taken heere He stole from France
As 'tis reported for the King had married him
Against his liking. Thinke you it is so?

Hel. I surely meere the truth, I know his Lady.

Dia. There is a Gentleman that seruies the Count,
Reports but courselly of her.

Hel. What's his name?

Dia. Monsieur Parolles.

Hel. Oh I beleuee with him,
In argument of praise, or to the worth
Of the great Count himselfe, she is too meane
To haue her name repeated, all her deseruing
Is a reserved honestie, and that
I haue not heard examin'd.

Dia. Alas poore Ladie,
Tis a hard bondage to become the wife
Of a detesting I ord.

Wid. I write good creature, where soere she is,
Her hart waighes sadly: this yong maid might do her
A shrewd turne if she pleas'd.

Hel. How do you meane?
May be the ambitious Count solicites her
In the vnlawful purpose.

Wid. He does indeede,
And brokes with all that can in such a suite

Corrupt the tender honour of a Maide:
But she is arm'd for him; and keeps her guard
In honestest defence.

Drumme and Colours.

Enter Count Rossillion, Parolles, and the whole Armie.

Mar. The goddes forbid else.

Wid. So, now they come
That is Antonio the Dukes eldest sonne,
That Escalus.

Hel. Which is the Frenchman?

Dia. Hee,
That with the plume, 'tis a most gallant fellow,
I would he lou'd his wife: if he were honest
He were much goodlier Is't not a handsom Gentleman
Hel. I like him well.

Di. 'Tis pittie he is not honest yonds that same knave
That leades him to these places: were I his Ladie,
I would poison that vile Rascall.

Hel. Which is he?

Dia. That Jacke an-apes with scarfes Why is hee melancholly?

Hel. Perchance he's hurt i'th battaile.

Par. Loose our drum? Well.

Mar. He's shrewdly vext at something Looke he has spied vs

Wid. Marrie hang you.

Mar. And your curtesie, for a ring-carrier. Exit

Wid. The troope is past. Come pilgrim, I wil bring you, Where you shall host Of inioyn'd penitents
There's foure or fife, to great S. Iaquer bound,
Alreadie at my house

Hel. I humbly thanke you
Please it this Matron, and this gentle Maide
To cate with vs to night, the charge and thanking shall be for me. and to requite you further,
I will bestow some precepts of this Virgin,
Worthy the note.

Both. Wee'l take your offer kindly. Exeunt

Enter Count Rossillion and the Frenchmen, as at first.

Cap. E. Nay good my Lord put him too'r. let him
haue his way

Cap. G. If your Lordshippe finde him not a Hilding, hold me no more in your respect.

Cap. E. On my life my Lord, a bubble.

Ber. Do you thinke I am so farre
Deceued in him

Cap. E. Beleuee it my Lord, in mine owne direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speake of him as my kinsman, hee's a most notable Coward, an infinite and endlesse Liar, an hourelly promise-breaker, the owner of no one good qualitie, worthy your Lordships entertainment

Cap. G. It were fit you knew him, least reposing too farre in his vertue which he hath not, he might at some great and trustie businesse, in a maine daunger, fayle
you.

Ber. I would I knew in what particular action to try
him.

Cap. G. None better then to let him fetch off his drumme, which you heare him so confidently vnder-take to do.

G. E. I with a troop of Florentines wil sodainly surprise

prize him; such I will haue whom I am sure he knowes not from the enemy. wee will binde and hoodwinke him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the Leager of the aduersaries, when we bring him to our owne tents. be but your Lordship present at his examination, if he do not for the promise of his life, and in the highest compulsion of base feare, offer to betray you, and deliuer all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the diuine forfeite of his soule vpon oath, neuer trust my iudgement in aue thing.

Cap. G. O for the loue of laughter, let him fetch his drumme, he sayes he has a stratagem for't. when your Lordship sees the bottome of this successe in't, and to what mettle this counterfeyt lump of ours will be melted if you giue him not Iohn drummes entertainment, your inclining cannot be remoued. Heere he comes.

Enter Parrolles.

Cap. E. O for the loue of laughter hinder not the honor of his designe, let him fetch off his drumme in any hand.

Ber. How now Monsieur? This drumme sticks forely in your disposition.

Cap. G. A pox on't, let it go, 'tis but a drumme.

Par. But a drumme. Ist but a drumme? A drum so lost. There was excellent command, to charge in with our horse vpon our owne wings, and to rend our owne souldiers.

Cap. G. That was not to be blam'd in the command of the seruice. it was a disaster of warre that Caesar himselfe could not haue preuented, if he had beene there to command.

Ber. Well, wee cannot greatly condemne our successe: some dishonor wee had in the losse of that drum, but it is not to be recovered.

Par. It might haue beene recovered,

Ber. It might, but it is not now.

Par. It is to be recovered, but that the merit of seruice is sildome attributed to the true and exact performer, I would haue that drumme or another, or his successor.

Ber. Why if you haue a stomacke, too't Monsieur. if you thinke your mysterie in stratagem, can bring this instrument of honour againe into his natue quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprize and go on, I wil grace the attempt for a worthy exploit. if you speede well in it, the Duke shall both speake of it, and extend to you what further becomes his greatnesse, euen to the vtmost syllable of your worthinesse.

Par. By the hand of a souldier I will vndertake it.

Ber. But you must not now slumber in it.

Par. Ile about it this euening, and I will presently pen downe my dilemna's, encourage my selfe in my certaintie, put my selfe into my mortall preparation. and by midnight looke to heare further from me.

Ber. May I bee bold to acquaint his grace you are gone about it.

Par. I know not what the successe wil be my Lord, but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know th'art valiant, And to the possibility of thy souldier ship, Will subscribe for thee. Farewell.

Par. I loue not many words.

Exit

Cap. E. No more then a fish loues water. Is not this a strange fellow my Lord; that so confidently seemes to vndertake this businessse, which he knowes 'is not to be done, damnes himselfe to do, & dares better be damnd then to doo't.

Cap. G. You do not know him my Lord as we doe, certaine it is that he will steale himselfe into a mans fauour, and for a weeke escape a great deale of discoueries, but when you finde him out, you haue him euer after.

Ber. Why do you thinke he will make no deede at all of this that so seruoulsie hee dooes addresse himselfe vnto?

Cap. E. None in the world, but returne with an inuention, and clap vpon you two or three probable lies: but we haue almost imbossed him, you shall see his fall to night, for indeede he is not for your Lordships respect.

Cap. G. Weele make you some sport with the Foxe ere we case him. He was first smoak'd by the old Lord Lafew, when his disguise and he is parted, tell me what a sprat you shall finde him, which you shall see this venie night.

Cap. E. I must go looke my twiggess, He shall be caught.

Ber. Your brother he shall go along with me.

Cap. G. As't please your Lordship, Ile leaue you.

Ber. Now wil I lead you to the house, and shew you The Lasse I spoke of.

Cap. E. But you say she's honest.

Ber. That's all the fault. I spoke with hir but once, And found her wondrous cold, but I sent to her By this same Coxcombe that we haue i'th winde Tokens and Letters, which she did resend, And this is all I haue done. She's a faire creature, Will you go see her?

Cap. E. With all my heart my Lord.

Exeunt

Enter Hellen, and Widow.

Hel. If you misdoubt me that I am not shee, I know not how I shall assure you further, But I shall loose the grounds I worke vpon.

Wid. Though my estate be false, I was well borne, Nothing acquainted with these businessses, And would not put my reputation now In any staining act.

Hel. Nor would I wish you First giue me trust, the Count he is my husband, And what to your sworne counsaile I haue spoken, Is so from word to word. and then you cannot By the good ayde that I of you shall borrow, Erre in bestowing it.

Wid. I should belceue you, For you haue shew'd me that which well approue: Yare great in fortune.

Hel. Take this purse of Gold, And let me buy your friendly helpe thus farre, Which I will ouer-pay, and pay againe When I haue found it. The Count he woos your daughter,

Layes downe his wanton siedge before her beautie, Resolue to carrie her. let her in fine consent As wee'l direct her how 'tis best to beare it: Now his important blood will naught denie, That shee'l demand a ring the Countie weares, That downward hath succeeded in his house

From

From tonne to tonne, to me foure or five descents,
Since the first father wore it. This Ring he holds
In most rich choice: yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seeme too deere,
How ere repented after

Wid. Now I see the bottome of your purpose

Hel You see it lawfull then, it is no more,
But that your daughter ere she seemes as wonne,
Desires this Ring; appoints him an encounter;
In fine, deliueis me to fill the time,
Her selfe most chastly absent. after
To marry her, He adde three thousand Crownes
To what is past already.

Wid I haue yielded.

Instruct my daughter how she shall perseuer,
That time and place with this decrete so lawfull
May proue coherent. Euery night he comes
With Musicks of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her vnworthinesse: It nothing steeds vs
To chide him from our eues, for he persists
As if his life lay on't.

Hel Why then to night
Let vs assay our plot, which if it speed,
Is wicked meaning in a lawfull deede;
And lawfull meaning in a lawfull act,
Where both nor sinne, and yet a sinfull fact.
But let's about it.

Actus Quartus.

Enter one of the Frenchmen, with five or sixe other souldiers in ambish.

1 Lord E. He can come no other way but by this hedge corner: when you fallie vpon him, speake what terrible Language you will: though you vnderstand it not your selues, no matter: for we must not seeme to vnderstand him, vnlesse some one among vs, whom wee must produce for an Interpreter.

2. Sol. Good Captaue, let me be th' Interpreter

Lord E. Art not acquainted with him? knowes he not thy voice?

1. Sol. No sir I warrant you.

Lo E. But what linsie wolfey hast thou to speake to vs
agaime

1 Sol E'n such as you speake to me.

Lo E. He must thinke vs some band of strangers, I th' aduersaries entertainment. Now he hath a swacke of all neighbouring Languages: therefore we must euery one be a man of his owne fancie, not to know what we speake
one to another so we seeme to know, is to know straight our purpose. Choughs language, gabble enough, and good enough. As for you interpreter, you must seeme very politicke. But couch ho, heere hee comes, to beguile two houres in a sleepe, and then to returne & swear thelies he forges.

Enter Parrolles.

Par. Ten a clocke Within these three houres 'twill be time enough to goe home. What shall I say I haue done? It must bee a very plausible inuention that carries it They beginne to smoeke mee, and disgraces haue of late, knock'd too often at my doore. I finde my tongue is too foole-hardie, but my heart hath the feare of Mars before it, and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

Lo E. This is the first truth that ere thine own tongue was guiltie of.

Par. What the diuell should moue mee to vndertake the recouerie of this drumme, being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose? I must giue my selfe some hurts, and say I got them in exploit: yet slight ones will not carrie it. They will say, came you off with so little? And great ones I dare not giue, wherefore what's the instance. Tongue, I must put you into a Butte-womans mouth, and buy my selfe another of Bazzeb's Mule, if you prattle mee into these perilles.

Lo E. Is it possible he should know what hee is, and be that he is

Par. I would the cutting of my garments wold serue
the turne, or the breaking of my Spanish sword.

Lo E. We cannot afford you so.

Par. Or the baring of my beard, and to say it was in stratagem.

Lo E. 'T would not do

Par. Or to drowne my cloathes, and say I was stript.

Lo E. Hardly serue.

Par. Though I swore I leapt from the window of the Citadell

Lo E. How deepe?

Par. Thirty sadome

Lo E. Three great oathes would scarce make that be beleueed.

Par. I would I had any drumme of the enemies, I would sweare I recouer'd it.

Lo E. You shall heare one anon.

Par. A drumme now of the enemies.

Alarm within.

Lo L. Thre camonius, cargo, cargo, cargo.

All. Cargo, cargo, cargo, will and a par corbo, cargo.

Par. O ranfome, ranfome,

Do not hide mine eyes.

Inter Boskos thronuldo boskos.

Par. I know you are the Minkos Regiment,

And I shall loose my life for want of language
If there be heere German or Dane, Low Dutch,
Italian, or French, let him speake to me,
He discouer that, which shal vndo the Florentine.

Int Boskos vauuado, I vnderstand thee, & can speake thy tongue Kerelybonto sir, betake thee to thy faith, for seuenteene ponyards are at thy bosome.

Par. Oh,

Inter. Oh pray, pray, pray,

Manka renania dulce.

Lo E. Oscorbidnchos voluorco.

Int. The Generall is content to spare thee yet,
And hoodwink as thou art, will leade thee on
To gather from thee. Haply thou mayst informe
Something to saue thy life.

Par. O let me lue,

And all the secrets of our campe he shew,
Their force, their purposes - Nay, he speake that,
Which you will wonder at.

Inter. But wilt thou faithfully?

Par. If I do not, damne me.

Inter. Acerdo linta.

Come on, thou are granted space.

A short Alarm within.

X 3

Exit

Lo E.

L.E. Go tell the Count Rossillon and my brother,
We haue caught the woodcocke, and will keepe him
Till we do heare from them. (muffled)

Sol. Captaine I will.

L.E. A will betray vs all vnto our selues, Informe on that.

Sol. So I will sir.

L.E. Till then Ile keepe him darke and safely lockt.
Exit

Enter Bertram, and the Maide called Diana.

Ber. They told me that your name was Fontybell

Dia. No my good Lord, Diana.

Ber. Titled Goddesse,

And worth it with addition. but faire soule,
In your fine frame hath loue no qualitie?
If the quicke fire of youth light not your minde,
You are no Maiden but a monument
When you are dead you should be such a one
As you are now: for you are cold and sterne,
And now you should be as your mother was
When your sweet selfe was got.

Dia. She then was honest,

Ber. So should you be.

Dia. No.

My mother did but dutie, such (my Lord)
As you owe to your wife.

Ber. No more a'that

I prethee do not strue against my vowes:
I was compell'd to her, but I loue thee
By loues owne sweet constraint, and will for euer
Do thee all rights of seruice.

Dia. I so you serue vs

Till we serue you: But when you haue our Roses,
You barely leaue our thornes to pricke our selues,
And mocke vs with our barenesse.

Ber. How haue I sworne.

Dia. 'Tis not the many oathes that makes the truth,
But the plaine single vow, that is vow'd true:
What is not holie, that we sweare not by,
But take the high't to witnesse. then pray you tell me,
If I should sweare by Ioues great attributes,
I lou'd you deere, would you beleeue my oathes,
When I did loue you ill? This ha's no holding
To sweare by him whom I protest to loue
That I will worke against him. Therefore your oathes
Are words and poore conditions, but vnscald
Acleste in my opinion.

Ber. Change it, change it:

Be not so holy cruell. Loue is holie,
And my integritie ne're knew the crafts
That you do charge men with: Stand no more off,
But giue thy selfe vnto my sicke desires,
Who then recouers. Say thou art mine, and euer
My loue as it begins, shall so persue.

Dia. I see that men make rope's in such a scarre,
That wee'l forsake our selues. Giue me that Ring.

Ber. Ile lend it thee my deere; but haue no power
To giue it from me.

Dia. Will you not my Lord?

Ber. It is an honour longing to our house,
Bequeathed downe from manie Ancestors,
Which were the greatest obloquie i'th world
In me to loose.

Dia. Mine Honors such a Ring,
My chastities the Jewell of our house,

Bequeathed downe from many Ancestors,
Which were the greatest obloquie i'th world,
In mee to loose. Thus your owne proper wisdom
Brings in the Champion honor on my part,
Against your vaine assault.

Ber. Heere, take my Ring,
My house, mine honor, yea my life be thine,
And Ile be bid by thee.

Dia. When midnight comes, knocke at my chamber window:

Ile order take, my mother shall not heare.
Now will I charge you in the band of truth,
When you haue conquer'd my yet maiden-bed,
Remaine there but an houre, nor speake to mee:
My reasons are most strong; and you shall know them,
When backe againe this Ring shall be deliuer'd:
And on your finger in the night, Ile put
Another Ring, that what in time proceeds,
May token to the future, our past deeds.
Adieu till then, then faile not. you haue wonne
A wife of me, though there my hope be done.

Ber. A heauen on earth I haue won by wooing thee.

Dr. For which, lue long to thank both heauen & me,
You may so in the end.

My mother told me iust how he would woo,
As if she fate in's heart. She sayes, all men
Haue the like oathes. He had sworne to marrie me
When his wife's dead. therefore Ile lye with him
When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so braide, Marry that will, I lue and die a Maid:
Onely in this disguise, I think't no sinne,
To cosen him that would vnjustly winne. Exit

Enter the two French Captaines, and some two or three Soldiours

Cap G. You haue not giuen him his mothers letter.

Cap E. I haue deliuer'd it an houre since, there is som thing in't that stings his nature: for on the reading it, he chang'd almost into another man.

Cap G. He has much worthy blame laid vpon him, for shaking off so good a wife, and so sweet a Lady.

Cap E. Especially, hee hath incurred the euerlasting displeasure of the King, who had euen tun'd his bounty to sing happinesse to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.

Cap G. When you haue spoken it 'tis dead, and I am the graue of it

Cap E. Hee hath peruerted a young Gentlewoman heere in Florence, of a most chaste renown, & this night he fleshes his will in the spoyle of her honour: hee hath giuen her his monumentall Ring, and thinks himselfe made in the vnchaste composition.

Cap G. Now God delay our rebellion as we are our selues, what things are we.

Cap E. Meerely our owne traitours. And as in the common course of all treasons, we still see them reueale themselves, till they attaine to their abhorr'd ends. so he that in this action continues against his owne Nobility in his proper streame, ore-floues himselfe

Cap G. Is it not meane damnable in vs, to be Trum-peters of our vnlawfull intents? We shall not then haue his company to night?

Cap E. Nor till after midnight. for hee is dieted to his houre

Cap G. That approaches apace: I would gladly haue him see his company anathomiz'd, that hee might take a measure of his owne iudgements, wherein so curiously he had set this counterfeite.

Cap. E. We will not meddle with him till he come; for his presence must be the whip of the other.

Cap. G. In the meane time, what heare you of these Warres?

Cap. E. I heare there is an ouerture of peace.

Cap. G. Nay, I assure you a peace concluded.

Cap. E. What will Count Rossillion do then? Will he trauaile higher, or returne againe into France?

Cap. G. I perceiue by this demand, you are not altogether of his counsell

Cap. E. Let it be forbid sir. so should I bee a great deale of his act.

Cap. G. Sir, his wife some two months since fledde from his house, her pretence is a pilgrimage to Saint Iaquet le grand, which holy vndertaking, with most austere sanctimonie she accomplisht. and there residing, the tenderesse of her Nature, became as a prey to her greefe: in fine, made a groane of her last breath, & now she sings in heauen.

Cap. E. How is this iustified?

Cap. G. The stronger part of it by her owne Letters, which makes her storie true, euen to the poynt of her death her death it selfe, which could not be her office to say, is come: was faithfully confirm'd by the Rector of the place.

Cap. E. Hath the Count all this intelligence?

Cap. G. I, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the veritie

Cap. E. I am heartily sorrie that hee'l bee gladde of this.

Cap. G. How mightily sometimes, we make vs comforts of our losses.

Cap. E. And how mightily some other times, wee drowne our game in teares, the great dignitie that his valour hath here acquir'd for him, shall at home be encountered with a shame as ample.

Cap. G. The webbe of our life, is of a mingled yarne, good and ill together our vertues would bee proud, if our faults whipt them not, and our crimes would dispaire if they were not cherisht by our vertues.

Enter a Messenger.

How now? Where's your master?

Ser. He met the Duke in the street sir, of whom hee hath taken a solemne leaue. his Lordshippe will next morning for France. The Duke hath offered him Letters of commendations to the King

Cap. E. They shall bee no more then needfull there, if they were more then they can commend.

Enter Count Rossillion.

Ber. They cannot be too sweete for the Kings tartennesse, heere's his Lordship now. How now my Lord, I'll not after midnight?

Ber. I haue to night dispatch'd sixteene busineses, a moneths length a peece, by an abstract of successe. I haue congied with the Duke, done my adieu with his neereft; buried a wife, mourn'd for her, writ to my Ladie mother, I am returning, entertain'd my Conuoy, & betweene these maine parcels of dispatch, affected many nicer needs. the last was the greatest, but that I haue not ended yet.

Cap. E. If the businesse bee of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires halt of your Lordship.

Ber. I meane the businesse is not ended, as fearing to heare of it hereafter: but shall we haue this dialogue betweene the Foole and the Soldiour. Come, bring forth this counterfet module, ha's deceiu'd mee, like a double-meaning Prophetier.

Cap. E. Bring him forth, ha's fate i'th stockes a l night poere gallant knaue.

Ber. No matter, his heeles haue deseru'd it, in vsurping his spurres so long. How does he carry himselfe?

Cap. E. I haue told your Lordship already. The stockes carrie him. But to answer you as you would be vnderstood, hee weepes like a wench that had shed her milke, he hath confest himselfe to Morgan, whom hee supposes to be a Friar, fro the time of his remembrance to this very instant disaster of his setting i'th stockes: and what thinke you he hath confest?

Ber. Nothing of me, ha's a?

Cap. E. His confession is taken, and it shall bee read to his face, if your Lordshippe be in't, as I belecue you are, you must haue the patience to heare it.

Enter Parolles with his Interpreter

Ber. A plague vpon him, muffeld, he can say nothing of me. hush, hush.

Cap. G. Hoodman comes: Portotartarossa.

Inter. He calles for the tortures, what will you say without ern.

Par. I will confesse what I know without constraint, If ye pinch me like a Pasty, I can say no more.

Int. Boiko Chimsurcho.

Cap. Robblando chimsurmo.

Int. You are a mercifull Generall Our Generall bids you answer to what I shall aske you out of a Note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to liue

Int. First demand of him, how many horse the Duke is strong What say you to that?

Par. I ue or sixe thousand, but very weake and vnseruiceable the troopes are all scattered, and the Commanders verie poore rogues, vpon my reputation and credit, and as I hope to liue.

Int. Shall I set downe your answer so?

Par. Do, he take the Sacrament on't, how & which way you will all's one to him

Ber. What a past-sauing slave is this?

Cap. G. Y'are deceiu'd my Lord, this is Mounseur Parolles the gallant militaist, that was his owne phraze that had the whole theoricke of warre in the knot of his scarfe, and the pra'ise in the chape of his dagger

Cap. E. I will neuer trust a man againe, for keeping his sword cleane, nor belecue he can haue euerie thing in him, by wearing his apparrell neatly.

Int. Well, that's set downe

Par. Five or six thousand horse I sed, I will say true, or theresabouts set downe, for he speake truth.

Cap. G. He's very neere the truth in this.

Ber. But I con him no thanks for't in the nature he delivers it.

Par. Poore rogues, I pray you say.

Int. Well, that's set downe.

Par. I humbly thanke you sir, a truth's a truth, the Rogues are maruailous poore.

Interp. Demaund of him of what strength they are a foot What say you to that?

Par. By my troth sir, if I were to liue this present houre, I will tell true. Let mee see, Spuris a hundred & fifty, fiftie, Sebastian so many, Corambius so many, Iaquet so many, Gualtiano, Cesario, Lodowicks, and Graty, two hundred fiftie each: Mine owne Company, Christopher, Vassmond, Bentsy, two hundred fiftie each so that the mustler file, rotten and sound, vppon my life amonnts not to fiftene thousand pole, halfe of the which, dare not shake the snow from off their Cassockes, least they shake themselves to peeces.

Ber. What shall be done to him?

Cap G. Nothing, but let him haue thanks. Demand of him my condition: and what credite I haue with the Duke.

Int. Well that's set downe; you shall demandaund of him, whether one Captaine Dumaine bee'th Campe, a Frenchman - what his reputation is with the Duke, what his valour, honestie, and expertnesse in warres: or whether he thinkes it were not possible with well-waighing summes of gold to corrupt him to a revolt. What say you to this? What do you know of it?

Par. I beseech you let me answer to the particular of the interrogatories. Demand them singly.

Int. Do you know this Captaine Dumaine?

Par. I know him, was a Bouchers Prentize in Paris, from whence he was whipt for getting the Shireues fool with childe, a dumbe innocent that could not say him nay.

Ber. Nay, by your leave hold your hands, though I know his braines are forsente to the next tile that falls.

Int. Well, is this Captaine in the Duke of Florences campe?

Par. Vpon my knowledge he is, and lowse

Cap G. Nay looke not so vpon me: we shall heare of your Lord anon.

Int. What is his reputation with the Duke?

Par. The Duke knowes him for no other, but a poore Officer of mine, and writ to mee this other day, to turne him out a'th band. I thinke I haue his Letter in my pocket.

Int. Marry we'll search

Par. In good sadnesse I do not know, either it is there, or it is vpon a file with the Dukes other Letters, in my Tent.

Int. Heere'tis, heere's a paper, shall I reade it to you?

Par. I do not know if it be it or no.

Ber. Our Interpreter do's it well.

Cap G. Excellently.

Int. Dumaine, the Countess a foole, and full of gold

Par. That is not the Dukes letter sir: that is an advertisement to a proper maide in Florence, one Dianna, to take heede of the allurement of one Count Rossillion, a foolish idle boy: but for all that very ruttish. I pray you sir put it vp againe.

Int. Nay, Ile reade it first by your fauour.

Par. My meaning in't I protest was very honest in the behalfe of the maide: for I knew the young Count to be a dangerous and lasciuious boy, who is a whale to Virginitie, and deuours vp all the fry it finds

Ber. Damnable both-sides rogue.

Int. Let. When he sweares oathes, bid him drop gold, and take it:

*After hee scores, he neuer payes the score
Halfe won is match well made match and well make it,
He nere payes after debits, seekes before,
And say a souldier (Dumaine) told thee this.
Men are to mell with, boyes are not to kiss.*

*For count of this, the Countess a Foole I know it,
Who payes before, but not when he does owe it.*

Thine as he vow'd to thee in thine eare,
Parolles.

Ber. He shall be whipt through the Armie with this time in's forehead.

Cap E. This is your deuoted friend sir, the manifold Linguist, and the army-potent souldier.

Ber. I could endure any thing before but a Cat, and now he's a Cat to me.

Int. I perceiue sir by your Generals lookes, wee shall be faine to hang you.

Par. My life sir in any case: Not that I am afraid to dye, but that my offences beeing many, I would repent out the remainder of Nature. Let me liue sir in a dungeon, i'th stockes, or any where, so I may liue.

Int. Wee'll see what may be done, so you confesse freely: therefore once more to this Captaine Dumaine. you haue answer'd to his reputation with the Duke, and to his valour. What is his honestie?

Par. He will steale sir an Egge out of a Cloister for ripes and raushments he parallels Nessiu. Hee professes not keeping of oaths, in breaking em he is stronger then Hercules. He will lye sir, with such volubilitie, that you would thinke truth were a foole: drunkenesse is his best vertue, for he will be swine-drunke, and in his sleepe he does little harme, laue to his bed-cloathes about him: but they know his conditions, and lay him in straw. I haue but little more to say sir of his honestie, he ha's euerie thing that an honest man should not haue; what an honest man should haue, he has nothing.

Cap G. I begin to loue him for this.

Ber. For this description of thine honestie? A pox vpon him for me, he's more and more a Cat.

Int. What say you to his expertnesse in warre?

Par. Faith sir, ha's led the drumme before the English Tragedians: to belye him I will not, and more of his souldiership I know not, except in that Country, he had the honour to be the Officer at a place there called Mile-end, to instruct for the doubling of files. I would doe the man what honour I can, but of this I am not certaine.

Cap G. He hath out-villain'd villanie so farre, that the raretie redeemes him

Ber. A pox on him, he's a Cat still.

Int. His qualities being at this poore price, I neede not to aske you, if Gold will corrupt him to revolt.

Par. Sir, for a Cardceue he will sell the fee-simple of his saluation, the inheritance of it, and cut th'intails from all remainders, and a perpetuall succession for it perpetually.

Int. What's his Brother, the other Captaine Dumaine?

Cap E. Why do's he aske him of me?

Int. What's he?

Par. E'ne a Crow a'th same nest: not altogether so great as the first in goodnesse, but greater a great deale in euill. He excels his Brother for a coward, yet his Brother is reputed one of the best that is. In a retreat hee outrunnes any Lackey; marrie in coming on, hee ha's the Crampe.

Int. If your life be saued, will you undertake to betray the Florentine.

Par. I, and the Captaine of his horse, Count Rossillion.

Int. Ile whisper with the Generall, and knowe his pleasure

Par. Ile no more drumming, a plague of all drummes, onely to seeme to deserue well, and to beguile the supposition sition of that lascivious yong boy the Count, haue I run into this danger yet who would haue suspected an ambush where I was taken?

Int. There is no remedy sir, but you must dye - the Generall sayes, you that haue so traitorously discouered the secrets of your army, and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serue the world for no honest vse therefore you must dye Come headesman, off with his head

Par. O Lord sir let me liue, or let me see my death

Int. That shall you, and take your leaue of all your friends:

So, looke about you, know you any heere?

Count. Good morrow noble Capitaine

Lo E. God blesse you Capitaine Parolles.

Cap. G. God saue you noble Capitaine.

Lo E. Captain, what greeting will you to my Lord Lafew? I am for France.

Cap. G. Good Capitaine will you giue me a Copy of the sonnet you writ to Diana in behalfe of the Count Rossillion, and I were not a verie Coward, I de compell it of you, but far you well Exeunt.

Int. You are yndone Capitaine all but your scarfe, that has a knot on't yet.

Par. Who cannot be crush'd with a plot?

Inter. If you could finde out a Countrie where but women were that had receiued so much shame, you might begin an impudent Nation Fare yee well sir, I am for France too, we shall speake of you there. Exit.

Par. Yet am I thankfull if my heart were great 'Twould burst at this. Capitaine Ile be no more, But I will eate, and drinke, and sleepe as soft As Capitaine shall Simply the thing I am Shall make me liue: who knowes himselfe a braggart Let him feare this; for it will come to passe, That euery braggart shall be found an Asse. Rust sword, coole blushe, and Parolles liue Safest in shame being fool'd, by fool rie thriue, There's place and meanes for euery man aliue. Ile after them Exit.

Enter Helen, Widow, and Diana.

Hel. That you may well perceiue I haue not wrong'd you, One of the greatest in the Christian world Shall be my suretie for whose throne 'tis needfull Ere I can perfect mine intents, to kneele. Time was, I did him a desired office Deere almost as his life, with gratitude Through flintie Tartars bosome would peepe forth, And answer thanks. I duly am inform'd, His grace is at Marcelle, to which place We haue conuenient conuoy you must know I am supposed dead, the Army breaking, My husband hies him home, where heauen ayding, And by the leaue of my good Lord the King, Wee'l be before our welcome Wid. Gentle Madam, You neuer had a seruant to whose trust Your busines was more welcome.

Hel. Nor your Mistris Euer a friend, whose thoughts more cruy labour To recompence your loue: Doubt not but heauen Hath brought me vp to be your daughters dower, As it hath fated her to be my motiue

And helper to a husband. But O strangeness, That can such sweet vse make of what they hate, When sawcie trusting of the cosin'd thoughts Defiles the pitchy night, so lust doth play With what it loathes, for that which is away, But more of this heereafter: you Diana, Vnder my poore instructions yet must suffer Something in my behalfe.

Dia. Let death and honestie Go with your impositions, I am yours Vpon your will to suffer.

Hel. Yet I pray you:

But with the word the time will bring on summer, When Briars shall haue leaues as well as thornes, And be as sweet as sharpe: we must away, Our Wagon is prepar'd, and time reuiues vs, All's well that ends well, still the fines the Crowne; What ere the course, the end is the renowne. Exeunt.

Enter Clowne, old Lady, and Lafew

Laf. No, no, no, your sonne was misled with a snipt cassats fellow there, whose villanous saffron wold haue made all the vnbak'd and dowy youth of a nation in his colour: your daughter-in law had beene aliue at this houre, and your sonne heere at home, more aduanc'd by the King, then by that red-tail'd humble Bee I speake of

La. I would I had not knowne him, it was the death of the most vertuous gentlewoman, that euer Nature had prais'd for creating. If she had pertaken of my flesh and cost mee the deereft groanes of a mother, I could not haue owed her a more rooted loue.

Laf. 'Twas a good Lady, 'twas a good Lady. Wee may picke a thousand fallers ere wee light on such another hearbe.

Clo. Indeed sir she was the sweete Margerom of the faller, or rather the hearbe of grace.

Laf. They are not hearbes you knaue, they are nose-hearbes

Clowne. I am no great Nabuchadnezzar sir, I haue not much skill in grace

Laf. Whether doest thou professe thy selfe, a knaue or a foole?

Clo. A foole sir at a womans seruice, and a knaue at a mans.

Laf. Your distinction.

Clo. I would coulen the man of his wife, and do his seruice

Laf. So you were a knaue at his seruice indeed.

Clo. And I would giue his wife my bauble sir to doe her seruice.

Laf. I will subscribe for thee, thou art both knaue and foole

Clo. At your seruice.

Laf. No, no, no.

Clo. Why sir, if I cannot serue you, I can serue as great a prince as you are.

Laf. Whose that, a Frenchman?

Clo. Faith sir a has an English maine, but his sismoie is more hotter in France then there.

Laf. What prince is that?

Clo. The blacke prince sir, alias the prince of datkenesse, alias the diuell.

Laf. Hold thee there's my purse, I giue thee not this to suggest thee from thy master thou talk'st off, serue him still.

Clow

Clo I am a woodland fellow sir, that alwaies loued a great fire, and the master I speak of euer keeps a good fire, but sure he is the Prince of the world, let his Nobilitie remaine in's Court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pomp to enter: some that humble themselves may, but the master will be too chill and tender, and theyle bee for the flowrie way that leads to the broad gate, and the great fire.

Laf Go thy waies, I begin to bee a wearie of thee, and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. Go thy wayes, let my horses bewel look'd too, without any trickes.

Clo If I put any trickes vpon em sir, they shall bee Iades trickes, which are their owne right by the law of Nature.

Laf A shrewd knaue and an unhappie Lady. So is. My Lord that's gone made himselfe much sport out of him, by his authoritie hee remaines heere, which he thinkes is a patten for his sawcinesse, and indeede he has no pace, but runnes where he will.

Laf I like him well, 'tis not amiss: and I was about to tell you, since I heard of the good Ladies death, and that my Lord your sonne was vpon his returne home I moued the King my master to speake in the behalfe of his daughter, which in the minoritie of them both, his Maiestie out of a selfe gracious remembrance did first propose, his Highnesse hath promis'd me to doe it, and to stoppe vp the displeasure he hath conceiued against your sonne, there is no fitter matter. How do's your Ladyship like it?

La. With verie much content my Lord, and I wish it happily effected.

Laf. His Highnesse comes post from Marcellus, of as able bodie as when he number'd thirty, a will be heere to morrow, or I am deceiu'd by him that in such intelligence hath seldome fail'd.

La. It reioyces me, that I hope I shall see him ere I die. I haue letters that my sonne will be heere to night. I shall beseech your Lordship to remaine with mee, till they meete together.

Laf. Madam, I was thinking with what manners I might safely be admitted.

Lad. You neede but pleade your honourable priuiledge.

Laf. Ladie, of that I haue made a bold charter, but I thanke my God, it holds yet.

Enter Clowne

Clo O Madam, yonders my Lord your sonne with a patch of veluet on's face, whether there bee a scar vnder't or no, the Veluet knowes, but 'tis a goodly patch of Veluet, his left cheek is a cheek of two pile and a halfe, but his right cheek is worne bare.

Laf. A scarre nobly got, Or anoble scarre, is a good liu tie of honor, So belike is that

Clo But it is your carbinado'd face

Laf Let vs go see your sonne I pray you, I long to talke with the yong noble souldier.

Clowne. Faith there s a dozen of em, with del are fine hats, and most courteous feathers, which bow the head, and nod at euery man.

Exeunt

Actus Quintus.

Enter Helen, Widdow, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding posting day and night, Must wear your spirits low, we cannot helpe it: But since you haue made the daies and nights as one, To weare your gentle lumbes in my assayres, Be bold you do so grow in my requital, As nothing can vnroote you. In happie time,

Enter a gentle Asyranger.

This man may helpe me to his Maiesties care, If he would spend his power. God saue you sir.

Gent. And you.

Hel. Sir, I haue seene you in the Court of France.

Gent. I haue bene sometimes there.

Hel I do presume sir, that you are not false From the report that goes vpon your goodnesse, And therefore goaded with most sharpe occasions, Which lay nice manners by, I put you to The vse of your owne vertues, for the which I shall continue thankfull.

Gent. What's your will?

Hel. That it will please you To giue this poore petition to the King, And ayde me with that store of power you haue To come into his presence.

Gent. The Kings not heere.

Hel. Not heere sir?

Gent. Not indeed,

He hence remou'd last night, and with more hast Then is his vse

Wid. Lord how we loose our paines.

Hel. All's well that ends well yet, Though time seeme so aduerser, and meanes vnfit: I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

Gent. Marrie as I take it to Rossith, Whither I am going

Hel. I do beseech you sir, Since you are like to see the King before me, Comend the paper to his gracious hand, Which I presume shall render you no blame, But rather make you thanke your paines for it, I will come after you with what good speede Our meanes will make vs meanes.

Gent. This Ile do for you

Hel. And you shall finde your selfe to be well thank't what e're falles more. We must to horse againe. Go, go, prouide.

Enter Clowne and Parrolles

Par. Good Mr Lauatch giue my Lord Laf this letter, I haue ere now sir bene better knowne to you, when I haue held familiaritie with fresher clothes: but I am now sir muddied in fortunes mood, and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure.

Clo. Truly, Fortunes displeasure is but sluttish if it smell so strongly as thou speak'st of. I will henceforth eate no Fish of Fortunes butt'ring. Pre thee alow the winde.

Par. Nay you neede not to stop your nose sir. I spake but by a Metaphor.

Clo. Indeed sir, if your Metaphor stinke, I will stop my nose, or against any mans Metaphor Prethe get thee further.

Par.

Par. Pray you sir deliuer me this paper.

Cle. Foh, prethee stand away: a paper from fortunes close-stool, to giue to a Nobleman. Look heere he comes himselfe.

Enter Lafew.

Cle. Heere is a purr of Fortunes sir, or of Fortunes Cat, but not a Muscat, that ha's falne into the vnclene fish-pond of her displeasure, and as he sayes is muddied withall. Pray you sir, vse the Carpe as you may, for he lookes like a poore decayed, ingenious, foolish, rascally knaue. I doe pittie his distresse in my smiles of comfort, and leaue him to your Lordship.

Par. My Lord I am a man whom fortune hath cruelly scratch'd.

Laf. And what would you haue me to doe? 'Tis too late to paire her nailes now. Wherein haue you played the knaue with fortune that she should scratch you, who of her selfe is a good Lady, and would not haue knaues chriue long vnder? There's a Cardue for you: Let the Iustices make you and fortune friends; I am for other businesse.

Par. I beseech your honour to heare mee one single word,

Laf. you begge a single peny more: Come you shall ha't, saue your word.

Par. My name my good Lord is Parolles.

Laf. You begge more then word then, Cox my passion, giue me your hand. How does your drumme?

Par. O my good Lord, you were the first that found mee.

Laf. Was I insooth? And I was the first that lost thee.

Par. It lies in you my Lord to bring me in some grace for you did bring me out.

Laf. Our vpon thee knaue, dost thou put vpon mee at once both the office of God and the diuel: one brings thee in grace, and the other brings thee out. The Kings comming I know by his Trumpets. Sirrah, inquire further after me, I had talke of you last night, though you are a foole and a knaue, you shall eate, go too, follow.

Par. I praise God for you

[Flourish. Enter King, old Lady, Lafew, the two French Lords, with attendants]

King. We lost a Jewell of her, and our esteeme Was made much poorer by it: but your sonne, As mad in folly, lack'd the sence to know Her estimation home.

Old La. 'Tis past my Liege, And I beseech your Maiestie to make it Naturall rebellion, done i'th blade of youth, When oyle and fire, too strong for reasons force, Ore-bears it, and burnes on.

King. My honour'd Lady, I haue forgiven and forgotten all, Though my reuenges were high bent vpon him, And watch'd the time to shoote.

Laf. This I must say, But first I begge my pardon: the yong Lord Did to his Maiestie, his Mother, and his Ladie, Offence of mighty note; but to himselfe The greatest wrong of all. He lost a wife, Whose beauty did astonish the survey Of richest eyes: whose words all eares tooke captiue, Whose deere perfection, hearts that scorn'd to serue, Humbly call'd Mistris.

King. Praising what is lost, Makes the remembrance deere. Well, call him hither, We are reconcil'd, and the first view shall kill All repetition: Let him not aske our pardon, The nature of his great offence is dead, And deeper then obliuion, we do burie Th'incensing reliques of it. Let him approach A stranger, no offender; and informe him So 'tis our will he should.

Gent. I shall my Liege

King. What sayes he to your daughter. Haue you spoke?

Laf. All that he is, hath reference to your Highnes.

King. Then shall we haue a match. I haue letters sent me, that sets him high in fame.

Enter Count Bertram.

Laf. He lookes well on't

King. I am not a day of season, For thou maist see a sun-shine, and a haile In me at once. But to the brightest beames Distracted clouds giue way, so stand thou forth, The time is faire againe.

Ber. My high repented blames Deere Soueraigne pardon to me

King. All is whole,

Not one word more of the consumed time, Let's take the instant by the forward top: For we are old, and on our quick'nt decrees Th'inaudible, and noiselesse foot of time Steales, ere we can effect them. You remember The daughter of this Lord?

Ber. Admiringly my Liege, at first I stucke my choice vpon her, ere my heart Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue: Where the impression of mine eye enfixing, Contempt his scornfull Perspectiue did lend me, Which warp'd the line, of euerie other fauour, Scorn'd a faire colour, or exprest it stolne, Extended or contracted all proportions To a most hideous object. Thence it came, That she whom all men prais'd, and whom my selfe, Since I haue lost, haue lou'd; was in mine eye The dust that did offend it.

King. Well excus'd:

That thou didst loue her, strikes some scores away From the great compt: but loue that comes too late, Like a remorsefull pardon slowly carried To the great sencer, turnes a sqwere offence, Crying, that's good that's gone: Our rash faults, Make triuall price of serious things we haue, Not knowing them, vntill we know their graue. Ofr our displeasures to our selues vnlist, Destroy our friends, and after weepe their dust. Our owne loue waking, cries to see what's done, While shamefull hate sleepes out the afternoone. Bethis sweet Helens knell, and now forget her. Send forth your amorous token for faire Maudlin, The maine consents are had, and heere we'll stay To see our owidowers second marriage day: Which better then the first, O deere heauen blesse, Or, ere they meete in me, O Nature cesse.

Laf. Come on my sonne, in whom my houses name Must be digested: giue a fauour from you To sparkle in the spirits of my daught'r,

That

That she may quickly come. By my old heard,
And curie haire that's on't, Helen that's dead
Was a sweet creature: such a ring as this,
The last that ere I toke her leaue at Court,
I saw vpon her finger.

Ber. Here it was not.

King. Now pray you let me see it. For mine eye,
While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd too't:
This Ring was mine, and when I gaue it Helen,
I bad her if her fortunes euer stooode
Necessitied to helpe, that by this token
I would releue her. Had you that craft to reauce her
Of what should slead her most?

Ber. My gracious Soueraigne,
How ere it pleases you to take it so,
The ring was neuer here.

Old La. Sonne, on my life
I haue seene her weare it, and she reckon'd it
As her liues rate.

Laf. I am sure I saw her weare it.

Ber. You are decei'd my Lord, she neuer saw it:
In Florence was it from a casement throwne mee,
Wrap'd in a paper, which contain'd the name
Of her that threw it: Noble she was, and thought
I stood ingag'd. but when I had subscrb'd
To mine owne fortune, and inform'd her fully,
I could not answer in that course of Honour
As she had made the ouerture, she cast
In heauie satisfaction, and would neuer
Receiue the Ring againe.

King. Plutus himselfe,
That knowes the tinct and multiplying med'cine,
Hath not in natures myserie more science,
Then I haue in this Ring. 'Twas mine, 'twas Helen,
Who euer gaue it you. then if you know
That you are well acquainted with your selfe,
Confesse 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. She call'd the Saints to suretie,
That she would neuer put it from her finger,
Vnlesse she gaue it to your selfe in bed.
Where you haue neuer come or sent it vs
Vpon her great disaster.

Ber. She neuer saw it.

King. Thou speake'st it falsely as I loue mine Honor,
And mak'st conneclurall seeres to come into me,
Which I would faine shut out, if it should proue
That thou art so inhumane, 'twill not proue so:
And yet I know not, thou didst hate her deadly,
And she is dead, which nothing but to close
Her eyes my selfe, could win me to beleue,
More then to see this Ring. Take him away,
My fore past proofes, how ere the matter fall
Shall taze my feares of little vanitie,
Hauing vainly fear'd too little. Away with him,
Wee'l sift this matter further.

Ber. If you shall proue
This Ring was euer hers, you shall as easie
Proue that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she neuer was

Enter a Gentleman.

King. I am wrap'd in dismall thinkings.

Gm. Gracious Soueraigne,

Whether I haue beene too blame or no, I know not,
Here's a petition from a Florentine,
Who hath for foure or fve removes come short,
To tender it her selfe. I vnderooke it.

Vanquish'd thereto by the faire graces and speech
Of the poore suppliant, who by this I know
Is heere attending: her businesse lookes in her
With an importing visage, and she told me
In a sweet verball breefe, it did concerne
Your Highnesse with her selfe.

A Letter.

Upon his many protestations to marrie me when his wife was dead, I blis to say it, he wanne me. Now is the Court Resfiliu a Widower, his wnes are forfeited to mee, and my honors payed to him. Hee stole from Florence, taking no leau, and I follow him to his Countrey for Iudice: Grant it me, O King, in you is best law, otherwise a seducer I rishe, and a poste Maids vndone.

Diana Capilet.

Laf. I will buy me a sonne in Law in a faire, and toole for this. He none of him.

King. The heauens haue thought well on thee Lafes,
To bring forth this discourtie, seeke these sutors:
Go speedily, and bring againe the Count.

Enter Bertram.

I am a-seard the life of Helen (Ladie)
Was sofly snatcht

Old La. Now iustice on the doers.

King. I wonder'st, sir, wifes are monsters to you,
And that you flye them as you sweare them Lordship,
Yet you desire to marry. What woman's that?

Enter Sir Iohn, Diana, and Petrus.

Dia. I am my Lord a wretched Florentine,
Deiued from the ancient Caplet,
My suite as I do vnderstand you know,
And therefore know how farr I may be pittied.

Old La. I am her Mother sir, whose age and honour
Both suffer vnder this complaint we bring,
And both shall cease, without your remedie.

King. Come heither Court, do you know these Women?

Ber. My Lord, I neither can nor will denie,
But that I know them, do they charge me further?

Dia. Why do you looke so strange vpon your wife?

Ber. She's none of mine my Lord

Dia. If you shall marrie

You giue away this hand, and that is mine,
You giue away heauens vowes, and those are mine
You giue away my selfe, which is knowne mine:
For I by vow am so embodied yours,
That she which marries you, must marrie me,
Either both or none.

Laf. your reputation comes too short for my daughter, you are no husband for her.

Ber. My Lord, this is a fond and desp'rate creature,
Whom sometime I haue laugh'd with. Let your highnes
Lay a more noble thought vpon mine honour,
Then for to thinke that I would sinke it heere

King. Sir for my thoughts, you haue them il to friend,
Till your deeds gaine them fairer: proue your honor,
Then in my thought it lies.

Dia. Good my Lord,
Aske him vpon his oath, if hee do's thinke
He had not my virginity.

King. What saist thou to her?

Ber. She's impudent my Lord,
And was a common gamester to the Campe.

Dia. He do's me wrong my Lord. If I were so,
He might haue bought me at a common price.

Do

Do not belecue him. O behold this Ring,
Whose high respect and rich validitie
Did lacke a Paralell: yet for all that
He gaue it to a Commoner a'th Campe
If I be one.

Conn. He blushes, and 'tis hnt:
Of office preceding Ancestors, that Iemme
Confer'd by testament to'th sequent issue
Hath it beene owed and worne. This is his wife,
That Ring's a thousand proofes.

King. Me thought you saide
You saw one heere in Court could witnesse it.

Dia. I did my Lord, but loath am to produce
So bad an instrument, his names Parrolles.

Laf. I saw the man to day, if man he bee.

Kim. Finde him, and bring him heither.

Ref. What of him:

He's quoted for a most pe fidious slaue
With all the spots a'th world, taxt and deboth d,
Whose nature sickens but to speake a truth,
Am I, or that or this for what he'l vter,
That will speake any thing.

Kim. She hath that Ring of yours

Ref. I thinke she has, certaine it is I lyk'd her,
And boorded her i'th wanton way of youth
She knew her distance, and did angle for mee,
Madding my eagernes with her restraint,
As all impediments in fancies course
Are motives of more fancie, and in fine,
Her insuite coming with her moderne grace,
Subdu'd me to her rate, she got the Ring,
And I had that which any interior might
At Market price haue bought.

Dia. I must be patient.

You that haue turn'd off a first so noble wife,
May iustly dyer me. I pray you yet,
(Since you lacke vertue, I will loofe a husband)
Send for your Ring, I will returne it home,
And gve me mine againe.

Ref. I haue it not.

Kim. What Ring was yours I pray you?

Dian. Sir much like the same vpon your finger.

Kim. Know you this Ring, this Ring was his of late.

Dia. And this was it I gaue him being a bed.

Kim. The story then goes false, you threw it him
Out of a Casement.

Dia. I haue spoke the truth. Enter Parolles.

Ref. My Lord, I do confesse the ring was hers.

Kim. You boggle shrewdly, euery feather starts you.
Is this the man you speake of?

Dia. I, my Lord.

Kim. Tell me sirrah, but tell me true I charge you,
Not fearing the displeasure of your master.
Which on your iust proceeding, Ile keepe off,
By him and by this woman heere, what know you?

Par. So please your Maesty, my master hath bin an honourable Gentleman. Trickes hee hath had in him, which Gentlemen haue.

Kim. Come, come, to'th purpose: Did hee loue this woman?

Par. Faith sir he did loue her, but how.

Kim. How I pray you?

Par. He did loue her sir, as a Gent. loues a Woman.

Kim. How is that?

Par. Helou'd her sir, and lou'd her not.

Kim. As thou art a knaue and no knaue, what an equi-uocall Companion is this?

Par. I am a poore man, and at your Maiesties command

Laf. Hee's a good drumme my Lord, but a naughtie Orator.

Dian. Do you know he promist me marriage?

Par. Faith I know more then Ile speake.

Kim. But wilt thou not speake all thou know'st?

Par. Yes so please your Maesty. I did goe betweene them as I said, but more then that he loued her, for in-deede he was madde for her, and talkt of Sathan, and of Limbo, and of furies, and I know not what: yet I was in that credit with them at that time, that I knewe of their going to bed, and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things which would deriue mee ill will to speake of, therefore I will not speake what I know.

Kim. Thou hast spoken all alreadie, vnlesse thou canst say they are married, but thou art too fine in thy euidence, therefore stand aside. This Ring you say was yours.

Dia. I my good Lord.

Kim. Where did you buy it? Or who gaue it you?

Dia. It was not giuen me, nor I did not buy it.

Kim. Who lent it you?

Dia. It was not lent me neither

Kim. Where did you finde it then?

Dia. I found it not.

Kim. If it were yours by none of all these wayes,
How could you giue it him?

Dia. I neuer gaue it him.

Laf. This womans an easie gloue my Lord, she goes off and on at pleasure.

Kim. This Ring was mine, I gaue it his first wife.

Dia. It might be yours or hers for ought I know.

Kim. Take her away, I do not like her now,

To prison with her: and away with him,
Vnlesse thou telst me where thou hadst this Ring,
Thou diest within this houre.

Dia. Ile neuer tell you

Kim. Take her away.

Dia. Ile put in baile my liedge.

Kim. I thinke thee now some common Customer,

Dia. By loue if euer I knew man 'twas you.

King. Wherefore hast thou accus'd him al this while.

Dia. Because he's guiltie, and he is not guiltie:

He knowes I am no Maid, and hee'l sweare too't:
Ile sweare I am a Maid, and he knowes not.

Great King I am no strumpet, by my life,
I am either Maid, or else this old mans wife.

Kim. She does abuse our eares, to prison with her.

Dia. Good mother fetch my bayle. Stay Royall sir,
The Ieweller that owes the Ring is sent for,
And he shall surety me. But for this Lord,
Who hath abus'd me as he knowes himselfe,
Though yet he neuer harm'd me, heere I quit him.
He knowes himselfe my bed he hath defil'd,
And at that time he got his wife with childe:
Dead though she be, she feesles her yong one kicke:
So there's my riddle, one that's dead is quicke,
And now behold the meaning.

Enter Hellen and Widow.

Kim. Is there no exorcist
Beguildes the truer Office of mine eyes?
Is't recall that I see?

Hel. No my good Lord,
Y.

'Tis

'Tis but the shadow of a wife you see,
The name, and not the thing.

Ref. Both, both, O pardon.

Hel. Oh my good Lord, when I was like this Maid,
I found you wondrous kinde, there is your Ring,
And looke you, heeres your letter · this it sayes,
When from my finger you can get this Ring,
And is by me with childe. &c. This is done,
Will you be mine now you are doubly wonne?

Ref. If she my Liege can make me know this clearly,
He loue her dearly, euer, euer dearly.

Hel. If it appeare not plaine, and proue vntrue,
Deadly diuorce step betweene me and you.
O my deere mother do I see you liuing?

Laf. Mine eyes smell Onions, I shall weepe anon:
Good Tom Drumme lend me a handkercher.
So I thanke thee, waite on me home, He make sport with thee: Let thy curtisies alone, they are scuruy ones.

King Let vs from point to point this storie know,
To make the euen truth in pleasure flow:
If thou beest yet a fresh vncropped flower,
Chooſe thou thy husband, and He pay thy dower.
For I can guesse, that by thy honest ayde,
Thou keptst a wife her selfe, thy selfe a Maide.
Of that and all the progresse more and lesse,
Resolduedly more leasure shall expresse:
All yet seemes well, and if it end so meete,
The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.

Flourish.

THe Kings a Begger, now the Play is done,
All is well ended, if this suite be wonne,
That you expresse Content · which we will pay,
With strift to please you, day exceeding day:
Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts,
Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts. Exeunt om.

FINIS.

Twelfth Night, Or what you will.

Actus Primus, Scena Prima.

Enter Orsino Duke of Illyria, Curio, and other Lords.

Duke.

Musicke be the food of Loue, play on,
Give me excelsse of it, that sursetting,
The appetite may sick-n, and so dye
That straine agen, it had a dying fall.

O, it came ore my eare, like the sweet sound
That breathes vpon a banke of Violets;
Stealing, and giuing Odour Enough, no more,
'Tis not so sweet now, as it was before.

O spirit of Loue, how quicke and fresh art thou,
That notwithstanding thy caparitie,
Receiweth as the Sea Nought enters there,
Of what validity, and pitch is ere,
But fallies into abatement, and low price
Euen in a minute, so full of shapes is fancie,
That it alone, is high fantastickall.

Curio. Will you go hunt my Lord?

Duke. What Curio?

Curio. The Hart.

Duke. Why so I do, the Noblest that I haue
O when mine eyes did see Oliuia first,
Me thought she purg'd the ayre of pestilence;
That instant was I turn'd into a Hart,
And my desires like fell and cruell hounds,
Ere since pursue me How now what newes from her?

Enter Valentine.

Val. So please my Lord, I might not be admitted,
But from her handmaid do returne this answer.
The Element it selfe, till seuen yeares heate,
Shall not behold her face at ample view:
But like a Cloystresse she will vailed walke,
And water once a day her Chamber round
With eye-offending brine: all this to season
A brothers dead loue, which she would keepe fresh
And lasting, in her sad remembrance.

Duke. O she that hath a heart of that fine frame
To pay this debt of loue but to a brother,
How will she loue, when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flocke of all affections else
That liue in her. When Liuer, Braine, and Heart,
These soueraigne thrones, are all supply'd and fill'd
Her sweete perfections with one selfe king:
Away before me, to sweet beds of Flowers,
Loue-thoughts lyerich, when canop'y'd with bowres.

Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Viola, a Captaine, and Sailors.

Viola. What Country (Friends) is this?

Cap. This is Illyria Ladie.

Viola. And what should I do in Illyria?

My brother he is in Elizium,
Perchance he is not drown'd. What thinke you saylers?

Cap. It is perchance that you your selfe were saved.

Viola. O my poore brother, and so perchance may he be

Cap. True Madam, and to comfort you with chance,

Affure your selfe, after our ship did split,
When you, and those poore number saued with you,
Hung on our drining boate. I saw your brother
Most prouident in perill, binde himselfe,

(Courage and hope both teaching him the practise)

To a strong Masse, that liu'd vpon the sea:

Where like Orion on the Dolphins backe,

I saw him hold acquaintance with the waues,

So long as I could see.

Viola. For saying so, there's Gold:

Mine owne escape vsfoldeth to my hope,

Whereto thy speech serues for authoritie

The like of him Know'st thou this Countrey?

Cap. I Madam well, for I was bred and borne

Not three houres trauaile from this very place.

Viola. Who gouernes heere?

Cap. A noble Duke in nature, as in name.

Viola. What is his name?

Cap. Orsino.

Viola. Orsino I haue heard my father name him,
He was a Batchellor then.

Cap. And so is now, or was so very late:

For but a month ago I went from hence,

And then 'twas fresh in murmure (as you know

What great ones do, the lesse will prattle of.)

That he did seeke the loue of faire Oliuia.

Viola. What's she?

Cap. A vertuous maid, the daughter of a Count

That didd some tweluemonth since, then leaving her

In the protection of his sonne, her brother,

Who shortly also didd: for whose deere loue.

(They say) she hath abur'd the sight

And company of men.

Viola. O that I seru'd that Lady,
And might not be deliuered to the world

T 11

Till I had made mine owne occasion mellow
What ray estate is.

Cap. That were hard to compasse,
Because she will admeit no kinde of suite,
No, not the Dukes.

Vio. There is a faire bebauiour in thee Cypriane,
And though that nature, with a beauteous wall
Doth oft close in pollution: yet of thee
I will beleue thou hast a minde that suites
With this thy faire and outward charaeter.
I prethee (and Ile pay thee bounteously)
Conceale me what I am, and be my ayde,
For such disguise as haply shall become
The forme of my intent. Ile serue this Duke,
Thou shalt present me as an Eunuch to him,
It may be worth thy paines: for I can sing,
And speake to him in many sorts of Musicke,
That will allow me very worth his seruice
What else may hap, to time I will commit,
Onely shape thou thy silence to my wit.

Cap. Be you his Eunuch, and your Mute Ile bee,
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see.

Vio. I thanke thee. Lead me on. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sir Toby, and Maria.

Sir To. What a plague meanes my Neece to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure care's an enemy to life.

Mar. By my troth Sir Toby, you must come in earliyer a nights your Cousin, my Lady, takes great exceptions to your ill houres.

To. Why let her except, before excepted.

Ma. I, but you must confine your selfe within the modest limits of order.

To. Confine? Ile confine my selfe no finer then I am.
these cloatnes are good enough to drinke in, and so bee these boots too. and they be not, let them hang themselves in their owne straps.

Ma. That quaffing and drinking will vndoe you: I heard my Lady talke of it yesterday. and of a foolish knight that you brought in one night here, to be hur woer

To. Who, Sir Andrew Ague-cheeke?

Ma. I he.

To. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria.

Ma. What's that to th' purpose?

To. Why he ha's three thousand ducates a yeare.

Ma. I, but hee'l haue but a yeare in all these ducates:
He's a very foole, and a prodigall.

To. Fie, that you'l say so. he playes o'th Viol-de-ga n-
boys, and speaks three or four languages word for word without booke, & hath all the good gifts of nature.

Ma. He hath indeed, almost naturall. for besides that he's a foole, he's a great quarreller: and but that hee hath the gift of a Coward, to allay the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent, he would quickly
haue the gift of a graue.

Tob. By this hand they are scoundrels and substra-ctors that say so of him. Who are they?

Ma. They that adde moreour, hee's drunke nightly in your company.

To. With drinking healths to my Neece: Ile drinke to her as long as there is a passage in my throat, & drinke in Illyria: he's a Coward and a Coystrill that will not drinke to my Neece. till his braines turne o'th toe, like a parish top. What wenche? Cassillano vulga. for here comes Sir Andrew Agueface.

Enter Sir Andrew.

An. Sir Toby Belch. How now Sir Toby Belch?

To. Sweet Sir Andrew.

An. Blesse you faire Shrew.

Mar. And you too Sir.

Tob. Accost Sir Andrew, accost,

An. What's that?

To. My Neece's Chamber-maid.

Ma. Good Mistress accost, I desire better acquaintance

Ma. My name is Mary Sir.

An. Good mistress Mary, accost.

To. You mistake knight: Accost, is front her, boord her, woer her, assaye her.

An. By my troth I would not vndertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of Accost?

Ma. Far you well Gentlemen.

To. And thou let part Sir Andrew, would thou mightst neuer draw sword agen

An. And you part so mistis, I would I might neuer draw sword agen: Faire Lady, doe you thinke you haue fooles in hand?

Ma. Sir, I haue not you by'th hand.

An. Marry but you shall haue, and heeres my hand.

Ma. Now Sir, thought is free: I pray you bring your hand to'th Buttry barre, and let it drinke

An. Wherefore (Sweet-heart)? What's your Metaphor?

Ma. It's dry Sir.

An. Why I thinke so. I am not such an asse, but I can keepe my hand dry. But what's your iell?

Ma. A dry iell Sir.

An. Are you full of them?

Ma. I Sir, I haue them at my fingers ends. marry now
I lee go your hard, I am barren. Exit Maria

To. O knight, thou lack'st a cup of Canarie. when did
I see thee so put downe?

An. Neuer in your life I thinke, vnlesse you see Ca- narie put me downe. mee thinkes sometimes I haue no more wit then a Christian, or an ordinary man ha's: but I am a great eater of beefe, and I beleue that does harme to my wit.

To. No question.

An. And I thought that, I'de forswear it. Ile ride home to morrow Sir Toby.

To. Pur-quey my deere knight?

An. What is pur-quey? Do, or not do? I would I had bestowed that time in the tongues, that I haue in fencing dancing, and beare-bayting: O had I but followed the Arts.

To. Then hadst thou had an excellent head of haire.

An. Why, would that haue mended my haire?

To. Past question, for thou seest it will not coole my

An. But it becoms we wel enough, dost not? (nature)

To. Excellent, it hangs like flax on a distaffe: & I hope to see a hufwife take thee between her legs, & spin it off.

An. Faith Ile home to morrow Sir Toby, your niece wil not be scene, or if she be it's four to one, she'l none of me:
the Count himselfe here hard by, woos her,

To. Shee'l none o'th Count, she'l not match aboute her degree, neither in estate, yeares, nor wit. I haue heard her swear t. Tu, there's life in't man.

And

And. He stay a moneth longer. I am a fellow o'th strangest minde i'th world. I delight in Maskes and Revels sometimes altogether.

To. Art thou good at these kicke-chawfes Knight?

And. As any man in Illyria, whatsoeuer he be, vnder the degree of my betters, & yet i will not compare with an old man.

To. What is thy excuseth in a galliard, knight?

And. Faith, I can cut a caper.

To. And I can cut the Minstrel too't.

And. And I thinke I haue the backe-tricke, simply as strong as any man in Illyria.

To. Wherefore are these things hid? Wherefore haue these gifts a Curtaine before 'em? Are they like to take dust, like mistris Malspisture? Why dost thou not goe to Church in a Galliard, and come home in a Carranto? My verie walke should be a jigge. I would not so much as make water but in a sinke-a-pace. What doest thou meane? Is it a world to hide vertues in? I did thinke by the excellent constitution of thy legges, it was form'd vnder the starre of a Galliard.

And. I, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a dam'd colour'd stocke. Shall we sit about some Reue's?

To. What shall we doe else? were we not borne vnder Taurus?

And. Taurus? That sides and heart.

To. No sir, it is leggs and thighes let me see thee caper. Ha, higher. ha, ha, excellent. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Valentine, and Viola in mans attire.

Val. If the Duke continue these fauours towards you Cesario, you are like to be much aduanc'd, he hath knowen you but three dayes, and already you are no stranger.

Vis. You either feare his humour, or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his loue. Is he inconstant sir, in his fauours. Val. No belecue me.

Enter Duke, Curio, and Attendants.

Vis. I thanke you heere comes the Count.

Duke. Who saw Cesario hoa?

Vis. On your attendance my Lord heere.

Du. Stand you a while aloofe. Cesario, Thou knowst no fesse, but all I haue vnclasp'd To thee the booke euen of my secret soule. Therefore good youth, addresse thy gate vnto her, Be not deny'de access, stand at her doores, And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow Till thou haue audience.

Vis. Sure my Noble Lord, If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow As it is spoke, she neuer will admit me.

Du. Be clamorous, and leape all ciuill bounds, Rather then make vnprofitable returne,

Vis. Say I do speake with her (my Lord) what then?

Du. O then, vnfold the passion of my loue, Surprize her with discourse of my deere faith; It shall become thee well to act my woes: She will attend it better in thy youth, Then in a Nuntio's of more graue aspect.

Vis. I thinke not so, my Lord.

Du. Deere Lad, beleue it;

For they shall yet belye thy happy yeeres, That say thou art a man: Dianus lip Is not more smooth, and shrill, and sound, And all is semblatiue a womans part. I know thy constellation is right apt For this assayre: some foure or five attend him, All if you will: for I my selfe am best When least in companie. prosper well in this, And thou shalt lue as freely as thy Lord, To call his fortunes thine.

Vis. He do my best.

To woe your Lady: yet a barrefull strife, Who ere I woe, my selfe would be his wife. Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Maria, and Clowne.

Ma. Nay, either tell me where thou hast bin, or I will not open my lippes so wide as a bristle may enter, in way of thy excule. my Lady will hang thee for thy absence.

Cl. Let her hang me. hee that is well hang'de in this world, needs to feare no colours.

Ma. Make that good.

Cl. He shall see none to feare.

Ma. A good lenton answer. I can tell thee where y saying was borne, of I feare no colours.

Cl. Where good mistris Mary?

Ma. In the warrs, & that may you be bolde to say in your foolerie.

Cl. Well, God giue them wisdom that haue it: & those that are fooles, let them vse their talents.

Ma. Yet you will be hang'd for being so long absent, or to return'd away is not that as good as a hanging to you?

Cl. Many a good hanging, prevents a bad marriage and for turning away, let summer beare it out.

Ma. You are resolute then?

Cl. Not so neyther, but I am resolu'd on two points.

Ma. That if one breake, the other will hold: or if both breake, your gask is fall.

Cl. Apt in good faith, very apt well go thy way, if sir Toby would leaue drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Ener flesh, as any in Illyria.

Ma. Peace you rogue, no more o'that: here comes my Lady make your excuse wisely, you were best.

Enter Lady Olivia, with Malvolio.

Cl. Wit, and't be thy will, put me into good fooling. thole wits that thinke they haue thee, doe very oft proue fooles. and I that am sure I lacke thee, may passe for a wise man. For what saies Quintapalm, Better a witty foole, then a foolish wit. God blesse thee Lady.

Ol. Take the foole away.

Cl. Do you not heare fellowes, take away the Ladie.

Ol. Go too, you are a dry foole: I le no more of you besides you grow dishonest.

Cl. Two faults Madona, that drinke & good counsell wil amend: for giue the dry foole drink, then is the foole not dry. bid the dishonest man mend himself, if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if hee cannot, let the Botcher mend him: any thing that's mended, is but patch'd vertu that transgresses, is but patcht with sinne, and sin that amends, is but patcht with vertue. If that this simple Sillogisme will serue, so: if it will not, what remedy?

As there is no true Cuckold but calamity, so heauies a flower; The Lady bad take away the foole, therefore I say againe, take her away.

Ol. Sir, I bad them take away you.

Clo. Misprision in the highell degree. Lady, Cucurbit non facit monachum: that's as much to say, as I was not motley in my brune: good Madona, giue mee leaue to proueyou a foole.

Ol. Can you do it?

Clo. Dexterioussly, good Madona.

Ol. Make your prooffe.

Clo. I must catechize you for it Madona, Good my Mounse of vertue answer mee.

Ol. Well sir, for want of other idlenesse, He bide your prooffe.

Clo. Good Madona, why mournst thou.

Ol. Good foole, for my brothers death.

Clo. I thinke his soule is in hell, Madona.

Ol. I know his soule is in heaven, foole.

Clo. The more foole (Madona) to moune for your Brothers soule, being in heaven. Take away the Foole, Gentlemen.

Ol. What thinke you of this foole Madona, doth he hot mend?

Mad. Yes, and shall do, till the pangs of death shake him: Infirmitie that decays the wise, doth euer make the better foole.

Clo. God send you sir, a speedie Infirmitie, for the better increasing your folly. Sir Toby will be sworn that I am no Fox, but he wil not passe his word for twopence that you are no Foole.

Ol. How say you to that Madona?

Mad. I maruell your Ladyship takes delight in such a barren rascall: I saw him put down the other day, with an ordinary foole, that has no more braine then a store. Looke you now, he's out of his guard already: vnles you laugh and mimicke occasion to him, he is gagg'd. I protest I take these Wisemen, that crow so to these set kinde of fooles, no better then the fooles Zanyes.

Ol. O you are sicke of selfe-loue Madona, and taste with a dissemper'd appetite. To be generous, gentle, and offree disposition, is to take those things for Bird-bolts, that you deeme Cannon bullets. There is no slander in an allow'd foole, though he do nothing but raule; nor no rayling, in a knowne discreet man, though hee do nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now Mercury indue thee with leasing, for thou speak'st well of fooles.

Enter Maria.

Mad. Madam, there is at the gate, a young Gentleman, much desires to speake with you.

Ol. From the Count Orsino, is it?

Ma. I know not (Madam) 'tis a faire young man, and well attended.

Ol. Who of my people hold him in delay?

Ma. Sir Toby Madam, your kinsman.

Ol. Fetch him off I pray you, he speakes nothing but madman. Fie on him. Go you Madona; If it be a suit from the Count, I am sicke, or not at home. What you will, to dismisse it.

Exit Madona.

Now you see sir, how your fooling growes old, & people dislike it.

Clo. Thou hast spoke for vs (Madona) as if thy eldest sonne should be a foole: who secul, Ioue cramme with braines, for heere he comes.

Enter Sir Toby.

One of thy kin has a most weake Pia-mater.

Ol. By mine honor halfe drunke. What is he at the gate Cosin?

To. A Gentleman.

Ol. A Gentleman? What Gentleman?

To. Tis a Gentleman heere. A plague o' these pickle herring: How now Sot.

Clo. Good Sir Toby.

Ol. Cosin, Cosin, how haue you come so early by this Lechargie?

To. Lecherie, I define Lechery: there's one at the gate.

Ol. I marry, what is he?

To. Lecherie be the duell and he will, I care not giue me faith say I. Well, it's all one.

Exit

Ol. What a drunken man like, foole?

Clo. I like a drown'd man, a foole, and a madleman. One draught about heere, makes him a foole, the second maddes him, and a third drownes him.

Ol. Go thou and seeke the Crowner, and let him sit o'my Coz: for he is in the third degree of drinke: I too's drown'd: go looke after him.

Clo. He is but mad yet Madona, and the foole shall looke to the madman.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, your young fellow swears hee will speake with you. I told him you were sicke, he takes on him to vnderstand so much, and therefore comes to speake with you. I told him you were asleepe, he seems to haue a fore knowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speake with you. What is to be said to him Ladie, hee's fortified against any deniall.

Ol. Tell him, he shall not speake with me.

Mal. He's beene told so: and hee says as hee stand at your doore like a Sheriffes post, and be the supporter to a bench, but hee'l speake with you.

Ol. What kinde o'man is he?

Mal. Why of mankind.

Ol. What manner of man?

Mal. Of verie ill manner: he'l speake with you, will you, or no.

Ol. Of what personage, and yeeres is he?

Mal. Not yett old enough for a man, nor yong enough for a boy: as a squash is before tis a pescod, or a Cockling when tis almost an Apple: Tis with him in standing water, betweene boy and man. He is verie well-fauour'd, and he speakes verie shrilly: One would thinke his mothers milke were scarce out of him.

Ol. Let him approach: Call in my Gentlewoman.

Mal. Gentlewoman, my Lady calls.

Exit

Enter Maria.

Ol. Giue me my vaile: come throw it ore my face, Wee'l once more heare Orsino Embassie.

Enter Viola.

Vi. The honorable Ladie of the house, which is she?

Ol. Speake to me, I shall answer for her: your will.

Vi. Most radiant, exquisite, and vnmatchable beauty. I pray you tell me if this bee the Lady of the house, for I neuer saw her. I would bee loath to cast away my speech: for besides that it is excellently well pend, I haue taken great paines to con it. Good Beauties, let mee sustaine no scorn: I am very comtable, euen to the least sinister vsage.

Ol. Whence came you sir?

Vi. I can say little more then I haue studied, & that question's out of my part. Good gentle one, giue mee modest assurance, if you be the Ladie of the house, that may proceede in my speech.

Ol. Are you a Comedian?

Vio. No my profound heart and yet (by the verie phangs of malice, I sweare) I am not that I play. Are you the Ladie of the house?

Ol. If I do not vsurpe my selfe, I am.

Vio. Most errant, if you are she, you do vsurp your selfe: for what is yours to bestowe, is, not yours to reserve. But this is from my Commission. I will on with my speech in your praise, and then shew you the heart of my message.

Ol. Come to what is important in't: I forgive you the praise.

Vio. Alas, I tooke great paines to studie it, and 'tis Poeticall.

Ol. It is the more like to be feigned, I pray you keep it in. I heard you were sawey at my gates, & allowd your approach rather to wonder at you, then to heare you. If you be not mad, be gone: if you haue reason, be breefe: 'tis not that time of Moone with me, to make one in so skipping a dialogue.

Ma. Will you hoyft sayle sir, here lies your way

Vio. No good swabber, I am to hull here a litle longer. Some mollification for your Giant, sweete Ladie: tell me your minde, I am a messenger

Ol. Sure you haue some indeuous matter to deliuer, when the curtisie of it is so fearefull. Speake your office.

Vio. It alone concernes your eare: I bring no ouerture of warre, no taxation of homage, I hold the Olyffe in my hand: my words are as full of peace, as matter

Ol. Yet you began rudely. What are you? What would you?

Vio. The rudenesse that hath appeard in mee, haue I learn'd from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as secret as maiden-head: to your eares, Diuinity, to any others, prophanation.

Ol. Give vs the place alone, We will heare this diuinitie. Now sir, what is your text?

Vio. Most sweete Ladie

Ol. A comfortable doctrine, and much may bee saide of it. Where lies your Text?

Vio. In Orsinos bosome

Ol. In his bosome? In what chapter of his bosome?

Vio. To answer by the method, in the first of his hart.

Ol. O, I haue read it: it is heresie. Haue you no more to say?

Vio. Good Madam, let me see your face.

Ol. Haue you any Commission from your Lord, to negotiate with my face: you are now out of your Text: but we will draw the Curtaine, and shew you the picture. Looke you sir, such a one I was this present: Ist not well done?

Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.

Ol. 'Tis in graine sir, 'twill endure winde and weather.

Vio. 'Tis beauty traly blent, whose red and white, Natures owne sweet, and cunning hand laid on. Ladie, you are the cruell'st shee alive, If you will leade these graces to the graue, And leaue the world no copie

Ol. Of it, I will not be so hard-hearted: I will glue out diuers sedules of my beautie. It shalbe Inuentoried and every particle and venisile labell'd to my will: As, Item two lippes indifferent redde, Item two grey eyes, with lids to them: Item, one nocke, one chin, & so forth. Were you farr hither to praise me?

Vio. I see you what you are, you are too proud. But if you were the diuell, you are faire:

My Lord, and master loues you: O such loue Could be butt recompenc'd, though you were crown'd The non-parent of beautie.

Ol. How does he loue me?

Vio. With adorations, fertill teares, With groanes that thunder loue, with sighes of fire.

Ol. Your Lord does know my mind, I cannot loue him. Yet I suppose him vertuous, know him noble, Of great estate, of fresh and stainlesse youth; In voyces well divulg'd, free, learn'd, and valiant, And in dimension, and the shape of nature, A gracious person; But yet I cannot loue him: He might haue tooke his answer long ago.

Vio. If I did loue you in my masters flame, With such a suffering, such a deadly life. In your denial; I would finde no sence, I would not vnderstand it.

Ol. Why, what would you?

Vio. Make me a willow Cabine at your gate, And call vpon my soule within the house, Write loyall Cantons of contemned loue, And sing them lowd euen in the dead of night: Hallow your name to the reuerberate hilles, And make the babling Gossip of the aire, Cry out Oluia: O you should not rest Betweene the elements of ayre, and earth, But you should pittie me.

Ol. You might do much: What is your Parentage?

Vio. About my fortunes, yet my state is well; I am a Gentleman.

Ol. Get you to your Lord: I cannot loue him: let him send no more, Vnlesse (perchance) you come to me againe, To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well! I thank you for your paines spend this for mee.

Vio. I am no feede poast, Ladie, keepe your parle My Master, not my selfe, lacks recompence. Loue make his heart of flint, that you shall loue, And let your seruour like my masters be, Plac'd in contempt: Farwell sayre crueltie.

Exit

Ol. What is your Parentage? About my fortunes, yet my state is well; I am a Gentleman. Ile be sworn thou art, Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbes, actions, and spirit. Do giue thee five-fold blazon. not too fast: soft, soft, Vnlesse the Master were the man. How now? Even so quickly may one catch the plague? Me thinks I seele this youths perfections With an invisible, and subtile stealth To creepe in at mine eyes. Well, let it be. What hoa, Maluolio.

Enter Maluolio.

Mal. Heere Madam, at your seruice. Ol. Run after that same peeuish Messenger The Countes man: he left this Ring behinde him. Would I did but: tell him, Ie none of it. Desire him not to stirre with his Lord, Nor hold him vp with hopes, I am not for him. If that the youth will come this way to morrow, Ile glue him reasons for't. bid thee Maluolio.

Mal. Madam, I will.

Exit

Ol. I do know not what, and feare to finde Mine euen greater distractions for my minde.

Fare

Fate, shew thy force, our selues we do not owe,
What is decreed, must be: and be this so.

Enter Actus primus.

Actus Secundus, Scena prima.

Enter Antonio & Sebastian.

Ant. Will you stay no longer. now will you not that I go with you.

Seb. By your patience; no: my starres shine darkely ouer me, the malignancie of my fate, might perhaps distemper yours, therefore I shall graue of you your leaue, that I may beare my euils alone. It were a bad recompence for your loue, to lay any of them on you.

Ant. Let me yet know of you, whither you are bound

Seb. No sooth sir: my determinate voyage is meere extrauagancie. But I perceiue in you so excellent a touch of modestie, that you will not extort from me, what I am willing to keepe in: therefore it charges me in manners, the rather to expresse my selfe: you must know of mee then Antonio, my name is Sebastian (which I call d Rodrigo) my father was that Sebastian of Messaline, whom I know you haue heard of. He left behinde him, my selfe, and a sister, both borne in an houre: if the Heauens had bene pleas'd, would we had so ended. But you sir, alter'd that, for some houre before you tooke me from the breach of the sea, was my sister drown'd.

Ant. Alas the day

Seb. A Lady sir, though it was said shee much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful but though I could not with such estimable wonder ouer farre beleue that, yet thus farre I will boldly publish her, shee bore a minde that enuy could not but call faire: Shee is drown'd already sir with salt water, though I seeme to drowne her remembrance againe with more.

Ant. Pardon me sir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O good Antonio, forgive me your trouble.

Ant. If you will not murder me for my loue, let mee be your seruant.

Seb. If you will not vndo what you haue done, that is kill him, whom you haue recover'd, desire it not: Fare ye well at once, my bosome is full of kindnesse, and I am yet so neere the manners of my mother, that vpon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tales of me: I am bound to the Count Orsino's Court, farewell. Exit

Ant. The gentlenesse of all the gods go with thee.

I haue many enemies in Orsino's Court,
Else would I very shortly see thee there.

But come what may, I do adore thee so,
That danger shall seeme sport, and I will go. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Viola and Maluolio, at severall doores.

Mal. Were not you eu'n now, with the Countesse Olivia?

Viola. Euen now sir, on a moderate pace, I haue since a-riud but hither.

Mal. She returns this Ring to you (sir) you might haue saued mee my paines, to haue taken it away your selfe. She adds moreouer, that you should put your Lord into a desperate assurance, she will none of him. And one thing more, that you be neuer so hardie to come againe in his affaires, vnlesse it bee to report your Lords taking of this: receiue it so.

Viola. She tooke the Ring of me, Ile none of it.

Mal. Come sir, you peeuishly threw it to her: and her will is, it should be so return'd: If it bee worth stooping for, there it lies, in your eye: if not, bee it his that findes it. Exit.

Viola. I left no Ring with her: what meanes this Lady?

Fortune forbid my out-side haue not charm'd her:

She made good view of me, indeed so much,

That me thought her eyes had lost her tongue,

For she did speake in starts distractedly.

She loues me sure, the cunning of her passion

Inuites me in this churlish messenger:

None of my Lords Ring? Why he sent her none;

I am the man, if it be so, astis,

Poore Lady, she were better loue a dreame.

Disguise, I see thou art a wickednesse,

Wherein the pregnant enemie does much,

How easie is it, for the proper false

In womens waxen hearts to set their formes:

Alas, O frailtie is the cause, not wee,

For such as we are made, if such we bee:

How will this sadge? My master loues her deerely,

And I (poore monster) fond as much on him:

And she (mistaken) seemes to dote on me:

What will become of this? As I am man,

My state is desperate for my masters loue:

As I am woman (now alas the day)

What thriflesse fighes shall poore Olivia breath?

G time, thou must vtangle this, not I,

It is too hard a knot for me t'vnty.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.

To. Approach Sir Andrew: not to bee a bedde after midnight, is to be vp betimes, and Delicula surgere, thou knowst

And Nay by my troth I know not: but I know, to be vp late, is to be vp late.

To. A false conclusion I hate it as an vnfill'd Canne. To be vp after midnight, and to go to bed then is early so that to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes. Does not our liues consist of the foure Elements?

And. Faith so they say, but I thinke it rather consists of eating and drinking

To. Th'art a scholler; let vs therefore eate and drinke, Marian I say, a stoop of wine.

Enter Clowne

And. Heere comes the fooley faith.

Clo. How now my harts. Did you neuer see the Picture of we three?

To. Welcome asse, now let's haue a catch.

And. By my troth the foole has an excellent breast. I had rather then forty shillings I had such a legge, and so sweet a breath to sing, as the foole has. Insooth thou wast in very gracious fooling last night, when thou spok'st of Pisagromitus, of the Vaprans passing the Equinoctial of Quenbus: 'twas very good yfaith I sent thee fixe pence for forthy Lemon, hadst it?

Clo. I did impetuous thy gratillity: for Malvolios nose is no Whip-stocke. My Lady has a white hand, and the Mermaidons are no bottle-ale houses.

An. Excellent. Why this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now a song.

To. Come on, there is fixe pence for you. Let's haue a song.

An. There's a restrill of me too. if one knight giue a

Clo. Would you haue a loue-song, or a song of good life?

To. A loue song, a loue song.

An. I, I. I care not for good life.

Clothe sings

O Mist is mine where are you roming?

O stay and heare, your true lones coming,

This can sing both high and low.

Trip no further prettie sweeting.

Journeys end in louers meeting,

Every wise mans sonne doth know.

An. Excellent good, if aith

To. Good, good

Clo. What is loue, tis not beereasier,

Present mirth, hath present laughier.

It hat s to come, is still vnisure

In delay there lies no plentie,

Ther come kisse me sweet and twentie

Touths a stiffe will not endure.

An. A mellifluous voyce, as I am true knight.

To. A contagious breath

An. Very sweet, and contagious if aith

To. To heare by the nose, it is dulcet in contagion.

But shall we make the Welkin dance indeed? Shall wee rowze the night-Owle in a Catch, that will drawe thre' soules out of one Weauer? Shall we do that?

And. And you loue me, let's doo't. I am dogge at a Catch

Clo. Byrlady sir, and some dogs will catch well.

An. Most certaine. Let our Catch be, Thou Knaue

Clo. Hold thy peace, thou Knaue knight. I shall be constrained in't, to call thee knaue, Knight.

An. 'Tis not the first time I haue constrained one to call me knaue. Begin foole it begins, Hold thy peace

Clo. I shall neuer begin if I hold my peace.

An. Good if aith Come begin.

Catch sung

Enter Maria.

Mar. What a catterwallowing doe you keepe heere? If my Ladie haue not call'd vp her Steward Maluolios, and bid him turne you out of doores, neuer trust me.

To. My Lady's a Cateyan, we are politicians, Maluolios a Peg-a-ramsie, and Three merry men be wee. Am not I consanguinous? Am I not of her blood. tully vally. Ladie, There dwells a man in Babylon, Lady, Lady.

Clo. Beshrew me, the knights in admirable fooling.

An. I, he do's well enough if he be dispos'd, and so do I too: he does it with a better grace, but I do it more naturall.

To. O the twisse any of December

Mar. For the lous o' God peace.

Enter Maluolios.

Mal. My masters are you mad? Or what are you? Haue you no wit, manners, nor honestie, but to gabble like Tinkers at this time of night? Do yee make an Ale-house of my Ladies house, that ye squeak out your Cozi-ers Catches without any mitigation or remorse of voice? Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time in you?

To. We did keepe time fir in our Catches, Snecke vp.

Mal. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My Lady bad me tell you, that though she harbors you as her kinsman, she's nothing ally'd to your disorders. If you can separate your selfe and your misdeameanors, you are welcome to the house. if not, and it would please you to take leaue of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

To. Farewell deere heart, since I must needs be gone.

Mar. Nay good Sir Toby.

Clo. His eyes do shew his dayes are almost done.

Mal. Is't euen so?

To. But I will neuer dye.

Clo. Sir Toby there you lye.

Mal. This is much credit to you.

To. Shall I bid him go.

Clo. What and if you do?

To. Shall I bid him go, and spare not?

Clo. O no, no, no, you dare not

To. Out o'tune sir, ye lye Art any more then a Steward? Dost thou thinke because thou art vertuous, there shall be no more Cakes and Ale?

Clo. Yes by S. Anne, and Ginger shall bee hotte y'th mouth too

To. Th'art i'th right. Goe sir, rub your Chaine with crums A Slope of Wine Maria

Mal. Mistress Mary, if you pr.'d my Ladies fauour at any thing more then contempt, you would not giue meanes for this vnauill rule, she shall know of it by this hand.

Exit

Mar. Go shake your ear's.

An. Twere as good a deede as to drink when a mans a hungne, to challenge him the field, and then to breake promise with him, and make a foole of him.

To. Doo't knight, Ile write thee a Challenge: or Ile deliuer thy indignation to him by word of mouth

Mar. Sweet Sir Toby be patient for to night. Since the youth of the Counts was to day with my Lady, she is much out of quiet For Monsieur Maluolio, let me alone with him. If I do not gull him into an ayword, and make him a common recreation, do not thinke I haue writte enough to lye traight in my bed. I know I can do it

To. Possesse vs, possesse vs, tell vs something of him.

Mar. Marrie sir, sometimes he is a kinde of Puritane.

An. O, if I thought that, I de beate him like a dogge.

To. What for being a Puritan, thy exquisite reason, deere knight

An. I haue no exquisite reason for't, but I haue reason good enough

Mar. The diu'll a Puritane that hee is, or any thing constantly but a time-pleaser, an affection'd Assie, that cons State without booke, and veters it by great swarths The best perswaded of himselfe: so cram'd (as he thinkes) with excellencies, that it is his grounds of faith, that all that looke on him, loue him. and on that vice in him, will my reuenge finde notable cause to worke.

To. What wilt thou do?

Mar. I will drop in his way some obscure Epistles of loue, wherein by the colour of his beard, the shape of his legges, the manner of his gate, the expresseure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall finde himselfe most feelingly personated. I can write very like my Ladie your Neece, on a forgotten matter wee can hardly make distinction of our hands.

To. Excellent, I smell a deuce.

An. I haue't in my nose too.

To. He shall thinke by the Letters that thou wilt drop that that they come from my Neece, and that shee is in loue with him.

Mar. My purpose is indeed a horse of that colour.

An. And your horse now would make him an Ass.

Mar. Ass, I doubt not.

An. O it will be admirable.

Mar. Sport royall I warrant you. I know my Physicke will worke with him, I will plant you two, and let the Foole make a third, where he shall finde the Letter: obserue his construction of it: For this night to bed, and dreaime on the euent: Farewell. Exit

To. Good night Perthuislen.

An. Before me she's a good wench.

To. She's a beagle true bred, and one that adores me: what o'that?

An. I was ador'd once too.

To. Let's to bed knight: Thou hadst neede send for more money.

An. If I cannot recouer your Neece, I am a soule way out.

To. Send for money knight, if thou hast her not it's end, call me Cut.

An. If I do not, neuer trust me, take it how you will.

To. Come, come, Ile go burne some Sicke, tis too late to go to bed now. Come knight, come knight. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and others.

Du. Giue me some Musick; Now good morow friends. Now good Cesario, but that peece of song, That old and Anticke song we heard last night; Me thought it did releene my passion much, More then light ayres, and recollected termes Of these most b riske and giddy-paced times Come, but one verse.

Cur. He is not heere (so please your Lordshippe) that should sing it?

Du. Who was it?

Cur. Feffe the Iester my Lord, a foole that the Ladie Oliuier Father tooke much delight in. He is about the house

Du. Seeke him out, and play the tune the while.

Musicke plays.

Come hither Boy, if euer thou shalt loue In the sweet pangs of it, remember me: For such as I am, all true Louers are, Vnstaide and skittish in all motions else, Saue in the constant image of the creature That is belou'd How dost thou like this tune?

Viola. It giues a verie echo to the seat Where loue is thron'd

Du. Thou dost speake masterly, My life vpon t, yong though thou art, thine eye Hath staide vpon some fauour that it loues: Hath it not boy?

Viola. A little, by your fauour.

Du. What kinde of woman is't?

Viola. Of your complexion.

Du. She is not worth thee then, What yeares is faith?

Viola. About your yeeres my Lord.

Du. Too old by heauen: Let still the woman take

An elder then her selfe, so weares she to him; So swayes she leuell in her husbands heart: For boy, howeuer we do praise our selues, Our fancies are more giddie and vnstirre, More longing, wauering, sooner lost and worne, Then womens are.

Viola. I thinke it well my Lord.

Du. Then let thy Loue be yonger then thy selfe, Or thy affection cannot hold the bent: For women are as Roses, whose faire flowre Being once displaid, doth fall that verie howre.

Viola. And so they are: alas, that they are so: To die, euen when they to perfection grow.

Enter Curio & Cleone.

Du. O fellow come, the song we had last night: Marke it Cesario, it is old and plaine; The Spinsters and the Knitters in the Sun, And the free maides that weaue their thred with bones, Do vse to chaunt it: it is silly sooth, And dallies with the innocence of loue, Like the old age.

Cle. Are you ready Sir?

Duke. I prethee sing.

Musicke

The Song.

Come away, come away death,
And in sad cyresse let me be laide.
Eye away, sie away breath,
I am flaine by a fauour cruell mude:
My shrowd of white, flacke a'l with Ewe, O prepare it.
My part of death no one so true did share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweete
On my blacke coffin, let it be strewe:
Not a friend, not a friend greet
My corpes comes, where my bones shall be throwne:
A thousand thousand fishes to see, lay me on here,
Sad true le is not find my grave, to weepe there.

Du. There's for thy paines

Cle. No paines sir, I take pleasure in singing sir.

Du. Ile pay thy pleasure then

Cle. Truly sir, and pleasure will be paid one time, or ano'ther.

Du. Giue me now leaue, to leaue thee

Cle. Now the melancholly God protect thee, and the Tailor make thy doublet of changeable Taffata, for thy minde is a very Opall. I would haue men of such constancie put to Sea, that their businesse might be euery thing, and their intent enerie where, for that's it, that alwayes makes a good voyage of nothing. Farewell. Exit

Du. Let all the rest giue place: Once more Cesario, Get thee to yond same soueraigne crueltie: Tell her my loue, more noble then the world Prizes not quantitie of dirtie lands, The parts that fortune hath beflow'd vpon her: Tell her I hold as giddily as Fortune. But 'tis that miracle, and Queene of Iems That nature pranks her in, attracts my soule.

Viola. But if she cannot loue you sir.

Du. It cannot be so answer'd.

Viola. Sooth but you must.

Say that some Lady, as perhappes there is, Hath for your loue as great a pang of heart As you haue for Oliuier: you cannot loue her: You tel her so: Must she not then be answer'd?

Du. There is no womans sides

Can

Can bide the beating of so strong a passion,
As love doth give my heart: no woman's heart
So bigge, to hold so much, they lacke retention.
Alas, their love may be call'd appetite,
No motion of the Liver, but the Gallar,
That suffer surfet, cloyment, and reuolt,
But mine is all as hungry as the Sea,
And can digest as much, make no compare
Betweene that love a woman can beare me,
And that I owe Olimia

Uio. I but I know.

Da. What dost thou knowe?

Uio. Too well what love women to men may owe.

In faith they are as true of heart, as we.
My Father had a daughter lou'd a man
As it might be perhaps, were I a woman
I should your Lordship.

Da. And what's her history?

Vio. A blanke my Lord she neuer told her love,
But let concealment like a worme i'th budde
Feede on her damaske cheek: she pin'd in thought,
And with a Greene and yellow melancholly,
She sat like Patience on a Monument,
Smiling at griefe. Was not this love indeede?
We men may say more, sweare more, but indeed
Our shewes are more then will: for still we proue
Much in our vowes, but little in our love.

Da. But did'st thou sister of her love my Boy?

Vio. I am all the daughters of my Fathers house,
And all the brothers too, and yet I know not
Sir, shall I to this Lady?

Da. I that's the Theame,

To her in haste give her this Jewell. say,
My love can give no place, bide no deny. exunt

Scena Quinta.

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

To. Come thy wayes Signior Fabian

Fab. Nay Ile come if I loose a scruple of this sport, let me be boy'd to death with Melancholly.

To. Wouldst thou not be glad to haue the niggardly Rascally sheepe-biter, come by some notable shame?

Fa. I would exult man: you know he brought me out o'favour with my Lady, about a Beare-baiting heere.

To. To anger him wee'l haue the Beare againe, and we will foole him blacke and blew, shall we not sir Andrew?

An. And we do not, it is pittie of our hues

Enter Maria.

To. Heere comes the little villaine: How now my Mettle of India?

Mar. Get ye all three into the box tree: Maluolio's
comming downe this walke, he has beene yonder i'th Sunne practising behaviour to his own shadow this halfe houre: obserue him for the loue of Mockerie: for I know this Letter will make a contemplatiue Ideot of him. Close in the name of iesting, lye thou there: for heere comes the Trowe, that must be caught with tickling. Exit

Enter Maluolio

Mal. 'Tis but Fortune, all is fortune Maria once told me she did affect me, and I haue heard her self come thus heere, that should seee fandle, it should bee one of my complection. Besides she vses me with a more exalted respect, then any one else that followes her. What should I thinke on't?

To. Heere's an over-weening rogue.

Fa. Oh peace: Contemplation makes a rare Turkey
Cocke of him, how he iets vnder his aduanc'd plumes

And. Slight I could so beate the Rogue.

To. Peace I say.

Mal. To be Count Maluolio.

To. Ah Rogue

An. Pistoll him, pistoll him.

To. Peace, peace.

Mal. There is example for't: The Lady of the Strachy, married the yoman of the wardrobe.

An. Fie on him Iezabel.

Fa. O peace, now he's deeply in: looke how imagination blowes him

Mal. Hauing beene three moneths married to her, sitting in my state.

To. O for a stone-bow to hit him in the eye.

Mal. Calling my Officers about me, in my branch'd Veluet gowne: hauing come from a day bedde, where I

To. Fire and Brimstone.

Fa. O peace, peace.

Mal. And then to haue the humor of state and after a demure trauaile of regard telling them I knowe my place, as I would they should doe theirs: to aske for my kinsman Toby.

To. Boltes and Shackles.

Fa. Oh peace, peace, peace, now, now.

Mal. Seauen of my people with an obedient start, make out for him I frowne the while, and perchance winde vp my watch, or play with my some rich Jewell:
Toby approache; curties there to me.

To. Shall this fellow lute?

Fa. Though our silence be drawne from vs with cars,
yet peace.

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus: quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of controll.

To. And do's not Toby take you a blow o'the lippes;
then?

Mal. Saying, Cofine Toby, my Fortunes hauing cast me on your Neece, giue me this prerogative of speech.

To. What, what?

Mal. You must amend your drunkennesse.

To. Out scab.

Fab. Nay patience, or we breake the sinewes of our plot?

Mal. Besides you waste the treasure of your time,
with a foolish knight.

And. That's mee I warrant you.

Mal. One sir Andrew:

And. I knew 'twas I, for many do call mee foole.

Mal. What employment haue we heere?

Fa. Now is the Woodcocke nere the gin.

To. Oh peace, and the spirit of humors intimate reading aloud to him

Mal. By my life this is my Ladies hand: these bee her very C's, her V's, and her T's, and thus makes stre her great P's. It is in contempt of question her hand.

An. Her C's, her V's, and her T's. why that?

Mal. To the unknowne below'd, this, and my good vses:
Her very Phrases. By your leave wax. Soft, and the impression her Lucres, with which the vses to scale. us my Lady. To whom should this be?

Fab. This winnes him, Liver and all.

Mal.

Mal. Ioue knowes I loue, but who, Lips do not moone, no man must know. No man must know. What followes? The numbers alter d. No man must know, If this should be thee Maluolio?

To. Marrie hang thee brocke.

Mal. I may command where I adore, but silence like a Lit-cresse knife
With bloodlesse stroke my heart doth gore, M. O. A. I. doth sway my life.

Fa. A tustian riddle.

To. Excellent Wench, say I.

Mal M.O.A.I. doth sway my life. Nay but first let me see, let me see, let me see.

Fab. What dish a poyson has she drest him?

To. And with what wing the stallion checkes at it?

Mal I may command, where I adore. Why shee may command me: I serue her, she is my Ladie. Why this is euident to any formall capacitie There is no obstruction in this, and the end. What should that Alphabecall position portend, if I could make that resemble something in me? Softly, M.O.A.I

To O I, make vp that, he is now at a cold sent.

Fab. Sowter will cry vpon't for all this, though it bee as ranke as a Fox

Mal. M. Maluolio, M. why that begins my name.

Fab. Did not I say he would worke it out, the Curre is excellent at fautes.

Mal. M. But then there is no consonancy in the sequell that suffers vnder probation. A. should follow, but O. does.

Fa And O shall end, I hope

To. I, or Ile cudgell him, and make him cry O.

Mal. And then I comes behind.

Fa I, and you had any eye behinde you, you might see more detraction at your heeles, then Fortunes before you.

Mal M.O.A.I. This simulation is not as the former: and yet to crush this a little, it would bow to mee, for euery one of these Letters are in my name. Soft, here folowes prose. If this fall into thy hand, reuolue In my stars I am about thee, but be not afraid of greatnesse. Some are become great, some atcheenes greatnesse, and some haue greatnesse thrust vpon em. Thy fates open theyr hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them, and to inuere thy selfe to what thou art like to be. cast thy humble slough, and appeare fresh. Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with seruants. Let thy tongue tang arguments of state, put thy selfe into the trick of singulartie. Shee thus aduises thee, that sighes for thee. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings, and wish'd to see thee euer crosse garter'd. I say remember, goe too, thou art made if thou desir'st to be so. If not, let me see thee a steward still, the fellow of seruants, and not woorthie to touch Fortunes fingers. Farewell, Shee that would alter seruices with thee, the fortunate vnhappy daylight and champion discouers not more: This is open, I will be proud, I will reade poltricke Authours, I will baffle Sir Foby, I will wash off grosse acquaintance, I will be point deuise, the very man I do not now foole my selfe, to let imagination adde mee, for euery reason excites to this, that my Lady loues me. She did commend my yellow stockings of late, shee did praise my legges being crosse-garter'd, and in this she manifests her selfe to my loue, & with a kinde of inunction drues mee to these habites of her liking. I thanke my starres, I am happy: I will bee strange, stout, in yellow stockings, and crosse Garter'd, euery with the swiftnesse of putting on Ioue, and my starres be praised. Heere is yet a postscript. Thou canst not chosse but know who I am. If thou entertainst my loue, let it appeare in thy smiling, thy smiles become thee well. Therefore in my presence still smile, deere my sweete, I prethee Ioue I thanke thee, I will smile, I wil do euery thing that thou wilt haue me.

Exit

Fab. I will not giue my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the Sopny.

To. I could marry this wench for this deuice.

An So could I too.

To. And aske no other dowry with her, but such another iest.

Enter Maria.

An. Nor I neither

Fab. Heere comes my noble gull catcher.

To Wilt thou set thy foote o'my necke.

An. Or o'mine either?

To. Shall I play my freedome at tray-trip, and become thy bondslauie?

An. Ifaith, or I either?

Tob. Why, thou hast put him in such a dreame, that when the image of it leaues him, he must run mad

Ma. Nay but say true, do's it worke vpon him?

To Like Aqua vite with a Midwife.

Mar. If you will then see the fruites of the sport, mark his first approach before my Lady: hee will come to her in yellow stockings, and 'tis a colour she abhorres; and crosse garter'd, a fashion shee detests: and hee will smile vpon her, which will now be so vnseareable to her disposition, being addicted to a melancholly, as shee is, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempt. if you wil see it follow me.

To To the gates of Tartar, thou most excellent diuell of wit.

And Ile make one too.

Exeunt

Finis Actus secundus

Actus Tertius, scena prima.

Enter Viola and Clowne.

Vi. Saue thee Friend and thy Musick: dost thou liue by thy Tabor?

Cl. No sir, I liue by the Church.

Vi. Art thou a Churchman?

Cl. No such matter sir, I do liue by the Church. For, I do liue at my house, and my house dooth stand by the Church

Vi. So thou maist say the King's lyes by a begger, if a begger dwell neer him or the Church stands by thy Tabor, if thy Tabor stand by the Church.

Cl. You haue said sir To see this age: A sentence is but a cheu'nill gloue to a good witte, how quickly the wrong side may be turn'd outward.

Vi. Nay that's certaine they that dally nicely with words, may quickly make them wanton.

Cl. I would therefore my sister had had no name Sir

Vi. Why man?

Cl. Why sir, her names a word, and to dally with that word, might make my sister wanton. But indeede, words are very Rascals, since bonds disgrac'd them.

Vi. Thy reason man?

Cl.

Clo. Troth sir, I can yeeld you none without wordes, and wordes are growne so false, I am loath to proue, reason with them.

Vio. I warrant thou art a merry fellow, and car'st for nothing.

Clo. Not so sir, I do care for something: but in my conscience sir, I do not care for you: if that be to care for nothing sir, I would it would make you invisible.

Vio. Art not thou the Lady Olivia's foole?

Clo. No indeed sir, the Lady Olivia has no folly, shee will keepe no foole sir, till she be married, and fooles are as like husbands, as Pilchers are to Herrings, the Husbands the bigger, I am indeede not her foole, but hir corrupter of wordes.

Vio. I saw thee late at the Count Orsino's

Clo. Foolery sir, does walke about the Orbe like the Sun, it shines every where I would be sorry sir, but the Foole should be as oft with your Master, as with my Mistress I thinke I saw your wisdom there.

Vio. Nay, and thou passe ypon me, Ile no more with thee: Hold there's expences for thee.

Clo. Now loue in his next commodity of hayre, send thee a beard

Vio. By my troth Ile tell thee, I am almost sicke for one, though I would not haue it grow on my chinne Is thy Lady within?

Clo. Would not a paire of these haue bred sir?

Vio. Yes being kept together, and put to vse.

Clo. I would play Lord Pandarus of Phrygia sir, to bring a Cressida to this Troilus

Vio. I vnderstand you sir, tis well begg'd.

Clo. The matter I hope is not great sir, begging, but a begger: Cressida was a begger. My Lady is within sir. I will conster to them: whence you come, who you are, and what you would are out of my welkin, I might say Element, but the word is ouer worn.

exit

Vio. This fellow is wise enough to play the foole, And to do that well, craues a kinde of wit.

He must obserue their mood on whom he iests, The quality of persons, and the time And like the Haggard, checke at euery Feather That comes before his eye This is a practice, As full of labour as a Wife-mans Art For folly that he wisely shewes, is fit, But wisemens folly false, quite taint their wit

Enter Sir Toby and Andrew

To Save you Gentleman.

Vio. And you sir.

And. Dien von guard Monsieur.

Vio. Et vous ouste vostre seruiture.

An I hope sir, you are, and I am yours

To. Will you incounter the house, my Neece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be to her.

Vio. I am bound to your Neece sir, I meane she is the list of my voyage.

To Taste your legges sir, put them to motion

Vio. My legges do better vnderstand me sir, then I vnderstand what you meane by bidding me taste my legs.

To. I meane to go sir, to enter

Vio. I will answer you with gate and entrance, but we are preuented.

Enter Olivia, and Gentlewoman.

Most excellent accomplish'd Lady, the heauens raine Odours on you.

And That youth's a rare Courtier, raine odours, wel.

Vio. My matter hath no voice Lady, but to your owne

most pregnant and vouchsafed eare.

And Odours, pregnant, and vouchsafed: Ile get 'em all three already.

Ol. Let the Garden doore be shut, and leaue mee to my hearing. Giue me your hand sir.

Vio. My dutie Madam, and most humble seruice)

Ol. What is your name?

Vio. Cesario is your seruants name, faire Princeesse.

Ol. My seruant sir? 'Twas neuer merry world, Since lowly feigning was call'd complement: y'are seruant to the Count Orsino youth.

Vio. And he is yours, and his must needs be yours: your seruants seruant, is your seruant Madam.

Ol. For him, I thinke not on him: for his thoughts, Would they were blankes, rather then fill'd with me.

Vio. Madam, I come to whet your gentle thoughts On his behalfe

Ol. O by your leaue I pray you.

I bad you neuer speake againe of him;

But would you vndertake another suite

I had rather heare you, to solicit that,

Then Musicke from the spheares.

Vio. Deere Lady

Ol. Giue me leaue, beseech you: I did send,

After the last enchantment you did heare,

A Ring in chace of you So did I abuse

My selfe, my seruant, and I feare me you:

Vnder your hard construction must I sit,

To force that on you in a shamefull cunning

Which you knew none of yours What might you think?

Haue you not set mine Honor at the stake,

And baited it with all th'vnmuzzled thoughts

That tyrannous heart can thinke? To one of your receiuing

Enough is shewne, a Cipresse, not a bosome,

Hides my heart: so let me heare you speake.

Vio. I pittie you.

Ol. That's a degree to loue.

Vio. No not a grize: for tis a vulgar prooffe That vetie oft we pittie enemies

Ol. Why then me thinks 'tis time to smile againe:

O world, how apt the poore are to be proud?

If one should be a prey, how much the better

To fall before the Lion, then the Wolfe?

Clocke strikes.

The clocke vpbraides me with the waste of time

Be not affraid good youth, I will not haue you,

And yet when wit and youth is come to harvest,

your wife is like to reape a proper man:

There lies your way, due West.

Vio. Then Westward hoe.

Grace and good disposition attend your Ladyship: you'l nothing Madam to my Lord, by me:

Ol. Stay I prethee tell me what thou thinkest of me?

Vio. That you do thinke you are not what you are.

Ol. If I thinke so, I thinke the same of you.

Vio. Then thinke you right: I am not what I am.

Ol. I would you were, as I would haue you be.

Vio. Would it be better Madam, then I am?

I wish it might; for now I am your foole.

Ol. O what a deale of scorne, looks beautifull?

In the contempt and anger of his lip,

A murderous guilt shewes not it selfe more soone,

Then loue that would seeme hid: Loues night, is noone.

Cesario, by the Roses of the Spring,

By maid-hood, honor, truth, and euery thing,

I loue thee so, that maugre all thy pride,

Z

Not

Nor wit, nor reason, can my passion hide ·
Do not extort thy reasons from this clause,
For that I woo, thou therefore hast no cause:
But rather reason thus, with reason fetter;
Loue sought, is good: but giuen vnought, is better.

Uis. By innocence I swear, and by my youth,
I haue one heart, one bosome, and one truth,
And that no woman has, nor neuer none
Shall mistrie be of it, saue I alone.

And so adieu good Madam, neuer more,
Will I my Masters teares to you deplore.

Ol. Yet come againe: for thou perhaps mayst moue
That heart which now abhorres, to like his lque. Exeunt

Scœna Secunda.

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

And. No faith, Ile not stay a tot longer:

To. Thy reason deere venom, giue thy reason.

Fab. You must needs yeelde your reason, Sir Andrew:

And. Marry I saw your Neece do more fauours to the Counts Seruing-man, then euer she bestowed vpon mee:
I saw't i'th Orchard.

To. Did she see the while, old boy, tell me that.

And. As plaine as I see you now.

Fab. This was a great argument of loue in her toward
you.

And. S'light; will you make an Ass of me.

Fab. I will proue it legitimate sir, vpon the Oathes of iudgement, and reason.

To. And they haue bene grand Iurie men, since before
Noah was a Saylor.

Fab. Shee did shew fauour to the youth in your sight,
onely to exasperate you, to awake your dormouse valour, to put fire in your Heart, and brimstone in your Liuer ·
you should then haue accosted her, and with some excellent iests, fire-new from the mint, you should haue bangd the youth into dumbenesse this was look'd for at your hand, and this was baulkt: the double gile of this opportunitie you let time wash off, and you are now sayld into the North of my Ladies opinion, where you will hang like an yfickle on a Dutchmans beard, vnlesse you do re-deeme it, by some laudable attempt, either of valour or pollicie.

And. And't be any way, it must be with Valour, for pollicie I hate: I had as lief be a Brownist, as a Politician.

To. Why then build me thy fortunes vpon the basis of valour. Challenge me the Counts youth to fight with him hurt him in eleuen places, my Neece shall take note of it, and assure thy selfe, there is no loue-Broker in the world,
can more preuaile in mans commendation with woman,
then report of valour.

Fab. There is no way but this sir Andrew.

And. Will either of you beare me a challenge to him?

To. Go, write it in a martial hand, be swift and brieft.
it is no matter how wittie, so it bee eloquent, and full of invention. taunt him with the license of Inke: if thou thou'lt him some thrice, it shall not be amisse, and as many Lyes, as will lye in thy sheete of paper, although the sheete were bigge enough for the bedde of Waro in England, set 'em downe, go about it. Let there bee galle enough in thy inke, though thou write with a Goose-pen,

no matter: about it.

And. Where shall I finde you?

To. Wee'll call thee at the Cubiculo: Go.

Exit Sir Andrew.

Fa. This is a deere Manakin to you Sir Toby.

To. I haue bene deere to him lad, some two thousand strong, or so.

Fa. We shall haue a rare Letter from him; but you'll not deliuer't.

To. Neuer trust me then: and by all meanes stirre on the youth to an answer. I thinke Oxen and waime-ropes cannot hale them together. For Andrew, if he were open'd and you finde so much blood in his Liuer, as will clog the foote of a flea, Ile eate the rest of th'anatomy.

Fab. And his opposit the youth beares in his visage no great presage of cruelty.

Enter Maria.

To. Looke where the youngest Wren of mine comes

Mar. If you desire the spleene, and will laughe your selues into stitches, follow me; yond gull Malvolio is turned Heathen, a verie Renegatho; for there is no christian that meanes to be saued by beleeuing rightly, can euet beleue such impossible passages of grossenesse. Hee's in yellow stockings.

To. And crosse garter'd?

Mar. Most villanously: like a Pedant that keepes a Schoole i'th Church. I haue dogg'd him like his murthe-rer. He does obey euery point of the Letter that I dropt, to betray him: He does smile his face into more lynes, then is in the new Mappe, with the augmentation of the Indies: you haue not scene such a thing as tis: I can hardly forbear hurling things at him, I know my Ladie will strike him: if she doe, hee'll smile, and take't for a great faour.

To. Come bring vs, bring vs where he is.

Exeunt Omnes.

Scœna Tertia.

Enter Sebastian and Anthoiso.

Seb. I would not by my will haue troubled you,
But since you make your pleasure of your paines,
I will no further chide you.

Ant. I could not stay behinde you: my desire (More sharpe then filed Steele) did spurre me forth,
And not all loue to see you (though so much
As might haue drawne one to a longer voyage)
But ialousie, what might befall your rauell,
Being skullesse in these parts: which to a stranger,
Vnguided, and vnfriended, often proue
Rough, and vnospitable My willing loue,
The rather by these arguments offeare
Set forth in your pursuite.

Seb. My kinde Anthoiso,
I can no other answer make, but thanks,
And thanks: and euer oft good turnes,
Are shuffel'd off with such vncurrent pay:
But were my worth, as is my conscience firme,

You

You should finde better dealing : what's to do?
Shall we go see the reliques of this Towne?

Ant. To morrow sir, best first go see your Lodging?

Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to night
I pray you let vs satisfie our eyes
With the memorials, and the things of fame
That do renoune this City.

Ant. Would you'd pardon me :
I do not without danger walke these streetes.
Once in a sea-fight 'gainst the Count his gallies,
I did some seruice, of such note indeede,
That were I tane heere, it would scarce be answer'd.

Seb. Belike you slew great number of his people

Ant. Th offence is not of such a bloody nature,
Albeit the quality of the time, and quarrell
Might well haue giuen vs bloody argument.
It might haue since bene answer'd in repaying
What we tooke from them, which for Tristiques sake
Most of our City did. Onely my selfe stood our,
For which if I be lapsed in this placu
I shall pay deere.

Seb. Do not then walke too open.

Ant. It doth not fit me hold sir, here's my purse,
In the South Suburbs at the Elephant
Is best to lodge. I will bespeake our dyet,
Whiles you beguile the time, and feed your knowledge
With viewing of the Towne, there shall you haue me.

Seb. Why I your purse?

Ant. Haply your eye shall light vpon some toy
You haue desire to purchase : and your store
I thinke is not for idle Markets, sir.

Seb. He be your purse-bearer, and leaue you
For an houre

Ant. To th' Elephant.

Seb. I do remember.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Ol. I haue sent after him, he sayes hee'l come.
How shall I feast him? What bestow of him?
For youth is bought more oft, then begg'd, or borrow'd
I speake too loud. Where's Maluolio, he is sad, and ciuill,
And suites well for a seruant with my fortunes,
Where is Maluolio?

Mar. He's comming Madame.
But in very strange manner. He is sure possesse Madam?

Ol. Why what's the matter, does he raue?

Mar. No Madam, he does nothing but smile your Ladyship were best to haue some guard about you, if hee come, for sure the man is tainted in's wits.

Ol. Go call him hither.

Enter Maluolio.

I am as madde as hee,
If sad and merry madnesse equall bee.
How now Maluolio?

Mal. Sweet Lady, ho, ho.

Ol. Smil'st thou? I sent for thee vpon a sad occasion.

Mal. Sad Lady, I could be sad.

This does make some obstruction in the blood :
This crosse-gartering, but what of that?

If it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true
Sonnet is - Please one, and please all.

Mal. Why how dost thou man?

What is the matter with thee?

Mal. Not blacke in my minde, though yellow in my legges : It did come to his hands, and Commandes shall be executed. I thinke we doe know the sweet Romane hand.

Ol. Wilt thou go to bed Maluolio?

Mal. To bed? I sweet heart, and Ile come to thee.

Ol. God comfort thee Why dost thou smile so, and kisse thy hand so oft?

Mar. How do you Maluolio?

Maluo. At your request.

Yes Nightingales answerd Dawes.

Mar. Why appeare you with this ridiculous boldnesse before my Lady.

Mal. Be not afraid of greatnesse : 'twas well writ.

Ol. What meanst thou by that Maluolio?

Mal. Some are borne great.

Ol. Ha?

Mal. Some atcheeue greatnesse.

Ol. What sayst thou?

Mal. And some haue greatnesse thrust vpon them.

Ol. Heauen restore thee.

Mal. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings.

Ol. Thy yellow stockings?

Mal. And wish'd to see thee crosse garter'd.

Ol. Crosse garter'd?

Mal. Go too, thou art made, if thou desir'st to be so.

Ol. Am I made?

Mal. If not, let me see thee a seruant still.

Ol. Why this is verie Midsummer madnesse.

Enter Seruant.

Ser. Madame, the young Gentleman of the Count
Orsino's is return'd, I could hardly entreate him backe. he attends your Ladyships pleasure.

Ol. Ile come to him.

Good Maria, let this fellow be look'd too. Where's my Cofine Toby, let some of my people haue a special care of him, I would not haue him miscarrie for the halfe of my Dowry. exit

Mal. Oh ho, do you come neere me now : no worse man then sir Toby to looke to me. This concures directly with the Letter, she sends him on purpose, that I may appeare stubborne to him : for she incites me to that in the Letter. Cist thy humble slough sayes she : be opposite with a Kinsman, surly with seruants, let thy tongue langer with arguments of state, put thy selfe into the tricke of singularity. and consequently setts downe the manner how : as a sad face, a reuerend carriage, a slow tongue, in the habite of some Sir of pore, and so forth.
I haue lymde her, but it is Ioues doing, and Ioue make me
thankfull And when she went a way now, let this Fellow be look'd too : Fellow? not Maluolio, nor after my degree, but Fellow. Why euery thing adheres together, that no dramme of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or vnfaue circumstance. What can be saide? I thinke that can be, can come betweene me, and the full prospect of my hopes Well Ioue, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

Enter Toby, Fabian, and Maria.

To.

To. Which way is hee in the name of sanctity. If all the duels of hell be drawne in little, and Legion himselfe posselt him, yet Ile speake to him.

Fab. Heere he is, heere he is how ist with you sir? How ist with you man?

Mal. Go off, I discard you · let me enioy my priuate go off.

Mar. Lo, how hollow the fiend speakes within him; did not I tell you? Sir Toby, my Lady prayes you to haue a care of him.

Mal. Ah ha, does she so?

To. Go too, go too peace, peace, wee must deale gently with him. Let me alone. How do you Maluolio? How ist with you? What man, desie the diuell. consider, he's an enemy to mankind.

Mal. Do you know what you say?

Mar. La you, and you speake ill of the diuell, how he takes it at heart Pray God he be not bewitch'd.

Fab. Carry his water to th wise woman

Mar. Marry and it shall be done to morrow morning if I lue. My Lady would not loofe him for more then ile say.

Mal. How now mistress?

Mar. Oh Lord

To. Prethee hold thy peace, this is not the way Doe you not see you moue him? Let me alone with him.

Fa. No way but gentleness, gently, gently. the Fiend is rough, and will not be roughly vs'd.

To. Why how now my bawcock? how dost y' chuck?

Mal. Sir.

To. I biddy, come with me What man, tis not for grauity to play at cherrie-pit with sathan Hang him foul Colliar.

Mar. Get him to say his prayers, good sir Toby gette him to pray.

Mal. My prayers Minx.

Mar. No I warrant you, he will not heare of godlynesse.

Mal. Go hang your selues all you are ydle shallowe things, I am not of your element, you shall knowe more hereafter. Exit

To. Ist possible?

Fa. If this were plaid vpon a stagenow, I could condemne it as an improbable fiction

To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the deuce man.

Mar. Nay pursue him now, least the deuce take ayre, and taint.

Fa. Why we shall make him mad indeede

Mar. The house will be the quieter.

To. Come, wee'll haue him in a darke room & bound My Neece is already in the beleefe that he's mad: we may carry it thus for our pleasure, and his pennance, til our very pastime tyred out of breath, prompt vs to haue mercy on him at which time, we wil bring the deuce to the bar and crowne thee for a finder of madmen: but see, but see.

Enter Sir Andrew.

Fa. More matter for a May morning.

An. Heere's the Challenge, reade it. I warrant there's vinegar and pepper in't.

Fab. Ist so swety?

And. I, ist? I warrant him: do but read.

To. Giue me

Toby, what foister thou art, thou art but a scurvy fellow

Fa. Good, and valiant

To. Wonder not, nor admire not in thy minde why I doe call thee so, for I will shew thee no reason for't.

(Law)

Fa. A good note, that keeps you from the blow of y

To. Thou comst to the Lady Olivia, and in my sight see'st thee kindly but thou'st in thy throat, that is not the matter I challenge thee for.

Fa. Very breefe, and to exceeding good sence-lesse.

To. I will way-lay thee going home, where if it be thy chance to kill me.

Fa. Good.

To. Thou kilt me like a rogue and a villaine.

Fa. Still you keepe o'th windie side of the Law good. Tob. Fartheewell, and God haue mercie vpon ore of our soules He may haue mercie vpon mine, but my hope is better, and so looke to thy selfe. Thy friend as thou vsest him, & thy sworn enemy, Andrew Ague-cheeke.

To. If this Letter moue him not, his legges cannot: Ile giu't him.

Mar. You may haue verie fit occasion for't he is now in some commerce with my Ladie, and will by and by depart

To. Go sir Andrew scout mee for him at the corner of the Orchard like a bum-Baylie so loone as euer thou seest him, draw, and as thou draw'st, sweare horrible for't comes to passe oft, that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharply twang'd off, giues manhoode more approbation, then euer prooffe it selfe would haue earn'd him A way.

And. Nay let me alone for swearing.

Exit

To. Now will not I deliuer his Letter for the behaviour of the yong Gentleman, giues him out to be of good capacity, and breeding: his employment betweene his Lord and my Neece, confirms no lesse Therefore, this Letter being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth he will finde it comes from a Clodde-pole. But sir, I will deliuer his Challenge by word of mouth; set vpon Ague-cheeke a notable report of valor, and driue the Gentleman (as I know his youth will aptly receiue it) into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, furie, and impetuositie This will so fright them both, that they wil kill one another by the looke, like Cockatrices

Enter Olivia and Viola

Fab. Heere he comes with your Neece, giue them way till he take leaue, and presently after him

To. I wil meditate the while vpon some horrid message for a Challenge.

Ol. I haue said too much vnto a hart of stone, And laid mine honour too vchary on't.

There's something in me that reproues my fault: But such a head-strong potent fault it is, That it but mocks reproofe.

Viola. With the same hauiour that your passion beares, Goes on my Masters griefes.

Ol. Heere, weare this Iewell for me, tis my picture - Refuse it not, it hath no tongue, to vex you And I beseech you come againe to morrow. What shall you aske of me that Ile deny, That honour (sa'd) may vpon asking giue

Viola. Nothing but this, your true loue for my master.

Ol. How with mine honor may I giue him that, Which I haue giuen to you.

Viola. I will acquit you.

Ol. Well, come againe to morrow: far-thee-well, A Friend like thee might beate my foule to hell.

Enter Toby and Fabian.

To. Gentleman, God saue thee.

Vio. And you sir.

To. That defence thou hast, betake the too't: of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him, I knowe not: but thy interceptor full of despight, bloody as the Hunter, attends thee at the Orchard end. dismount thy tucke, be yare in thy preparation, for thy assylant is quick, skilfull, and deadly.

Vio. You mistake sir I am sure, no man hath any quarrell to me: my remembrance is very free and cleere from any image of offence done to any man.

To. You'll finde it otherwise I assure you: therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your gard for your opposite hath in him what youth, strength, skill, and wrath, can furnish man withall.

Vio. I pray you sir what is he?

To. He is knight dubb'd with vnbratch'd Rapier, and on carpet consideration, but he is a duell in private brall, soules and bodies hath he diuorc'd three, and his incensement at this moment is so implacable, that satisfaction can be none, but by pangs of death and sepulcher. Hob, nob, is his word: giu't or take't.

Vio. I will returne againe into the house, and desire some conduct of the Lady. I am no fighter, I haue heard of some kinde of men, that put quarrells purposely on others, to taste their valour: belike this is a man of that quirk.

To. Sir, no: his indignation deriues it selfe out of a very competent iniurie, therefore get you on, and giue him his desire. Backe you shall not to the house, vnlesse you vndertake that with me, which with as much safetie you might answer him: therefore on, or strippe your sword starke naked: for meddle you must that's certain, or forswear to weare iron about you.

Vio. This is as vnciuill as strange. I beseech you, doe me this courteous office, as to know of the Knight what my offence to him is: it is something of my negligence, nothing of my purpose.

To. I will doe so. Signiour Fabian, stay you by this Gentleman, till my returne. Exit Toby.

Vio. Pray you sir, do you know of this matter?

Fab. I know the knight is incen't against you, euen to a mortall arbitrement, but nothing of the circumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you what manner of man is he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderfull promise to read him by his forme, as you are like to finde him in the prooffe of his valour. He is indeede sir, the most skilfull, bloudy, & farall opposite that you could possibly haue found in anie part of Illyria: will you walke towards him, I will make your peace with him, if I can.

Vio. I shall bee much bound to you for't: I am one, that had rather go with sir Priest, then sir knight. I care not who knowes so much of my mettle. Exeunt.

Enter Toby and Andrew.

To. Why man hee s a verie duell, I haue not seen such a sirago: I had a passe with him, rapier, scabberd, and all and he giues me the sticke in with such a mortall motion that it is ineuicable: and on the answer, he payes you as surely, as your feete hit the ground they step on. They say, he has bin Fencer to the Sophy.

And. Pox on't, Ile not meddle with him.

To. I but he will not now be pacified,

Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

An. Plague on't, and I thought he had beene valiant, and so cunning in Fence, I'd haue seene him damnd ere I'd haue challeng'd him. Let him let the matter slip, and Ile giue him my horse, gray Capilet.

To. Ile make the motion. stand heere, make a good shew on't, this shall end without the perdition of soules, marry Ile ride your horse as well as I ride you.

Enter Fabian and Viola.

I haue his horse to take vp the quarrell, I haue perswaded him the youths a duell.

Fa. He is as horribly conceited of him and pants, & lookes pale, as if a Beare were at his heeles.

To. There's no remedie sir, he will fight with you for's oath sake. marrie hee hath better bethought him of his quarrell, and hee findes that now scarce to bee worth talking of: therefore draw for the supportance of his vowe, he protests he will not hurt you.

Vio. Pray God defend me: a little thing would make me tell them how much I lacke of a man.

Fab. Giue ground if you see him furious.

To. Come sir Andrew, there's no remedie, the Gentleman will for his honors sake haue one bowt with you: he cannot by the Duello auoide it: but hee has promised me, as he is a Gentleman and a Soldiour, he will not hurt you. Come on, too't.

And. Pray God he keepe his oath.

Enter Antonio.

Vio. I do assure you tis against my will.

Ant. Put vp your sword: if this yong Gentleman Haue done offence, I take the fault on me. If you offend him, I for him desie you.

To. You sir? Why, what are you?

Ant. One sir, that for his loue dares yet do more. Then you haue heard him brag to you he will.

To. Nay, if you be an vndertaker, I am for you.

Enter Officers.

Fab. O good sir Toby hold: heere come the Officers.

To. Ile be with you anon.

Vio. Pray sir, put your sword vp if you please.

And. Marry will I sir: and for that I promis'd you Ile be as good as my word. Hee will beare you easily, and rames well.

1. Off. This is the man, do thy Office.

2. Off. Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit of Count Orsino.

An. You do mistake me sir.

1. Off. No sir, no iot. I know your fauour well. Though now you haue no sea-cap on your head: I take him away, he knowes I know him well.

Ant. I must obey. This comes with seeking you: But there's no remedie, I shall answer it:

What will you do. now my necessitie Makes me to aske you for my purfe. It grieues mee Much more, for what I cannot do for you, Then what befalls my selfe: you stand amaz'd, But be of comfort.

2. Off. Come sir away.

Ant. I must entreat of you some of that money.

Vio. What money sir?

For the fayre kindnesse you haue shew'd me heere, And part being prompted by your present trouble, Out of my leane and low ability Ile lend you some hing: my hauing is not much, Ile make diuision of my present with you: Hold, there's halfe my Coffer.

Ant. Will you deny me now, Ift possible that my deserts to you Can lacke perswasion. Do not tempt my misery, Least that it make me so vnfound a man As to vpbraide you with those kindnessees.

Z 3

That

That I haue done for you.

Vio. I know of none,
Nor know I you by voyce, or any feature.
I hate ingratitude more in a man,
Then lying, vaineſſe, babling drunkenneſſe,
Or any taint of vice, whoſe ſtrong corruption
Inhabites our fraile blood.

Ant. Oh heauens themſelues

2 Off. Come ſir, I pray you go.

Ant. Let me ſpeake a little. This youth that you ſee
I ſnatch'd one halfe out of the iawes of death, (heere,
Releas'd him with ſuch ſanctitie of loue,
And to his image, which me thought did promiſe
Moſt venerable worth, did I deuotion.

1. Off. What's that to vs, the time goes by: Away.

Ant. But oh, how wilde an idoll proues this God:
Thou haſt Sebastian done good feature, ſhame,
In Nature, there's no blemiſh but the minde
None can be call'd deform'd, but the vnkinde.
Vertue is beauty, but the beauteous euill
Are empty truncks, ore-flouriſh'd by the deuill.

1. Off. The man growes mad, away with him.
Come, come ſir

Ant. Leade me on.

Exit

Vio. Me thinks his words do ſrom ſuch paſſion flye
That he beleeueth himſelfe, ſo do not I.
Proue true imagination, oh proue true,
That I deere brother, be now tane for you

To. Come hither Knight, come hither Fabian Weel whiſper ore a couplet or two of moſt ſage ſawes

Vio. He nam'd Sebastian: I my brother know
Yet hung in my glaſſe euen ſuch, and ſo
In fauour was my Brother, and he went
Still in this faſhion, colour, ornament,
For him I imitate. Oh if it proue,
Tempeſts are kinde, and ſalt waues freſh in loue.

To. A very diſhoneſt paltry boy, and more a coward
then a Hare, his diſhoneſty appears, in leauing his friend heere in neceſſity, and denying him: and for his coward-ſhip aſke Fabian.

Fab. A Coward, a moſt deuout Coward, religious in
it.

And. Slid Ile after him againe, and beate him.

To. Do, cuſſe him foundly, but neuer draw thy ſword

And. And I do not

Fab. Come, let's ſee the euent.

To. I dare lay any money, twill be nothing yet. Exit

Actus Quartus, Scæna prima.

Enter Sebastian and Clowne.

Clo. Will you make me beleuee, that I am not ſent for
you?

Seb. Go too, go too, thou art a fooliſh fellow,
Let me be cleere of thee.

Clo. Well held out yfaith. No, I do not know you, nor I am not ſent to you by my Lady, to bid you come ſpeake with her: nor your name is not Maſter Ceſario, nor this is not my noſe neyther. Nothing that is ſo, is ſo.

Seb. I prethee vent thy folly ſome-where elſe, thou know'ſt not me.

Clo. Vent my folly: He has heard that word of ſome great man, and now applyes it to a foole. Vent my folly I am afraid this great lubber the World will proue a Cockney: I prethee now vngird thy ſtrangeneſſe, and tell me what I ſhall vent to my Lady? Shall I vent to hir that thou art coming?

Seb. I prethee fooliſh greeke depart from me, there's money for thee, if you tarry longer, I ſhall giue worſe piment.

Clo. By my troth thou haſt an open hand. theſe Wiſemen that giue fooles money, get themſelues a good report, after ſoureteene yeares purchaſe.

Enter Andrew, Toby, and Fabian.

And. Now ſir, haue I met you again: ther's for you.

Seb. Why ther's for thee, and there, and there,
Are all the people mad?

To. Hold ſir, or Ile throw your dagger ore the houſe

Clo. This will I tell my Lady ſtraight, I would not be in ſome of your coats for two pence.

To. Come on ſir, hold.

And. Nay let him alone, Ile go another way to worke with him. Ile haue an action of Battery againſt him, if there be any law in Illyria: though I ſtroke him firſt, yet it's no matter for that.

Seb. Let go thy hand.

To. Come ſir, I will not let you go. Come my yong ſouldier put vp your yron: you are well fleſh'd. Come on.

Seb. I will be free from thee. What wouldſt thou now?
If thou dar'ſt tempt me further, draw thy ſword.

To. What, what? Nay then I muſt haue an Ounce or two of this malapert blood from you

Enter Olivia.

Ol. Hold Toby, on thy life I charge thee hold.

To. Madam.

Ol. Will it be euer thus? Vngracious wretch,
Fit for the Mountaines, and the barbarous Caves,
Where manners nere were preach'd: out of my ſight.
Be not offended, decre Ceſario.

Rudeſbey be gone. I prethee gentle friend,
Let thy layre wiſedome, not thy paſſion ſway
In this vniuill, and vniuſt exte

Againſt thy peace. Go with me to my houſe,
And heare thou there how many fruitleſſe pranks
This Ruſſian hath botch'd vpon thee, that thou thereby
Mayſt ſmile at this: Thou ſhalt not chooſe but goe:
Do not denie, beſhrew his ſoule for mee,
He ſtarted one poore heart of mine, in thee.

Seb. What reliſh is in this? How runs the ſtreame?
Or I am mad, or elſe this is a dreame:
Let fancie ſtill my ſenſe in Lethe ſleepe,
If it be thus to dreame, ſtill let me ſleepe

Ol. Nay come I prethee, would thou'dſt be rul'd by me

Seb. Madam, I will

Ol. O ſay ſo, and ſo be.

Exit

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Maria and Clowne.

Mar. Nay, I prethee put on this gown, & this beard, make him beleuee thou art ſir Topas the Curate, doe it quickly. Ile call ſir Toby the whileſt.

Clo. Well, Ile put it on, and I will diſſemble my ſelfe in't, and I would I were the firſt that euer diſſembled in ſuch

in such a gowne, I am not tall enough to become the function well, nor leane enough to bee thought a good Student: but to be said an honest man and a good house-keeper goes as fairely, as to say, a carefull man, & a great scholler. The Competitors enter.

Enter Toby.

To. Ioue blesse thee M. Parson.

Clo. Bowes dies sir Toby: for as the old hermit of Prague that neuer saw pen and inke, very wittily sayd to a Neece of King Gorbodacke, that that is, is so I being M Parson, am M Parson; for what is that, but that? and is, but is?

To. To him sir Tomas

Clo. What hoa, I say, Peace in this prison.

To. The knaue counterfets well; a good knaue
Maluolio within.

Mal. Who calls there?

Clo. Sir Tomas the Curate, who comes to visit Maluolio the Lunaticke.

Mal. Sir Tomas, sir Tomas, good sir Tomas goe to my Ladie.

Clo. Out hyperbolicall fiend, how vexest thou this man? Talkest thou nothing but of Ladies?

Tob. Well said M Parson.

Mal. Sir Tomas, neuer was man thus wronged, good sir Tomas do not thinke I am mad: they haue layde mee heere in hideous darknesse.

Clo. Fye, thou dishonest fathan. I call thee by the most modest termes, for I am one of those gentle ones, that will vse the diuell himselfe with curtesie. sayst thou that house is darke?

Mal. As hell sir Tomas.

Clo. Why it hath bay Windowes transparant as baricadoes, and the cleere stores toward the South north, are as lustrous as Ebony and yet complaineest thou of obscurity?

Mal. I am not mad sir Tomas, I say to you this house is darke.

Clo. Madman thou erre'st I say there is no darknesse but ignorance, in which thou art more puzel'd then the Egyptians in their fogge.

Mal. If y this house is as darke as Ignorance, though Ignorance were as darke as hell, and I say there was neuer man thus abus'd, I am no more madde then you are, make the triall of it in any constant question.

Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras concerning Wilde-fowle?

Mal. That the soule of our grandam, might happily inhabite a bird.

Clo. What thinkest thou of his opinion?

Mal. I thinke nobly of the soule, and no way aproue his opinion.

Clo. Fare thee well. remaine thou still in darkenesse, thou shalt hold th'opinion of Pythagoras, ere I will allow of thy wits, and feare to kill a Woodcocke, lest thou dispossesse the soule of thy grandam. Fare thee well.

Mal. Sir Tomas, sir Tomas.

Tob. My most exquisite sir Tomas.

Clo. Nay I am for all waters.

Mar. Thou mightst haue done this without thy berd and gowne, he fees thee not.

To. To him in thine owne voyce, and bring me word how thou findest him. I would we were well ridde of this knauery. If he may bee conueniently deliuer'd, I would he were, for I am now so farre in offence with my Niece, that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport the vpper-shot. Come by and by to my Chamber.
Exit

Clo. Hey Robin, lolly Robin, tell me how thy Lady does.

Mal. Foole.

Clo. My Lady is vnkind, perdis.

Mal. Foole.

Clo. Alas why is she so?

Mal. Foole, I say.

Clo. She loues another. Who calles, hys

Mal. Good foole, as euer thou wilt deserue well at my hand, helpe me to a Candle, and pen, inke, and paper: as I am a Gentleman, I will liue to bee thankfull to thee for't.

Clo. M Maluolio?

Mal. I good Foole.

Clo. Alas sir, how fell you besides your fine wits?

Mal. Foole, there was neuer man so norioullie abus'd. I am as well in my wits (foole) as thou art.

Clo. But as well: then you are mad indeede, if you be no better in your wits then a foole.

Mal. They haue heere propertyed me: keepe mee in darkenesse, send Ministers to me, Asses, and doe all they can to face me out of my wits.

Clo. Advise you what you say: the Minister is heere.

Maluolio, Maluolio, thy wittes the heauens restore: endeavour thy selfe to sleepe, and leaue thy vaine bubble babble.

Mal. Sir Tomas.

Clo. Maintaine no words with him good fellow.

Who I sir, nor I sir. God buy you good sir Tomas. Marry Amen. I will sir, I will.

Mal. Foole, foole, toole I say.

Clo. Alas sir be patient. What say you sir, I am shent for speaking to you.

Mal. Good foole, helpe me to some light, and some paper, I tell thee I am as well in my wittes, as any man in Illyria.

Clo. Well-a-day, that you were sir.

Mal. By this hand I am good foole, some inke, paper, and light: and conuey what I will set downe to my Lady: it shall aduantage thee more, then euer the bearing of I enter did.

Clo. I will help you too't. But tel me true, are you not mad indeed, or do you but counterfeit.

Mal. Beleue me I am not, I tell thee true.

Clo. Nay, I nere beleue a madman till I see his brains I will fetch you light, and paper, and inke.

Mal. Foole, he requite it in the highest degree. I prethee be gone.

Clo. I am gone sir, and anon sir,

He be with you againe.

In a trice, like to the old vice, your neede to sustaine.

Who with dagger of lath, in his rage and his wrath, cries ah ha, to the diuell

Like a mad lad, paire thy nayles dad, Adieu good man diuell

Exit

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sebastian.

This is the ayre, that is the glorious Sunne,
This pearle she gaue me, I do feel't, and see't,
And though tis wonder that enwraps me thus,

Yet

Yet 'tis not madnesse. Where's Antonio then,
I could not finde him at the Elephant,
Yet there he was, and there I found this credite,
That he did range the towne to seeke me out,
His counsell now might do me golden seruice,
For though my soule disputes well with my fence,
That this may be some error, but no madnesse,
Yet doth this accident and flood of Fortune,
So farre exceed all instance, all discourse,
That I am readie to distrust mine eyes,
And wrangle with my reason that perswades me
To any other trust, but that I am mad,
Or else the Ladies mad; yet if 'twere so,
She could not sway her house, command her followers,
Take, and giue backe affayres, and their dispatch,
With such a smooth, discreet, and stable bearing
As I perceiue she do's: there's something in't
That is decciueable. But heere the Lady comes.

Enter Olivia, and Priest.

Ol. Blame not this haite of mine: if you meane well
Now go with me, and with this holy man
Into the Chantry by there before him,
And ynderneath that consecrated rooffe,
Plight me the full assurance of your faith,
That my most ialous, and too doubtfull soule
May liue at peace. He shall conceale it,
Whiles you are willing it shall come to nore,
What time we will our celebration keepe
According to my birth, what do you say?

Seb. Ile follow this good man, and go with you,
And hauing sworn truth, euer will be true

Ol. Then lead the way good father, & heauens so shine,
That they may fairely note this acte of mine

Exeunt.

Fine Actus Quartus.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Clowne and Fabian.

Fab. Now as thou lou'st me, let me see his Letter.

Cl. Good M Fabian, grant me another request.

Fab. Any thing.

Cl. Do not desire to see this Letter.

Fab. This is to giue a dogge, and in recompence desire my dogge againe.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and Lords.

Duke. Belong you to the Lady Olivia, friends?

Cl. I sir, we are some of her trappings.

Duke. I know thee well how dost thou my good Fellow?

Cl. Truly sir, the better for my foes, and the worse
for my friends:

Du. In't the contrary the better for thy friends.

Cl. No sir, the worse.

Du. How can that be?

Cl. Marry sir, they praise me, and make an asse of me, now my foes tell me plainly, I am an Asse so that by my foes sir, I profit in the knowledge of my ielfe, and by my friends I am abused so that conclusions to be as kisses, if your foure negatiues make your two affirmatiues, why then the worse for my friends, and the better for my foes

Du. Why this is excellent.

Cl. By my troth sir, no: though it please you to be ore of my friends.

Du. Thou shalt not be the worse for me, there's gold.

Cl. But that it would be double dealing sir, I would you could make it another.

Du. O you giue me ill counsell.

Cl. Put your grace in your pocket sir, for this once,
and let your flesh and blood obey it.

Du. Well, I will be so much a sinner to be a double dealer: there's another.

Cl. Primo, secundo, tertio, is a good play, and the olde saying is, the third payes for all: the triplex sir, is a good tripping measure, or the belles of S. Bennet sir, may put you in minde, one, two, three.

Du. You can foole no more money out of mee at this throw if you will let your Lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Cl. Marry sir, lullaby to your bountie till I come a-gen. I go sir, but I would not haue you to thinke, that my desire of hauing is the signe of couetousnesse. but as you say sir, let your bounty take a nappe, I will awake it anon

Exit

Enter Antonio and Officers.

Vio. Here comes the man sir, that did rescue mee.

Du. That face of his I do remember well,
yet when I saw it last, it was besmear'd
As blacke as Vulcan, in the smoake of warre:
A bawbling Vessell was he Captaine of,
For shallow draught and bulke vnprizable,
With which such fearefull grapple did he make,
With the most noble bottoome of our Fleete,
That very enuy, and the tongue of losse
Cride fame and honor on him: What's the matter?

1 Offi. Orsino, this is that Antonio

That tooke the Phoenix, and her fraught from Candy,
And this is he that did the Tiger boord,
When your yong Nephew Thou lost his legges;
Heere in the streets, desperate of shame and itate,
In priuate brabble did we apprehend him.

Vio. He did me kindnesse sir, drew on my side,
But in conclusion put strange speech vpon me,
I know not what 'twas, but distraction.

Du. Notable Pyrate, thou salt-water Theefe,
Wnat foolish boldnesse brought thee to their mercies,
Whom thou in termes so bloudie, and so deere
Hast made thine enemies?

Ant. Orsino Noble sir,

Be pleas'd that I shake off these names you giue mee.

Antonio neuer yet was Theefe, or Pyrate,
Though I confesse, on base and ground enough
*Orsino's*emie. A witchcraft drew me hither:
That most ingratefull boy there by your side,
From the rude seas enrag'd and foamy mouth
Did I redeeme: a wracke past hope he was.

His life I gaue him, and did thereto adde
My loue without retention, or restraint,
All his in dedication. For his sake,
Did I expose my selfe (pure for his loue)
Into the danger of this aduerse Towne,
Drew to defend him, when he was beset:
Where being apprehended, his false cunning
(Not meaning to partake with me in danger)
Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,

And

And grew a twentieth yeeres removed thing
While one would winke: demide me mine owne purse,
Which I had recommended to his use,
Not halfe an houre before.

Vio. How can this be?

Du. When came he to this Towne?

Ant. To day my Lord: and for three monthes before,
No intrin, nor a minutes vacancie,
Both day and night did we keepe companie.

Enter Olivia and attendants

Du. Heere comes the Countesse, now heauen walks on earth.

But for thee fellow, fellow thy words are madnesse,
Three monthes this youth hath tended vpon mee,
But more of that anon. Take him aside.

Ol. What would my Lord, but that he may not haue,
Wherein Olivia may seeme seruiceable?

Cesario, you do not keepe promise with me.

Vio. Madam

Du. Gracious Olivia.

Ol. What do you say Cesario? Good my Lord.

Vio. My Lord would speake, my duene hushes me.

Ol. If it be ought to the old tune my Lord,
It is as fat and fullsome to mine eare

As howling after Musicke.

Du. Still so cruell?

Ol. Still so constant Lord.

Du. What to perueise nesse? you vnciuill Ladie
To whose ingrate, and vnauspicious Aitars
My soule the faithfull'st offerings haue breath'd out
That ere deuotion tender'd. What shall I do?

Ol. Euen what it please my Lord, that shal becom him

Du. Why should I not, (had I the heart to do it)

Like to th Egyptian theefe, at point of death

Kill what I loue (a sauage ialousie,

That sometime sauiours nobly) but heare me this

Since you to non-regardance cast my faith,

And that I partly know the instrument

That scrowes me from my true place in your fauour:

Liue you the Marble breasted Tiran still.

But this your Minion, whom I know you loue,

And whom, by heauen I sweare, I tender deerely,

Him will I teare out of that cruell eye,

Where he sits crown'd in his masters sight

Come boy with me, my thoughts are ripe in mischief.

He sacrifice the Lambe that I do loue,

To spight a Ravens heart within a Dove

Vio. And I most iocund, apt, and willinglie,

To do you rest, a thousand deaths would dye.

Ol. Where goes Cesario?

Vio. After him I loue,

More then I loue these eyes, more then my life,

More by all mores, then ere I shall loue wife.

If I do feigne, you witnesses about

Punish my life, for tainting of my loue.

Ol. Aye me detested, how am I beguil'd?

Vio. Who does beguile you? who does do you wrong?

Ol. Hast thou forgot thy selfe? Is it so long?

Call forth the holy Father.

Du. Come, away.

Ol. Whether my Lord? Cesario, Husband, stay.

Du. Husband?

Ol. I Husband. Can he that deny?

Du. Her husband, sirrah?

Vio. No my Lord, not I.

Ol. Alas, it is the basenesse of thy feare,

That makes thee strangle thy propriety:
Feare not Cesario, take thy fortunes vp,
Be that thou know'st thou art, and then thou art
As great as that thou fear'st.

Enter Priest.

O welcome Father:

Father, I charge thee by thy reuerence

Heere to vnfold, though lately we intended

To keepe in darkenesse, what occasion now

Reueiles before 'tis ripe. what thou dost know

Hath newly past, betwene this youth, and me.

Priest. A Contract of eternall bond of loue,

Confirm'd by mutuall ioynder of your hands,

Attested by the holy close of lippes,

Strengthened by interchangement of your rings,

And all the Ceremone of this compact

Seal'd in my function, by my testimony.

Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my graue
I haue traual'd but two houres

Du. O thou dissembling Cub what wilt thou be

When time hath sow'd a grizle on thy case?

Or will not else thy craft to quickly grow,

That thine owne trip shall be thine overthrow:

Farewell, and take her, but direct thy feete,

Where thou, and I (henceforth) may neuer meet.

Vio. My Lord, I do protest

Ol. O do not sweare,

Hold little faith, though thou hast too much feare.

Enter Sir Andrew.

And. For the loue of God a Surgeon, send one presently to sir Toby

Ol. What's the matter?

And. He's broke my head a-crosse, and has giuen Sir
Toby a bloody Coxcombe too: for the loue of God your helpe, I had rather then forty pound I were at home.

Ol. Who has done this sir Andrew?

And. The Counts Gentleman, one Cesario we tooke him for a Coward, but hee's the verie diuell incarnate.

Du. My Gentleman Cesario?

And. Odd shifelings heere he is: you broke my head for nothing, and that that I did, I was set on to do't by sir
Toby

Vio. Why do you speake to me, I neuer hurt you:
you drew your sword vpon me without cause,
But I bespake you faire, and hurt you not.

Enter Toby and Clowne.

And. If a bloody coxcombe be a hurt, you haue hurt me: I thinke you set nothing by a bloody Coxcombe, Heere comes sir Toby halting, you shall heare more: but if he had not bene in drinke, hee would haue tickel'd you other gates then he did.

Du. How now Gentleman? how is't with you?

To. That's all one, has hurt me, and there's th' end on't:
Sor, didst see Dicke Surgeon, for?

Cl. O he's drunke sir Toby an houre agoe: his eyes were set at eight i'th morning.

To. Then he's a Rogue, and a passy measures pany: I hate a drunken rogue.

Ol. Away with him? Who hath made this haucke with them?

And. He helpe you sir Toby, because we'll be drest together.

To. Will you helpe an Ass-head, and a coxcombe, &
a knaue: a thin fac'd knaue, a gull?

Ol.

Ol. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd too.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. I am sorry Madam I have hurt your kinsman.
But had it beene the brother of my blood,
I must haue done no lesse with wit and safety.
You throw a strange regard vpon me, and by that I do perceiue it hath offended you.

Pardon me (sweet one) euen for the vowes
We made each other, but so late ago.

Du. One face, one voice, one habit, and two persons,
A naturall Perspective, that is, and is not

Seb. Antonio O my deere Antonio,
How haue the houres rack'd, and tortur'd me,
Since I haue lost thee?

Ant. Sebastian are you?

Seb. Fear'st thou that Antonio?

Ant. How haue you made diuision of your selfe,
An apple cleft in two, is not more twin
Then these two creatures. Which is Sebastian?

Ol. Most wonderfull

Seb. Do I stand there? I neuer had a brother:
Nor can there be that Deity in my nature
Of heere, and euery where. I had a sister,
Whom the blinde waues and surges haue deuour'd.
Of charity, what kinne are you to me?
What Countreyman? What name? What Parentage?

Uio Of Messaline. Sebastian was my Father,
Such a Sebastian was my brother too:
So went he suited to his watery tombe
If spirits can asuue both forme and suite,
You come to fright vs.

Seb. A spirit I am indeed,
But am in that dimension grossely clad,
Which from the wombe I did participate.
Were you a woman, as the rest goes euen,
I should my cares let fall vpon your cheeke,
And say, thrice welcome drowned Viola.

Uio. My father had a moale vpon his brow.

Seb. And so had mine.

Uio. And did that day when Viola from her birth
Had numbred thirteene yeares.

Seb. O that record is liuely in my soule,
He finished indeed his mortall acte
That day that made my sister thirteene yeares.

Uio. If nothing lets to make vs happie both,
But this my masculine vsurp'd attyre.
Do not embrace me, till each circumstance,
Of place, time, fortune, do co-here and iumpe
That I am Viola, which to confirme,
Ile bring you to a Captaine in this Towne,
Where lye my maiden weeds. by whose gentle helpe,
I was prefer'd to serue this Noble Count.
All the occurrence of my fortune since
Hath beene betwene this Lady, and this Lord.

Seb. So comes it Lady, you haue beene mistooke:
But Nature to her bias drew in that,
You would haue bin contracted to a Maid,
Nor are you therein (by my life) deceiu'd,
You are betroth'd both to a maid and man.

Du. Be not amaz'd, right noble is his blood:
If this be so, as yet the glasse seemes true,
I shall haue share in this most nappy wracke,
Boy, thou hast saide to me a thousand times,
Thou neuer should'st loue woman like to me.

Uio. And all those sayings, will I ouer-swear,
And all those swearings keepe as true in soule,

As doth that Orbed Continent, the fire,
That seuers day from night.

Du. Giue me thy hand,
And let me see thee in thy womans weedes.

Uio. The Captaine that did bring me first on shore
Hath my Maides garments: he vpon some Action
Is now in durance, at Maluolio's suite,
A Gentleman, and follower of my Ladies.

Ol. He shall enlarge him: fetch Maluolio hither,
And yet alas, now I remember me,
They say poore Gentleman, he's much distract.

Enter Clowne with a Letter, and Fabian.

A most extracting frensie of mine owne
From my remembrance, clearly banisht his,
How does he sirrah?

Cl. Truly Madam, he holds Belzebub at the staues end as well as a man in his case may do: has heere writ a letter to you, I should haue giuen't you to day morning. But as a madmans Epistles are no Gospels, so it skilles not much when they are deliuer'd.

Ol. Open't, and read it.

Cl. Looke then to be well edified, when the Foole deliuers the Madman By the Lord Madam.

Ol. How now, art thou mad?

Cl. No Madam, I do but reade madnesse: and your Ladyship will haue it as it ought to bee, you must allow Fox.

Ol. Prethee reade i'thy right wits.

Cl. So I do Madona: but to reade his right wits, is to reade thus. therefore, perpend my Princeesse, and giue care.

Ol. Read it you, sirrah

Fab. Reads. By the Lord Madam, you wrong me, and the world shall know it. Though you haue put mee into darkenesse, and giuen your drunken Cosine rule over me, yet haue I the benefit of my senses as well as your Lady-ship. I haue your owne letter, that induced mee to the semblance I put on, with the which I doubt not, but to do my selfe much right, or you much shame: thinke of me as you please. I leaue my duty a little vnthought of,
and speake out of my injury. The madly vs d Maluolio.

Ol. Did he write this?

Cl. I Madame.

Du. This sauiours not much of distraction.

Ol. See him deliuer'd Fabian, bring him hither:
My Lord, so please you, these things further thought on,
To thinke me as well a sister, as a wife,
One day shall crowne th'alliance on't, so please you,
Heere at my house, and at my proper cost.

Du. Madam, I am most apt t'embrace your offer:
Your Master quits you: and for your seruice done him,
So much against the mettle of your sex,
So farre beneath your soft and tender breeding,
And since you call'd me Master, for so long:
Heere is my hand, you shall from this time bee
your Masters Mistresse.

Ol. A sister, you are she.

Enter Maluolio.

Du. Is this the Madman?

Ol. I my Lord, this same. How now Maluolio?

Mal. Madam, you haue done me wrong,
Notorious wrong.

Ol. Haue I Maluolio? No.

Mal. Lady you haue, pray you peruse that Letter.
You must not now denie it is your hand,
Write from it if you can, in hand, or phrase,

Or

Or say, tis not your seale, nor your inuention :
You can say none of this. Well, grant it then,
And tell me in the modestie of honor,
Why you haue giuen me such cleare lights of fauour,
Bad me come smiling, and crosse-garter'd to you,
To put on yellow stockings, and to frowne
Vpon sir Toby, and the lighter people :
And acting this in an obedient hope,
Why haue you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a darke house, visited by the Priest,
And made the most notorious gecke and gull,
That ere inuention plaid on ? Tell me why ?

Ol. Alas Maluolio, this is not my writing,
Though I confesse much like the Character.
But out of question, tis Marias hand.
And now I do bethinke me, it was shee
First told me thou wast mad ; then cam'st in smiling,
And in such formes, which heere were presuppos'd
Vpon thee in the Letter : prethee be content,
This practice hath most shrewdly past vpon thee .
But when we know the grounds, and authors of it,
Thou shalt be both the Plaintiffe and the Iudge
Of thine owne cause.

Fab. Good Madam heere me speake,
And let no quarrell, nor no braule to come,
Taint the condition of this present houre,
Which I haue wondred at. In hope it shall not,
Most freely I confesse my selfe, and Toby
Set this deuce against Maluolio heere,
Vpon some stubborn and vncourteous parts
We had conceiu'd against him. Maria writ
The Letter, at sir Tobys great importance,
In recompence whereof, he hath married her :
How with a sportfull malice it was follow'd,
May rather plucke on laughter then reuenge,
If that the iniuries be iustly weigh'd,
That haue on both sides past

Ol. Alas poore Foole, how haue they bassel'd thee ?

Clo. Why some are borne great, some achieve great-nesse, and some haue greatnesse throwne vpon them. I was one sir, in this Enterlude, one sir Topas sir, but that's all one : By the Lord Foole, I am not mad : but do you remember, Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascall,

and you smile not he's gag'd : and thus the whirlegigge
of time, brings in his reuenges

Mal. Ile be reueng'd on the whole packe of you ?
Ol. He hath bene most notoriously abus'd.

Du. Pursue him, and entreate him to a peace :
He hath not told vs of the Captaine yet,
When that is knowne, and golden time conuents
A solemne Combination shall be made
Of our deere soules. Meane time sweet sister,
We will not part from hence. Cesario come
(For so you shall be while you are a man )
But when in other habites you are seene,
Orsino's Mistress, and his fancies Queene.

Exeunt

Clowne sings

When that I was and a little tyme boy,
with hey, ho, the winde and the raine :
A foolish thing was but a toy,
for the raine it rameth euery day,

But when I came to mans estate,
with hey ho, &c.
Gainst Knanes and Theen's men sent their gate,
for the raine, &c.

But when I came alas to wine,
with hey ho, &c.
By swag gering could I neuer ibrine,
for the raine, &c.

But when I came vnto my bed,
with hey ho, &c.
With rospottes still had druncken beads,
for the raine, &c.

A great while ago the world begon,
hey ho, &c.
But that's all one, our Play is done,
and wee'l sticke so please you euery day.

FINIS.

The Winters Tale.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Camillo and Archidamus.

Arch.
IF you shall chance (Camillo) to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon my seruices are now on-foot, you shall see (as I haue said) great difference betwixt our Bohemia, and your Sicilia.

Cam. I thinke, this comming Summer, the King of Sicilia meanes to pay Bohemia the Visitation, which hee iustly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our Entertainment shall shame vs we will be iustified in our Loues: for indeed—

Cam. 'Beseech you—

Arch. Verely I speake it in the freedome of my knowledge. we cannot with such magnificence— in so rare—I know not what to say— Wee will giue you sleepe Drinckes, that your Sences (vn-intelligent of our insufficiency) may, though they cannot prayse vs, as little accuse vs.

Cam. You pay a great deale to deare, for what's giuen freely.

Arch. 'Beleeue me, I speake as my vnderstanding instructs me, and as mine honestie puts it to vtterance.

Cam. Sicilia cannot shew himselfe ouer-kind to Bohemia. They were trayn'd together in their Child-hoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot chuse but braunch now. Since their more mature Dignities, and Royall Necessities, made seperation of their Societie, their Encounters (though not Personall) hath been Royally attorned with enter-change of Gifts, Letters, louing Embassies, that they haue seem'd to be together, though absent shooke hands, as ouer a Vast, and embrac'd as it were from the ends of opposed Winds. The Heauens continue their Loues.

Arch. I thinke there is not in the World, either Malice or Matter, to alter it. You haue an vnspcakable comfort of your young Prince Mamilius it is a Gentleman of the greatest Promise, that euer came into my Note.

Cam. I very well agree with you, in the hopes of him. it is a gallant Child; one, that (indeed) Physicks the Subiect, makes old hearts fresh they that went on Crutches ere he was borne, desire yet their life, to see him a Man.

Arch. Would they else be content to die?

Cam. Yes; if there were no other excuse, why they should desire to liue.

Arch. If the King had no Sonne, they would desire to liue on Crutches till he had one. Exeunt

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Leontes, Hermione, Mamilius, Polixenes, Camillo.

Pol. Nine Changes of the Watry-Scarre hath been

The Shepheards Note, since we haue left our Throne Without a Burthen: Time as long againe Would be fill'd vp (my Brother) with our Thanks, And yet we should, for perpetuities, Goe hence in debt. And therefore, like a Cypher (Yet standing in rich place) I multiply With one we thanke you, many thousands moe, That goe before it

Leo. Stay your Thanks a while, And pay them when you part

Pol. Sir, that's to morrow.

I am question'd by my feares, of what may chance, Or breed vpon our absence, that may blow No sneaping Winds at home, to make vs say, This is put forth too truly: besides, I haue stay'd To tyre your Royaltie.

Leo. We are tougher (Brother)

Then you can put vs to't.

Pol. No longer stay.

Leo. One Seue'night longer

Pol. Very sooth, to morrow.

Leo. Wee'll part the time betweene's then: and in that Ile no gaine-saying.

Pol. Preece me not ('beseech you) so. There is no Tongue that moues, none, none i'th' World So soone as yours, could win me so it should now, Were there necessity in your request, although 'Twere needfull I deny'd it. My Affaires Doe euen drag me home-ward. which to hinder, Were (in your Loue) a Whip to me; my stay, To you a Charge, and Trouble: to saue both, Farewell (our Brother.)

Leo. Tongue-ty'd our Queene? speake you.

Her. I had thought (Sir) to haue held my peace, vntill You had drawne Oathes from him, not to stay you (Sir) Charge him too coldly. Tell him, you are sure All in Bohemia well: this satisfaction, The by-gone-day proclaym'd, say this to him, He's beat from his best ward.

Leo. Well said, Hermione.

Her. To tell, he longs to see his Sonne, were strong:

But let him say so then, and let him goe;

But let him sweare so, and he shall not stay,

Wee'll thwack him hence with Distaffes.

Yet of your Royall presence, Ile aduenture The borrow of a Weeke. When at Bohemia You take my Lord, Ile giue him my Commission, To let him there a Moneth, behind the Gest Prefix'd for's parting yet (good-deed) Leontes, I loue thee not a farre o'th' Clock, behind

A a

What

What Lady she her Lord. You'll stay?
Pol. No, Madame.

Her. Nay, but you will?
Pol. I may not verely.

Her. Verely?
 You put me off with limber Vowes: but I,

Though you would seek t'vnspire the Seas with Oaths,
 Should yet say, Sir, no going. Verely
 You shall not goe; a Ladye, Verely, is
 As potent as a Lords. Will you goe yet?

Force me to keepe you as a Prisoner,
 Not like a Guest: so you shall pay your Fees
 When you depart, and saue your Thanks. How say you?
 My Prisoner? or my Guest? by your dread Verely,
 One of them you shall be.

Pol. Your Guest then, Madame:
 To be your Prisoner; should import offending;
 Which is for me, lesse easie to commit,
 Then you to punish.

Her. Not your Gaoler then,
 But your kind Hostesse. Come, Ile question you
 Of my Lords Tricks, and yours, when you were Boyes:
 You were pretty Lordings then?

Pol. We were (faire Queene)
 Two Lads, that thought there was no more behind,
 But such a day to morrow, as to day,
 And to be Boy eternall.

Her. Was not my Lord
 The verier Wag o'th' two?

Pol. We were as twyn'd Lambs, that did frisk i'th' Sun,
 And bleat the one at th' other: what we chang'd,
 Was Innocence, for Innocence we knew not
 The Doctrine of ill-doing, nor dream'd
 That any did. Had we pursu'd that life,
 And our weake Spirits ne're been higher rear'd
 With stronger blood, we should haue answer'd Heauer
 Boldly, not guilty; the Imposition clear'd, Hereditarie ours.

Her. By this we gather
 You haue tript since.

Pol. O my most sacred Lady,
 Temptations haue since then been borne to's: for
 In those vnslodg'd dayes, was my Wife a Girl;
 Your precious selfe had then not cross'd the eyes
 Of my young Play-fellow.

Her. Grace to boot
 Of this make no conclusion, least you say
 Your Queene and I are Devils. yet goe on,
 Th'offences we haue made you doe, wee'le answer,
 If you first sinne'd with vs: and that with vs
 You did continue fault; and that you slip not
 With any, but with vs

Leo. Is he wooon yet?

Her. Hee'le stay (my Lord.)

Leo. At my request, he would not:

Hermione (my dearest) thou neuer spok'st
 To better purpose.

Her. Neuer?

Leo. Neuer, but once.

Her. What haue I twice said well? when was't before?
 I prethee tell me: cram's with prayse, and make's
 As far as tame things: One good deed, dying tonguelesse, Slaughters a thousand, wayting vpon that.
 Our prayses are our Wages. You may ride's
 With one softe Kisse a thousand Furlongs, ere
 With Spur we heat an Acre. But to th' Goale:

My last good deed, was to entreat his stay.
 What was my first? it ha's an elder Sister,
 Or I mistake you: O, would her Name were Grace.
 But once before I spok'to th' purpose? when?
 Nay, let me haue't: I long.

Leo. Why, that was when
 Three crabbed Moneths had sow'd themselves to death,
 Ere I could make thee open thy white Hand:
 A clasp thy selfe, my Love: then didst thou vnder,
 I am yours for euer.

Her. 'Tis Grace indeed.
 Why lo-you row; I haue spok'to th' purpose twice:
 The one, for euer earn'd a Royall Husband;
 Th'other, for some while a Friend,

Leo. Too hot, too hot:
 To mingle friendship farre, is mingling bloods.
 I haue Tremor Cordis on me: my heart daunces,
 But not for ioy; not ioy. This Entertainment
 May a free face put on: deride a Libertie
 From Heartinesse, from Bountie, fertile Bosome,
 And well become the Agent't may; I graunt
 But to be padding Palmes, and pinching Fingers,
 As now they are, and making practis'd Smiles
 As in a Looking-Glasse; and then to sigh, as 'twere
 The Mort o'th' Deere. oh, that is entertainment
 My Bosome likes not, nor my Browes. Mamillius,
 Art thou my Boy?

Mam. I, my good Lord.

Leo. Yfecks:

Why that's my Bawcock: what's has't smutch'd thy Nose?
 They say it is a Coppy out of mine. Come Captaine,
 We must be neat; not neat, but cleanly; Captaine:
 And yet the Steere, the Hayser, and the Calfe,
 Are all call'd Neat. Still Virginalling
 Vpon his Palme? How now (you wanton Calfe)
 Art thou my Calfe?

Mama. Yes, if you will (my Lord.)

Leo. Thou want'st a rough path: the shoots that I haue
 To be full, like me: yet they say we are Almost as like as Egges; Woe an say so,
 (That will say any thing.) But were they false
 As o're-dy'd Blacks, as Wine, as Waters; false
 As Dice are to be with'd, by one that fixes
 No borne'twixt his and mine; yet were it true,
 To say this Boy were like me. Come (Sir Page)
 Looke on me with your Welkin eye: sweet Villaine,
 Most deas't, my Collop: Can thy Dam, may't be Affection? thy Intention flabs the Center.
 Thou do'st make possible things not so held,
 Communicat'st with Dreames (how can this be?)
 With what's vnreall: thou coactiue art,
 And fellow'st nothing. Then 'tis very credent,
 Thou may'st co-joyne with something, and thou do'st,
 (And that beyond Commission) and I find it,
 (And that to the infection of my Braines,
 And hardning of my Browes.)

Pol. What meanes Sicilia?

Her. He something seemes vnsted.

Pol. How? my Lord?

Leo. What cheere? how is't with you, best Brother?

Her. You look as if you held a Brow of much distraction:

Are you mou'd (my Lord?)

Leo. No, in good earnest.
 How sometimes Nature will betray it's folly?
 It's tendernes? and make it selfe a Pastime
 To harder bosomes? Looking on the Lynce

Of my Boyes face, me thoughts I did requoyle
Twentie three yeeres, and saw my selfe vn-breech'd,
In my greene Veluet Coat; my Dagger muzzel'd,
Least it should bite it's Master, and to proue
(As Ornamentes oft do's) too dangerous:
How like (me thought) I then was to this Kernell,
This Squash, this Gentleman, Mine honest Friend,
Will you take Egges for Money?

Mam. No (my Lord) Ile fight.

Leo. You will why happy man be's dole My Brother
Are you so fond of your young Prince, as we
Doe seeme to be of ours?

Pol. if at home (Sir)

He's all my Exercise, my Mirth, my Matter;
Now my (sworne) Friend, and then mine Enemy;
My Parasite, my Souldier: Statef-man, all
He makes a Iulys day, short as December,
And with his varying child-nesse, cures in me
Thoughts, that would thicke my blood,

Leo. So stands this Squire

Offic'd with me: We two will walke (my Lord)
And leaue you to your grauer steps. Hermione,
How thou lou'st vs, shew in our Brothers welcome;
Let what is deare in Sicily, be cheape.

Next to thy selfe, and my young Rouer, he's Apparant to my heart.

Her. If you would seeke vs,

We are yours i'th' Garden shall's attend you there?

Leo. To your owne bents dispose you you'll be found,
Be you beneath the Sky: I am angling now,
(Though you perceiue me not how I giue Lyne)
Goe too, goe too

How she holds vp the Neb? the Byll to him?
And armes her with the boldnesse of a Wife
To her allowing Husband Gone already,
Ynch-thick, knee-deepe; ore head and eares a fork'd one.

Goe play (Boy) play thy Mother playes, and I
Play too, but so disgrace'd a part, whose issue
Will hiss me to my Graue. Contempt and Clamor
Will be my Kuell. Goe play (Boy) play, there haue been (Or I am much decei'd) Cuckolds ere now,
And many a man there is (euen at this present,
Now, while I speake this) holds his Wife by th' Arme,
That little thinks she ha's been sluy'd in's absence,
And his Pond fish'd by his next Neighbor (by Sir Smile, his Neighbor) nay, there's comfort in't,
Whiles other men haue Gates, and those Gates open'd
(As mine) against their will. Should all despaire
That haue revolted Wiues, the tenth of Mankind
Would hang themselves, Physick for't, there's none.

It is a bawdy Planet, that will strike
Where'tis predominant, and'tis powrefull thinke it
From East, West, North, and South, be it concluded,
No Barricado for a Belly. Know't,
It will let in and out the Enemy,

With bag and baggage: many thousand on's
Haue the Disease, and feeble's not. How now Boy?

Mam. I am like you say.

Leo. Why, that's some comfort.

What? Camillo there?

Cam. I, my good Lord.

Leo. Goe play (Mamillius) thou'rt an honest man.
Camillo, this great Sir will yet stay longer.

Cam. You had much adoe to make his Anchor hold,
When you cast out, it still came home.

Leo. Didst note it?

Cam. He would not stay at your Petitions, made
His Businesse more materiall.

Leo. Didst perceiue it?

They're here with me already, whisp'ring, rounding:
Sicilia is so forth. 'tis farre gone,
When I shall get it last How cam't (Camillo)
That he did stay?

Cam. At the good Queenes entreatie.

Leo. At the Querenes be't: Good should be pertinent,
But so it is, it is not. Was this taken
By any vnderstanding Pace but thine?
For thy Conceit is toaking, will draw in
More then the common Blocks. Not noted, is't,
But of the finer Natures? by some Seueralls
Of Head-peece extraordinary? Lower Messes
Perchance are to this Businesse purblind? say.

Cam. Businesse, my Lord? I thinke most vnderstand
Polhemis staves here longer.

Leo. Ha?

Cam. Staves here longer.

Leo. I, but why?

Cam. To satisfie your Highnesse, and the Entreaties
Of our most gracious M. Strefle

Leo. Satisfie?

Th'entreaties of your Mistresse? Satisfie?
Let that suffice. I haue trusted thee (Camillo)
With all the needest things to my heart, as well
My Chamber-Councels, wherein (Priest-like) thou
Hast cleans'd my Bosome I, from thee departed
Thy Penitent reform'd: but we haue been Decei'd in thy Integrity, decei'd
In that which seemes so.

Cam. Be it forbid (my Lord)

Leo. To bide vpon't thou art not honest or
If thou inclin'st that way, thou art a Coward,
Which boxes honestie behind, restraining
From Course requir'd: or else thou must be counted
A Seruant, grafted in my serious Trust,
And therein negligent. or else a Foole,
That seest a Game play'd home, the rich Stake drawne,
And tak'st it all for least.

Cam. My gracious Lord,

I may be negligent foolish, and fearefull,
In euery one of these, no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, feare,
Among the infinite doings of the World,
Sometime puts forth in your affaires (my Lord.)
If euer I were wilfull-negligent,
It was my folly: if industiously
I play'd the Foole, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end: if euer fearefull
To doe a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof th'execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, 'twas a feare
Which oft infects the wisest: these (my Lord)
Are such allow'd Infirmities, that honestie
Is neuer free of. But beseech your Grace
Be plainer with me, let me know my Trespas
By it's owne visage; if I then deny it,
'Tis none of mine

Leo. Ha' not you seene Camillo?

(But that's past doubt: you haue, or your eye-glasse
Is thicker then a Cuckolds Horne) or heard?
(For to a Vision so apparant, Rumor
Cannot be mute) or thought? (for Cogitation
Resides not in that man, that do's not thinke)

My Wife is slipperie? If thou wilt confesse,
Or else be impudently negative,
To haue nor Eyes, nor Eares, nor Thought, then say
My Wife's a Holy-Horse, deserues a Name
As ranke as any Flax-Wench, that putes to Before her troth-plight: say't, and iustify't.

Cam. I would not be a slander-by, to heare
My Soueraigne Mistresse clouded so, without
My present vengeance taken: 'shew my heart,
You neuer spoke what did become you lesse
Then this; which to reiterate, were sin
As deepe as that, though true.

Leo. Is whispering nothing?
Is leaning Cheeke to Cheeke? is meating Noses?
Kissing with in-side Lip? stopping the Carriere
Of Laughter, with a sigh? (a Note infallible
Of breaking Honestie) horsing foot on foot?
Skulking in corners? wishing Clocks more swift?
Houres, Minutes? Noone, Mid-night? and all Eyes
Blind with the Pin and Web, but theirs; theirs onely,
That would vnseene be wicked? Is this nothing?
Why then the World, and all that's in't, is nothing,
The couering Skie is nothing, Bohemia nothing,
My Wife is nothing, nor Nothing haue these Nothings,
If this be nothing.

Cam. Good my Lord, be cur'd
Of this diseas'd Opinion, and betimes,
For 'tis most dangerous.

Leo. Say it be, 'tis true.

Cam. No, no, my Lord.

Leo. It is, you lye, you lye:

I say thou lye'st Camilla, and I hate thee,
Pronounce thee a grosse Lout, a mindlesse Slave,
Or else a howering Temporizer, that
Canst with thine eyes at once see good and euill,
Inclining to them both: were my Wiues Liuer
Infected (as her life) she would not liue
The running of one Glasse.

Cam. Who do's infect her?

Leo. Why he that weares her like her Medull, hanging
About his neck (Bohemia) who, if I
Had Seruants true about me, that bare eyes
To see alike mine Honor, as their Profits,
(Their owne particular Thrifts) they would doe that
Which should vndoe more doing: I, and thou
His Cup-bearer, whom I from meaner forme
Haue Bench'd, and rear'd to Worship, who may'st see Plainely, as Heauen sees Earth, and Earth sees Heauen,
How I am gall'd, might'st be-spice a Cup,
To giue mine Enemy a lasting Winke:
Which Draught to me, were cordiall.

Cam. Sir (my Lord)

I could doe this, and that with no rash Potion,
But with a lingring Dram, that should not worke Maliciously, like Poyson: But I cannot Beleeue this Crack to be in my dread Mistresse
(So soueraignely being Honorable.)
I haue lou'd thee,

Leo. Make that thy question, and goe rot:
Do'st thinke I am so muddy, so vnscled,
To appoint my selfe in this vexation?
Sully the puritie and whitenesse of my Sheetes (Which to preferue, is Sleepe; which being spotted,
Is Goades, Thornes, Nettles, Tayles of Waspes)
Giue scandall to the blood o'th' Prince, my Sonne,
(Who I doe thinke is mine, and loue as mine)

Without ripe mouing to't? Would I doe this?
Could man so blench?

Cam. I must beleeue you (Sir)

I doe, and will fetch off Bohemia for't:
Prouided, that when hee's remou'd, your Highnesse
Will take againe your Queene, as yours at first,
Euen for your Sonnes sake, and thereby for sealing
The Iniurie of Tongues, in Courts and Kingdomes
Knowne, and ally'd to yours.

Leo. Thou do'st aduise me,
Euen so as I mine owne course haue set downe:
Ile giue no blemish to her Honor, none.

Cam. My Lord,
Goe then; and with a countenance as cleare
As Friendship weares at Feasts, keepe with Bohemia,
And with your Queene: I am his Cup-bearer,
If from me he haue wholesome Beueridge,
Account me not your Seruant.

Leo. This is all.
Do't, and thou hast the one halfe of my heart,
Do't not, thou split'st thine owne.

Cam. Ile do't, my Lord.

Leo. I wil seeme friendly, as thou hast aduis'd me. Exit

Cam. O miserable Lady. But for me,
What case stand I in? I must be the poysoner
Of good Polixenes, and my ground to do't,
Is the obedience to a Master; one,
Who in Rebellion with himselfe, will haue
All that are his, so too. To doe this deed,
Promotion followes: If I could find example
Of thousand's that had struck anyoynted Kings,
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't: But since
Nor Brasse, nor Stone, nor Parchment beares not one,
Let Villanie it selfe forswear't. I must Forake the Court: to do't, or no, is certaine
To me a breake-neck. Happy Starre raigne now, Here comes Bohemia. Enter Polixenes.

Pol. This is strange. Me thinkes
My fauor here begins to warpe. Not speake?
Good day Camilla.

Cam. Haile most Royall Sir.

Pol. What is the Newes i'th' Court?

Cam. None rare (my Lord.)

Pol. The King hath on him such a countenance,
As he had lost some Prouince, and a Region
Loud, as he loues himselfe. euen now I met him
With customearie complement, when hee
Wasting his eyes to th' contrary, and falling
A Lippe of much contempt, speedes from me, and
So leaues me, to consider what is breeding,
That changes thus his Manners.

Cam. I dare not know (my Lord.)

Pol. How, dare not? doe not? doe you know, and dare not?
Be intelligent to me, 'tis thereabouts.

For to your selfe, what you doe know, you must,
And cannot say, you dare not. Good Camilla,
Your chang'd complexion is to me a Mirror,
Which shewes me mine chang'd too: for I must be
A partie in this alteration, finding
My selfe thus alter'd with't.

Cam. There is a sicknesse
Which puts some of vs in distemper, but I cannot name the Disease, and it is caught
Of you, that yet are well.

Pol. How caught of me?
Make me not sighted like the Basilisque.

I haue

I haue look'd on thousands, who haue sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so : Camillo,
As you are certainly a Gentleman, thereto
Clerke-like experienc'd, which no lesse adorne
Our Gentry, then our Parents Noble Names,
In whose successe we are gentle : I beseech you,
If you know ought which do's behoue my knowledge,
Thereof to be inform'd, imprison'nt not
In ignorant concealement

Cam. I may not answere

Pol. A Sicknesse caught of me, and yet I well ?
I must be answer'd Do it thou heare Camillo,
I coniure thee, by all the parts of man,
Which Honor do's acknowledge, whereof the least
Is not this Suit of mine, that thou declare
What incidence thou do'st ghesse of harme
Is creeping toward me ; how farre off, how neere,
Which way to be preuented it to be :
If not, how best to beare it.

Cam. Sir, I will tell you,
Since I am charg'd in Honor, and by him
That I thinke Honorable therefore marke my counsaile,
Which must be eu'n as swiftly followed, as
I meane to viter it ; or both your selfe, and me,
Cry lost, and so good night.

Pol. On, good Camillo

Cam. I am appointed him to murther you.

Pol. By whom, Camillo ?

Cam. By the King.

Pol. For what ?

Cam. He thinks, nay w.th all confidence he swears,
As he had scen't, or beene an Instrument
To vice you to't, that you haue toucht his Queene
Forbiddenly

Pol. Oh then, my best blood turne
To an infected Gelly, and my Name
Be yolk'd with his, that did betray the Best.
Turne then my freshest Reputation to
A sauour, that may strike the dullest Nosthrill
Where I arrive, and my approach be shun'd,
Nay hated too, worse then the great'st Infection
That ere was heard, or read.

Cam. Swear his thought ouer
By each particular Starre in Heauen, and
By all their Influences ; you may as well
Forbid the Sea for to obey the Moone,
As (or by Oath) remoue, or (Counsaile) shake
The Fabrick of his Folly, whose foundation
Is pyl'd vpon his Faith, and will continue
The standing of his Body.

Pol. How should this grow ?

Cam. I know not but I am sure 'tis safer to Auid what's growne, then question how 'tis borne.
If therefore you dare trust my honestie,
That lyes enclosed in this Trunke, which you
Shall beare along impawnd, away to Night,
Your Followers I will whisper to the Businesse,
And will by twos, and threes, at severall Posternes, Cleare them o'th' Citie : For my selfe, Ile put My fortunes to your seruice (which are here
By this discouerie lost.) Be not vn certaine,
For by the honor of my Parents, I
Haue vttered Truth which if you seeke to proue,
I dare not stand by ; nor shall you be safer,
Then one condemn'd by the Kings owne mouth :
Thereon his Execucion sworne.

Pol. I doe beleene thee :

I saw his heart in's face Giue me thy hand,
Be Pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. My Ships are ready, and My people did expect my hence departure
Two dayes agoe This Icalousie
Is for a precious Creature : as shee's rare,
Must it be great, and, as his Person's mightie,
Must it be violent : and, as he do's conceiue,
He is dishonor'd by a man, which euer
Profess'd to him : why his Reuenges must
In that be made more bitter. Feare ore-shades me :
Good Expedition be my friend, and comfort
The gracious Queene, part of his Theame, but nothing
Of his ill-ta'ne suspition. Come Camillo,
I will respect thee as a Father, if
Thou bea'r'st my life off, hence : Let vs auoid.

Cam. It is in mine authoritie to command
The Keyes of all the Posternes. Please your Highnesse
To take the vrgent houre. Come Sir, away. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Hermione, Mamillius, Ladies Leantes, Antigonus, Lords.

Her. Take the Boy to you he so troubles me,
'Tis past enduring.

Lady. Come (my gracious Lord)
Shall I be your play-fellow ?

Mam. No, Ile none of you.

Lady. Why (my sweet Lord) ?

Mam. You'll kisse me hard, and speake to me, as if I were a Baby still. I loue you better.

2. Lady. And why so (my Lord) ?

Mam. Not for because
Your Browes are blacker (yet black-browes they say
Become some Women best, so that there be not Too much haire there, but in a Cemicircle,
Or a halfe-Moone, made with a Pen.)

2. Lady. Who taught 'this ?

Mam. I learn'd it out of Womens faces : pray now,
What colour are your eye-browes ?

Lady. Blew (my Lord.)

Mam. Nay, that's a mock. I haue seene a Ladies Nose
That ha's beene blew, but not her eye-browes.

Lady. Harke ye,
The Queene (your Mother) rounds apace : we shall Present our seruices to a fine new Prince
One of these dayes, and then you'd wanton with vs,
If we would haue you

2. Lady. She is spread of late
Into a goodly Bulke (good time encounter her.)

Her. What wisdoms stirs amongst you ? Come Sir, now
I am for you againe. 'Pray you sit by vs,
And tell's a Tale.

Mam. Merry, or sad, shall't be ?

Her. As merry as you will.

Mam. A sad Tale's best for Winter :
I haue one of Sprights, and Goblins.

Her. Let's haue that (good Sir.)
Come-on, sit downe, come-on, and doe your best,
To fright me with your Sprights you're pow'refull at it.

A 3

Mam. There

Mam. There was a man.

Her. Nay, come sit downe: then on.

Mam. Dwelt by a Church-yard. I will tell it softly, Yond Crickets shall not heare it.

Her. Come on then, and giu't me in mine eare.

Leon. Was hee met there? his Trainee? Camillo with him?

Lord. Behind the tuft of Pines I met them, neuer Saw I men scowre so on their way. I eyed them
Euen to their Ships.

Leo. How blest am I

In my iust Censure? in my true Opinion?
Alack, for lesser knowledge, how accurs'd,
In being so blest? There may be in the Cup
A Spider steep'd, and one may drinke; depart,
And yet partake no venome (for his knowledge
Is not infected) but if one present
Th'abhor'd Ingredient to his eye, make knowne
How he hath drunke, he cracks his gorge, his sides
With violent Hefts I haue drunke, and seene the Spider.
Camillo was his helpe in this, his Pandar.

There is a Plot against my Life, my Crowne;
All's true that is mistrusted: that false Villaine,
Whom I employ'd, was pre-employ'd by him:
He ha's discover'd my Designe, and I
Remaine a pinch'd Thing, yea, a very Trick
For them to play at will. how came the Posternes
So easily open?

Lord. By his great authority,
Which often hath no lesse preuail'd, then so,
On your command.

Leo. I know't too well.

Giue me the Boy, I am glad you did not nurse him:
Though he do's beare some signes of me, yet you
Haue too much blood in him.

Her. What is this? Sport?

Leo. Beare the Boy hence, he shall not come about her,
Away with him, and let her sport her selfe
With that shee's big-with, for 'tis Polixenes
Ha's made thee swell thus.

Her. But I'd say he had not;
And Ile be sworne you would belecue my saying,
How e're you leane to th'Nay-ward.

Leo. You (my Lords)
Looke on her, marke her well: be but about
To say she is a goodly Lady, and
The iustice of your hearts will thereto adde
'Tis pittie shee's not honest Honorable;
Prayse her but for this her without-dore-Forme,
(Which on my faith deserues high speech) and straight
The Shrug, the Hum, or Ha, (these Petty-brands
That Calumnie doth vse, Oh, I am out,
That Mercy do's, for Calumnie will seare
Vertue it selfe) these Shrugs, these Hum's, and Ha's,
When you haue said shee's goodly, come betweene,
Ere you can say shee's honest: But be't knowne
(From him that ha's most cause to grieue it should be) Shee's an Adulteresse.

Her. Should a Villaine say so,
(The most replenish'd Villaine in the World)
He were as much more Villaine. you (my Lord)
Doe but mistake.

Leo. You haue mistooke (my Lady)
Polixenes for Leontes. O thou Thing, (Which Ile not call a Creature of thy place,
Least Barbarisme (making me the precedent)

Should a like Language vse to all degrees,
And mannerly distinguishment leaue out,
Betwixt the Prince and Begger:) I haue said
Shee's an Adulteresse, I haue said with whom;
More; shee's a Traytor, and Camillo is
A Federarie with her, and one that knowes;
What she should shame to know her selfe,
But with her most vild Principall. that shee's
A Bed-swaruer, euen as bad as those
That Vulgars giue bold't Titles; I, and priuy
To this their late escape.

Her. No (by my life)
Priuy to none of this: how will this grieue you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus haue publish'd me? Gentle my Lord,
You scarce can right me throughly, then, to say
You did mistake.

Leo. No. if I mistake
In those Foundations which I build vpon,
The Centre is not bigge enough to beare
A Schoole-Boyes Top. Away with her, to Prison
He who shall speake for her, is a farre-off guiltie,
But that he speaks.

Her. There's some ill Planet raignes,
I must be patient, till the Heauens looke
With an aspect more fauorable. Good my Lords,
I am not prone to weeping (as our Sex Commonly are) the want of which vaine dew
Perchance shall dry your pitties: but I haue
That honorable Griefe lodg'd here, which burnes
Worse then Teares drowne: beseech you all (my Lords)
With thoughts so qualified, as your Charities
Shall best instruct you, measure me; and so
The King will be perform'd.

Leo. Shall I be heard?

Her. Who is't that goes with me? beseech your Highnes
My Women may be with me, for you see
My plight requires it. Doe not weepe (good Fooles)
There is no cause: When you shall know your Mistins
Ha's deseru'd Prison, then abound in Teares,
As I come out; this Adion I now goe on,
Is for my better grace. Adieu (my Lord)
I neuer wish'd to see you sorry, now
I trust I shall: my Women come, you haue leaue.

Leo. Goe, doe our bidding hence.

Lord. Beseech your Highnesse call the Queene againe

Antig. Be certaine what you do (Sir) least your Iustice
Prone violence, in the which three great ones suffer,
Your Selfe, your Queene, your Sonne.

Lord. For her (my Lord)

I dare my life lay downe, and will do't (Sir)
Please you t'accept it, that the Queene is spotlesse
I'th' eyes of Heauen, and to you (I meane
In this, which you accuse her.)

Antig. If it proue

Shee's otherwise, Ile keepe my Stables where
I lodge my Wife, Ile goe in couples with her.
Then when I feele, and see her, no farther trust her.
For euery ynoch of Woman in the World,
I, euery dram of Womans flesh is false,
If she be.

Leo. Hold your peaces.

Lord. Good my Lord,

Antig. It is for you we speake, not for our selues.
You are abus'd, and by some putter on,
That will be damn'd for't: would I knew the Villaine,
I would

I would Land-damme him : be she honor-flaw'd,
I haue three daughters . the eldest is eleuen;
The second, and the third, nine : and some siue :
If this proue true, they'l pay for't. By mine Honor
He gell'd em all . fourteene they shall not see
To bring false generations : they are co-heyres,
And I had rather glib my selfe, then they Should not produce faire issue.

Leo. Cease, no more :

You smell this businesse with a sence as cold
As is a dead-mans nose - but I'do see't, and feel'r,
As you feele doing thus : and see withall
The Instruments that feele.

Antig. If it be so,
We neede no graue to burie honesty,
There's not a graine of it, the face to sweeten
Of the whole dungy-earth.

Leo. What? lacke I credit?

Lord. I had rather you did lacke then I (my Lord)
Vpon this ground - and more it would content me
To haue her Honor true, then your suspicion
Beblam'd for't how you might

Leo. Why what neede we Commune with you of this? but rather follow
Our forcefull instigation? Our prerogative
Cals not your Counsailes, but our naturall goodnesse
Imparts this . which, if you, or stupified,
Or seeming so, in skill, cannot, or will not
Rellish a truth, like vs informe your selues,
We neede no more of your aduice the matter,
The losse, the gaine, the ord'ring on't,
Is all properly ours.

Antig. And I wish (my Liege)
You had onely in your silent iudgement tride it,
Without more ouerture.

Leo. How could that be?
Either thou art most ignorant by age,
Or thou wer't borne a foole - Camillo's flight
Added to their Familiarity
(Which was as grosse, as euer touch'd coniecture,
That lack'd sight onely, nought for approbation
But onely seeing, all other circumstances
Made vp to'th deed) doth push-on this proceeding.
Yet, for a greater confirmation
(For in an Acte of this importance, 'twere
Most pittieous to be wilde) I haue dispatch'd in post,
To sacred Delphos, to Appollo's Temple,
Cleemmes and Dion, whom you know
Of stuf'd-sufficiency : Now, from the Oracle
They will bring all, whose spirituell counsaile had Shall stop, or spurre me. Haue I done well?

Lord. Well done (my Lord.)

Leo. Though I am satisfide, and neede no more
Then what I know, yet shall the Oracle
Giue rest to th'mindes of others; such as he Whose ignorant credulitie, will not Come vp to th'truth So haue we thought it good
From our free person, she should be confinde,
Least that the treachery of the two, fled hence,
Beleft her to performe. Come follow vs,
We are to speake in publike : for this businesse
Will raise vs all.

Antig. To laughter, as I take it,
If the good truth, were knowne.

Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Paulina, a Gentleman, Gaoler, Emilia.

Paul. The Keeper of the prison, call to him -
Let him haue knowledge who I am. Good Lady,
No Court in Europe is too good for thee,
What dost thou then in prison? Now good Sir,
You know me, do you not?

Gao. For a worthy Lady,
And one, who much I honour

Pan. Pray you then,
Conduct me to the Queene.

Gao. I may not (Madam)
To the contrary I haue expresse commandment.

Pan. Here's a-do, to locke vp honesty & honour from Th'accesse of gentle visitors. Is't lawfull pray you
To see her Women? Any of them? Emilia?

Gao. So please you (Madam)
To put a-part these your attendants, I Shall bring Emilia forth.

Pan. I pray now call her -
With-draw your selues.

Gao. And Madam,
I must be present at your Conference.

Pan. Well . be't so : prethee.
Heere's such a-doe, to make no staine, a staine,
As passes colouring. Deare Gentlewoman,
How fares our gracious Lady?

Emil. As well as one so great, and so forlorne
May hold together : On her frights, and greefes
(Which neuer tender Lady hath borne greater)
She is, something before her time, deliuer'd.

Pan. A boy?

Emil. A daughter, and a goodly babe,
Lusty, and like to liue : the Queene receiues
Much comfort in't. Sayes, my poore prisoner,
I am innocent as you,

Pan. I dare be sworne:
These dangerous, vnsafe Lunes i'th'King, befrew them:
He must be told on't, and he shall : the office
Becomes a woman best He take't vpon me,
If I proue hony-mouth'd, let my tongue blister.
And neuer to my red-look'd Anger bee
The Trumpet any more - pray you (Emilia)
Commend my best obedience to the Queene,
If she dares trust me with her little babe,
I'll shew't the King, and vndertake to bee
Her Advocate to th'lowd'st. We do not know
How he may soften at the sight o'th'Childe :
The silence often of pure innocence
Perswades, when speaking failes.

Emil. Most worthy Madam,
your honor, and your goodnesse is so eident,
That your free vndertaking cannot misse
A thrwing yssue : there is no Lady liuing
So meete for this great errand ; please your Ladiship
To visit the next room, He presenrly
Acquaint the Queene of your most noble offer,
Who, but to day hammered of this designe,
But durst not tempt a minister of honour
Least she should be deny'd.

Pan

Paul. Tell her (Emilia)
 He vs that tongue I haue : If wit flow from't
 As boldnesse from my bosome, let not be doubted
 I shall do good.

Emil. Now be you blest for it.
 He to the Queene : please you come something neerer.

Gao. Madam, if't please the Queene to send the babe,
 I know not what I shall incurre, to passe it,
 Having no warrant.

Paul. You neede not feare it (sir)
 This Childe was prisoner to the wombe, and is
 By Law and processe of great Nature, thence Free'd, and enfranchis'd, not a partie to
 The anger of the King, nor guilty of
 (If any be) the trespassse of the Queene.

Gao. I do beleuee it.

Paul. Do not you feare vpon mine honor, I
 Will stand betwixt you, and danger. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Leontes, Seruants, Paulina, Antigonus, and Lords.

Leo. Nor night, nor day, no rest It is but weaknesse
 To beare the matter thus : meere weaknesse, if
 The cause were not in being. part o'th cause,
 She, th'Adulteresse for the harlot-King
 Is quite beyond mine Arme, out of the blanke
 And leuell of my brayne, plot-prooffe. but thee,
 I can haake to me. say that she were gone,
 Giuen to the fire, a moiety of my rest
 Might come to me againe. Whose there?

Ser. My Lord

Leo. How do's the boy?

Ser. He tooke good rest to night : 'tis hop'd
 His sicknesse is discharg'd

Leo. To see his Noblenesse,
 Conceyuing the dishonour of his Mother.
 He straight declin'd, droop'd, tooke it deeply,
 Fasten'd, and fix'd the shame on't in himselfe :
 Threw-off his Spirit, his Appetite, his Sleepe,
 And down-right languish'd. Leau me solely. goe,
 See how he fares. Fie, fie, no thought of him,
 The very thought of my Reuenges that way
 Recoyle vpon me : in himselfe too mightie,
 And in his parties, his Alliance ; Let him be,
 Vntill a time may serue For present vengeance
 Take it on her. Camillo, and Polixenes
 Laugh at me make their pastime at my sorrow
 They should not laugh, if I could reach them, nor Shall she, within my powre

Enter Paulina.

Lord. You must not enter.

Paul. Nay rather (good my Lords) be second to me :
 Feare you his tyrannous passion more (alas)
 Then the Queenes life ? A gracious innocent soule,
 More free, then he is scalous.

Antig. That's enough.

Ser. Madam ; he hath not slept to night, commanded
 None should come at him.

Paul. Not so hot (good Sir)
 I come to bring him sleepe. 'Tis such as you

That creepe like shadowes by him, and do fight
 At each his needlesse heauings. such as you
 Nourish the cause of his awaking. I
 Do come with words, as medicinall, as true ;
 (Honest, as either ; ) to purge him of that humor, }
 That presse him from sleepe.

Leo. Who noyse there, hoe ?

Paul. No noyse (my Lord) but needfull conference,
 About some Gossips for your Highnesse.

Leo. How ?

Away with that audacious Lady. Antigonus,
 I charg'd thee that she should not come about me,
 I knew she would.

Ant. I told her so (my Lord)
 On your displeasures perill, and on mine,
 She should not visit you.

Leo. What? canst not rule her?

Paul. From all dishonestie he can : in this (Vnlesse he take the course that you haue done)
 Commit me, for committing honor, trust it,
 He shall not rule me.

Ant. La-you now, you heare,
 When she will take the raine, I let her run,
 But shee'l not stumble.

Paul. Good my Liege, I come :
 And I beseech you heare me, who professes
 My selfe your loyall Seruant, your Physitian,
 Your most obedient Counsaile. yet that dares
 Lesse appeare so, in comforting your Euilles,
 Then such as most seeme yours. I say, I come
 From your good Queene

Leo. Good Queene ?

Paul. Good Queene (my Lord) good Queens,
 I say good Queene,
 And would by combate, wake her good so, were I
 A man, the worst about y. u.

Leo. Force her hence.

Paul. Let him that makes but trifles of his eyes
 First hand me : on mine owne accord, Ile off,
 But first, Ile do my errand. The good Queene
 (For she is good) hath brought you forth a daughter,
 Heere 'tis Commends it to your blessing.

Leo. Out.

A mankinde Witch ? Hence with her, out o' dore :
 A most intelligencing bawd.

Paul. Not so :

I am as ignorant in that, as you,
 In so enticling me : and no lesse honest
 Then you are mad : which is enough, Ile warrant (As this world goes) to passe for honest :

Leo. Traitors ;

Will you not push her out ? Giue her the Bastard,
 Thou dotard, thou art woman-tyr'd vntroosted
 By thy dame Partler heere. Take vp the Bastard, Take'r vp, I say : giue't to thy Croane

Paul. For euer

Vnvenerable be thy hands, if thou
 Tak'st vp the Princesse, by that forced basenesse
 Which he ha's put vpon't

Leo. He dreads his Wife.

Paul. So I would you did : then 'twere past all doubt You'd call your children, yours.

Leo. A nest of Traitors.

Ant. I am none, by this good light.

Paul. Nor I : nor any

But one that's heere : and that's himselfe : for he,

The

The sacred Honor of himselfe, his Queenes,
His hopefull Sonnes, his Babes, betrayes to Slander,
Whose sting is sharper then the Swords; and will not
(For as the case now stands, it is a Curse
He cannot be compell'd too't) once remoue
The Root of his Opinion, which is rotten,
As euer Oake, or Stone was found

Leo. A Callat
Of boundlesse tongue, who late hath beat her Husband,
And now bayts me: This Brat is none of mine,
It is the Issue of Polixenes.
Hence with it, and together with the Dam,
Commit them to the fire.

Paul. It is yours.
And might we lay th'old Prouerb to your charge,
So like you, 'tis the worse. Behold (my Lords)
Although the Print be little, the whole Matter
And Coppy of the Father (Eye, Nose, Lippe,
The track of's Frowne, his Fore-head, nay, the Valley,
The pretty dimples of his Chin, and Cheeke, his Smiles
The very Mold, and frame of Hand, Nayle, Finger)
And thou good Goddesse Nature, which hast made it
So like to him that got it, if thou hast
The ordering of the Mind too, 'mongst all Colours
No Yellow in't, least she suspect, as he do's,
Her Children, not her Husbands.

Leo. A grosse Hagge:
And Lozell, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her Tongue.

Antig. Hang all the Husbands
That cannot doe that Feat, you'le leaue your selfe
Hardly one Subject

Leo. Once more take her hence.

Paul. A most vnworthy, and vnnaturall Lord
Can doe no more.

Leo. He ha' thee burnt.

Paul. I care not
It is an Heretique that makes the fire,
Not she which burnes in't. Ile not call you Tyrant:
But this most cruell vlage of your Queene
(Not able to produce more accusation
Then your owne weake-hindg'd Fancy) somthing fauors
Of Tyrannie, and will ignoble make you,
Yea, scandalous to the World

Leo. On your Allegiance,
Out of the Chamber with her. Were I a Tyrant,
Where were her life? she durst not call me so,
If she did know me one. Away with her.

Paul. I pray you doe not push me, Ile be gone.
Looke to your Babe (my Lord) 'tis yours. Some send her
A better guiding Spirit. What needs these hands?
You that are thus so tender o're his Follyes,
Will neuer doe him good, not one of you.
So, so - Farewell, we are gone. Exit.

Leo. Thou (Traytor) hast set on thy Wife to this.
My Child? away with't? euen thou, that hast
A heart so tender o're it, take it hence,
And see it instantly consum'd with fire.
Euen thou, and none but thou. Take it vp straighte.
Within this houre bring me word 'tis done,
(And by good testimonie) or Ile seize thy life,
With what thou else call'st thine if thou refuse,
And wilt encounter with my Wrath, say so;
The Bastard-braynes with these my proper hands
Shall I dash out, Goe, take it to the fire,
For thou sett'st on thy Wife.

Antig. I did not, Sir:

These Lords, my Noble Fellowes, if they please,
Can cleare me in't.

Lords. We can my Royall Liege,
He is not guiltie of her comming hither.

Leo. You're lyers all.

Lord. Beseech your Highnesse, giue vs better credit:
We haue alwayes truly seru'd you, and beseech'
So to esteeme of vs: and on our knees we begge,
(As recompence of our deare seruices
Past, and to come) that you doe change this purpose,
Which being so horrible, so bloody, must
Lead on to some foule Issue. We all kneele.

Leo. I am a Feather for each Wind that blows:
Shall I liue on, to see this Bastard kneele,
And call me Father? better burne it now,
Then curse it then. But be it. let it liue.
It shall not neyther. You Sir, come you hither:
You that haue beene so tenderly officious
With Lady Margerie, your Mid-wife there,
To saue this Bastards life, for 'tis a Bastard,
So sure as this Beard's gray. What will you aduenture,
To saue this Brats life?

Antig. Any thing (my Lord)
That my abilitie may vndergoe,
And Noblenesse impose at least thus much;
Ile pawne the little blood which I haue left,
To saue the Innocent any thing possible

Leo. It shall be possible: Swear by this Sword
Thou wilt performe my bidding.

Antig. I will (my Lord)

Leo. Marke, and performe it: seest thou? for the faile
Of any point in't, shall not onely be
Death to thy selfe, but to thy lewd-tongu'd Wife, (Whom for this time we pardon) We enioyne thee,
As thou art Liege-man to vs, that thou carry
This female Bastard hence, and that thou beare it
To some remote and desart place, quite out
Of our Dominions, and that there thou leaue it (Without more mercy) to it owne protection,
And fauour of the Climate: as by strange fortune
It came to vs, I doe in Iustice charge thee,
On thy Soules perill, and thy Bodyes torture,
That thou commend it strangely to some place,
Where Chance may nurse, or end it. take it vp.

Antig. I swear to doe this, though a present death
Had beene more mercifull. Come on (poore Babe)
Some powerfull Spirit instruct the Kytes and Rauens
To be thy Nurses. Wolves and Beares, they say,
(Casting their sauagenesse aside) haue done
Like offices of Pity. Sir, be prosperous
In more then this deed do's require; and Blessing
Against this Crueltie, fight on thy side (Poore Thing, condemn'd to losse.) Exit.

Leo. No. Ile not reare Anothers Issue. Enter a Seruant.

Seru. Please' your Highnesse, Posts
From those you sent to th' Oracle, are come
An houre since Cleommes and Dion,
Being well arriv'd from Delphos, are both landed,
Hasting to th' Court.

Lord. So please you (Sir) their speed
Hath beene beyond accompt.

Leo. Twentie three dayes
They haue beene absent: 'tis good speed: fore-tells
The great Apollo suddenly will haue

The truth of this appeare : Prepare you Lords,
Summon a Session, that we may arraigne
Our most disloyall Lady . for as she hath
Been publikely accus'd, so shall she haue
A iust and open Triall While she liues,
My heart will be a burthen to me, Leau me,
And thinke vpon my bidding. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Cleomines and Dion.

Cleo. The Clymar's delicate, the Ayre most sweet,
Fertile the Isle, the Temple much surpassing
The common prayse it beares.

Dion. I shall report,
For most it caught me, the Celestiall Habits,
(Me thinks I should terme them) and the reuerence
Of the graue Wearers. O, the Sacrifice,
How ceremonious, solemne, and vn-earthly
It was it's Offering?

Cleo. But of all, the burst
And the eare-deaf'ning Voyce o'th'Oracle,
Kin to Ioues Thunder, so surpriz'd my Sence,
That I was nothing.

Dio. If th'euent o'th'Journey
Proue as successfull to the Queene (O be't so)
As it hath beene to vs, rare, pleasant, speedie,
The time is worth the vse on't.

Cleo. Great Apollo
Turne all to th'best. these Proclamations,
So forcing faults vpon Hermione,
I little like.

Dio. The violent carriage of it
Will cleare, or end the Bui nesse, when the Oracle
(Thus by Apollo's great Diuine seal'd vp)
Shall the Contents discover something rare
Euen then will rush to knowledge. Goe. fresh Horses,
And gracious be the issue Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Leontes, Lords, Officers. Hermione (as to her Triall) Ladies. Cleomines, Dion.

Leo. This Sessions (to our great griefe we pronounce) Euen pushès 'gainst our heart. The partie try'd,
The Daughter of a King, our Wife, and one
Of vs too much belou'd Let vs be clear'd
Of being tyrannous, since we so openly
Proceed in Iustice, which shall haue due course,
Euen to the Guilt, or the Purgation.
Produce the Prisoner.

Officer. It is his Highnesse pleasure, that the Queene Appeare in person, here in Court. Silence.

Leo. Reade the Indictment.

Officer. Hermione, Queene to the worthy Leontes, King of Sicilia, thou art here accus'd and arraigned of High Treason, in committing Adultery with Polixenes King of Bohemia, and conspiring with Camillo to take away the Life of our Soveraigne Lord the King, thy Royall Husband: the pretence whereof being by circumstances partly layd open, thou (Hermione) contrary to the Faith and Allegiance of a true Subject, didst consaile and ayde them, for their better safetie, to flye away by Night.

Her. Since what I am to say, must be but that Which contradicts my Accusation, and
The testimonie on my part, no other
But what comes from my selfe, it shall scarce boot me
To say, Not guiltie: mine Integrity
Being counted Falschood, shall (as I expresse it)
Be so receiv'd. But thus, if Powres Diuine
Behold our humane Actions (as they doe)
I doubt not then, but Innocence shall make False Accusation blush, and Tyrannie
Tremble at Patience. You (my Lord) best know (Whom least will seeme to doe so) my past life
Hath beene as continent, as chaste, as true,
As I am now vnhappy; which is more
Then Historie can patterne, though deu's'd,
And play'd, to take Spectators. For behold me,
A Fellow of the Royall Bed, which owe
A Mottie of the Throne: a great Kings Daughter,
The Mother to a hopefull Prince, here standing
To prate and talke for Life, and Honor, fore
Who please to come, and heare. For Life, I prize it
As I weigh Griefe (which I would spare) For Honor,
'Tis a deriuatiue from me to mine,
And onely that I stand for. I appeale
To your owne Conscience (Sir) before Polixenes
Came to your Court, how I was in your grace,
How merited to be so. Since he came,
With what encounter so vncurrent, I
Haue strayn'd t'appeare thus; if one not beyond
The bound of Honor, or in act, or will
That way enclining, hardned be the hearts
Of all that heare me, and my neer'st of Kin
Cry sic vpon my Graue.

Leo. I ne'r heard yet,
That any of these bolder Vices wanted
Lesse Impudence to gaine-say what they did,
Then to performe it first.

Her. That's true enough,
Though 'tis a saying (Sir) not due to me.

Leo. You will not owne it.

Her. More then Mistresse of,
Which comes to me in name of Fault, I must not
At all acknowledge. For Polixenes
(With whom I am accus'd) I doe confesse
I lou'd him, as in Honor he requir'd:
With such a kind of Loue, as might become
A Lady like me; with a Loue, euen such,
So, and no other, as your selfe commanded:
Which, not to haue done, I thinke had been in me
Both Disobedience, and Ingratitude
To you, and toward your Friend, whose Loue had spoke,
Euen since it could speake, from an Infant, freely,
That it was yours. Now for Conspiracie,
I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd
For me to try how: All I know of it,
Is, that Camillo was an honest man;
And why he left your Court, the Gods themselues
(Wotting no more then I) are ignorant.

Leo. You knew of his departure, as you know
What you haue vnder'ta'ne to doe in's absence.

Her. Sir,

Her. Sir,
You speake a Language that I vnderstand not:
My Life stands in the leuell of your Dreames,
Which Ile lay downe.

Leo. Your Actions are my Dreames.
You had a Bastard by Polixenes,
And I but dream'd it. As you were past all shame,
(Those of your Fact are so) so past all truth;
Which to deny, concernes more then auailles for as Thy Brat hath been cast out, like to it selfe,
No Father owning it (which is indeed
More criminall in thee, then it) so thou
Shalt feele our Iustice; in whose easiest passage,
Looke for no lesse then death:

Her. Sir, spare your Threats,
The Bugge which you would fright me with, I seeke
To me can Life be no commoditie,
The crowne and comfort of my Life (your Fauer)
I doe giue lost, for I doe feele it gone,
But know not how it went. My second Joy,
And first Fruits of my body, from his presence
I am bar'd, like one infectious. My third comfort (Star'd most vnluckily) is from my breast
(The innocent milke in it most innocent mouth)
Hal'd out to murder. My selfe on every Post
Proclaym'd a Strumpet. With inmodest hatred
The Child-bed priuiledge deny'd, which longs
To Women of all fashion. Lastly, hurried
Here, to this place, i'th' open ayre, before
I haue got strength of limitt. Now (my Liege)
Tell me what blessings I haue here alieue,
That I should feare to die? Therefore proceed.
But yet heare this mistake me not: no Life,
(I prize it not a straw) but for mine Honor,
Which I would free if I shall be condemn'd
Vpon surmizes (all proofes sleeping else,
But what your Iealousies awake) I tell you
'Tis Rigor, and not Law. Your Honors will,
I doe referre me to the Oracle
Apollo be my Iudge.

Lord. This your request
Is altogether iust therefore bring forth
(And in Apollo's Name) his Oracle.

Her. The Emperor of Russia was my Father.
Oh that he were alieue, and here beholding
His Daughters Tryall: that he did but see
The flatnesse of my miserie; yet with eyes
Of Pity, not Reuenge.

Officer. You here shal sweare vpon this Sword of Iustice,
That you (Cleomines and Dion) haue
Been both at Delphos, and from thence haue brought
This seal'd vp Oracle, by the Hand deliuer'd
Of great Apollo's Priest; and that since then,
You haue not dar'd to breake the holy Seale,
Nor read the Secrets in't.

Cleo Dio. All this we sweare.

Leo. Breake vp the Scales, and read.

Officer. Hermione is chaste, Polixenes blamelesse, Camillo a true Subiect, Leontes a zealous Tyrant, his innocent Babe truly begotten, and the King shall liue without an Heire, if that which is lost be not found.

Lords. Now blessed be the great Apollo.

Her. Praysed.

Leo. Hast thou read truth?

Offic. I (my Lord) euen so as it is here set downe

Leo. There is no truth at all i'th' Oracle.

The Sessions shall proceed. this is meere falsehood.

Ser. My Lord the King: the King?

Leo. What is the businesse?

Ser. O Sir, I shall be hated to report it.

The Prince your Sonne, with meere conceit, and feare
Of the Queenes speed, is gone

Leo. How? gone?

Ser. Is dead.

Leo. Apollo's angry, and the Heauens themselves
Doe strike at my Iniustice. How now there?

Paul. This newes is mortall to the Queene: Look downe
And see what Death is doing.

Leo. Take her hence.

Her heart is but o're-charg'd she will recover.
I haue too much beleue d mine owne suspicion.

'Beseech you tenderly apply to her
Some remedies for life. Apollo pardon
My great prophaneesse 'gainst thine Oracle.

Ile reconcile me to Polixenes,
New woe my Queene, recall the good Camillo
(Whom I proclaime a man of Truth, of Mercy)
For being transported by my Iealousies

To bloody thoughts, and to reuenge, I chose
Camillo for the minister, to poyson
My friend Polixenes which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My swift command though I with Death, and with Reward, did threaten and encourag'd him,
Not doing it, and being done he (most humane,
And fill'd with Honor) to my kingly Guest
Vnclaip'd my practise, quett his fortunes here
(Which you kne w great) and to the hazard
Of all Incertainties, himselfe commended,
No richer then his Honor. How he glisters
Through my Rust? and how his Pietie
Do's my deeds make the blacker?

Paul. Woe the while

O cut my Lace, least my heart (cracking it)
Breake too

Lord. What fit is this? good Lady?

Paul. What studied torment (Tyrant) hast for me?
What Wheelles? Racks? Fires? What slaying? boyling?

In Leads, or Oyles? What old, or newer Torture
Must I receiue? whole euery word deferres
To taste of thy most worst. Thy Tyranny (Together working with thy Iealousies,

Fancies too vcke for Royes, too Greene and idle
For Girles of Nine) O thinke what they haue done,
And then run mad indeed starke-mad for all

Thy by-gone fooleries were but Ipics of it
That thou betrayedst Polixenes, 'twas nothing,

(That did but shew thee, of a Foole, inconstant,
And damnable ingratell) Nor was it much
Thou would'st haue poyson'd good Camillo's Honor,

To haue him kill a King poore Trespasse,

More monstrous standing by whereof I reckon
The casting forth to Crowes, thy Baby-daughter,

To be or none, or little, though a Deuill
Would haue shed water out of fire, ere don't:

Nor is't directly lyd to thee, the death
Of the young Prince, whose honorable thoughts

(Thoughts high for one so tender) cleft the heart
That could conceiue a grosse and foolish Sire

Blemish'd his gracious Dam this is not, no,
Layd to thy answere but the last O Lords,

When I haue said, cry woe: the Queene, the Queene,

The

The sweet'st, deer'st creature's dead. & vengeance for't
Not drop'd downe yet.

Lord. The higher powres forbid.

Pan. I say she's dead Ile swear't. If word, nor oath Preuaile not, go and see if you can bring Tincture, or lustre in her lip, her eye
Heate outwardly, or breath within, Ile serue you
As I would do the Gods. But, O thou Tyrant,
Do not repent these things, for they are heauer
Then all thy woes can stirre. therefore betake thee
To nothing but dispaire. A thousand knees,
Ten thousand yeeres together, naked, fasting,
Vpon a barren Mountaine, and still Winter
In storme perpetuall, could not moue the Gods
To looke that way thou wer't

Leo Go on, go on

Thou canst not speake too much, I haue deseru'd
All tongues to talke then bitterst.

Lord. Say no more;

How ere the businesse goes, you haue made fault
I'th boldnesse of your speech

Pan. I am sorry for't,

All faults I make, when I shall come to know them,
I do repent. Alas, I haue shew'd too much
The rashnesse of a woman. he is toucht
To th' Noble heart. What's gone, and what's past helpe
Should be past greefe: Do not receiue affliction
At my petition; I beseech you, rather
Let me be punish'd, that haue minded you
Of what you should forget. Now (good my Liege)
Sir, Royall Sir, forgue a foolish woman.
The loue I bore your Queene (Lo, foole againe)
Ile speake of her no more, nor of your Children:
Ile not remember you of my owne Lord,
(Who is lost too) take your patience to you,
And Ile say nothing.

Leo Thou didst speake but well,
When most the truth which I receiue much better,
Then to be pittied of thee. Prethee bring me
To the dead bouies of my Queene, and Sonne,
One graue shall be for both: Vpon them shall
The causes of their death appeare (vnto
Our shame perpetuall) once a day, Ile visit
The Chappell where they lye, and teares shed there Shall be my recreation. So long as Nature
Will beare vp with this exercise, so long
I dayly vow to vse it. Come, and leade me
To these sorrowes

Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Antigonus, a Marriner, Babe, Sheepe-heard, and Clowne.

Ant. Thou art perfect then, our ship hath toucht vpon
The Desarts of Bohemia.

Mar. I (my Lord) and feare
We haue Landed in ill time: the skies looke grimly,
And threaten present blusters. In my conscience
The heauens with that we haue in hand, are angry,
And frowne vpon's.

Ant. Their sacred wil's be done: go get a-board,
Looke to thy barke, Ile not be long before

I call vpon thee.

Mar. Make your best haste, and go not Too-farre i'th Land. 'tis like to be lowd weather,
Besides this place is famous for the Creatures
Of prey, that keepe vpon's,

Antig Go thou away,
Ile follow instantly.

Mar. I am glad at heart
To be so ridde o'th businesse.

Exit

Ant. Come, poore babe;
I haue heard (but not beleeu'd) the Spirits o'th' dead
May walke againe. if such thing be, thy Mother
Appear'd to me last night. for ne're was dreame
So like a waking. To me comes a creature,
Sometimes her head on one side, some another,
I neuer saw a vessell of like sorrow
So fill'd, and so becomming: in pure white Robes
Like very sanctity she did approach
My Cabine where I lay: thrice bow'd before me,
And (gasping to begin some speech) her eyes
Became two spouts; the surie spent, anon
Did this breake from her. Good Antigonus,
Since Fate (against thy better disposition)
Hath made thy person for the Tower-out
Of my poore babe, according to thine oath,
Places remote enough are in Bohemia,
There weepe, and leaue it crying: and for the babe
Is counted lost for euer, Perdita
I prethee call't. For this vngentle businesse
Put on thee, by my Lord, thou ne're shalt see
Thy Wife Perdita more. and so, with shriekes
She melted into Ayre. Affrighted thought,
I did in time collect my selfe, and thought
This was so, and no slumber. Dreames, are toys,
Yet for this once, yea superstitiously,
I will be squar'd by this. I do beleuee
Hermione hath suffer'd death, and that
Apollo would (this being indeede the issue
Of King Polydorus) should heere be laide
(Either for life, or death) vpon the earth
Of it's right Father. Blossome, speed thee well,
There lye, and there thy character. there these,
Which may if Fortune please, both breed thee (pretty)
And still rest thine. The storme beginnes, poore wretch,
That for thy mothers fault, art thus expos'd
To losse, and what may follow. Weepe I cannot,
But my heart bleedes. and most accurst am I
To be by oath enioyn'd to this. Farewell,
The day frownes more and more: thou'rt like to haue
A lullaby too rough. I neuer saw
The heauens so dim, by day. A sauage clamor?
Well may I get a-board: This is the Chace,
I am gone for euer. Exit pursued by a Bear.
Shep I would there were no age betweene ten and three and twenty, or that youth would sleep out the rest for there is nothing (in the betweene) but getting wenches with childe, wronging the Auncientry, stealing, fighting, hearke you now: would any but these boyde-braines of nineteene, and two and twenty hunt this weather? They haue scarr'd away two of my best Sheepe, which I feare the Wolfe will sooner finde then the Maister; if any where I haue them, 'tis by the sea-side, brou-zing of luy. Good-lucke (and't be thy will) what haue we heere? Mercy on's, a Barne? A very pretty barne, A boy, or a Childe I wonder? (A pretty one, a verie prettie one) sure some Scape; Though I am not bookish, yet I can

can read Waiting-Gentleman in the scape: this has beene some faire-work, some Trunke-work, some be-hinde-doore worke: they were warmer that got this, then the poore Thing is heere. Ile take it vp for pity, yet Ile carry till my sonne come: he hallow'd but euen now. Whoa-ho-hoa.

Enter Clowne.

Cl. Hillos, los.

Shp. What? art so neere? If thou'lt see a thing to talke on, when thou art dead and rotten, come hither: what say'st thou, man?

Cl. I haue seene two such sights, by Sea & by Land but I am not to say it is a Sea, for it is now the skie, betwixt the Firmament and it, you cannot thrust a bodkins point

Shp. Why boy, how is it?

Cl. I would you did but see how it chafes, how it rages, how it takes vp the shore, but that's not to the point. Oh, the most pitteous cry of the poore soules, sometimes to see 'em, and not to see 'em. Now the Shippe boaring the Moone with her maine Mast, and anon swallowed with yest and froth, as you'd thrust a Corke into a hog's-head. And then for the Land-seruice, to see how the Beare tore out his shoulder-bone, how he cride to mee for helpe, and said his name was Antigonu, a Nobleman. But to make an end of the Ship, to see how the Sea flap-dragon'd it but first, how the poore soules roared, and the sea mock'd them and how the poore Gentleman roared, and the Beare mock'd him, both roaring lowder then the sea, or weather.

Shp. Name of mercy, when was this boy?

Cl. Now, now: I haue not wink'd since I saw these fights: the men are not yet cold vnder water, nor the Beare halfe din'd on the Gentleman: he's at it now.

Shp. Would I had bin by, to haue help'd the olde man

Cl. I would you had beene by the ship side, to haue help'd her; there your charity would haue lack'd footing

Shp. Heavy matters, heavy matters but lookethee heere boy. Now blisse thy selfe thou met'st with things dying, I with things new borne. Here's a fight for thee. Looke thee, a bearing-cloath for a Squires childe: looke thee heere, take vp, take vp (Boy) open't. so, let's see, it was told me I should be rich by the Fairies. This is some Changeling open't: what's within, boy?

Cl. You're a mad olde man: If the finnes of your youth are forgiven you, you're well to liue. Golde, all Gold

Shp. This is Faery Gold boy, and 'twill proue so. vp with it, keepe it close: home, home, the next way. We are luche (boy) and to bee so still requires nothing but secrecie. Let my sheepe go. Come (good boy) the next way home.

Cl. Go you the next way with your Findings, Ile go see if the Beare bee gone from the Gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are neuer curst but when they are hungry: if there be any of him left, Ile bury it

Shp. That's a good deed: if thou mayest discern by that which is left of him, what he is, fetch me to th' sight of him.

Clowne. Marry will I and you shall helpe to put him i'th' ground.

Shp. 'Tis a lucky day, boy; and wee'l do good deeds on't

Exeunt

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Time, the Chorus.

Time. I that please some, try all: both ioy and terror Of good, and bad: that makes, and vnfolde error, Now take vpon me (in the name of Time) To vse my wings: Impute it not a crime To me, or my swift passage, that I slide Ore sixteene yeeres, and leaue the growth vntide Of that wide gap, since it is in my powre To orethrow Law, and in one selfe-borne howre To plant, and ore-whelme Custome. Let me passe The same I am, ere ancient'st Order was, Or what is now receiu'd. I witnesse to The times that brought them in, so shall I do To th' freshest things now reigning, and make stale The glistering of this present, as my Tale Now seemes to it: your patience this allowing, I turne my glasse, and giue my Scene such growing As you had slept betweene. Leantes leauing Th' effects of his fond sealouies, so greening That he shuts vp himselfe. Imagine me (Gentle Spectators) that I now may be In faire Bohemia, and remember well, I mentioned a sonne o'th' Kings, which Florizell I now name to you. and with speed so pace To speake of Perdita, now growne in grace Equall with wond'ring. What of her issues, I list not prophesie: but let Times newes Be knowne when 'tis brought forth. A shepherds daugh- And what to her adheres, wh ch followes after, (ter Is th' argument of Time: of this allow, If euer you haue spent time worfe, ere now: If neuer, yet that Time himselfe doth say, He wishes earnestly, you neuer may.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Polixenes, and Camillo

Pol. I pray thee (good Camillo) be no more importunate. 'tis a sicknesse denying thee any thing. a death to grant this

Cam. It is fiftene yeeres since I saw my Countrey: though I haue (for the most part) bin ayred abroad, I desire to lay my bones there. Besides, the penitent King (my Master) hath sent for me, to whose feeling sorrowes I might be some allay, or I orewent to thinke so) which is another spur to my departure.

Pol. As thou lou'st me (Camillo) wipe not out the rest of thy seruices, by leauing me now: the neede I haue of thee, thine owne goodnesse hath made. better not to haue had thee, then thus to want thee, thou hauing made me Businesse, (which none (without thee) can sufficiently manage) must either stay to execute them thy selfe, or take away with thee the very seruices thou hast done. which if I haue not enough considered (as too much I cannot) to bee more thankfull to thee, shall bee my studie, and my profite therein, the heaping friendshippes. Of that fatall Countrey Sicillia, prethee speake no more, whose very naming, punnishes me with the remembrance of that penitente (as thou callst him) and reconciled King my brother, whose losse of his most precious Queene & Children, are euen now to be a-fresh lamented. Say to me, when saw'st thou the Prince Florizell my son? Kings are no lesse vnhappy, their issue, not being gracious, then they are in loosing them, when they haue approued their Vertues.

Cam. Sir, it is three dayes since I saw the Prince, what his happier affayres may be, are to me vnknowne. but I haue (misingly) noted, he is of late much retyred from Court, and is lesse frequent to his Princely exercises then formerly he hath appeared.

Pol. I haue considered to much (Camillo) and with some care, so farre, that I haue eyes vnder my seruice, which looke vpon his remouedness from whom I haue this Intelligence, that he is seldome from the house of a most homely shepheard a man (they say) that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbors, is growne into an vnspokeable estate.

Cam. I haue heard (sir) of such a man, who hath a daughter of most rare note: the report of her is extended more, then can be thought to begin from such a cottage.

Pol. That's likewise part of my Intelligence: but (I feare) the Angle that pluckes our sonne thither. Thou shalt accompany vs to the place, where we will (not appearing what we are) haue some question with the shepheard, from whose simplicity, I thinke it not vnwise to get the cause of my sonnes resort thither. Prethe be my present partner in this busines, and lay a-side the thoughts of Sicillia.

Cam. I willing'ly obey your command.

Pol. My beil Camillo, we must disguise our selues. Exit

Scena Tertia.

Enter Antolchus singing.

When Daffadils begin to peere,
With heigh the Dove over the dale,
Why then comes in the sweet o'the yeere,
For the red blood raigins in wint'ers pale.

The white steere bleating on the hedge,
With hey the sweet birds, O how they sing;
Doth set my pringling tooth an edge,
For a quart of Ale is a dish for a King.

The Lark, that sitra Lyra chaunts,
With heigh, the Thrush and the Jay:
Are Summer songs for me and my Annts
While we lye tumbling in the hay.

I haue seru'd Prince Florizell, and in my time wore three pile, but now I am out of seruice.

But shall I go mourne for that (my deere) the pale Adone shines by night.
And when I wander here, and there
I then do most go right.
If Tinkers may haue leane to line,
and beare the Sow-sken Bowget,
Then my account I well may giue,
and in the Stockes auouch-it.

My Trafficke is sheetes. when the Kite builds, looke to lesser Linen. My Father nam'd me Antolchus, who being (as I am) lytter'd vnder Mercurie, was likewise a snapper-up of vnconsidered trifles: With Dye and drab, I purchas'd this Capatison, and my Reuennue is the silly Cheate, Gallowes, and Knocke, are too powerfull on the Highway. Beating and hanging are terrors to mee: For the life to come, I sleepe out the thought of it. A prize, a prize

Enter Clowre.

Cl. Let me see, every Leauen-weather toddes, every tod yeeldes pound and odde shilling. fiftene hundred shorne, what comes the wooll too?

Ant. If the springe hold, the Cocke's mine

Cl. I cannot do't without Computers. Let mee see, what am I to buy for our Sheepe-shearing-Feast? Three pound of Sugar, siue pound of Currance, Rice. What will this sister of mine do with Rice? But my father hath made her Mistress of the Feast, and she layes it on. Shee hath made me four and twenty Nose-gayes for the shee-rers (three-man song-men, all, and very good ones) but they are most of them Meanes and Bases; but one Puritan amongst them, and he sings Psalmes to home-pipes. I must haue Saffron to colour the Warden Pies, Mace, Dates, none - that's out of my note. Nutmegges, seuen; a Race or two of Ginger, but that I may begge. Four pound of Prewyns, and as many of Reylions o'th Sun.

Ant. Oh, that euer I was borne.

Cl. I th name of me.

Ant. Oh helpe me, helpe mee: plucke but off these riggeres. and then, death, death.

Cl. Alacke poore soule, thou hast need of more raggs to lay on thee, rather then haue these off

Ant. Oh sir, the loathsome-ness of them offend mee, more then the stripes I haue receiued, which are mightie ones and millions.

Cl. Alas poore man, a million of beating may come to a great matter.

Ant. I am rob'd sir, and beaten: my money, and apparel tane from me and these detestable things put vpon me.

Cl. What, by a horse-man, or a foot-man?

Ant. A footman (sweet sir) a footman

Cl. Indeed, he should be a footman, by the garments he has left with thee. If this bee a horse-mans Coate, it hath seene very hot seruice. Lend me thy hand, Ile helpe thee. Come, lend me thy hand.

Ant. Oh good sir, tenderly, oh.

Cl. Alas poore soule.

Ant. Oh good sir, softly, good sir: I feare (sir) my shoulder-blade is out.

Cl. How now? Canst stand?

Ant. Softly, deere sir: good sir, softly. you ha done me a charitable office

Cl. Doe'st lacke any mony? I haue a little mony for thee.

Ant. No, good sweet sir: no, I beseech you sir I haue a Kinsman not past three quarters of a mile hence, vnto whome I was going. I shall there haue money, or anie thing I want: Offer me no money I pray you, that kills my heart

Clow. What manner of Fellow was hee that robb'd you?

Ant. A fellow (sir) that I haue knowne to goe about with Troll-my-dames. I knew him once a seruant of the Prince: I cannot tell good sir, for which of his Vertues it was, but hee was certainly Whipt out of the Court.

Cl.

Clo His vices you would say : there's no vertue whipt out of the Court: they cherish it to make it stay there; and yet it will no more but abide.

Ant Vices I would say (Sir.) I know this man well, he hath bene since an Ape-bearer, then a Proceffe-seruer (a Bayliffe) then hee compass't a Motion of the Prodigall sonne, and married a Tinkers wife, within a Mile where my Land and Liuing lye.; and (hauing flowne ouer many knauish professions) he settled onely in Rogue: some call him Autolisciu.

Clo Out vpon him · Prig, for my life Prig he haunts Wakes, Faires, and Beare-baitings.

Ant Very true sir : he sit hee that's the Rogue that put me into this apparrell.

Clo Not a more cowardly Rogue in all Bohemia, If you had but look'd bigge, and spit at him, hee'd haue runne.

Ant I must confesse to you (sir) I am no fighter . I am false of heart that way, & that he knew I warrant him.

Clo How do you now ?

Ant Sweet sir, much better then I was : I can stand, and walke: I will euen take my leaue of you, & pace softly towards my Kinsmans.

Clo Shall I bring thee on the way?

Ant No, good fac'd sir, no sweet sir.

Clo Then fartheewell, I must go buy Spices for our sheepe-shearing. Exit.

Ant Prosper you sweet sir. Your purse is not hot enough to purchase your Spice Ile be with you at your sheepe-shearing too If I make not this Cheat bring out another, and the sheeters proue sheepe, let me be vnrold, and my name put in the booke of Vertue

Song. *log-on, log-on, the best path way,
And merrily here the Stile-a
A merry heart goes all the day,
Your sad iyes in a Mile-a.*

Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Florizell, Perdita, Shepherd, Clowne, Polixenes, Camillo, Mopsa, Dorcas, Seruants, Autoliscus.

Flo These your vnusuall weeds, to each part of you Do's giue a life . No Shepherdesse, but Flora Peering in Aprils front : This your sheepe-shearing, Is as a meeting of the petty Gods, And you the Queene on't

Perd Sir . my gracious Lord, To chide at your extreames, it not becomes me : (Oh pardon, that I name them.) your high selfe The graciousmarke o'tn' Land, you haue obscur'd With a Swaines wearing : and me (poore lowly Maide) Most Goddesse-like prank'd vp: But that our Feasts In euery Messe, haue folly, and the Feeders D.geft with a Custome, I should blush To see you so attyr'd . I sworne I thinke, To shew my selfe a glasse.

Flo I blesse the time:

When my good Falcon, made her flight a-crosse Thy Fathers ground

Perd Now Ioue affoord you cause: To me the difference forges dread (your Greatnesse Hath not bene vs'd to feare.) euen now I tremble To thinke your Father, by some accident Should passe this way, as you did . Oh the Fates, How would he looke, to see his worke, so noble, Vildely bound vp ? What would he say ? Or how Should I (in these my borrowed Flaunts) behold The sterneesse of his presence?

Flo Apprehend

Nothing but iollity : the Goddes themselues (Humbling their Deities to loue) haue taken The shapcs of Beasts vpon them . Iupiter, Became a Bull, and bellow'd . the greene Neptune A Ram, and bleated and the Fire-roab'd-God Golden Apollo, a poore humble Swaine, As I seeme now Their transformations, Were neuer for a peece of beauty, rarer, Nor in a way so chaste : since my desires Run not before mine honor . nor my Lüsss Burne hotter then my Faith,

Perd O but Sir,

Your resolution cannot hold, when 'tis Oppos'd (as it must be) byth powre of the King : One of these two must be necessaries, Which then will speake, that you must change this purpose, Or I my life (poie,

Flo Thou deer'st Perdita,

With these forc'd thoughts, I prethee darken not The Mirth o'th' Feast Or Ile be thine (my Faire) Or not my Fathers. For I cannot be Mine owne, nor any thing to any, if I be not thine To this I am most constant, Though destiny say no Be merry (Gentle) Strangle such thoughts as these, with any thing That you behold the while. Your guests are comming Lift vp your countenance, as it were the day Of celebration of that nuptiall, which We two haue sworne shall come.

Perd O Lady Fortune, Stand you auspicious

Flo See, your Guests approach, Adresse your selfe to entertaine them sprightly, And let's be red with mirth

Step Fy (daughter) when my old wife liu'd : vpon This day, she was both Pantler, Butler, Cooke, Both Dame and Seruant · Welcom'd all seru'd all, Would sing her song, and dance her turne : now heere At vpper end o'th Table, now, i'th middle : On his shoulder, and his · her face o'fire With labour, and the thing she tooke to quench it She would to each one sip You are retyr'd, As if you were a feasted one : and not The Hostesse of the meeting Pray you bid These vnknowne friends to's welcome, for it is A way to make vs better Friends, more knowne. Come, quench your blushes, and present your selfe That which you are, Mistis o'th' Feast Come on, And bid vs welcome to your sheepe-shearing, As your good flocke shall prosper.

Perd Sir, welcome:

It is my Fathers will, I should take on mee The Hostesseship o'th day : you're welcome sir. Giue me those Flowres there (Dorcas) Reuerend Sirs, For you, there's Rosemary, and Rue, these keepe Seeming, and fauour all the Winter long : Grace, and Remembrance be to you both, And welcome to our Shearing.

Bb2

Pol.

Pol. Shepherdesse,
(A faire one are you) well you fit our ages
With flowres of Winter.

Perd. Sir, the yeare growing ancient,
Not yet on summers death, nor on the birth
Of trembling winter, the sayrest flowres o'th season
Are our Carnations, and streak'd Gilly-vors,
(Which some call Natures bastards) of that kind
Our rusticke Gardens barren, and I care not
To get slips of them.

Pol. Wherefore (gentle Maiden)
Do you neglect them.

Perd. For I haue heard it said,
There is an Art, which in their pidenesse shares
With great creating-Nature.

Pol. Say there be:
Yet Nature is made better by no meane,
But Nature makes that Meane, so ouer that Art,
(Which you say addes to Nature) is an Art
That Nature makes: you see (sweet Maid) we marry
A gentler Sien, to the wildest Stocke,
And make conceyue a barke of baser kinde
By bud of Nobler race. This is an Art
Which do's mend Nature: change it rather, but
The Art it selfe, is Nature.

Perd. So it is.

Pol. Then make you Garden rich in Gilly-vors,
And do not call them bastards.

Perd. Ile not put

The Dible in earth, to set one slip of them:
No more then were I painted, I would wish
This youth should say 'twere well: and onely therefore Desire to breed by me. Here's flowres for you.
Hot Lauender, Mints, Sauory, Mariorum,
The Mary-gold, that goes to bed with Sun,
And with him rises, weeping. These are flowres
Of middle summer, and I thinke they are giuen
To men of middle age. Y'are very welcome.

Cam. I should leaue grasing, were I of your stocke,
And onely lue by gazing

Perd. Our alas.

You'd be so leane, that blasts of Inuany (Friend,
Would blow you through and through. Now (my fault
I would I had some Flowres o'th Spring, that might Become your time of day: and yours, and yours,
That weare vpon your Virgin-branches yet
Your Maiden-heads growing: O Proserpina,
For the Flowres now, that (frighted) thou let'st fall
From Dyffes Waggon Daffadils,
That come before the Swallow dares, and take
The windes of March with beaury: Violets (dim,
But sweeter then the lids of Imo's eyes,
Or Cytherea's breath) pale Prime-roses,
That dye vnmarried, ere they can behold
Bright Phœbus in his strength (a Maladie Most incident to Maids) bold Oxlips, and
The Crowne Imperiall Lillies of all kinds,
(The Flowre-de-Luce being one.) O, these I lacke,
To make you Garlands of) and my sweet friend,
To strew him o're, and ore

Flo. What? like a Coarse?

Perd. No, like a banke, for Loue to lye, and play on:
Nor like a Coarse: or if: not to be buried,
But quicke, and in mine armes. Come, take your flours,
Me thinks I play as I haue seene them do
In Whitson-Pastorals. Sure this Robe of mine

Do's change my disposition:

Flo. What you do,

Still betters what is done. When you speake (Sweet)
I'd haue you do it euer: When you sing,
I'd haue you buy, and sell so: so giue Almcs,
Pray so: and for the ord'ring your Affayres,
To sing them too. When you do dance, I wish you
A waue o'th Sea, that you might surer do
Nothing but that: moue still, still so:
And owne no other Function. Each your doing,
(So singular, in each particular)
Crownes what you are doing, in the present deeds,
That all your Actes, are Queenes.

Perd. O Doricles,

Your praises are too large. but that your youth
And the true blood which peepes fairely through't,
Do plainly giue you out an vnstain'd Sphepherd
With wisdom, I might feare (my Doricles)
You wou'd me the false way.

Flo. I thinke you haue

As little skill to feare, as I haue purpose
To put you co't. But come, our dance I pray,
Your hand (my Perdita) so Turtles paire
That neuer meane to part.

Ferd. Ile sweare for 'em.

Pol. This is the prettiest Low borne Lasse, that euer
Ran on the greene-sord: Nothing she do's, or seemes
But smakes of something greater then her selfe,
Too Noble for this place.

Cam. He tels her something
That makes her blood looke on't: Good sooth she is
The Queene of Cards and Creame

Clo. Come on strike vp.

Dorcas. Mepsa must be your Mistis: marry Garlick to mend her kissing with.

Mep. Now in good time

Clo. Not a word, a word, we stand vpon our manners,
Come, strike vp

Here a Dancke of Shepheards and Shepheardesses.

Pol. Pray good Shepheard, what faire Swaine is this,
Which dances with your daughter?

Shep. They call him Doricles, and boasts himselfe
To haue a worthy Feeding, but I haue it
Vpon his owne report, and I beleue it:
He lookes like sooth: he sayes he loues my daughter,
I thinke so too; for neuer gaz'd the Moone
Vpon the water, as hee'l stand and reade
As 'twere my daughters eyes: and to be plaine,
I thinke there is not halfe a kisse to choose
Who loues another best

Pol. She dances featly.

Shep. So she do's any thing, though I report it
That should be silent: If yong Doricles
Do light vpon her, she shall bring him that
Which he not dreames of.

Enter Servants

Ser. O Master: if you did but heare the Pedler at the doore, you would neuer dance againe after a Tabor and Pipe. no, the Bag-pipe could not moue you: hee sings seuerall Tunes, faster then you'll tell money: hee vites them as he had eaten ballads, and all mens eares grew to his Tunes.

Clo. He could neuer come better: hee shall come in
I loue a ballad but euen too well, if it be dolefull matter merrily set downe: or a very pleasant thing indeede, and sung lamentably.

Ser.

Ser. He hath songs for man, or woman, of all sizes: No Milliner can so fit his customers with Gloues he has the prettiest Loue-songs for Maids, so without bawdrie (which is strange,) with such delicate burthens of Dildo's and Fadings Tump-her, and thump-her, and where some stretch-mouth'd Rascall, would (as it were) meane mischeefe, and breake a fowle gap into the Matter, hee makes the maid to answere, Whoop, doe me no harme good man put's him off, flights him, with Whoop, doe mee no harme good man

Pol. This is a braue fellow.

Clo. Beleece mee, thou talkest of an admirable conceited fellow, has he any vnbraided Wares?

Ser. Hee hath Ribbons of all the colours i'th Raine-bow; Points, more then all the Lawyers in Bohemia, can learredly handle, though they come to him by th'grosse: Inckles, Caddysies, Cambricks, Lawnes why he sings em ouer, as they were Gods, or Goddesses: you would thinke a Smocke were a shee-Angell, he so chauntes to the steeue-hand, and the worke about the square on't

Clo. Pre'thee bri'g him in, and let him approach singing.

Perd. Forewarne him, that he vse no scurrilous words in's tunes

Clo. You haue of these Pedlers, that haue more in them, then you'd thinke (Sister)

Perd. I, good brother, or go about to thinke.

Enter Autolhem singing.

*Lawne as white as drinen Snow,
Cypresse blacke as ere was Crow,
Gloues as sweete as Damaske Roses,
Maskes for faces, and for noses
Buble-bracelet, Necke lace Amber,
Perfume for a Ladies Chamber.
Golden Quosies, and Stomachers
For my Lads, to giue their deers
Pins, and peaking-sticks of Steele.
What Maids lacke from head to heele.*

*Come buy of me, come come buy, come buy,
By Lads, or else your Lasses cry Come buy*

Clo. If I were not in loue with Mopsa, thou shouldst take no money of me, but being entrali'd as I am, it will also be the bondage of certaine Ribbons and Gloues.

Mop. I was promis'd them against the Feast, but they come not too late now.

Dor. He hath promis'd you more then that, or there be lyars.

Mop. He hath paid you all he promis'd you. 'May be he has paid you more, which will shame you to giue him againe.

Clo. Is there no manners left among maids? Will they weare their plackets, where they should bear their faces? Is there not milking-time? When you are going to bed? Or kill-hole? To whistle of these secrets, but you must be tittle-tatling before all our guests? 'Tis well they are whispering clamor your tongues, and not a word more.

Mop. I haue done; Come you promis'd me a tawdry-lace, and a paire of sweet Gloues.

Clo. Haue I not told thee how I was cozen'd by the way, and lost all my money.

Aut. And indeed Sir, there are Cozeners abroad, therefore it behooues men to be wary.

Clo. Feare not thou man, thou shalt lose nothing here
Aut. I hope so sir, for I haue about me many parcels of charge.

Clo. What hast heere? Ballads?

Mop. Pray now buy some: I loue a ballet in print, a life, for then we are sure they are true

Aut. Here's one, to a very dolefull tune, how a Vsurers wife was brought to bed of twenty money baggs at a burthen, and how she long'd to eate Adders heads, and Toads carbonado'd.

Mop. Is it true, thinke you?

Aut. Very true, and but a moneth old,

Dor. Blessie me from marrying a Vsurer.

Aut. Here's the Midwivres name to't: one Mist. Tale-Porter, and five or six honest Wiues, that were present Why should I carry lyes abroad?

Mop. 'Pray you now buy it.

Clo. Come-on, lay it by and let's first see moe Ballads Wee'll buy the other rhings anon.

Aut. Here's another ballad of a Fish, that appeared vpon the coast, on wensday the fourescore of April, fortie thousand fadom aboue water, & sung this ballad against the hard hear.s of maids it was thought she was a Woman, and was turn'd into a cold fish, for she wold not exchange flesh with one that lou'd her. The Ballad is very pittifull, and as true.

Dor. Is it true too, thinke you.

Autol. Five Iustices hands at it, and witnesses more then my packe will hold.

Clo. Lay it by too; another

As. This is a merry ballad, but a very pretty one

Mop. Let's haue some merry ones

Aut. Why this is a passing merry one, and goes to the tune of two maids wooing a man there's scarce a Maide westward but she sings it 'tis in request, I can tell you.

Mop. We can both sing it: if thou'lt beare a part, thou shalt heare, 'tis in thice parts.

Dor. We had the tune on't, a month agoe.

Aut. I can beare my part, you must know 'tis my occupation - Haue at it with you.

Song. Get you hence for I must goe

Aut. Where it fits not you to know.

Dor. Whether?

Mop. O whether?

Dor. Whether?

Mop. It becom's thy oath full well,

Thou to me thy secrets tell

Dor. Me too. Let me go whether:

Mop. Or thou goest to th' Grange, or Mill,

Dor. If to either thou dost ill,

Aut. Neither.

Dor. What neither?

Aut. Neither:

Dor. Thou hast sworne my Love to be,

Mop. Thou hast sworne it more to mee

Then whether goest? Say whether?

Clo. Wee'll haue this song out anon by our selues: My Father, and the Gent are in sad talke, & wee'll not trouble them: Come bring away thy pack after me, Wenches Ile buy for you both Pedler let's haue the first choice, solow me girls

Aut. And you shall pay well for 'em,

Song. Will you buy any Tape, or Lace for your Crpe?

My dainty Ducke, my deere a?

Any Silke, any Thred, any Toyer for your head

Of the new's, and fin's, fin's weare-a.

Come to the Pedler, Money's a medler,

That doth utter all mens ware-a.

Exe.
Seruant. Mayster, there is three Carters, three Shep-herds, three Near-herds, three Swine-herds y haue made themselves all men of haire, they call themselves Saltiers, and they haue a Dance, which the Wenches say is a galley-maufreys of Gambols, because they are not in't : but they themselves are o'th' minde (if it bee not too rough for some, that know little but bowling) it will please plentifully.

Shep. Away : Wee'll none on't ; heere has beene too much homely foelery already I know (Sir) wee wearie you.

Pol. You wearie those that refresh vs . pray let's see these foure-threes of Heardsmen.

Ser. One three of them, by their owne report (Sir,) hath danc'd before the King and not the worst of the three, but iumpes twelue foote and a halfe by th'squire.

Shep. Leauē your prating, since these good men are pleas'd, let them come in but quickly now.

Ser. Why, they stay at doore Sir.

Heere a Dance of twelue Satyres.

Pol. O Father, you'll know more of that heereafter : Is it not too farre gone ? 'Tis time to part them, He's simple, and tels much. How now (faire sheheard) Your heart is full of something, that do's take Your minde from feasting Sooth, when I was yong, And handed loue, as you do ; I was wont To load my Shee with knackes . I would haue ranfackt The Pedlers silken Treasury, and haue pow'r'd it To her acceptance you haue let him go, And nothing marted with him. If your Lasse Interpretation should abuse, and call this Your lacke of loue, or bounty, you were straited For a reply at least, if you make a care Of happie holding her.

Flo. Old Sir, I know She prizes not such trifles as these are . The gifts she lookes from me, are packt and lockt Vp in my heart, which I haue giuen already, But not deliuer'd. O heare me breath my life Before this ancient Sir, whom (it should seeme) Hath sometime lou'd I take thy hand, this hand, As soft as Doves downe, and is white as it, Or Ethiopians tooth, or the fan'd snow, that's bolted By th' Northene blasts, twice ore.

Pol. What follows this ? How prettily th'yong Swaine seemes to wash The hand, was faire before ? I haue put you out, But to your protestation : Let me heare What you professe.

Flo. Do, and be witnesse too't.

Pol. And this my neighbour too ?

Flo. And he, and more

Then he, and nien the earth, the heauens, and all ; That were I crown'd the most Imperiall Monarch Thereof most worthy were I the fayrest youth That euer made eye swerue, had force and knowledge More then was euer mans, I would not prize them Withour her Loue ; for her, employ them all, Commend them, and condemne them to her seruice, Or to their owne perdition.

Pol. Fairely offer'd.

Cam. This shewes a sound affection

Shep. But my daughter, Say you the like to him.

Per. I cannot speake So well, (nothing so well) no, nor meane better By th'patterne of mine owne thoughts, I cut out The pursue of his.

Shep. Take hands, a bargaine ; And friends vnkowne, you shall beare witnesse to't ; I giue my daughter to him, and will make Her Portion, equall his.

Flo. O, that must bee I'th Vertue of your daughter : One being dead, I shall haue more then you can dreame of yet, Enough then for your wonder : but come-on, Contract vs fore these Witnesses.

Shep. Come, your hand : And daughter, yours.

Pol. Soft Swaine a-while, beseech you, Haue you a Father ?

Flo. I haue : but what of him ?

Pol. Knowes he of this ?

Flo. He neither do's, nor shall.

Pol. Me-thinks a Father, Is at the Nuptiall of his soone, a guest That best becomes the Table : Pray you once more Is not your Father growne incapeable Of reasonable affayres ? Is he not stupid With Age, and altring Rheumes ? Can he speake ? heare ? Know man, from man ? Dispute his owne estate ? Lies he nor bed-rid ? And againe, do's nothing But what he did, being childish ?

Flo. No good Sir : He has his health, and ampler strength indeede Then most haue of his age.

Pol. By my white beard, You offer him (if this be so) a wrong Something vnfillall Reason my sonne Should choose himselfe a wife, but as good reason The Father (all whose ioy is nothing else But faire posterity) should hold some counsaile In such a businesse

Flo. I yeeld all th's ; But for some other reasons (my graue Sir) Which 'tis not fit you know, I not acquaint My Father of this businesse.

Pol. Let him know't.

Flo. He shall nor.

Pol. Prethee let him.

Flo. No, he must nor

Shep. Let him (my sonne) he shall not need to greeue At knowing of thy choice.

Flo. Come, come, he must not : Marke our Contract

Pol. Marke your diuorce (yong sir) Whom sonne I dare not call Thou art too base To be acknowledge Thou a Scepters heire, That thus affects a sheepe-hooke ? Thou, old Traitor, I am sorry, that by hanging thee, I can but shorten thy life one weeke. And thou, fresh peece Of excellent Witchcraft, whom of force must know The royall Foole thou coap't with.

Shep. Oh my heart.

Pol. He haue thy beauty scratcht with briens & made More homely then thy state For thee (fond boy) If I may euer know thou dost but sigh, That thou no more shalt neuer see this knacke (as neuer I meane thou shalt) wee'll barre thee from succession, Not hold thee of our blood, no not our Kin, Farre then Democritus off : (marke thou my words) Follow vs to the Court. Thou Churle, for this time (Though full of our displeasure) yet we free thee From the dead blow of it. And you Enchantment,

Wor-

Worthy enough a Heardsman: yea him too,
That makes himselfe (but for our Honor therein)
Vnworthy thee. If euer henceforth, thou
These rurall Latches, to his entrance open,
Or hope his body more, with thy embraces,
I will deuise a death, as cruell for thee
As thou art tender to't.

Exit.

Perd. Euen heere vndone:
I was not much a-fear'd: for once, or twice
I was about to speake, and tell him plainly,
The selfe same Sun, that shines vpon his Court,
Hides not his visage from our Cottage, but Lookes on alike. Wilt please you (Sir) be gone?
I told you what would come of this. Beseech you
Of your owne state take care This dreame of mine
Being now awake, Ile Queene it no inch farther,
But milke my Ewes, and weepe.

Cam. Why how now Father,
Speake ere thou dyest.

Sbrp. I cannot speake, nor thinke,
Nor dare to know, that which I know - O Sir,
You haue vndone a man of fourescore three,
That thought to fill his graue in quiet. yea,
To dye vpon the bed my father dy'de,
To lye close by his honest bones; but now
Some Hangman must put on my shrowd, and lay me
Where no Priest shouels in dust. Oh cursed wretch,
That knew't thus was the Prince, and would it aduenture
To mingle faith with him. Vndone, vndone -
If I might dye within this houre, I haue liu'd
To die when I desire.

Exit.

Flo. Why looke you so vpon me?
I am but sorry, not afeard: delayd,
But nothing alrred What I was, I am:
More straining on, for plucking backe, not following
My leaue vnwillingly

Cam. Gracious my Lord,
You know my Fathers temper: at this time
He will allow no speech - (which I do ghesse
You do not purpose to him) and as hardly
Will he endure your sight, as yet I feare;
Then till the fury of his Highnesse settle
Come not before him.

Flo. I not purpose it:
I thinke Camille

Cam. Euen he, my Lord.

Perd. How often haue I told you 'twould be thus?
How often said my dignity would last
But till 'twere knowne?

Flo. It cannot faile, but by
The violation of my faith, and then
Let Nature crush the sides o' the earth together,
And marre the seeds within. Lift vp thy lookes:
From my succession wipe me (Father) I Am heere to my affection.

Cam. Be adu'd.

Flo. I am - and by my fancie, if my Reason
Will thereto be obedient. I haue reason.
If not, my senses better pleas'd with madnesse,
Do bid it welcome.

Cam. This is desperate (sir.)

Flo. So call it but it do's fulfill my vow
I needs must thinke it honestly. Camille,
Not for Bohemia, nor the pompe that may
Be therat gleaned: for all the Sun sees, or
The close earth wombes, or the profound seas, hides

In vnknowne sadomes, will I breake my oath
To this my faire below'd: Therefore, I pray you,
As you haue euer bin my Fathers honour'd friend,
When he shall misse me, as (in faith I meane not
To see him any more) cast your good counsailes
Vpon his passion. Let my selfe, and Fortune
Tug for the time to come This you may know,
And so deliuer, I am put to Sea
With her, who heere I cannot hold on shore
And most opportune to her neede, I haue
A Vessell rides fast by, but not prepar'd
For this designe What course I meane to hold Shall nothing benefit your knowledge, nor Concerne me the reporting.

Cam. O my Lord,
I would your spirit were easier for aduice,
Or stronger for your neede.

Flo. Heare Perdita,
Ile heare you by and by.

Cam. Hee's irremouable, Resolu'd for flight Now were I happy if
His going, I could frame to serue my turne,
Sae him from danger, do him loue and honor,
Purchase the sight againe of deere Sicillia,
And that vnhappy King, my Master, whom
I so much thirst to see

Flo. Now good Camille,
I am so fraught with curious businesse, that
I leaue out ceremony.

Cam. Sir, I thinke
You haue heard of my poore seruices, 't'houe
That I haue borne your Father?

Flo. Very nobly
Haue you deseru'd It is my Fathers Musicke
To speake your deeds not little of his care
To haue them recompenc'd, as thought on.

Cam. Well (my Lord)
If you may please to thinke I loue the King,
And through him, what's neere to him, which is
Your gracious selfe, embrace but my direction,
If your more ponderous and settled protect
May suffer alteration. On mine honor,
Ile point you where you shall haue such receiuing
As shall become your Highnesse, where you may Enioy your Mistis; from the whom, I see
There's no disunction to be made, but by
(As heauens forefend) your ruine Marry her,
And with my best endeouours, in your absence,
Your discontenting Father, strue to qualifie
And bring him vp to liking.

Flo. How Camille

May this (almost a miracle) be done?
That I may call thee something more then man,
And after that trust to thee.

Cam. Haue you thought on
A place whereto you I go?

Flo. Not any yet.

But as th'vnthought-on accident is guiltie
To what we wildly do, so we professe
Our selues to be the slaues of chance, and flies
Of euery winde that blowes.

Cam. Then list to me:

This follower, if you will not change your purpose
But vndergo this flight; make for Sicillia,
And there present your selfe, and your faire Princessse,
(For so I see she must be) fore Leontes;

Sherr

She shall be habited, as it becomes
The partner of your Bed. Me thinks I see
Leontes opening his free Armes, and weeping
His Welcomes forth: asks thee there Sonne forgiuenesse,
As 'twere 't' th' Fathers person: kisses the hands
Of your fresh Princeesse, ore and ore diuides him,
'T'wixt his vnkindnesse, and his Kindnesse th' one
He chides to Hell, and bids the other grow
Faster then Thought, or Time.

Flo. Worthy Camillo,
What colour for my Visitation, shall I
Hold vp before him?

Cam. Sent by the King your Father
To greet him, and to giue him comforts. Sir,
The manner of your bearing towards him, with
What you (as from your Father) shall deliuer,
Things knowne betwixt vs three, Ile write you downe,
The which shall point you forth at euery sitting
What you must say that he shall not perceiue,
But that you haue your Fathers Bosome there,
And speake his very Heart.

Flo. I am bound to you.
There is some sappe in this.

Cam. A Course more promising,
Then a wild dedication of your selues
To vupath'd Waters, vndream'd Shores; most certaine,
To Miseries enough no hope to helpe you,
But as you shake off one, to take another.
Nothing so certaine, as your Anchors, who
Doe their best office, if they can but stay you,
Where you'll be loth to be besides you know,
Prosperitie's the very bond of Loue,
Whose fresh complexion, and whose heart together,
Affliction alters,

Perd. One of these is true:
I thinke Affliction may subdue the Cheeke,
But not take-in the Mind.

Cam. Yea? say you so?
There shall not, at your Fathers House, these seuen yeeres
Be borne another such.

Flo. My good Camillo,
She's as forward, of her Breeding, as
She is 't' th' reare 'our Birth.

Cam. I cannot say, 'tis pittie
She lacks Instructions, for she seemes a Mistresse
To most that teach

Perd. Your pardon Sir, for this,
Ile blush you Thanks.

Flo. My prettiest Perdita,
But O, the Thornes we stand vpon (Camillo)
Preseruer of my Father, now of me,
The Medicine of our House. how shall we doe?
We are not furnish'd like Bohemia's Sonne,
Nor shall appeare in Sicilia.

Cam. My Lord,
Feare none of this. I thinke you know my fortunes
Doe all lye there: it shall be so my care,
To haue you royally appointed, as if
The Scene you play, were mine. For instance Sir,
That you may know you shall not want one word.

Enter Autolycus

Aut. Ha, ha, what a Foole Honestie is? and Trust (his sworne brother) a very simple Gentleman. I haue sold all my Tromperie not a counterfeit Stone, not a Ribbon, Glasse, Pomander, Browch, Table-booke, Ballad, Knife,
Tape, Gloue, Shooe-tye, Bracelet, Horne-Ring, to keepe

my Pack from fasting: they throng who should buy first, as if my Trinkets had beene hallowed, and brought a benediction to the buyer: by which meanes, I saw whose Purse was best in Picture; and what I saw, to my good vse, I remembred. My Clowne (who wants but something to be a reasonable man) grew so in loue with the Wench's Song, that hee would not stirre his Petty-toes, till he had both Tune and Words, which so drew the rest of the Heard to me, that all their other Sences sticke in Eares: you might haue pinch'd a Placket, it was senselesse; 'twas nothing to guild a Cod-peece of a Purse. I would haue fill'd Keyes of that hung in Chaynes: no hearing, no feeling, but my Sirs Song, and admiring the Nothing of it. So that in this time of Lethargie, I pick'd and cut most of their Fesliuall Purse: And had not the old-man come in with a Whoo-bub against his Daughter, and the Kings Sonne, and scar'd my Chowghes from the Chaffe, I had not left a Purse aloue in the whole Army.

Cam. Nay, but my Letters by this meanes being there
So soone as you arriue, shall cleare that doubt.

Flo. And those that you'll procure from King Leontes?

Cam. Shall satisfie your Father.

Perd. Happy be you:

All that you speake, shewes faire

Cam. Who haue we here?

Wee'll make an Instrument of this. omit
Nothing may giue vs aide,

Aut. If they haue ouer-heard me now why hanging,

Cam. How now (good Fellow)
Why shak'st thou so? Feare not (man)
Here's no harme intended to thee.

Aut. I am a poore Fellow, Sir.

Cam. Why, be so still. here's no body will steale that from thee: yet for the out-side of thy pouertie, we must make an exchange, therefore dis-case thee instantly (thou must thinke there's a necessitie in't) and change Gannets with this Gentleman. Though the penny-worth (on his side) be the worst, yet hold thee, there's some boot

Aut. I am a poore Fellow, Sir (I know ye well enough)

Cam. Nay prethee dispatch. the Gentleman is halfe
sted already.

Aut. Are you in earnest, Sir? (I sinell the trick on't)

Flo. Dispatch, I prethee.

Aut. Indeed I haue had Earnest, but I cannot with conscience take it.

Cam. Vnbuckle, vn buckle.

Fortunate M'stresse (let my prophetic
Come home to ye) you must retire your selfe
Into some Couert; take your sweet-hearts Hat
And pluck it ore your Browes, muffle your face,
Dis-mantle you, and (as you can) disliken
The truth of your owne seeming, that you may
(For I doe feare eyes ouer) to Ship-boord
Get vndescry'd.

Perd. I see the Play so lyes,
That I must beare a part.

Cam. No remedie:
Haue you done there?

Flo. Should I now meet my Father,
He would not call me Sonne.

Cam. Nay, you shall haue no Hat:
Come Lady, come. Farewell (my friend.)

Aut. Adieu, Sir.

Flo. O Perdita what haue we twaine forgot?

'Pray

Pray you a word.

Cam What I doe next, shall be to tell the King
Of this escape, and whither they are bound;
Wherein, my hope is, I shall so preuaile,
To force him after. in whose company
I shall re-view Sicilia; for whose sight,
I haue a Womans Longing

Flo Fortune speed vs.

Thus we set on (Camillo) to th' Sea-side.

Cam The swifter speed, the better. Exit

Ant. I vnderstand the businesse, I heare it: to haue an open eare, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a Cut-purse; a good Nose is requisite also, to smell out worke for th' other Sences. I see this is the time that the vniust man doth thrise. What an exchange had this been, without boot? What a boot is here, with this exchange?
Sure the Gods doe this yeere conuie at vs, and we may doe any thing extempore. The Prince himselfe is about a peece of Iniquitie (stealing away from his Father, with his Clog at his heeles) if I thought it were a peece of honestie to acquaint the King withall, I would not do it. I hold it the more knauierie to conceale it; and therein am
I constant to my Profession.

Enter Clowne and Shepheard

Aside, aside, here is more matter for a hot braine. Every Lanes end, every Shop, Church, Session, Hanging, yeelds
a carefull man worke.

Clowne. See, see what a man you are now? there is no other way, but to tell the King she's a Changeling, and none of your flesh and blood.

Shep. Nay, but heare me.

Clow. Nay; but heare me.

Shep. Goe too then.

Clow. She being none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood has not offended the King, and so your flesh and blood is not to be punish'd by him. Shew those things you found about her (those secret things, all but what she ha's with her) This being done, let the Law goe whistle: I warrant you.

Shep. I will tell the King all, euery word, yea, and his Sonnes pranks too, who, I may say, is no honest man, neither to his Father, nor to me, to goe about to make me
the Kings Brother in Law.

Clow. Indeed Brother in Law was the farthest off you could haue beene to him, and then your Blood had beene
the dearer, by I know how much an ounce

Ant. Very wisely (Puppies.)

Shep. Well. let vs to the King: there is that in this Farthell, will make him scratch his Beard.

Ant. I know not what impediment this Complaint may be to the sight of my Master.

Clow. Pray heartily he be at 'Pallace.

Ant. Though I am not naturally honest, I am so sometimes by chance: Let me pocket vp my Pedlers excrement. How now (Rustiques) whither are you bound?

Shep. To th' Pallace (and it like your Worship)

Ant. Your Affaires there? what? with whom? the Condition of that Farthell? the place of your dwelling?
your names? your ages? of what hauing? breeding, and any thing that is fitting to be knowne, discouer?

Clow. We are but plaine fellows, Sir.

Ant. A Lye; you are rough, and hayrie: Let me haue no lying; it becomes none but Tradef-men, and they often giue vs (Souldiers) the Lye, but wee pay them for it with stamped Coyne, not stabbing Steele, therefore they doe not giue vs the Lye.

Clow. Your Worship had like to haue giuen vs one, if you had not taken your selfe with the manner.

Shep. Are you a Courtier, and't like you Sir?

Ant. Whether it like me, or no, I am a Courtier. Seest thou not the ayre of the Court, in these enfoldings? Hath not my gate in it, the measure of the Court? Receiues not thy Nose Court-Odour from me? Reflect I not on thy Basenesse, Court-Contempt? Think'st thou, for that I insinuate, at toaze from thee thy Businesse, I am therefore no Courtier? I am Courtier Cap-a-pe; and one that will cyther push-on, or pluck-back, thy Businesse there:
whereupon I command thee to open thy Affaire.

Shep. My Businesse, Sir, is to the King

Ant. What Aduocate ha'st thou to him?

Shep. I know not (and't like you.)

Clow. Aduocate's the Court-word for a Pheazant: say you haue none

Shep. None, Sir: I haue no Pheazant Cock; nor Hen.

Ant. How blessed are we, that are not simple men?
Yet Nature might haue made me as these are,
Therefore I will not disdaine

Clow. This cannot be but a great Courtier.

Shep. His Garments are rich, but he weares them not handsomely.

Clow. He seemes to be the more Noble, in being fanta-sticall: A great man, Ile warrant; I know by the picking on's Teeth.

Ant. The Farthell there & What's 't' th' Farthell?
Wherefore that Box?

Shep. Sir, there lyes such Secrets in this Farthell and Box, which none must know but the King, and which hee shall know within this houre, if I may come to th' speech
of him.

Ant. Age, thou hast lost thy labour.

Shep. Why Sir?

Ant. The King is not at the Pallace, he is gone aboard a new Ship, to purge Melancholy, and ayre himselfe: for if thou bee'st capable of things serious, thou must know
the King is full of griefe

Shep. So 'tis said (Sir) about his Sonne, that should haue married a Shepheard's Daughter.

Ant. If that Shepheard be not in hand-fast, let him
flye; the Curses he shall haue, the Tortures he shall feele, will breake the back of Man, the heart of Monster.

Clow. Think you so, Sir?

Ant. Not hee alone shall suffer what Wit can make heame, and Vengeance butters; but those that are Iermaine to him (though remou'd fiftie times) shall all come vnder the Hang-nan which, though it be great pity, yet it is necessarie. An old Sheepe-whistling Rogue, a Ram-tender, to offer to haue his Daughter come into grace? Some say hee shall be ston'd: but that death is too soft for him (say I) Draw our Throne into a Sheep-Coat? all deaths are too few, the sharpest too easie.

Clow. Ha's the old-man ere a Sonne Sir (doe you heare) and't like you, Sir?

Ant. Hee ha's a Sonne. who shall be flayd aliuie, then
'noynted ouer with Honey, set on the head of a Waspes
Nest, then stand till he be three quarters and a dram dead;
then recover'd againe with Aquavite, or some other hot Infusion then, raw as he is (and in the hottest day Prognostication proclaymes) shall he be set against a Brick-wall, (the Sunne looking with a South-ward eye vpon him;
where hee is to behold him; with Flies blown to death)
But what talke we of these Traitorly Rascals, whose mi-series are to be smil'd at, their offences being so capitall;

Tel

Tell me (for you seeme to be honest plainemen) what you haue to the King being something gently consider'd, He bring you where he is aboard, tender your persons to his presence, whisper him in your behalfe; and if it be in man, besides the King, to effect your Suites, here is man shall doe it.

Clew. He seemes to be of great authoritie. close with him, giue him Gold; and though Authoritie be a stubborn Beare, yet hee is oft led by .he Nose with Gold: I hew the in-side of your Purse to the out-side of his hand, and no more adoe Remember ston d, and stay'd aliue.

Shep. And't please you (Sir) to vndertake the Businesse for vs, here is that Gold I haue. He make it as much more, and leaue this young man in pawne, till I bring it you.

Ant. After I haue done what I promised?

Shep. I Sir.

Ant. Well, giue me the Moitie. Are you a partie in this Businesse?

Clew. In some sort, Sir. but though my case be a pittifull one, I hope I shall not be stay'd out of it

Ant. Oh, that's the case of the Shepheards Sonne. hang him, hee'll be made an example

Clew. Comfort, good comfort. We must to the King, and shew our strange sights: he must know 'tis none of your Daughter, nor my Sister: wee are gone else. Sir, I will giue you as much as this old man do's, when the Businesse is performed, and remaine (as he sayes) your pawne till it be brought you.

Ant. I will trust you. Walke before toward the Seaside, goe on the right hand, I will but looke vpon the Hedge, and follow you.

Clew. We are blest'd, in this man: as I may say, euen blest'd.

Shep. Let's before, as he bids vs he was proued to doe vs good.

Ant. If I had a mind to be honest, I see Fortune would not suffer mee shee drops Booties in my mouth. I am courted now with a double occasion (Gold, and means to doe the Prince my Master good, which, who knowes how that may turne backe to my aduancement?) I will bring these two Moales, these blind-ones, aboard him. if he thinke it fit to shoare them againe, and that the Complaint they haue to the King, concernes him nothing, let him call me Rogue, for being so farre officious, for I am proote against that Title, and what shame else belongs to't: To him will I present them, there may be matter in it.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Leontes, Cleommes, Dion, Paulina, Seruants, Florizel, Perdita

Cleo. Sir, you haue done enough, and haue perform'd A Saint-like Sorrow No fault could you make, Which you haue not redem'd; indeed pay'd downe More penitence then done trespas At the last Doe, as the Heauens haue done; forget your euill, With them, forgue your selfe.

Leo. Whilest I remember Her, and her Vertues, I cannot forget

My blemishes in them, and so still thinke of The wrong I did my selfe which was so much, That Heire-lesse it hath made my Kingdome, and Destroy'd the sweet'st Companion, that ere man. Bred his hopes out of, true

Paul. Too true (my Lord:)

If one by one, you wedded all the World, Or from the All that are, tooke something good, To make a perfect Woman; she you kill'd, Would be vnparallell'd.

Leo. I thinke so. Kill'd?

She I kill'd? I did so: but thou strik'st me So sorely, to say I did: it is as bitter Vpon thy Tongue, as in my Thought. Now, good now, Say so but selfe some.

Cleo. Not at all, good Lady:

You might haue spoken a thousand things, that would Haue done the time more benefit, and grac'd Your kindnesse better.

Paul. You are one of those Would haue him wed againe.

Dio. If you would not so, You pity not the State, nor the Remembrance Of his most soueraigne Name. Consider little, What Dangers, by his Highnesse faile of Issue, May drop vpon his Kingdome, and deuoure Incertaine lookers on What were more holy, Then to reioyce the former Queene is well? What holier, then for Royalties repayre, For present comfort, and for future good, To blesse the Bed of Mariage againe With a sweet Fellow to't?

Paul. There is none worthy, (Respecting her that's gone) besides the Gods Will haue fulfill'd their secret purposes. For ha's not the Diuine Apo's said? Is't not the tenor of his Oracle, That King Leontes shall not haue an Heire, Till his lost Child be found? Which, that it shall, Is all as monstrous to our humane reason, As my Antigonus to breake his Graue, And come againe to me who, on my life, Did perish with the Infant. 'Tis your counsell, My Lord should to the Heauens be contrary, Opposite against their wills. Care not for Issue, The Crowne will find an Heire. Great Alexander Left his to th' Worthiest: so his Successor Was like to be the best.

Leo. Good Paulina, Who hast the memorie of Hermione I know in honor: O, it at euer I Had squar'd me to thy counsell then, euen now, I might haue look'd vpon my Queenes full eyes, Haue taken Treasure from her Lippes.

Paul. And left them More rich, for what they yeilded.

Leo. Thou speak'st truth. No more such Wiues, therefore no Wife: one worse, And better vs'd would make her Sainted Spirit Againe possesse her Corps, and on this Stage (Where we Offer Dors now appeare) Soule-vext, And begin, why to me?

Paul. Had she such power, She had iust such cause.

Leo. She had, and would incense me To murder her I married.

Paul. I should so.
Were I the Ghost that walk'd, I'd bid you marke
Her eye, and tell me for what dull part in't
You chose her. then I'd shrike, that euen your eares
Should rise to heare me, and the words that follow'd,
Should be, Remember mine.

Leo. Starres, Starres,
And all eyes else, dead coales: teare thou no Wife;
Ile haue no Wife, Paulina.

Paul. Will you sweare
Neuer to marry, but by my free leaue?

Leo. Neuer (Paulina) so be blest'd my Spirit.
Paul. Then good my Lords, beare witnessse to his Oath.
Cleo. You tempte him ouer-much.

Paul. Vnlesse another,
As like Hermione, as is her Picture,
Affront his eye.

Cleo. Good Madame, I haue done.
Paul. Yet if my Lord will marry if you will, Sir;
No remedie but you will: Giue me the Office
To chuse you a Queene. she shall not be so young
As was your former, but she shall be such
As (walk'd your first Queenes Ghost) it should take ioi
To see her in your armes.

Leo. My true Paulina,
We shall not marry, till thou bidst vs.

Paul. That
Shall be when your first Queene's againe in breath:
Neuer till then.

Enter a Seruant.

Ser. One that giues out himselfe Prince Florizell, Sonne of Pelicanus, with his Princesse (she
The fairest I haue yet beheld) desires accessse
To your high presence.

Leo. What with him? he comes not Like to his Fathers Greatnesse: his approach
(So out of circumstance, and suddaine) tells vs,
'Tis not a Visitation fram'd, but forc'd
By need, and accident: What Trayne?

Ser. But few,
And those but meane.

Leo. His Princesse (say you) with him?

Ser. I. the most peerelesse peece of Earth, I thinke,
That ere the Sunne shone bright on.

Paul. Oh Hermione,
As euery present Time doth boast it selfe
Abooue a better, gone; so must thy Graue
Giue way to what's scene now. Sir, you your selfe
Haue said, and writ so; but your writing now
Is colder then that Theame: she had not bene,
Nor was not to be equall'd, thus your Verse
Flow'd with her Beautie once, 'tis shrewdly ebb'd,
To say you haue scene a better.

Ser. Pardon, Madame:
The one, I haue almost forgot (your pardon)
The other, when she ha's obtrayn'd your Eye,
Will haue your Tongue too. This is a Creature,
Would she begin a Sect, might quench the zeale
Of all Professors else; make Profelytes
Of who she but bid follow.

Paul. How? not women?
Ser. Women will loue her, that she is a Woman
More worth then any Man: Men, that she is
The rarest of all Women.

Leo. Goe Cleomene,
Your selfe (assisted with your honor'd Friends)

Bring them to our embracement. Still 'tis strange,
He thus should steale vpon vs. Exit.

Paul. Had our Prince
(Iewel of Children) scene this houre, he had pay'd
Well with this Lord; there was not full a moneth Betwene their births.

Leo. 'Prethee no more; cease: thou know'st
He dyes to me againe, when talk'd-of: sure
When I shall see this Gentleman, thy speeches
Will bring me to consider that, which may Vnfurnish me of Reason. They are come.

Enter Florizell, Perdita, Cleomene, and others.
Your Mother was most true to Wedlocke, Prince,
For she did print your Royall Father off,
Conceiuing you. Were I but twentie one,
Your Fathers Image is so hit in you,
(His very ayre) that I should call you Brother,
As I did him, and speake of something wildly
By vs perform'd before. Most dearly welcome,
And your faire Princesse (Goddesse) oh. alas,
I lost a couple, that 'twixt Heauen and Earth
Might thus haue stood, begetting wonder, as
You (gracious Couple) doe. and then I lost
(I'll mine owne Tolly) the Societie,
Amie to o of your braue Father, whom (Though bearing Miserie) I desire my life
Once more to looke on him.

Flo. By his command
Haue I here touch'd Sicilia, and from him
Giue you all greetings, that a King (at friend)
Can send his Brother and but Infirmitie
(Which waits vpon yorne times) hath something seiz'd
His wish'd Abilitie, he had himselfe
The Lands and Waters, 'twixt your Throne and his,
Measur'd, to looke vpon you; whom he loues
(Ho bad me say so) more then all the Scepters,
And those that leaue them, liuing.

Leo. Oh my Brother,
(Good Gentleman) the wrongs I haue done thee, stirre
A fresh within me: and these thy offices
(So rarely kind) are as Interpreters
Of my belund-hand slacknesse. Welcome hither,
As is the Spring to th' Earth, and hath he too
Expos'd this Paragon to th' fearefull vface
(At least vngentle) of the dreadful Neptune,
To greet a mad, not worth her paines, much lesse,
Th' aduenture of her person?

Flo. Good my Lord,
She came from Libia.

Leo. Where the Watlike Smalus,
That Noble honor'd Lord, is fear'd, and lou'd?

Flo. Most Royall Sir,
From thence. from him, whose Daughter
His Teares proclaym'd his parting with her: thence (A prosperous South-wind friendly) we haue cross'd,
To execute the Charge my Father gaue me,
For visiting your Highnesse. My best Traine
I haue from your Sicilian Shores dismiss'd;
Who for Behemia bend, to signifie
Not onely my successe in Libia (Sir)
But my arruall, and my Wifes, in safetie
Here, where we are.

Leo. The blessed Gods
Purge all Infection from our Ayre, whilest you
Doe Clymate here: you haue a holy Father,
A gracefull Gentleman, against whose person

(So

(So sacred as it is) I haue done sinne,
For which, the Heauens (taking angry note)
Haue left me Issue-lesse. and your Father's blest'd
(As he from Heauen merites it) with you,
Worthy his goodnesse. What might I haue been,
Might I a Sonne and Daughter now haue look'd on,
Such goodly things as you?

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most Noble Sir,
That which I shall report, will beare no credit,
Were not the prooffe so nigh, Please you (great Sir)
Bohemia greets you from himselfe, by me:
Desires you to attach his Sonne, who ha's
(His Dignitie, and Dutie both cast off)
Fled from his Father, from his Hopes, and with A Shepheards Daughter.

Leo. Where's Bohemia? speake.

Lord. Here, in your Citie: I now came from him.
I speake amazedly, and it becomes
My meruaile, and my Message. To your Court
Whiles he was hastning (in the Chase, it seemes,
Of this faire-Couple) meetes he on the way
The Father of this seeming Lady, and
Her Brother, hauing both their Countrey quitted,
With this young Prince.

Flo. Camillo ha's betray'd me;
Whose honor, and whose honestie till now,
Endur'd all Weathers.

Lord. Lay't so to his charge:
He's with the King your Father.

Leo. Who? Camillo?

Lord. Camillo (Sir) I spake with him: who now
Ha's these poore men in question. Neuer saw I
Wretches so quake. they kneele, they kisse the Earth;
Forswear themselves as often as they speake:
Bohemia stops his eares, and threatens them
With diuers deaths, in death.

Perd. Oh my poore Father:
The Heauen sets Spyes vpon vs, will not haue
Our Contract celebrated.

Leo. You are married?

Flo. We are not (Sir) nor are we like to be:
The Starres (I see) will kisse the Valleyes first:
The oddes for high and low's alike.

Leo. My Lord,
Is this the Daughter of a King?

Flo. She is,
When once she is my Wife

Leo. That once (I see) by your good Fathers speed,
Will come-on very slowly I am sorry
(Most sorry) you haue broken from his liking,
Where you were ty'd in dutie. and as sorry,
Your Choise is not so rich in Worth, as Beautie,
That you might well enioy her.

Flo. Deare, looke vp
Though Fortune, visible an Enemie,
Should chafe vs, with my Father; powre no 100
Hath she to change our Loues. Beseech you (Sir)
Remember, since you ow'd no more to Time
Then I doe now with thought of such Affections,
Step forth mine Advocate. at your request,
My Father will graunt precious things, as Trifles.

Leo. Would he doe so, I'd beg your precious Mistress,
Which he counts but a Trifle.

Paul. Sir (my Liege)
Your eye hath too much youth in't: not a moneth

Fore your Queene dy'd, she was more worth such gazes,
Then what you looke on now.

Leo. I thought of her,
Euen in these Lookes I made. But your Petition
Is yet vn-answer'd: I will to your Father:
Your Honor not o're-throwne by your desires,
I am friend to them, and you. Vpon which Errand
I now goe toward him: therefore follow me,
And marke what way I make: Come good my Lord.

Exiunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Antolissa, and a Gentleman.

Ant. Beseech you (Sir) were you present at this Relation?

Gent. 1. I was by at the opening of the Farthell, heard the old Shepheard deliuer the manner how he found it.
Whereupon (after a little amazednesse) we were all commanded out of the Chamber. onely this (me thought) I heard the Shepheard say, he found the Child.

Ant. I would most gladly know the issue of it.

Gent. 1. I make a broken deliuerie of the Businesse;
but the changes I perceiued in the King, and Camillo, were very Notes of admiration. they seem'd almost, with staring on one another, to teare the Cases of their Eyes.
There was speech in their dumbnesse, Language in their very gesture: they look'd as they had heard of a World ransom'd, or one destroyed: a notable passion of Wonder appeared in them. but the wisest beholder, that knew no more but seeing, could not say, if th'importance were Ioy, or Sorrow; but in the extremitie of the one, it must needs be

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes a Gentleman, that happily knowes more
The Newes Rogero.

Gent. 2. Nothing but Bon-fires the Oracle is fulfill'd:
the Kings Daughter is found: such a deale of wonder is broken out within this houre, that Ballad-makers cannot be able to expresse it.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes the Lady Paulina's Steward, hee can deliuer you more. How goes it now (Sir) This Newes (which is call'd true) is so like an old Tale, that the veritie of it is in strong suspition: Ha's the King found his Heire?

Gent. 3. Most true, if euer Truth were pregnant by Circumstance. That which you heare, you'll sweare you see, there is such vniue in the prooffes. The Mantle of Queene Hermione: her Jewell about the Neck of it:
the Letters of Antigonus found with it, which they know to be his Character: the Maistrie of the Creature, in resemblance of the Mother: the Affection of Noblenesse, which Nature shewes aboue her Breeding, and many other Euidences proclayme her, with all certaintie, to be the Kings Daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two Kings?

Gent. 2. No.

Gent. 3. Then haue you lost a Sight which was to bee scene, cannot bee spoken of. There might you haue beheld one Ioy crowne another, so and in such manner, that it seem'd Sorrow wept to take leaue of them. for their Ioy waded in teares. There was casting vp of Eyes, holding vp of Hands, with Countenance of such distraction, that they were to be knowne by Garment, not by Favour.

Our

Our King being ready to leape out of himselfe, for Ioy of his found Daughter; as if that Ioy were now become a Losse, cries, Oh, thy Mother, thy Mother: then asks Bohemia forgiveness, then embraces his Sonne-in-Law. then againe worries he his Daughter, with clipping her. Now he thanks the old Shepherd (which stands by, like a Weather-bitten Conduit, of many Kings Reignes.) I neuer heard of such another Encounter, which lames Report to follow it, and vndo's description to doe it

Gent. 2. What, pray you, became of Antigonus, that carryed hence the Child?

Gent. 3. Like an old Tale still, which will haue matter to rehearse, though Credit be asleepe, and not an eare open, he was torne to pieces with a Beare. This auouches the Shepherds Sonne, who ha's not onely his Innocence (which seemes much) to iustifie him, but a Hand-kerchief and Rings of his, that Paulina knows

Gent. 1. What became of his Barke, and his Followers?

Gent. 3. Wrackt the same instant of their Masters death, and in the view of the Shepherd so that all the Instruments which ayded to expose the Child, were euen then lost, when it was found. But oh the Noble Combat, that twist Ioy and Sorrow was fought in Paulina. Shee had one Eye declin'd for the losse of her Husband, another cleaued, that the Oracle was fulfill'd. Shee lifted the Princeesse from the Earth, and so locks her in embracing, as if shee would pin her to her heart, that shee might no more be in danger of loosing.

Gent. 1. The Dignitie of this Act was worth the audience of Kings and Princes, for by such was it acted.

Gent. 3. One of the prettyest touches of all, and that which angl'd for mine Eyes (caught the Water, though not the Fish) was, when at the Relation of the Queenes death (with the manner how shee came to t, brauely confesse'd, and lamented by the King) how attentiuely shee wounded his Daughter, till (from one signe of dolour to another) shee did (with an Alas) I would faine say, bleed Teares, for I am sure, my heart wept blood. Who was most Marble, there changed colour some swoyned, all forrowed if all the World could haue seen't, the Woe had bene vniuersall.

Gent. 1. Are they returned to the Court?

Gent. 3. No. The Princeesse hearing of her Mothers Statue (which is in the keeping of Paulina) a Peece many yeeres in doing, and now newly perform'd, by that rare Italian Master, Julio Romano, who (had he himselfe Exermitie, and could put Breath into his Worke) would beguile Nature of her Custome, so perfectly he is her Ape. He so neere to Hermione, hath done Hermione, that they say one would speake to her, and stand in hope of answer. Thither (with all greedinesse of affection) are they gone, and there they intend to Sup.

Gent. 2. I thought she had some great matter there in hand, for shee hath privately, twice or thrice a day, ever since the death of Hermione, visited that remoued House. Shall wee thither, and with our companie peece the Reioycing?

Gent. 1. Who would be thence, that ha's the benefit of Access? every winke of an Eye, some new Grace will be borne our Absence makes vs vnrhsifitue to our Knowledge. Let's along.

Exit.

Ant. Now (had I not the dash of my former life in me) would Preferment drop on my head. I brought the old man and his Sonne aboard the Prince; told him, I heard them talke of a Farthrell, and I know not what: but he at that time ouer-fond of the Shepherds Daughter (so he then tooke her to be) who began to be much Sea-sick, and himselfe little better, extremitie of Weather continuing, this Mysterie remained vndiscover'd. But 'tis all one to me for had I bene the finder-out of this Secret, it would not haue relish'd among my other discredit.

Enter Shepherd and Clowne.

Here come those I haue done good to against my will, and already appearing in the blossomes of their Fortune

Shep. Come Boy, I am past mee Children. but thy Sonnes and Daughters will be all Gentlemen borne.

Clow. You are well met (Sir.) you deny'd to fight with mee this other day, because I was no Gentleman borne. See you these Clothes? say you see them not, and thinke me still no Gentleman borne: You were best say these Robes are not Gentlemen borne. Giue me thy Lye doe and try whether I am not now a Gentleman borne.

Ant. I know you are now (Sir) a Gentleman borne.

Clow. I, and haue been so any time these foure houres.

Shep. And so haue I, Boy.

Clow. So you haue but I was a Gentleman borne before my Father for the Kings Sonne tooke me by the hand, and call'd mee Brother and then the two Kings call'd my Father Brother and then the Prince (my Brother) and the Princeesse (my Sister) call'd my Father, Father, and so wee wept and there was the first Gentleman-like teares that euer we shed

Shep. We may liue (Sonne) to shed many more

Clow. I or else 'twere hard luck, being in so preposterous estate as we are.

Ant. I humbly beseech you (Sir) to pardon me all the fautes I haue committed to your Worship, and to giue me your good report to the Prince my Master.

Shep. Prethece Sonne doe for we must be gentle, now we are Gentlemen.

Clow. Thou wilt amend thy life?

Ant. I, and it like your good Worship.

Clow. Giue me thy hand I will sweare to the Prince, thou art as honest a true Fellow as any is in Bohemia

Shep. You may say it, but not sweare it.

Clow. Not sweare it, now I am a Gentleman? Let Boores and Francklins say it, Ile sweare it.

Shep. How it is be false (Sonne?)

Clow. If it be ne're so false, a true Gentleman may sweare it, in the behalfe of his Friend: And Ile sweare to the Prince, thou art a tall Fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunke but I know thou art no tall Fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunke: but Ile sweare it, and I would thou would'st be a tall Fellow of thy hands.

Ant. I will proue so (Sir) to my power.

Clow. I, by any meanes proue a tall Fellow: if I do not wonder, how thou dar'st venture to be drunke, not being a tall Fellow, trust me not Harke, the Kings and the Princes (our Kindred) are going to see the Queenes Picture. Come, follow vs: wee'll be thy good Masters. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Leantes, Polixenes, Florizell, Perdita, Camillo,

Paulina Hermione (like a Statue) Lords, &c.

Leo. O graue and good Paulina, the great comfort That I haue had of thee?

Cc

Paul. What

Paul. What (Souveraigne Sir)
I did not well, I meant well all my Services
You have pay'd home. But that you have vouchsaf'd (With your Crown'd Brother, and these your contracted Heires of your Kingdomes) my poore House to visit;
It is a surplus of your Grace, which neuer
My life may last to answer.

Leo. O Paulina,
We honor you with trouble: but we came
To see the Statue of our Queene. Your Gallerie
Hauē we pass'd through, not without much content
In many singularities; but we saw not
That which my Daughter came to looke vpon,
The Statue of her Mother.

Paul. As she liu'd peerlesse,
So her dead likenesse I doe well beleue
Excells what euer yet you look'd vpon,
Or hand of Man hath done: therefore I keepe it Louely, apart. But here it is: prepare
To see the Life as luely mock'd, as euer
Still Sleepe mock'd Death. behold, and say 'tis well.
I like your silence, it the more shewes off
Your wonder: but yet speake, first you (my Liege)
Comes it not something neere?

Leo. Her naturall Posture.
Chide me (deare Stone) that I may say indeed
Thou art Hermione; or rather, thou art she,
In thy not chiding: for she was as tender
As Infancie, and Grace. But yet (Paulina)
Hermione was not so much wrinkled, nothing
So aged as this seemes.

Pol. Oh, not by much

Paul. So much the more our Caruers excellence.
Which lets goe-by some sixteene yeeres, and makes her
As she liu'd now

Leo. As now she might haue done,
So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my Soule. Oh, thus she stood,
Euen with such Life of Maiestie (warmed Life,
As now it coldly stands) when first I woo'd her.
I am asham'd. Do's not the Stone rebuke me,
For being more Stone then it? Oh Royall Peece:
There's Magick in thy Maiestie, which ha's
My Euils contri'd to remembrance; and
From thy admiring Daughter tooke the Spirits,
Standing like Stone with thee.

Perd. And giue me leave,
And doe not say 'tis Superstition that
I kneele, and then implore her Blessing. Lady,
Deere Queene, that ended when I but began,
Giue me that hand of yours, to kisse.

Paul. O, patience:
The Statue is but newly fix'd; the Colour's
Not dry.

Cam. My Lord, your Sorrow was too fore lay'd-on,
Which sixteene Winters cannot blow away,
So many Summers dry: scarce any Ioy
Did euer so long liue; no Sorrow,
But kill'd it selfe much sooner.

Pol. Deere my Brother,
Let him, that was the cause of this, haue powre
To take-off so much griefe from you, as he
Will peece vp in himselfe.

Paul. Indeed my Lord,
If I had thought the sight of my poore Image
Would thus haue wrought you (for the Stone is mine)

If'd not haue shew'd it.

Leo. Doe not draw the Curtaine,

Paul. No longer shall you gaze on't, least your Fancie
May thinke anon, it moues.

Leo. Let be, let be:

Would I were dead, but that me thinkes alreadie.
(What was he that did make it?) See (my Lord)
Would you not deeme it breath'd? and that those veines
Did verily beare blood?

Pol. Masterly done:

The very Life seemes warme vpon her Lippe.

Leo. The fixure of her Eye ha's motion in't,
As we are mock'd with Art.

Paul. Ile draw the Curtaine:
My Lord's almost so farre transported, that Hee'le thinke anon it liues.

Leo. Oh sweet Paulina,
Make me to thinke so twentie yeeres together:
No settled Sences of the World can match
The pleasure of that madnesse. Let's alone,

Paul. I am sorry (Sir) I haue thus farre stir'd you: but I could afflict you farther.

Leo. Doe Paulina:
For this Affliction ha's a taste as sweet
As any Cordiall comfort. Still me thinkes
There is an ayre comes from her. What fine Chizzell
Could euer yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kisse her.

Paul. Good my Lord, forbear:
The ruddinesse vpon her Lippe, is wet:
You'll marre it, if you kisse it; stayne your owne
With Oylly Painting: shall I draw the Curtaine.

Leo. No. not these twentie yeeres.

Perd. So long could I Stand-by, a looker-on.

Paul. Either forbear,
Quit presently the Chappell, or resolute you
For more amazement: if you can behold it,
Ile make the Statue moue indeed; descend,
And take you by the hand: but then you'll thinke (Which I protest against) I am assisted By wicked Powers.

Leo. What you can make her doe,
I am content to looke on: what to speake,
I am content to heare: for 'tis as easie
To make her speake, as moue.

Paul. It is requir'd
You doe awake your Faith: then, all stand still:
On: those that thinke it is vnlawfull Businesse
I am about, let them depart.

Leo. Proceed:

No foot shall stirre.

Paul. Musick; awake her: Strike:
'Tis time: descend, be Stone no more: approach:
Strike all that looke vpon with meruaile: Come.
Ile fill your Graue vp: stirre: nay, come away:
Bequeath to Death your nummesse: (for from him,
Deare Life redeemes you) you perceiue the stirres.
Start not: her Actions shall be holy, as
You heare my Spell is lawfull: doe not shun her,
Vntill you see her dye againe; for then
You kill her double: Nay, present your Hand:
When she was young, you woo'd her: now, in age,
Is she become the Sutor?

Leo. Oh, she's warme:
If this be Magick, let it be an Art

Lawfull as Eating.

Pol. She embraces him.

Cam. She hangs about his necke,
If she pertaine to life, let her speake too.

Pol. I, and make it manifest where she ha's liu'd,
Or how stolne from the dead?

Paul. That she is living,
Were it but told you, should be hooted at
Like an old Tale - but it appeares she liues,
Though yet she speak - not. Marke a little while:
Please you to interpose (faire Madam) kneele,
And pray your Mothers blessing - turne good Lady,
Our Perdita is found

Her You Gods looke downe,
And from your sacred Viols poure your graces
Vpon my daughters head - Tell me (mine owne)
Where hast thou bin preferu'd? Where liu'd? How found Thy Fathers Court? For thou shalt heare that I
Knowing by Paulina, that the Oracle
Gaue hope thou wast in being, haue preferu'd
My selfe, to see the yssue.

Paul There's time enough for that,
Least they desire (vpon this push) to trouble
Your ioyes, with like Relation. Go together
You precious winners all your exultation

Partake to euery one: I (an old Turtle)
Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there
My Mate (that's neuer to be found againe)
Lament, till I am lost.

Leo. O peace Paulina -

Thou shouldst a husband take by my consent,
As I by thine a Wife. This is a Match,
And made betwene's by Vowes. Thou hast found mine,
But how, is to be question'd: for I saw her
(As I thought) dead and haue (in vaine) said many
A prayer vpon her graue. He not feel e faire
(For him, I partly know his minde) to finde thee
An honourable husband. Come Camillo,
And take her by the hand: whose worth, and honesty
Is richly noted and heere iustified
By Vs, a paire of Kings. Let's from this place.
What? looke vpon my Brother: both your pardons,
That ere I put betwene your holy looks
My ill suspicion. This your Son-in-law,
And Sonne vnto the King, whom heauens directing
Is troth-plight to your daughter. Good Paulina,
Leade vs from hence, where we may leysurely
Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of Time, since first
We were disseuer'd: Hastily lead away.

Exeunt.

The life and death of King Iohn.

Actus Primus, Scena Prima.

Enter King Iohn, Queene Elinor, Pembroke, Essex, and Salisbury, with the Chastillon of France

King Iohn.

Now say Chastillon, what would France with vs ?

Chat. Thus (after greeting) speaks the King of France,

In my behauiour to the Maiesty,
The borrowed Maiesty of England heere.

Elea. A strange beginning borrowed Maiesty ?

K Iohn. Silence (good mother) heare the Embassie.

Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalfe

Of thy deceased brother, Geffreyes sonne,

Arthur Plantagenet, laies most lawfull claime

To this faire Iland, and the Territories :

To Ireland, Poytiers, Anjoue, Torayne, Maine,

Desiring thee to lay aside the sword

Which liues vsurpingly these severall titles,

And put the same into yong Arthurs hand,

Thy Nephew, and right royall Soueraigne

K. Iohn. What followes if we disallow of this ?

Chat. The proud controle of fierce and bloody warre,
To inforce these rights, so forcibly with-held,

K. Iohn. Heere haue we war for war, & bloud for bloud, Controlement for controlement: so answer France.

Chat. Then take my Kings defiance from my mouth,
The farthest limit of my Embassie.

K Iohn. Beare mine to him, and so depart in peace,

Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France ;

For ere thou canst report, I will be there

The thunder of my Cannon shall be heard

So hence . be thou the trumpet of our wrath,

And fullen preface of your owne decay :

An honourable conduct let him haue,

Pembroke looke too't: farewell Chastillon

Exit Chat and Pem

Ele What now my sonne, haue I not euer said

How that ambitious Constance would not cease

Till she had kindled France and all the world,

Vpon the right and party of her sonne,

This might haue bene prevented, and made whole

With very easie arguments of loue,

Which now the marriage of two kingdomes must

With fearful bloudy strife arbitrate.

K Iohn. Our strong possession, and our right for vs.

Eli. Your strong possession much more then your right,

Or else it must go wrong with you and me,

So much my conscience whisper in your eare,

Which none but heauen, and you, and I, shall heare.

Enter a Sheriffe.

Essex. My Liege, here is the strangest controuersie

Come from the Country to be iudg'd by you

That ere I heard shall I produce the men ?

K Iohn. Let them approach

Our Abbies and our Priories shall pay

This expeditious charge what men are you ?

Enter Robert Faulconbridge, and Philip.

Philip Your faithfull subiect, I a gentleman,

Borne in Northamptonshire, and eldest sonne

As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge,

A Souldier by the Honor-giving hand

Of Cordelon, Knighted in the field.

K Iohn. What art thou ?

Robert. The son and heire to that same Faulconbridge.

K Iohn. Is that the elder, and art thou the heyre ?

You came not of one mother then it seemes.

Philip Most certain of one mother, mighty King,

That is well knowne, and as I thinke one father.

But for the certaine knowledge of that truth,

I put you o're to heauen, and to my mother ;

Of that I doubt, as all mens children may

Eli. Out on thee rude man, y dost shame thy mother,

And wound her honor with this diffidence

Phil. I Madame ? No, I haue no reason for it,

That is my brothers plea, and none of mine,

The which if he can proue, a pope me out,

At least from fure fure hundred pound a yeere .

Heauen guard my mothers honor, and my Land

K. Iohn. A good blunt fellow why being younger born

Doth he lay claime to thine inheritance ?

Phil. I know not why, except to get the land.

But once he slanderd me with bastardy :

But where I be as true begot or no,

That still I lay vpon my mothers head,

But that I am as well begot my Liege

(Faie fall the bones that tooke the paines for me)

Compare our faces, and be Iudge your selfe

If old Sir Robert did beget vs both,

And were our father, and this sonne like him :

O old Sir Robert Father, on my knee

I giue heauen thanks I was not like to thee.

K. Iohn. Why what a mad-cap hath heauen lent vs here ?

Eli. He hath a trick of Cordelons face,

The accent of his tongue affecteth him :

Doe you not read some tokens of my sonne

In the large composition of this man ?

K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts,
And findes them perfect Richard: sirra speake,
What doth moue you to claime your brothers land.

Philp. Because he hath a half-face like my father:
With halfe this face would he haue all my land,
A halfe-face'd gnat, five hundred pound a yeere?

Rob. My gracious Liege, when that my father liu'd,
Your brother did employ my father much.

Phil. Well sir, by this you cannot get my land,
Your rale must be how he employ'd my mother.

Rob. And once dispatch'd him in an Embassie
To Germany, there with the Emperor
To treat of high affaires touching that time:
Th'advantage of his absence tooke the King,
And in the meane time sojourn'd at my fathers;
Where how he did preuaile, I shame to speake:
But truth is truth, large lengths of seas and shores
Betweene my father, and my mother lay,
As I haue heard my father speake himselfe
When this same lusty gentleman was got:
Vpon his death bed he by will bequeath'd
His lands to me, and tooke it on his death
That this my mothers sonne was none of his;
And if he were, he came into the world
Full fourteen weeks before the course of time
Then good my Liege let me haue what is mine,
My fathers land, as was my fathers will.

K. John. Sirra, your brother is Legitimise,
Your fathers wife did after wedlocke beare him
And if she did play false, the fault was hers,
Which fault lyes on the hazards of all husbands
That marry wiues: tell me, how if my brother
Who as you say, tooke paines to get this sonne,
Had of your father claim'd this sonne for his,
Insooth, good friend, your father might haue kept
This Calfe, bred from his Cow from all the world
Insooth he might: then if he were my brother,
My brother might not claime him, nor your father
Be none of his, refuse him: this concludes,
My mothers sonne did get your fathers heyre,
Your fathers heyre must haue your fathers land.

Rob. Shal then my fathers Will be of no force,
To dispossesse that childe which is not his.

Phil. Of no more force to dispossesse me sir,
Then was his will to get me, as I think.

Elr. Whether hadst thou rather be a Faulcerbridge,
And like thy brother to enioy thy land.
Or the reputed sonne of Cordelion,
Lord of thy presence, and no land beside.

Bas. Madam, and if my brother had my shape
And I had his, sir Roberts his like him,
And if my legs were two such riding rods,
My armes, such eeles skins stuf, my face so thin,
That in mine eare I durst not sticke a rose,
Lest men should say, looke where three farthings goes,
And to his shape were heyre to all this land.
Would I might neuer stirre from off this place,
I would giue it euery foot to haue this face.
It would not be sir nobbe in any case.

Elmor. I like thee well: wilt thou forsake thy fortune,
Bequeath thy land to him, and follow me?

I am a Souldier, and now bound to France.

Bas. Brother, take you my land, Ile take my chanches
Your face hath got five hundred pound a yeere,
Yet sell your face for five pence and 'tis decreed:
Madam, Ile follow you vnto the death.

Elmor. Nay, I would haue you go before me thither.

Bas. Our Country manners giue our betters way.

K. John. What is thy name?

Bas. Philp my Liege, so is my name begun,

Philp. good old Sir Roberts wiues eldest sonne.

K. John. From henceforth beare his name
Whose forme thou bearest:

Kneele thou downe Philp, but rise more great,
Arise Sir Richard, and Plantagrest.

Bas. Brother by th'mothers side, giue me your hand,
My father gaue me honor, yours gaue land.

Now blessed be the house by night or day

When I was got, Sir Robert was away.

Elr. The very spirit of Plantagrest:

I am thy grandame Richard, call me so.

Bas. Madam by chance, but not by truth, what tho;

Something about a little from the right,

In at the window, or else out the lutch:

Who dares not stirre by day, must walke by night,

And haue is haue, how euer men doe catch:

Neere or farre off well worne is still well shor,

And I am I, how ere I was begot.

K. John. Goe, Faulcerbridge, now hast thou thy desire,

A landlesse Knight, makes thee a landed Squire:

Come Madam, and come Richard, we must speed

For France, for France, for it is more then need.

Bas. Brother ad eu, good fortune come to thee,

For thou wast got in way of lordship;

Exit Bas. and Bas.

Bas. A foot of Honor better then I was,

But many a many foot of Land the worse.

Well, now can I make any Leane Lady,

Good den Sir Richard, Godamercy fellow,

And if his name be George, He call him Peter.

For new made honors doth forget mens names

'Tis two respectiue, and too sociable

For your conuersation, now your traveller,

Hee and his tooth-picke at my workshops messe,

And when my knightly stomackers furth'd,

Why then I tucke my teeth, and catechize

My picked man of Courtesies, my deare sir,

Thus leaning on mine elbow I begin,

I shall beseech you; that is question now,

And then comes answer like an Abley booke:

O sir, sayes answer, at your best command,

At your employment, at your seruice sir:

No sir, sayes question, I sweet sir at yours,

And so ere answer knowes what question would,

Sailing in Dialogue of Complement,

And talking of the Alpes and Appennines,

The Perennian and the muir Pee,

It drawes toward supper in conclusion so.

But this is worshipfull society,

And fits the mounting spirit like my selfe;

For he is but a ballard to the time

That doth not smoake of obseruation,

And so am I whether I smacke or no.

And not alone in habit and deuce,

Exterior forme, outward accoutrement;

But from the inward motion to deliuer

Sweet, sweet, sweet payson for the ages tooth,

Which though I will not practice to deccie,

Yet to avoid deccit I meane to learne;

For it shall strew the footsteps of my rising;

But who comes in such haste in riding robes?

What

What woman post is this? hath she no husband
That will take paines to blow a horn before her?
O me, 'tis my mother: how now good Lady,
What brings you heere to Court so hastily?

Enter Lady Faulconbridge and James Gurney.

Lady. Where is that slave thy brother? where is he?
That holds in chafe mine honour vp and downe.

Bast. My brother Robert, old Sir Roberts sonne:
Colbrand the Gyant, that same mighty man,
Is it Sir Roberts sonne that you seeke fo?

Lady. Sir Roberts sonne, I thou vnreuerend boy,
Sir Roberts sonne? why scold'st thou at sir Robert?
He is Sir Roberts sonne, and so art thou.

Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou giue vs leaue a while?

Gour. Good leaue good Philip.

Bast. Philip, sparrow, James,

There's toys abroad, anon Ile tell thee more

Exit James.

Madam, I was not old Sir Roberts sonne,
Sir Robert might haue eat his part in me
Vpon good Friday, and nere broke his fast
Sir Robert could doe well, marrie to confesse
Could get me sir Robert could not doe it,
We know his handy-worke, therefore good mother
To whom am I beholding for these limes?
Sir Robert neuer helpe to make this legge

Lady. Hast thou conspired with thy brother too,
That for thine owne gaine shouldst defend mine honor?
What means this scoine, thou most vntoward knaue?

Bast. Knight, knight good mother, Basiliſco-like
What, I am dub'd, I haue it on my shoulder
But mother, I am not Sir Roberts sonne,
I haue disclaim'd Sir Robert and my land,
Legitimation, name, and all is gone;
Then good my mother, let me know my father,
Some proper man I hope, who was it mother?

Lady. Hast thou denied thy selfe a Faulconbridge?

Bast. As faithfully as I denie the deuill

Lady. King Richard Cordelion was thy father,
By long and vehement suit I was seduc'd
To make roome for him in my husbands bed
Heauen lay not my transgression to my charge,
That art the issue of my deere offence
Which was so strongly vrg'd past my defence.

Bast. Now by this light were I to get againe,
Madam I would not wish a better father:
Some sinnes doe beare their priuledge on earth,
And so doth yours: your fault, was not your follie,
Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,
Subiected tribute to commanding loue,
Against whose furie and vnmarched force,
The awlesse Lion could not wage the fight,
Nor keepe his Princely heart from Richards hand:
He that perforce robs Lions of their hearts,
May easily winne a womans: ay me my mother,
With all my heart I thanke thee for my father
Who liues and dares but say, thou didst not well
When I was got, Ile send his soule to hell
Come Lady I will shew thee to my kintie,
And they shall say, when Richard me begot,
If thou hadst sayd him nay, it had bene sinne;
Who sayes it was, helyes, I say twas not.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter before Angiers, Philip King of France, Lewis, Dauphin, Austria, Constance, Arthur

Lewis. Before Angiers well met braue Austria,
Arthur that great fore-runner of thy blood,
Richard that rob'd the Lion of his heart,
And fought the holy Warres in Palestine,
By this braue Duke came early to his graue:
And for amends to his posteritie,
At our importance hether is he come,
To spread his colours boy, in thy behalfe,
And to rebuke the vlturpation
Of thy vnnsurail Vncle, English Iohn,
Embrace him, loue him, giue him welcome hether.

Arth. God shall forgieue you Cordelions death
The rather, that you giue his off-spring life,
Shadowing their right vnder your wings of warre.
I giue you welcome with a powerlesse hand,
But with a heart full of vnstained loue,
Welcome before the gates of Angiers Duke

Lewis. A noble boy, who would not doe thee right?

Aust. Vpon thy cheek lay I this zealous kisse,
As teale to this indenture of my loue:
That to my home I will no more returne
Till Angiers, and the right thou hast in France,
Together with that pale, that white-fac'd shore,
Whose foot spurnes backe the Oceans roaring tides,
And coopes from other lands her Ilanders,
Euen till that England hedg'd in with the maine,
That Water-walled Bulwarke, still secure
And confident from forreine purposes,
Euen till that vtmost corner of the West
Salute thee for her King, till then faire boy
Will I not thinke of home, but follow Armes

Const. O take his mothers thanks, a widdows thanks,
Till your strong hand shall helpe to giue him strength,
To make a more requitall to your loue.

Aust. The peace of heauen is theirs: y list their swords
In such a iust and charitable watre

King. Well, then to worke our Cannon shall be bent
Against the browes of this resisting towne,
Call for our cheefest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best aduantages:
Wee'll lay before this towne our Royal bones,
Wade to the market-place in French-mens blood,
But we will make it subiect to this boy

Const. Stay for an answer to your Embassie,
Lest vnaduis'd you staine your swords with blood,
My Lord Chatillon may from England bring
That right in peace which heere we vse in warre,
And then we shall repent each drop of blood,
That hot rash haste so indirecely shedde.

Enter Chatillon.

King. A wonder Lady lo vpon thy wish
Our Messenger Chatillon is arriv'd,
What England saies, say breecely gentle Lord,
We coldly pause for thee, Chatillon speake,

Chat. Then turne your forces from this paltry siege,
And surre them vp against a mightier taske:
England impatient of your iust demands,
Hath put himselfe in Armes, the aduerser windes

Whose leisure I haue staid, haue giuen him time
To lend his Legions all as soone as I
His marches are expedient to this towne,
His forces strong, his Souldiers confident:
With him along is come the Mother Queene,
An Aye stirring him to bloud and strife,
With her her Neece, the Lady Blanch of Spaine,
With them a Bastard of the Kings decess,
And all th' vnsettled humors of the Land,
Rash, inconsiderate, fier, voluntaries,
With Ladies faces, and fierce Dragons spleenes,
Haue sold their fortunes at their native home,
Bearing their birth-rights proudly on their backs,
To make a hazard of new fortunes heere.
In briebe, a brauer choyse of dauntlesse spurs
Then now the Englsh bottoms haue wait o're,
Did neuer stote vpon the swelling tide,
To doe offence and seathe in Christendome:
The interruption of their churlish drums
Cuts off more circumstance, they are at hand,

Drummes.

To pathe or to fight, therefore prepare

Ker. How much vnlook'd for, is this expedient.

Anst. By how much vnexpected, hy to inuelt
We must awake indeuor for defence,
For courage mounteth with occasion,
Let them be welcome then, we are prepar'd.

Enter K. of England, Bastard, Queene, his ch. P. m. r. c. and others.

K. John. Peace be to France. If France is peace permit
Our iust and lineall entrance too to ouine,
If not, bleede France, and peace ascend to heauen.
Whiles we Gods wrathfull agent doe correct
Their proud contempt that beats his peace to heauen.

France. Peace be to England, if that waste returne
From France to England, there to lue in peace
England weloue, and for that Englsh is sake,
With burden of our armor heere we'll eat.
This toyle of ours should be a worke of others,
But thou from louing England art so farse,
That thou hast vnder-wrought his lawfull King,
Cut off the sequence of posterity,
Out-faced Infant State, and done a rape
Vpon the maiden vertue of the Crowne:
Looke heere vpon thy brother Geffrey face,
These eyes, these browes, were moulded out of his;
This little abstract doth containe that large,
Which died in Geffrey and the hand of time,
Shall draw this breefe into as huge a volume
That Geffrey was thy elder brother borne,
And this his sonne, Englsh I was Geffrey right,
And this is Geffrey in the name of God:
How comes it then that thou art call'd a King,
When liuing blood doth in these temples beat
Which owe the crowne, that thou ore-masterest?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commission
To draw my answer from thy Articles? (France,

France. Fro that supernal Iudge that stirs good thoughts
In any beast of strong authoritie,
To looke into the blots and stains of right,
That Iudge hath made me guardian to this boy,
Vnder whose warrant I impeach thy wrong,
And by whose helpe I meane to chastise it.

K. John. Alack thou dost vsurpe authoritie.

France. Excuse it to beate vsurping downe.

Queene. Who is it thou dost call vsurper, France?

Cress. Let me make answer: thy vsurping sonne.

Queene. Out insolent, thy bastard shall be King,
That thou mist be a Queene, and checke the world.

Cress. My bed was euer to thy sonne as true
As thine was to thy husband, and this boy
I lue in feature to his father Geffrey.

Then thou and John, in manners being as like,
As raine to water, or deuill to his damme;
My boy a bastard: by my soule I thinke
His father neuer was so true begot,
It cannot be, and if thou wert his mother.

(Enter Queene. There's a good mother boy, that blots thy fa

Cress. There's a good grandame boy
That would blot thee.

Anst. Peace.

Bast. Heare the Cryer.

Anst. What the deuill art thou?

Bast. One that wil play the deuill sit with you,
And a may catch your lude and you alone.

You are the Hare of whom the Proverb goes
Whose valour plucks dead Lyons by the beard;
He smokes your skin-coat and I catch your sight,
Surralooke too't, yf th I will, y'faith.

Blas. O well did he become that Lyons robe,
That did disrobe the Lion of that robe.

Bast. It lies as lightly on the backe of him
As great Achilles shoes vpon an Ass:

But Ass, he take that burthen from your backe,
Or lay on that shall make your shoulders cracke.

Anst. What cracker is this, same that deafes our eares
With this abundance of superfluous breath?

King Leu, determine what we shall doe strait.

Leu. Women & fooles, breake off your conference
King John, this is the very summe of all:

Englsh and Irish I Acquire, Turkey, Spain,
In right of Arthur doe I claime of thee:

Wilt thou resigne them, and lay downe thy Armes?

John. My life as soone: I doe desire thee France,
Arthur of Britaine, yeeld it euer in my hand,
And out of my deere loue lye e the more,
Then ere the coward hand a rance can win;
Submit thee boy.

Queene. Come to thy grandame child.

Cress. Doe childe, goe to y'r grandame childe, Giue grandame kingdome, and it grandame will Giue y'r plum, a cherry, and a figge,
There's a good grandame.

Arthur. Good my mother peace,
I would that I were low laid in my graue,
I am not worth this coyle that's made for me. (weepes.)

Queene. His mother thames him so, poore boy hee

Cress. Now shame vpon you where she does or no,
His grandames wrongs, and not his mothers shames
Drawes those heauen-mouing pearles fro his poor eyes,
Which heauen shall take in nature of a see:
I, with these Christall beads heauen shall be brib'd
To doe him Iustice, and reuenge on you

Queene. Thou monstrous slanderer of heauen and earth.

Cress. Thou monstrous Iouiner of heauen and earth,
Call not me slanderer, thou and thine vsurpe
The Dominations, Royalties, and rights
Of this oppressed boy; this is thy eldest sonnes sonne,
Infortunate in nothing but in thee:

Thy

Thy sinnes are visited in this poore child;
The Canon of the Law is laid on him,
Being but the second generation
Remoued from thy sinne-containing wombe.

John Bedlam take don't.

Con. I haue but this to say,
That he is not onely plagued for her sin,
But God hath made her sinne and her, the plague
On this remoued issue, plagued for her,
And with her plague her sinne: his iniury
Her iniurie the Beadle doth her sinne.
All punishment in the person of this childe,
And all for her, a plague vpon her.

Que. Thou vnadvised scold, I can produce
A Will, that barres the title of thy sonne:

Con. I who doubts that? a Will: a wicked will,
A womans will, a cankred Grandams will.

Fra. Peace Lady, pause, or be more temperate,
It ill becomes this presence to cry ayme
To these ill-learned repetitions:
Some Trumpet summon hither to the walles
These men of Angiers; let vs heare them speake, Whose title they admit, Arthurs or Johns

Trumpet sounds

Enter a Citizen vpon the walles

Cit. Who is it that hath warn'd vs to the walles?

Fra. 'Tis France, for England?

John England for it selfe:

You men of Angiers, and my louing subiects.

Fra. You louing men of Angiers, Arthurs subiects,
Our Trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle.

John. For our aduantage, therefore heare vs first.

These flagges of France that are aduanced heere
Before the eye and prospect of your Towne,
Haue hither march'd to your endamagement
The Canons haue their bowels full of wrath,
And ready mounted are they to spit forth
Their Iron indignation 'gainst your walles:
All preparation for a bloody siege
And mercies proceeding, by these French.
Comfort yours Citties eyes, your winking gates:
And but for our approach, those sleeping stones,
That as a waste doth girdle you about
By the compulsion of their Ordinance,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had bin distabited, and wide haucke made
For bloody power to rush vpon your peace:
But on the sight of vs your lawfull King,
Who painefully with much expedient march
Haue brought a counter-checke before your gates,
To saue vs scratch'd your Citties threatned cheekes:
Behold the French amaz'd vouchsafe a parle,
And now instead of bulletts wrapt in fire
To make a shaking feuer in your walles,
They shooe but childe words, folded vp in smoake,
To make a satchleste ertour in your eares,
Which trust accordingly kinde Citizens,
And let vs in: Your King, whose labour'd spirits
Fore-wearied in this action of swift speede,
Craves harbourage within your Citie walles.

Fra. O where I haue farde, make answer to vs both.
Loe in this right hand, whose protection
Is most diuinely vow'd vpon the right
Of him it holds, King John Plantagenet,
Sonne to the elder brother of this man,

And King ore him, and all that he enioyes:
For thus downe-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march, these greenes before your Towne,
Being no further enemy to you
Then the constraint of hospitall zeale,
In the releefe of this oppressed childe,
Religiously prouokes: Be pleased then
To pay that dutie which you truly owe,
To him that owes it, namely, this yong Prince,
And then our Armes, like to a muzzled Beare,
Saue in aspect, hath all offence seal'd vp:
Our Cannons malice vainly shall be spent
Against th'invulnerable clouds of heauen;
And with a blessed and vn-vext retyre,
With vnhack'd swords, and Helmes all vnbruist,
We will beare home that lustie blood againe,
Which heere we came to spout against your Towne,
And leaue your children, wives, and you in peace
But if you fondly passe our proffer'd offer,
Tis not the founde of your old-fac'd walles,
Can hide you from our messengers of Warre;
Though all these English, and their discipline
Were harbour'd in their ride circumference:
Then tell vs, Shall your Citie call vs Lord,
In that behalf which we haue challeng'd it?
Or shall we giue the signall to our rage,
And stalke in blood to our possession?

Cit. In breefe, we are the King of Englands subiects
For him, and in his right, we hold this Towne.

John. Acknowledgethen the King, and let me in.

Cit. That can we not: but he that proueth the King
To him will we proue loyall, till that time
Haue we ram'd vp our gates against the world.

John. Doth not the Crowne of England, produce the King?

And if not that, I bring you Witneses
Twice fiftene thousand Hearts of Englands breed.

Bast. Bastards and else.

John. To vetifie our title with their liues.

Fra. As many and as well-borne bloods as those.

Bast. Some Bastards too.

Fra. Stand in his face to contradict his claime

Cit. Till you compound whose right is worthleste,
We for the worthiest hold the right from both.

John. Then God forgue the sinne of all those soules,
That to their euermourning residence,
Before the dew of euening fall, shall flieere
In dreadfull triall of our kingdomes King.

Fra. Amen, Amen, mount Chetualiers to Armes.

Bast. Saint George that swindg'd the Dragon,
And ere since sit's on's horsebacke at mine Hostesse dore
Teach vs some fence. Surrah, were I at home
At your den firrah, with your Lionnesse,
I would set an Oxe-head to your Lyons hide.
And make a monster of you.

Aust. Peace, no more.

Bast. O tremble for you heare the Lyon rore.

John. Vp higher to the plaine, whither we'l set forth
In best appointment all our Regiments!

Bast. Speed then to take aduantage of the field.

Fra. It shall be so, and at the other hill
Command the rest to stand, God and our right. Exeunt

Here after excursions, Enter the Herald of France with Trumpets to the gates!

F. Her. You men of Angiers open wide your gates,
And let yong Arthur Duke of Britaine in,

Who by the hand of France, this day hath made
Much worke for teares in many an English mother,
Whose sonnes lye scattered on the bleeding ground :
Many a widdowes husband grouelling lies,
Coldly embracing the discoloured earth,
And victorie with little losse doth play
Vpon the dancing banners of the French,
Who are at hand triumphantly displayd
To enter Conquerors, and to proclaime
Arthur of Britaine, Englands King, and yours.

Enter English Herald with Trumpet.

E. Har. Reioyce you men of Angiers, ring your bells,
King John, your king and Englands, doth approach,
Commander of this hot malicious day,
Their Armour that march'd hence so siluer bright,
Hither returne all gilt with Frenchmens blood :
There stucke no plume in any English Crest,
That is removed by a staffe of France.
Our colours do returne in those same hands
That did display them when we first marcht forth :
And like a iolly troope of Huntsmen come
Our lustie English, all with purpled hands,
Dide in the dying slaughter of their foes,
Open your gates, and open the Victors way.

Hubert. Heralds, from off our towres we might behold
From first to last, the on-set and retire,
Of both your Armies, whole equality
By our best eyes cannot be censured. (blowes.)
Blood hath bought blood, and blowes have answered
Strength matcht with strength, and power confronted power.

Both are alike, and both alike we like :
O'e must proue greatest. While they weigh so even,
We hold our Towne for neither yet for both.

*Enter the two Kings with their servants,
at severall doores.*

John. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away?
Say, shall the curreant of our right come on,
Whose passage vext with thy impediment,
Shall leaue his native channell, and ore-swell
with course disturb'd when thy continuing shores,
Vnlesse thou let his siluer Water, keepe
A peacefull progresse to the Ocean.

Fra. England thou hast not sūd one drop of blood
In this hot triall more then we of France,
Rather lost more. And by this hand I sweare
That swaies the earth this Climate ouer-lookes,
Before we will lay downe our iust-borne Armes,
Wee'l put thee downe, 'gainst whom these Armes wee
Or adde a royall number to the dead : (beare,
Gracing the scroule that tels of this warres losse,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.

Bas. His Maiesie . how high thy glory towres,
When the rich blood of kings is set on fire :
Oh now doth death line his dead chaps with Steele,
The sword of souldiers are his teeth, his phangs,
And now he feasts, mousing the flesh of men
In vndetermin'd differences of kings.
Why stand these royall fronts amazed thus -
Cry haucke kings, backe to the stained field
You equall Potents, fierie kindled spirits,
Then let confusion of one part confirm
The others peace : till then, blowes, blood, and death.

John. Whose party do the Townemen yet admit?

Fra. Speake Citizens for England, whose your king.
Hub. The king of England, when we know the king.
Fra. Know him in vs, that heere hold vp his right.
John. In Vs, that are our owne great Deputie,
And beare possession of our Person heere,
Lord of our presence Angiers, and of you.

Fra. A greater powre then We denies all this,
And till it be vndoubted, we do locke
Our former scruple in our strong barr'd gates :
Kings of our feare, vntill our feares resolu'd
Be by some certaine king, purg'd and depos'd.

Bas. By heauen, these scroyles of Angiers flout you
And stand securely on their battlements, (Kings,
As in a Theater, whence they gaze and poine
At your industrious Scenes and Acts of death.
Your Royall presences be rul'd by mee,
Do like the Mutines of Ierusalem,
Be friends a-while, and both consioyntly bend
Your sharpest Deeds of malice on this Towne.
By East and West let France and England moune
Their battering Canon charged to the mowthes,
Till their soule-searing clamours haue braul'd downe
The stinie ribbes of this contemptuous Cite,
I de play incessantly vpon these laders,
Euen till vnfenced desolation
Leaue them as naked as the vulgar asse :

That done, disleeve your vnied strengths,
And part your mingled colours once againe,
Turne face to face, and bloody po int to po int.
Then in a mouent Fortune shall cull forth
Out of one side her happy Minion,
To whom in fauour she shall giue the day,
And kisse him with a glorious victory :
How like you this wilde counsell mighty States,
Smackes it not something of the polier

John. Now by the sky that hangs above our heads,
I like it well. France, shall we knoe our powres,
And lay this Angiers euen w in the ground,
Then after fight who shall be king of it?

Bas. And if thou hast the met le of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peeuish Towne :
Turne thou the mouth of thy Artillerie,
As we will o'rs, against these fawne walles,
And when that we haue dasht them to the ground,
Why then desie each other, and pell-mell,
Make worke vpon our selues, for heauen or hell.

Fra. Let it be so - say, where will you assault?

John. We from the West will send destruction
Into this Cites bosome.

Ans. I from the North.

Fra. Our Thunder from the South,
Shall raine their drif of bullets on this Towne.

Bas. O prudent discipline ! From North to South :
Austria and France shoo in each others mouth,
He stirre them to it : Come, away I away.

Hub. Heare vs great kings, vouchsafe awhile to stay
And I shall shew you peace, and faue-fac'd league :
Win you this Cite without stroke, or wound,
Rescue those breathing liues to dye in beds,
That heere come sacrifices for the field
Perseuer not, but heare me mighty kings.

John. Speake on with fauour, we are bent to heare.

Hub. That daughter there of Spaine, the Lady Blanch
Is neere to England, looke vpon the yeeeres
Of Lerres the Dolphin, and that louely maid.
If lustie loue should go in quest of beutie,

Where

Where should he finde it fairer, then in Blanch :
 If zealous loue should go in search of vertue,
 Where should he finde it purer then in Blanch ?
 If loue ambitious sought a match of birth,
 Whose veins bound richer blood then Lady Blanch ?
 Such as she is, in beautie, vertue, birth.
 Is the yong Dolphin euery way compleat,
 If not compleat of, say he is not shee,
 And she againe wants nothing, to name want,
 If want it be not, that she is not hee :
 He is the halfe part of a blessed man,
 Left to be finished by such as shee,
 And she a faire diuined excellence,
 Whose fulnesse of perfection lyes in him.
 O two such siluer currents when they ioine
 Do glorifie the banks that bound them in .
 And two such shores, to two such streames made one,
 Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kings,
 To these two Princes, if you marrie them.
 This Vnion shall do more then batterie can
 To our fast closed gates : for at this match,
 With swifter spleene then powder can enforce
 The mouth of passage shall we sling wide ope,
 And giue you entrance . but without this match,
 The sea enrage I is not halfe so deafe,
 Lyons more confident, Mountaines and rockes
 More free from mouion, no nor death himselte
 In mortal. furie halfe so peremptorie,
 As we to keepe this Citie.

Bast. Heeres a stay,
 That shakes the rotten carkeasse of old death
 Out of his ragges. Here s a large mouth indeede,
 That spits forth death, and mountaines, rockes, and seas,
 Talkes as familiarly of roaring Lyons,
 As maids of thirtene do of puppi-dogges.
 What Cannoneere begot this lustie blood,
 He speakes plaine Cannon fire, and smoake, and bounce,
 He giues the bastinado with his tongue .
 Our eares are cudgel'd, not a word of his
 But buffes better then a fist of France :
 Zounds, I was neuer so bethumpt with words,
 Since I first cal'd my brothers father Dad.

Old Qu. Son, list to this conjunction, make this match
 Giue with our Neece a dowrie large enough,
 For by this knod, thou shalt so surely tye
 Thy now vnstar'd assurance to the Crowne,
 That yon greene boy shall haue no Sunne to ripe
 The bloome that promisseth a mightie fruite
 I see a yeelding in the lookes of France :
 Marke how they whisper, vrge them while their soules
 Are capeable of this ambition,
 Least zeale now melted by the windie breath
 Off soft petitions, pittie and remorse,
 Coole and congeale againe to what it was.

Hub. Why answer not the double Maiesties,
 This friendly treatie of our threatened Towne

Fra. Speake England first, that hath bin forward first
 To speake vnto this Citie : what say you ?

John If that the Dolphin there thy Princely sonne,
 Can in this booke of beautie read, I lolie :
 Her Dowrie shall weigh equall with a Queene :
 For Angiers, and faire Toraine Marche, Paylliers,
 And all that lye vpon this side the Sea,
 (Except this Citie now by vs besiedg'd)
 Iable to our Crowne and Dignitie,
 Shall gild her bridall bed and make her rich

In titles, honors, and promotions;
 As she in beautie, education, blood,
 Holdes hand with any Princeesse of the world.

Fra. What saist thou boy ? looke in the Ladies face,

Dol. I do my Lord, and in her eie I find

A wonder, or a wondrous miracle,
 The shadow of my selfe form'd in her eye,
 Which being but the shadow of your sonne,
 Becomes a sonne and makes your sonne a shadow :
 I do protest I neuer lou'd my selfe
 Till now, infixed I beheld my selfe,
 Drawne in the flattering table of her eie.

Whispers with Blanch.

Bast. Drawne in the flattering table of her eie,
 Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow,
 And quarter'd in her heart, hee doth espie
 Himselfe loues traytor; this is pittie now ;
 That hang'd, and drawne, and quarter'd there should be
 In such a loue, so vile a Lout as he,

Blau. My vnckles will in this respect is mine,
 If he see ought in you that makes him like,
 That any thing he see's which moues his liking,
 I can with ease translate it to my will :
 Or if you will, to speake more properly.
 I will enforce it easlie to my loue.
 Further I will not flatter you, my Lord,
 That all I see in you is worthe loue,
 Then this, that nothing do I see in you,
 Though churlish thoughts themselues should bee your Iudge,

That I can finde, should merit any hate.

John What saie these yorg-ones ? What say you my Neece ?

Blau. That she is bound in honor still to do
 What you in wisdome still vouchsafe to say.

John. Speake then Prince Dolphin, can you loue this Ladie ?

Dol Nay aske me if I can refrain from loue,
 For I doe loue her most vnfaignedly.

John Then do I giue Valquesen, Toraine, Mame,
Paylliers, and Anion, these fiue Prouinces
 With her to thee, and this addition more,
 Full thirty thousand Markes of English coyne :
Phillip of France, if thou be pleas'd withall,
 Command thy sonne and daughter to ioine hands.

Fra. It likes vs well young Princes close your't and
Anst. And your lippes too, for I am well assur'd.
 That I did so when I was first assur'd.

Fra Now Citizens of Angiers ope your gates,
 Let in that amitie which you haue made,
 For at Saint Maries Chappell presently,
 The rights of marriage shall be solemniz'd.
 Is not the Ladie Constance in this troope ?
 I know she is not for this match made vp,
 Her preface would haue interrupted much.

Where is she and her sonne, tell me, who knowes

Dol. She is sad and passionate at your highnes Tent.

Fra. And by my faith, this league that we haue made
 Will giue her sadnesse very little cure :
 Brother of England, how may we content
 This widdow Lady ? In her right we came,
 Which we God knowes, haue turn'd another way,
 To our owne vantage.

John. We will heate vp all,
 For we'll create yong Arthur Duke of Britaine
 And Earle of Richmond, and this rich faire Towne

We

The life and death of King Iohn.

We make him Lord of. Call the Lady Constance,
Some speedy Messenger, bid her repair
To our solemnity: I trust we shall (if not fill up the measure of her will)
Yet in some measure satisfy her so,
That we shall stop her exclamation,
Go we as well as hast will suffer we,
To this vnlook'd for vnprepared pompe.

Exeunt.

John to stop Arthurs Title in the whole,
And France, whose armour Conscience buckled on,
Whom grace and charity brought to the field, I
As Gods owne souldier, rounded in the care,
With that same purpose-changer, that slye duell,
That Broker, that still breake the pace of faith,
Of kings, of prieggers, old men, yong men, maldis,
Who hauing no exicimall thing to loose,
But the word Maid, cheats the poore Maide of that.
That smooth-faced Gentleman, tickling commoditie,
Commoditie, the byas of the world,
The world, who of it selfe is payd well,
Made to run euen, vpon euen ground;
Till this aduantage, this vile drawing byas,
This sway of motion, this commoditie,
Makes it take head from all indifferency,
From all direction, purpose, equise, intent.
And this same byas, this Commoditie,
This Bawd, this Broker, this all-changing-word,
Clap'd on the ourwardeye of sickle France,
Hath drawne him from his owne determin'd ayd,
From a resolu'd and honourable warre,
To a most base and vile, concluded peace.
And why rayle I on this Commoditie?
But for because he hath not wooed me yet:
Not that I haue the power to clutch my hand,
When his faire Angels would salute my palme,
But for my hand, as vnattempted yet,
Like a poore begger, raileth on the rich.
Well, whiles I am a begger, I will raile.
And say there is no sin but to be rich:
And being rich, my vertue then shall be,
To say there is no vice, but beggerie:
Since Kings breake faith vpon commoditie,
Gaine be my Lord, for I will worship thee.

Exit.

Actus Secundus

Enter Constance, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Con. Gone to be married? Gone to sweare a peace?
False blood to false blood loyn'd. Gone to be friends?
Shall Lewys haue Blanche, and Blanche those Prouinces?
Is Lewys so, thou hast mispoken, misheard,
Be well aduised, tell ore thy tale againe.
It cannot be, thou do'st but say 'tis so.
I trust I may not trust thee for thy word
Is but the vaine breath of a common man:
Beleeue me, I doe not beleeue thee man.
I haue a Kings oath to the contrary.
Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frighting me,
For I am sicke, and capable of feares,

Opprest with wrongs, and therefore full of feares,
A widow, husbandles, subiect to feares,
And though thou now confesse thou didst not leste
With my vent spirites; I cannot take a Truce,
But they will quake and tremble all this day.
What dost thou meane by shaking of thy head?
Why dost thou looke so sadly on my sonne?
What meanes that hand vpon that breast of thine?
Why holdes thine eie that lamentable hewme,
Like a proud river peering ore his bounds?
Be these sad signes confirmers of thy words?
Then speake againe, not all thy former tale.
But this one word, whether thy tale be true.
Sal. As true as I beleeue you thinke them false,
That giue you cause to proue my saying true.
Con. Oh if thou teach me to beleeue this sorrow,
Teach thou this sorrow, how to make me dye,
And let beleeue, and life encounter so,
As doth the furie of two desperate men,
Which in the very meeting fall, and dye.
Lewys marry Blanche? O boy, then where art thou?
France friend with England, what becomes of me?
Fellow be gone: I cannot brooke thy sight.
This newes hath made thee a most vgly man.
Sal. What other harme haue I good Lady done,
But speke the harme, that is by others done?
Con. Which harme within it selfe so heynous is,
As it makes harmefull all that speake of it.

Ar. I do beseech you Madam be content,
Con. If thou that bidst me be content, wert grim
Vgly, and standrons to thy Mothers wombe,
Full of vnpleasing blois, and sightlesse staines,
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious,
Patch'd with soule Moles, and eye-offending markes,
I would not care, I then would be content,
For then I shou'd not loue thee: no, nor thou
Become thy great birth, nor deserue a Crowne.
But thou art faire, and at thy birth (deere boy)
Nature and Fortune loyn'd to make thee great.
Of Natures gifts, thou mayst with Lillies boast,
And with the halfe-blowne Rose. But Fortune, oh,
She is corrupted, chang'd, and yonne from thee,
Sh'adulterates honestly with iaine Vockle John,
And with her golden hand hath pluckt on France
To tread downe faire respect of Soueraignie,
And made his Maiestie the bawd to theirs.
France is a Bawd to Fortune, and king John,
That strumpet Fortune, that vsurping John:
Tell me thou fellow, is not France forsworne?
Euenom him with words, or get thee gone,
And leaue those woes alone, which I alone
Am bound to vnder-beare.

Sal. Pardon me Madam,
I may not goe without you to the kings.
Con. Thou maiest, thou shalt, I will not go with thee,
For greefe is proud, and makes his owne floope,
To me and to the state of my great greefe,
Let kings assemble: for my greefe's so great,
That no supporter but the huge firme earth
Can hold it vp: here I and sorrowes sit,
Heere is my Throne, bid kings come bow to it.

Alfin

Actus Tertius, Scena prima.

Enter King John, France, Dolphin, Blanch, Eleanor, Philip, Austrey, Constance.

Fran. 'Tis true (faire daughter) and thus blessed day,
Euer in France shall be kept festiuall:
To solemnize this day the glorious sunne
Stayes in his course, and playes the Alchymist,
Turning with splendor of his precious eye
The meager cloddy earth to glittering gold:
The yearely course that brings this day about,
Shall neuer see it, but a holy day.

Conf. A wicked day, and not a holy day.
What hath this day deseru'd? what hath it done,
That it in golden letters should be set
Among the high tides in the Kalender?
Nay, rather turne this day out of the weeke,
This day of shame, oppression, periury.
Or if it must stand still, let wiues with childe
Pray that their burthens may not fall this day,
Left that their hopes prodigiously be crost.
But (on this day) let Sea-men feare no wracke,
No bargaines breake that are not this day made;
This day all things begun, come to ill end,
Yea, for his selfe to hollow falsehood change.

Fra. By heauen Lady, you shall haue no cause
To curse the faire proceedings of this day.
Haue I not pawn'd to you my Maesty?

Conf. You haue beguil'd me with a counterfeit Resembling Maesty, which being touch'd and tride,
Proues valuelesse: you are forsworne, forsworne,
You came in Armes to spill mine enemies blood,
But now in Armes, you strengthen it with yours.
The grappling vigor, and rough frowne of Warre
Is cold in amitie, and painted peace,
And our oppression hath made vp this league.
Arme, arme, you heauens, against these periur'd Kings,
A widdow cries, be husband to me (heauens)
Let not the howres of this vngodly day
Weare out the daies in Peace; but ere Sun-set,
Set armed discord 'twixt these periur'd Kings,
Heare me, Oh, heare me.

Aust. Lady Constance, peace

Conf. War, war, no peace, peace is to me a warre.

O Lymoges, O Anstrin, thou dost shame
That bloody spoyle: thou slave, thou wretch, y coward,
Thou little valiant, great in villanie,
Thou euer strong vpon the stronger side;
Thou Fortunes Champion, that do'st neuer fight
But when her humourous Ladiship is by
To teach thee safety: thou art periur'd too,
And sooth'st vp greatnesse: What a foole art thou,
A ramping foole, to brag, and stamp, and sweare,
Vpon my partie: thou cold blooded slave,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Beene sworne my Souldier, bidding me depend
Vpon thy starres, thy fortune, and thy strength,
And dost thou now fall out to my foes?
Thou weare a Lyons hide, dost it for shame,
And hang a Calues skin on those recreant limbes.

Aust. O that a man should speake those words to me.

Phil. And hang a Calues-skin on those recreant limbs

Aust. Thou dar'st not say so villaine for thy life.

Phil. And hang a Calues-skin on those recreant limbs.
John. We like not this, thou dost forget thy selfe.

Enter Pandulph.

Fra. Hence comes the holy Legat of the Pope.

Pan. Haile you annointed deputies of heauen:

To thee King John my toly errand is:
Pandulph, of faire Milane Cardinall,
And from Pope Innocent the Legate hether,
Doe in his name religiously demand
Why thou against the Church, our holy Mother,
So wilfully dost spurne; and force perforce
Keepe Stephen Langton chosen Archbishop
Of Canterbury from that holy Sea:
This in our foresaid holy Fathers name
Pope Innocent, I doe demand of thee.

John. What earthly name to Interrogatories
Can tast the free breath of a sacred King?
Thou canst not (Cardinall) deuise a name
So slight, vnworthy, and ridiculous
To charge me to an answer, as the Pope.
Tell him this tale, and from the mouth of England,
Adde thus much more, that no Italian Priest
Shall tythe or toll in our dominions.
But as we, vnder heauen, are supream head,
So vnder him that great supremacy
Where we doe reigne, we will alone vphold
Without th'assistance of a mortall hand.
So tell the Pope, all reuerence set apart
To him and his vsur'd authority.

Fra. Brother of England, you blaspheme in this.

John. Though you, and all the Kings of Christendom
Are led so grossely by this meddling Priest,
Dreading the curse that money may buy out,
And by the merit of wilde gold, drosse, dust,
Purchase corrupted pardon of a man,
Who in that sale sells pardon from himselfe:
Though you, and all the rest so grossely led,
This iugling witchcraft with reuennue cherish,
Yet I alone, alone doe me oppose
Against the Pope, and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then by the lawfull power that I haue,
Thou shalt stand curst, and excommunicate,
And blessed shall he be that doth reuolt
From his Allegiance to an heretique,
And meritorious shall that hand be call'd,
Canonized and worship'd as a Saint,
That takes away by any secret course
Thy hatefull life.

Con. O lawfull let it be
That I haue roome with Rome to curse a while,
Good Father Cardinall, cry thou Amen
To my keene curses; for without my wrong
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right:

Pan. There's Law and Warrant (Lady) for my curse.

Conf. And for mine too, when Law can do no right.
Let it be lawfull, that Law barre no wrong:
Law cannot giue my childe his kingdome heere;
For he that holds his Kingdome, holds the Law
Therefore since Law it selfe is perfect wrong,
How can the Law forbid my tongue to curse?

Pand. Philp of France, on perill of a curse,
Let goe the hand of that Arch-heretique,
And raise the power of France vpon his head,
Vnlesse he doe submit himselfe to Rome.

Elea. Look't thou pale France? do not let go thy hand.

Con. Looke to that Déuill, lest that France repent,

And

And by disloyning hands hell lose a soules.

Arch. King Philip, listen to the Cardinall,

Bast. And hing a Calves-skin on his recreant limbs.

Arch. Well husband, I must packer vp these wrongs,
Because,

Bast. Your breeches best may carry them.

John. Philip, what suit thou to the Cardinall?

Con. What should he say, but as the Cardinall?

Dolph. Bethinke you father, for the difference
Is purchase of a deawy curse from Rome,
Or the light losse of England, for a friend:
Forgoe the easier.

Bla. That is the curse of Rome.

Con. O Lewys, stand fast, the devill tempts thee heere
In likenesse of a new yntwummed Bride.

Bla. The Lady Constance speakes not from her faith,
But from her need.

Con. Oh, if thou graunt my need,
Which onely lives but by the death of faith,
That need, must needs inferre this principle,
That faith would live againe by death of need:
O then tread downe my need, and faith mounts vp,
Keepe my need vp, and faith is trodden downe.

John. The king is mouid, and answers not to this.

Con. O be remou'd from him, and answer well.

Arch. Doe so king Philip, hang no more in doubt

Bast. Hing nothing but a Calves skin most sweet loue

Fra. I am perplext, and know not what to say

Pau. What canst thou say, but wilt perplex thee more?
If thou stand excommunicate, and curs'd?

Fra. Good reuerend father, make my person yours,
And tell me how you would bestow your selfes?
This royall hand; and mine are newly knit,
And the coniunction of our inward soules
Married in league, coupled, and link'd together
With all religious strength of sacred vov'es,
The latest breath that gaue the sound of words
Was deepe-sworne faith, peace, amity, true loue
Betweene our kingdomes and your royall selues,
And euen before this truce, but new before,
No longer then we well could wash our hands,
To clasp this royall bargain vp of peace,
Heauen knowes they were besmeard and over-staind
With slaughters pencill; where reuenge did paine
The fearefull difference of incensed kings.
And shall these hands so lately purg'd of blood?
So newly ioyn'd in loue? so strong in both,
Vnyoke this seysure, and this kinde regreete?
Play fast and loose with faith? so rest with heauen,
Make such vnconstant children of our selues
As now againe to snatch our palme from palme:
Vn-sworne faith sworne, and on the marriage bed
Of smiling peace to march a bloody host,
And make a ryot on the gentle brow
Of true sincerity? O holy Sir
My reuerend father, let it not be so;
Out of your grace, deuise, ordaine, impose
Some gentle order, and then we shall be blest
To doe your pleasure, and continue friends.

Pau. All forme is formelesse, Order orderlesse,
Saue what is opposite to Englands loue.
Therefore to Armes, be Champion of our Church,
Or let the Church our mother breathe her curse,
A mothers curse, on her reuoluing sonne:
France, thou maist hold a serpent by the tongue,
A cased Lion by the mortall paw,

A sisting Tyger sister by the tooth,
Then keepe in peace that hand which thou dost hold.

Fra. I may dis-ioyne my hand, but not my faith.

Pau. So mak'st thou faith an enemy to faith,
And like a ciuill waite fess oath to oath,
Thy tongue against thy tongue. O let thy vow
First made to heauen, first be to heauen perform'd,
That is, to be the Champion of our Church,
What since thou sworst, is sworn against thy selfe,
And may not be performed by thy selfe,
For that which thou hast sworne to doe amisse,
Is not amisse when it is truly done.

And being not done, when doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it:
The better Act of purposes mislooke,
Is to mistake again, though indirect,
Yet indirection thereby growes direct,
And falshood, falshood cures, as fire cooles fire
Within the scorched veins of one new burn'd
It is religion that doth make cowers kept,
But thou hast sworn against religion:
By what thou swear'st against the thing thou swear'st,
And mak'st an oath the iuror for thy truth,
Against an oath the truth, thou art vntrue
To swear, swears onely not to be forswore,
Else what a mockerie should it be to swear?
But thou dost swear, onely to be forswore,
And most forswore, to keepe what thou dost swear,
Therefore thy later vov'es, against thy first,
Is in thy selfe rebellion to thy selfe
And better conquest neuer canst thou make,
The same thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against these giddy loofe si ggections
Vpon which better part, our prayers come in,
It thou vouchsafe them. But if not, then know
The penill of our curses light to thee
So heauy, as thou shalt not shake them off
But in despair, dy'st vnder their blacke weight.

Arch. Rebelle on, stir rebellion.

Bast. Will'st not be?

Will not a Calves-skin in stop that mouth of mine?

Dent. Enter Armes.

Blanch. Vpon thy wedding day?

Against the blood that thou hast married?
What, shall our feast be kept with slaughtered men?
Shall braying trumpets, and loud churchish drums
Clamors of hell, be measures to our pomp?
O husband heare me: aye, alacke, how new
Is husband in my mouth? euen for that name
Which till this time my tongue did nere pronounce;
Vpon my knee I beg, goe not to Armes
Against mine Vncle.

Con. O, vpon my knee made hard with kneeling,
I doe pray to thee, thou vertuous Dauphin,
Alter not the doome fore-thought by heauen.

Bla. Now shall I see thy loue, what motiue may
Be stronger with thee, then the name of wife?

Con. That which vpholdeth him, that thee vpholds,
His Honor, Oh thine Honor, Lewys thine Honor.

Dolph. I muse your Maestie doth seeme so cold,
When such profound respects doe pull you on?

Pau. I will denounce a curse vpon his head.

Fra. Thou shalt not need, England, I will fall frō thee.

Con. O faire returne of banish'd Maestie

Ella. O soule reuolt of French inconstancy.

Eng. France, y<sup>e</sup> shalt rue this houre within this houre.

Bast.

Bast. Old Time the clocke tetter, ybald sexton Time
Is it as he will? well then, France shall rue.

Bla. The Sun's orecaft with bloud . faireday adieu,
Which is the side that I must goe withall?
I am with both, each Army hath a hand,
And in their rage, I hauing hold of both,
They whurle a-lunder, and dismember mee.
Husband, I cannot pray that thou maist winne:
Vncle, I needs must pray that thou maist lose:
Father, I may not wish the fortune thine
Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thriue
Who-euer wins, on that side shall I lose
Assured losse, before the match be plaid.

Dolph. Lady, with me, with me thy fortune lies,

Bla. There where my fortune liues, there my life dies

John Cosen, goe draw our puissance together,

France, I am burn'd vp with inflaming wrath,

A rage, whose heat hath this condition;

That nothing can allay, nothing but blood,

The blood and deereft valued blood of France

Era Thy rage shall burne thee vp, & thou shalt turne

To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire

Looke to thy selfe, thou art in jeopardie

John No more then he that threats. To Arms let us hie

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Allarums, Exursions Enter Bastard with Austria's
bead.

Bast. Now by my life, this day grows wondrous hot,
Some aery Denill hovers in the skie,
And pou's downe mischief. Austria's head lye there.

Enter John, Arthur, Hubert

While Philp breathes

John Hubert, keepe this boy Philp make vp,

My Mother is assayled in our Tent

And tane I feare.

Bast My Lord I rescued her,
Her Highnesse is in safety, feare you not

But on my Liege, for very litle paines
Will bring this labor to an happy end.

Exit.

Allarums, excursions, Retreat Enter John, Eleanor, Arthur
Bastard, Hubert, Lords.

John So shall it be. your Grace shall stay behinde
So strongly guarded. Cosen, looke not sad,
Thy Grandame loues thee, and thy Vnkle will
As decre be to thee, as thy father was

Arth. O this will make my mother die with griefe

John. Cosen away for England, haste before,
And ere our comming see thou shake the bags
Of hoording Abbots, imprisioned angells
Set at libertie. the fat ribs of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed vpon.
Vfe our Commission in his vtmost force.

Bast. Bell, Booke, & Candle, shall not drive me back,
When gold and siluer beckes me to come on
I leaue your highnesse. Grandame, I will pray
(If euer I remember to be holy),
For your faire safety: so I Kisse your hand.

Ela. Farewell gentle Cosen

John Coz, farewell.

Ela Come hether little kinsman, harken a worde.

John Come hether Hubert On my gentle Hubert,
We owe thee much: within this wall of flesh
There is a soule counts thee her Creditor,
And with aduantage means to pay thy loue:
And my good frierd, thy voluntary oath
Liues in this bosome, deerey cherished
Giue me thy hand, I had a thing to say,
But I will fit it with some better tone.
By heauen Hubert, I am almost asham'd
To say what good respect I haue of thee

Hub. I am much bounden to your Maiesty

John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet,
But thou shalt haue and creepe time nere so slow,
Yet it shall come, for me to doe thee good
I had a thing to say, but let it goe
The Sunne is in the heauen, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gawdes
To giue me audience If the mid-night bell
Did with his yron tongue, and brayn mouth
Sound on into the drowzie race of night.

If this same were a Church-yard where we stand,
And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs:

Or if that furly spirit melancholy

Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heauy, thicke,

Which else runnes tickling vp and downe the veines,

Making that idiot laughter keepe mens eyes,

And fraime their cheekes to idle merriment,

A passion hatefull to my purposes:

Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,

Heare me without thine eares, and make reply

Without a tongue, vling conceit alone,

Without eyes, eares, and harmefull sound of words

Then, in despiight of brooded watchfull day,

I would into thy bosome poure my thoughts.

But (ah) I will nor, yet I loue thee well,

And by my troth I thinke thou lou'st me well

Hub So well, that what you bid me vnderake,

Though that my death were adiunct to my A&,

By heauen I would doe it

John Doe not I know thou wouldst?

Good Hubert, Hubert, Hubert throw thine eye

On yon young boy. He tell thee what my friend

He is a very serpent in my way,

And wheresoere this foot of mine doth tread,

He lies before me dost thou vnderstand me?

Thou art his keeper.

Hub And He keepe him so,

That he shall not offend your Maiesty.

John Death.

Hub My Lord

John A Graue

Hub He shall not lue.

John. Enough.

I could be merry now, Hubert, I loue thee.

Well, He not say what I intend for thee.

Remember Madam, Fare you well

He send thofe powers o're to your Maiesty.

Ela. My blessing goe with thee

John For England Cosen, goe.

Hubert shall be your man, attend on you
Withal true duetie. On toward Caister, ho.

Exeunt.

Scena

Are not you griev'd that Arthur is his prisoner?

Dol. As heartily as he is glad he hath him

Pan. Your minde is all as youthfull as your blood.

Now heare me speake with a propheticke spirit:

For euen the breath of what I meane to speake,
Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub
Out of the path which shall directly lead
Thy foote to Englands Throne And therefore marke
John hath seriz'd Arthur, and it cannot be,
That whiles warme life playes in thar infants veines,
The mis-plac'd-John should entertaine an houre,
One minute, nay one quiet breath of rest.
A Scepter snatch'd with an vnruely hand,
Must be as boysterously maintain'd as gain'd.
And he that stands vpon a slipp'ry place,
Makes nice of no wilde hold to stay him vp
That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall,
So be it, for it cannot be but so

Dol. But what shall I gaine by yong Arthurs fall?

Pan. You, in the right of Lady Blanch your wife,
May then make all the claime that Arthur did.

Dol. And looke it, life and all, as Arthur did

Pan. How green you are, and fresh in this old world?
John layes you plots the times conspire with you,
For he that steepes his safetie in true blood,
Shall finde but bloodie safety, and vntrue.
This Act so emilly borne shall coole the hearts
Of all his people, and freeze vp their zeale,
That none so small advantage shall step forth
To checke his reigne, but they will cherish it
No naturall exhalation in the skie,
No scope of Nature, no distemper'd day,
No common winde, no custome'd euent,
But they will plucke away his naturall cause,
And call them Meteors, prodigies, and signes,
Abbotuies, presages, and tongues of heaven,
Plainly denouncing vengeance vpon John.

Dol. May be he will not touch yong Arthurs life,
But hold himselfe safe in his prisonment

Pan. O Sir, when he shall heare of your approach,
If that yong Arthur be not gone alreadye,
Euen at that newes he dies: and then the hearts
Of all his people shall reuolt from him,
And kisse the lippes of vnacquainted change,
And picke strong matter of reuolt; and wrath
Out of the bloody fingers ends of John
Me thinkes I see this hurley all on foot;
And O, what better matter breeds for you,
Then I haue nam'd. The Bastard Falconbridge
Is now in England ransacking the Church,
Offending Charity: If but a dozen French
Were there in Armes, they would be as a Call
To traine ten thousand English to their side,
Or, as a little snow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a Mountaine. O noble Dolphine,
Go with me to the King, 'tis wonderfull,
What may be wrought out of their discontent,
Now that their soules are topfull of offence,
For England go; I will whet on the King

Dol. Strong reasons makes strange actions let vs go,
If you say I, the King will not say no.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus, Scena prima.

Enter Hubers and Executioners.

Hub. Heate me these Irons hot, and looke thou stand
Within the Arras. when I strike my foot
Vpon the bosome of the ground, rush forth
And binde the boy, which you shall finde with me
Fast to the chaire: be heedfull hence, and watch

Exec. I hope your warrant will beare out the deed.

Hub. Vnclesly scruples feare not you: looke too't.
Yong Lad come forth; I haue to say with you.

Enter Arthur.

Ar. Good morrow Hubert

Hub. Good morrow, little Prince

Ar. As little Prince, hauing so greata Title
To be more Prince, as may be: you are sad.

Hub. Indeed I haue bene merrier.

Art. 'Mercie on me'

Me thinkes no body should be sad but I
Yet I remember, when I was in France,
Yong Gentlemen would be as sad as night
Onely for wantonnesse by my Christendome,
So I were out of prison, and kept Sheepe
I should be as merry as the day is long:
And so I would be heere, but that I doubt
My Vnckle practises more harme to me:
He is afraid of me, and I of him.

Is it my fault, that I was Geffreys sonne?
No in deede it's not: and I would to heauen
I were your sonne, so you would loue me, Hubert:

Hub. If I talke to him, with his innocent prate
He will awake my mercie, which lies dead:
Therefore I will be sodaine, and dispatch.

Ar. Are you sicke Hubert? you looke pale to day,
Infooth I would you were a little sicke,
That I might sit all night, and watch with you
I warrant I loue you more then you do me.

Hub. His words do take possession of my bosome.
Reade heere yong Arthur How now foolish rheume?
Turning dispiteous torture out of doore?
I must be breefe, least resolution drop
Out at mine eyes, in tender womanish teares.
Can you not reade it? Is it not faire writ?

Ar. Too fairely Hubert, for so foule effect,
Must you with hot Irons, burne out both mine eyes?

Hub. Yong Roy, I must.

Art. And will you?

Hub. And I will.

Art. Haue you the heart? When your head did but ake,

I knit my hand-kercher about your browes
(The best I had, a Princesse wrought it me)
And I did neuer aske it you againe:
And with my hand, at midnight held your head;
And like the watchfull minutes, to the houre,
Still and anon cheer'd vp the heauy time;
Saying, what lacke you? and where lies your griefe?
Or what good loue may I performe for you?
Many a poore mans sonne would haue lyen still,
And nere haue spoke a louing word to you.
But you, at your sicke seruice had a Prince:
Nay, you may thinke my loue was crasue laite;
And call it cunning. Do, and if you will,

b

if

If heaven be pleas'd that you must vse me ill,
Why then you must. Will you put out mine eyes?
These eyes, that neuer did, nor neuer shall
So much as frowne on you.

Hub. I haue sworne to do it

And with hot Irons must I burne them out.

Ar. Ah, none but in this Iron Age, would do it.
The Iron of it selfe, though heare red hot,
Approaching neere these eyes, would drinke my teares,
And quench this fierie indignition,
Euen in the matter of mine innocence:
Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But for containing fire to harme mine eye
Are you more stubborne hard, then hammer'd Iron?
And if an Angell should haue come to me,
And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not haue beleen'd him. no tongue but Huberts.

Hub. Come forth: Do as I bid you do.

Art. O saue me Hubert, saue me. my eyes are out
Euen with the fierce lookes of these bloody men.

Hub. Giue me the Iron I say, and binde him heere.

Art. Alas, what neede you be so boistrous rough?
I will not struggle, I will stand stone still.
For heauen sake Hubert, let men not be bound.
Nay heare me Hubert, drue these men away,
And I will sit as quiet as a Lambe.
I will not stirre, nor winch, nor speake a word,
Nor looke vpon the Iron angerly.
Thrust but these men away, and Ile forgive you,
What euer torment you do put me too.

Hub. Go stand within let me alone with him.

Exe. I am best pleas'd to be from such a deede.

Art. Alas, I then haue chid away my friend,
He hath a sterue looke, but a gentle heart:
Let him come backe, that his compassion may
Giue life to yours.

Hub. Come (Boy) prepare your selfe.

Art. Is there no remedie?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.

Art. O heauen. that there were but a moth in yours,
A graine, a dust, a gnat, a wandering haire,
Any annoyance in that precious sense:
Then feeling what small things are boysterous there,
Your wilde intent must needs seeme horrible

Hub. Is this your promise? Go too, hold your tooong

Art. Hubert, the viterance of a brace of tongues,
Must needes want pleading for a paire of eyes.

Let me not hold my tongue let me not Hubert,

Or Hubert, if you will cut out my tongue;

So I may keepe mine eyes. O spare mine eyes,

Though to no vse, but still to looke on you.

Loe, by my troth, the Instrument is cold,
And would not harme me.

Hub. I can heate it, Boy.

Art. No, in good sooth the fire is dead with griefe,
Being create for comfort, to be vs'd
In vnderferued extreames See else your selfe,
There is no malice in this burning cole,
The breath of heauen, hath blowne his spirit out,
And strew'd repentant ashes on his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can reuue it Boy.

Art. And if you do, you will but make it bluish,
And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert
Nay, it perchance will sparkle in your eyes:
And, like a dogge that is compell'd to fight,
Snatch at his Master that doth tarre him on.

All things that you should vse to do me wrong
Deny their office: onely you do lacke
That mercie, which fierce fire, and Iron extends,
Creatures of note for mercy, lacking vses.

Hub. Well, see to liue: I will not touch thine eye,
For all the Treasure that thine Vnckle owes,
Yet am I sworne, and I did purpose, Boy,
With this same very Iron, to burne them out.

Art. O now you looke like Hubert. All this while
You were disguis'd.

Hub. Peace: no more. Adieu,
Your Vnckle must not know but you are dead.
He fill these dogged Spies with false reports:
And, pretty childe, sleepe doubtlesse, and secure,
That Hubert for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.

Art. O heauen! I thanke you Hubert.

Hub. Silence, no more; go closely in with mee,
Much danger do I vndergo for thee. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter John, Pembroke, Salisbury, and other, Lords.

John. Heere once againe we sit once against crown'd
And look'd vpon, I hope, with chearefull eyes

Pem. This once again (but that your Highnes pleas'd)
Was once superfluous: you were Crown'd before,
And that high Royalty was nere pluck'd off.
The faiths of men, nere stained with reuolt:
Fresh expectation troubled not the Land
With any long'd-for-change, or better State.

Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pompe,
To guard a Title, that was rich before;
To gilde refined Gold, to punt the Lilly;
To throw perfume on the Violet,
To smoothe the yce, or adde another hew
Vnto the Raine-bow; or with Taper-light
To seeke the beauteous eye of heauen to garnish,
Is wastefull, and ridiculous exesse.

Pem. But that your Royall pleasure must be done,
This acte, it is an ancient tale new told,
And, in the last repeating, troublesome,
Being vrged at a time vnseasonable.

Sal. In this the Anticke, and well noted face
Of plaine old forme, is much disfigured,
And like a shifted winde vnto a faile,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about,
Startles, and frights consideration:
Makes sound opinion sicke, and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe

Pem. When Workemen strue to do better then wel,
They do confound their skill in couterousnesse,
And oftentimes excusing of a fault,
Doth make the fault the worse by th'excuse.
As patches set vpon a little breach,
Discredite more in hiding of the fault,
Then did the fault before it was so patch'd.

Sal. To this effect, before you were new crown'd
We breath'd our Councell. but it pleas'd your Highnes
To ouer-bear it, and we are all well pleas'd,
Since all, and every part of what we would Doth make a stand, at what your Highnesse will

John

Ioh. Some reasons of this double Corronation
I haue posselt you with, and thinke them strong.
And more, more strong, then lesser is my feare
I shall indue you with. Meane time, but aske
What you would haue reform'd, that is not well,
And well shall you perceiue, how willingly
I will both heare, and grant you your requests.

Pem. Then I, as one that am the tongue of these
To found the purposes of all their hearts,
Both for my selfe, and them but chiefe of all
Your safety. for the which, my selfe and them
Bend their best studies, heartily request
Th' infranchisement of Arthur, whose restraint
Doth moue the murmuring lips of discontent
To breake into this dangerous argument.
If what in rest you haue, in right you hold,
Why then your feares, which (as they say) attend
The steppes of wrong, should moue you to mew vp
Your tender kinsman, and to choake his dayes
With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich aduantage of good exercise,
That the times enemies may not haue this
To grace occasions let it be our suite,
That you haue bid vs aske his libertie,
Which for our goods, we do no further aske,
Then, whereupon our weale on you depending,
Counts it your weale he haue his libertie

Enter Hubert

John. Let it be so. I do commit his youth
To your direction. Hubert, what newes with you?

Pem. This is the man should do the bloody deed.
He shew'd his warrant to a friend of mine,
The image of a wicked heynous fault
Lies in his eye that close aspect of his,
Do shew the mood of a much troubled brest.
And I do fearefully beleue 'tis done,
What we so feare d he had a charge to do

Sal. The colour of the King doth come, and go
Betweene his purpose and his conscience,
Like Herald's 'twixt two dreadfull batailles set.
His passion is so ripe, it needs must breake.

Pem. And when it breakes, I feare will issue thence
The foule corruption of a sweet childes death.

John. We cannot hold mortalities strong hand
Good Lords, although my will to giue, is liuing,
The suite which you demand is gone, and dead.
He tels vs Arthur is deceas'd to night

Sal. Indeed we fear d his sicknesse was past cure

Pem. Indeed we heard how neere his death he was,
Before the childe himselfe felt he was sicke:
This must be answer'd either heere, or hence.

Ioh. Why do you bend such solemne browes on me?
Thinke you I beare the Sheeres of destiny?
Haue I commandement on the pulse of life?

Sal. It is apparant foule-play, and 'tis shame
That Greatnesse should so grossely offer it;
So thrue it in your game, and so farewell.

Pem. Stay yet (Lord Salisbury) Ile go with thee,
And finde th' inheritance of this poore childe,
His little kingdome of a forced graue.
That blood which ow'd the breath of all this Ile,
Three foot of it doth hold, bad world the while:
This must not be thus borne, this will breake but
To all our sorrowes, and ere long I doubt.

Exeunt

Jo. They burn in indignation. I repent: Enter Mesf.
There is no sure foundation set on blood:

No certaine life atchieu'd by others death:
A fearefull eye thou hast. Where is that blood,
That I haue seene inhabite in those checkes?
So soule a skie, cleeres not without a storme,
Poure downe thy weather: how goes all in France?

Mesf. From France to England, neuer such a powre,
For any forraigne preparation,
Was leuied in the body of a land.

The Copie of your speede is learn'd by them.
For when you should be told they do prepare,
The rydings comes, that they are all arriv'd

Ioh. Oh where hath our Intelligence bin drunk?
Where hath it slept? Where is my Mothers care?
That such an Army could be drawne in France,
And she not heare of it?

Mesf. My Liege, her care
Is stop't with dust: the first of Aprill d'ide
Your noble motier, and as I heare, my Lord,
The Lady Constance in a frenzie d'ide
Three dayes before: but this from Rumors tongue
I idely heard: if true, or false I know not

John. With-hold thy speed, dreadfull Occasion
O make a league with me, 'till I haue pleas'd
My discontented Peeres: What? Mother dead?
How wildly then walkes my Estate in France?
Vnder whose conduct came those powres of France,
That thou for truth giu'st out are landed heere?

Mesf. Vnder the Dolphin

Enter Bastard and Peter of Pomfret.

Ioh. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill rydings. Now? What sayes the world
To your proceedings? Do not seeke to stuffe
My head with more ill newes: for it is full.

Bast. But if you be a-feard to heare the worst,
Then let the worst vn-heard, fall on your head

John. Beare with me Cosen, for I was amaz'd
Vnder the tide, but now I breath againe
Aloft the flood, and can giue audience
To any tongue, speake it of what it will

Bast. How I haue sped among the Clergy men,
The summes I haue collected shall expresse.

But as I trauail'd hither through the land,
I finde the people strangely fantasied,
Posselt with rumors, full of idle dreames,
Not knowing what they feare, but full of feare.
And here's a Prophet that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heeles
To whom he sung in rude harsh sounding rimes,
That ere the next Ascension day at noone,
Your Highnes should deliuer vp your Crowne.

John. Thou idle Dreamer, wherefore didst thou so?

Pet. Fore-knowing that the truth will fall out so.

John. Hubert, away with him: imprison him,
And on that day at noone, whereon he sayes
I shall yeld vp my Crowne, let him be hang'd
Deliuer him to safety, and returne,
For I must vse thee O my gentle Cosen,
Hear'st thou the newes abroad, who are arriv'd?

Bast. The French (my Lord) mens mouths are ful of it
Besides I met Lord Bigo, and Lord Salisbury
With eyes as red as new enkindled fire,
And others more, going to seeke the graue
Of Arthur, whom they say is kill'd to night, on your

I. Gentle kinsman, go (suggestion)
And trust thy selfe into their Companies,

I haue a way to winne their loues againe:

Bring them before me.

Basf. I will seeke them out

Iohn. Nay, but make haste. the better foote before

O, let me haue no subiect enemies,

When aduerser Forreyners affright my Townes

With dreadfull pompe of flourinasion.

Be Mercurie, set feathers to thy heeles,

And flye (like thought) from them, to me againe.

Basf. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed. Exit

Iohn. Spoke like a sprightfull Noble Gentleman
Go after him. for he perhaps shall neede
Some Messenger betwixt me, and the Peeres,
And be thou hee.

Mef. With all my heart, my Liege.

Iohn. My mother dead?

Enter Hubert.

Hub. My Lord, they say fise Moones were seene to Foure fixed, and the fift did whirle about (night.
The other foure, in wondrous motion.

Ioh. Fise Moones?

Hub. Old men, and Beldames, in the streets
Do prophesie vpon it dangerously.
Yong Arthurs death is common in their mouthis,
And when they talke of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the eare.
And he that speakes, doth gripe the hearers wrist,
Whilst he that heares, makes fearefull action
With wrinkled browes, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I saw a Smith stand with his hammer (thus)
The whilst his Iron did on the A wile coole,
With open mouth swallowing a Taylors newes,
Who with his Sheeres, and Measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his noble haste
Had falsely thrust vpon contrary feete,
Told of a many thousand warlike French,
That were embattaile, and rank'd in Kent.
Another leane, vnwashed Artificer,
Cuts off his tale, and talkes of Arthurs death.

Ioh. Why seekst thou to possesse me with these feares?
Why vrgest thou so oft yong Arthurs death?

Thy hand hath murdered him. I had a mighty cause
To wish him dead, but thou hadst none to kill him.

H. No had (my Lord)? why, did you not prouoke me?

Iohn. It is the curse of Kings, to be attended
By slaues, that take their humors for a warrant,
To breake within the bloody house of life,
And on the winking of Authoritie
To vnderstand a Law, to know the mearing
Of dangerous Maiesty, when perchance it frownes
More vpon humor, then aduis'd respect.

Hub. Heere is your hand and Seale for what I did.

Ioh. Oh, when the last accompt twixt heauen & earth
Is to be made, then shall this hand and Seale
Witnesse against vs to damnation.
How oft the sight of meanes to do ill deeds,
Make deeds ill done? Hadst not thou bene by,
A fellow by the hand of Nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deede of shame,
This murder had not come into my minde.
But taking note of thy abhor'd Aspect,
Finding thee fit for bloody villanie
Apt, liable to be employ'd in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthurs death.
And thou, to be erdeered to a King,
Made it no conscience to destroy a Prince.

Hub. My Lord.

Ioh. Hadst thou but shooke thy head, or made a pause
When I spake darkely, what I purposed:
Or turn'd an eye of doubt vpon my face;
As bid me tell my tale in expresse words:
Deepe shame had struck me dumbe, made me break off,
And those thy feares, might haue wrought feares in me.
But, thou didst vnderstand me by my signes,
And didst in signes againe parley with signe,
Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent,
And consequently, thy rude hand to acte
The deed, which both our tongues held vild to name.
Out of my sight, and neuer see me more:
My Nobles leaue me, and my State is braued,
Euen at my gates, with ranks of fortaigne powres;
Nay, in the body of this fleshy Land,
This kingdome, this Confinde of blood, and breathe
Hostilitie, and ciuill tumult reignes
Betweene my conscience, and my Cosins death.

Hub. Arme you against your other enemies:
Ile make a peace betweene your soule, and you.
Yong Arthur is aliue. This hand of mine
Is yet a maiden, and an innocent hand,
Not painted with the Crimson spots of blood
Within this bosome, neuer entered yet
The dreadfull motion of a murderous thought,
And you haue slander'd Nature in my forme,
Which how soeuer rude exteriorly,
Is yet the couer of a fayrer minde,
Then to be butcher of an innocent childe.

Iohn. Doth Arthur liue? O hast thee to the Peeres, Throw this report on their incens'd rage,
And make them tame to their obedience.
Forgiue the Comment that my passion made
Vpon thy feature, for my rage was blinde,
And soule imaginarie eyes of blood
Presented thee more heinous then thou art.
Oh, answer not, but to my Closset bring:
The angry Lords, with all expedient hast,
I conuince thee but slowly: run more fast.

Exeunt.

Scœna Tertia.

Enter Arthur on the walls.

Ar. The Wall is high, and yet will I leape downe.
Good ground be pittifull, and hurt me not:
There's few or none do know me, if they did,
This Ship-boyes semblance hath disguis'd me quite.
I am afraid, and yet Ile venture it.
If I get downe, and do not breake my limbes;
Ile finde a thousand shifts to get away;
As good to dye, and go; as dye, and stay.
Oh me, my Vnckles spirit is in these stones,
Heauen take my soule, and England keep my bones. Dies

Enter Pembroke, Salisbury, & Bigot

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at S. Edmondsbury,
It is our safetie, and we must embrace
This gentle offer of the perillous time.

Pem. Who brought that Letter from the Cardinal?

Sal. The Count Meloone, a Noble Lord of France,
Whose priuate with me of the Dolphines loue,
Is much more generall, then these lines import.

Big.

Big. To morrow morning let vs meete him then,
Sal. Or rather then let forward, for 'twill be
Two long dayes iourney (Lords) ere we meete.

Enter Bastard.

Bast. Once more to day well met, distemper'd Lords,
The King by me requests your presence straight.

Sal. The king hath dispossest himselfe of vs,
We will not lyne his thin-bestaigned cloake
With our pure Honor. nor attend the foote
That leaues the print of blood where ere it walkes
Returne, and tell him so - we know the worst.

Bast. What ere you thinke, good words I thinke were best.

Sal. Our greefes, and not our manners reason now.

Bast. But there is litle reason in your greefe:
Therefore were reason you had manners now.

Pem. Sir, sir, impatience hath his priuledge.

Bast. 'Tis true, to hurt his master, no mans else.

Sal. This is the prison: What is he lyes heere?

P. Oh death, made proud with pure & princely beuty,
The earth had nog a hole to hide this dede.

Sal. Murder, as hating what himselfe hath done,
Doth lay it open to vrgo on reuenge.

Big. Or when he doom'd this Beautie to a graue,
Found it too precious Princely, for a graue.

Sal. Sir Richard, what thinke you? you haue beheld,
Or haue you read, or heard, or could you thinke?

Or do you almost thinke, although you see,
That you do see? Could thought, without this object

Forme such another? This is the very top,
The height, the Crest. or Crest vnto the Crest
Of murders Armes: This is the bloodiest shame,
The wildest Sauagery, the vilest stroke
That euer wall-ey'd wrath, or staring rage
Presented to the teares of soft remorse.

Pem. All murders past, do stand excus'd in this
And this so sole, and so vnmatcheable,
Shall giue a holinesse, a puritie,
To the yet vnbegotten sinne of times;
And proue a deadly blood-shed, but a iest,
Exampl'd by this heynous spectacle.

Bast. It is a damned, and a bloody worke,
The gracelesse action of a heavy hand,
If that it be the worke of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the worke of any hand?
We had a kinde of light, what would ensue:
It is the shamefull worke of Huberts hand,
The practice, and the purpose of the king:
From whose obedience I forbid my soule,
Kneeling before this ruine of sweete life,
And breathing to his breathlesse Excellence
The Incense of a Vow, a holy Vow.
Neuer to taste the pleasures of the world.
Neuer to be infected with delight,
Nor conuersant with Ease, and Idleness,
Till I haue set a glory to this hand,
By giuing it the worship of Reuenge.

Pem. Big. Our soules religiously confirme thy words.

Enter Hubert

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste, in seeking you,
Arburr doth lue, the king hath sent for you.

Sal. Oh he is bold, and blushes not at death,
Auant thou hatefull villan, get thee gone. (the Law?)

Hu. I am no villaine. Sal. Must I rob

Bast. Your sword's bright sir, put it vp againe.

Sal. Not till I sheath it in a murderers skinn!

Hub. Stand backe Lord Salisbury, stand backe I say
By heauen, I thinke my sword's as sharpe as yours.

I would not haue you (Lord) forget your selfe,
Nor tempt the danger of my true defence;

Least I, by marking of your rage, forget your Worth, your Greatnesse, and Nobility.

Big. Out dunghill - dar'st thou braue a Nobleman?

Hub. Not for my life: But yet I dare defend
My innocent life against an Emperor.

Sal. Thou art a Murderer.

Hub. Do not proue me so:
Yet I am none. Whose tongue so ere speakes false,
Not truely speakes who speakes not truely, Lies.

Pem. Cutch him to peeces

Bast. Keepe the peace, I say

Sal. Standby, or I shall gaul you Faulconbridge.

Bast. Thou wert better gaul the diuell Salisbury.
If thou but frowne on me, or stirre thy foote,
Or teach thy haste spleene to do me shame,
He strike thee dead. Put vp thy sword betime,
Or Ile so maule you, and your resting-Iron,
That you shall thinke the duell is come from hell.

Big. What wilt thou do, renowned Faulconbridge?
Second a Villaine, and a Murderer?

Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none.

Big. Who kill'd this Prince?

Hub. 'Tis not an houre since I left him well.
I honour'd him, I lou'd him, and will weep
My date of life out, for his sweete lues losse.

Sal. Trust not those cunning vases of his eyes,
For villanie is not without such theathie,
And he, long traded in it, makes it seeme
Like Riuer of remorse and innocencie.
Away with me, all you whose soules abhorre
Th'vncleanly saouours of a Slaughter-house,
For I am stifled with this smell of sinne

Big. Away, toward Barle, to the Bishopps there.

P. There tel the king, he may inquire vs our Ex Lords.

Ba. Here s a good world knew you of this faire work?
Beyond the infinite and boundlesse reach of merle,
(If thou didst this deed of death) art y damnd Hubert,

Hub. Do but heare me sir.

Bast. Ha? He tell thee what.

Thou art damn'd as blacke, nay nothing is so blacke,
Thou art more deepe damnd then Prince Lucifer:
There is not yet so vgly a fiend of hell
As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this childe.

Hub. Vpon my soule

Bast. If thou didst but consent

To this most cruell Act do but dispaire,
And if thou want'st a Cord, the smallest thred
That euer Spider twisted from her wombe
Will serue to strangle thee. A rush will be a beame,
To hang thee on. Or wouldst thou drowne thy selfe,
Put but a little water in a spoone,
And it shall be as all the Ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villaine vp.
I do suspect thee very greuously.

Hub. If I in act, consent, or sinne of thought,
Be guiltie of the stealing that sweete breath
Which was embowded in this beauteous clay,
Let hell want paines enough to torture me:
I left him well.

Bast. Go, beate him in thine armes:
amamaz'd me thinke, and loose my way
Among the thornes, and dangers of this world!

The life and death of King John.

How easie dost thou take all England vp;
From forth this morcell of dead Royaltie?
The life, the right, and truth of all this Realme
Is fled to heaven: and England now is left
To tug and scramble, and to part by th teeth
The vn-owed interest of proud swelling State:
Now, for the bare-pitche bone of Maiesty,
Doth dogged warre bristle his angry crest,
And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace:
Now Powers from home, and discontents at home
Meet in one line: and vast confusion waites
As doth a Rauens on a sicke-falne beast,
The imminent decay of wrestled pompe.
Now happy he, whose cloake and center can Hold out this tempest. Beare away that childe,
And follow me with speed: Ile to the King:
A thousand businesses are brieft in hand,
And heaven it selfe doth frowne vpon the Land.

Exit.

Actus Quartus, Scena prima.

Enter King John and Pandolph, attendants.

K. John. Thus haue I yeelded vp into your hand
The Circle of my glory.

Pan. Take againe
From this my hand, as holding of the Pope
Your Soueraigne, greatnesse and authoritie.

John. Now keep your holy word, go meet the French,
And from his holinesse vse all your power
To stop their marches fore we are enflam'd:
Our discontented Countiees doe reuolt:
Our people quarrell with obediences,
Swearing Allegiance, and the loue of soule
To stranger-bloud, to forren Royaltie;
This inundation of mistempred humor,
Rests by you onely to be qualified.
Then pause not: for the present time's so sicke,
That present medicine must be ministred,
Or ouerthrow incurable ensues.

Pan. It was my breath that blew this Tempest vp.
Vpon your stubborn v'sage of the Pope:
But since you are a gentle conuerter,
My tongue shall hush againe this storme of warre,
And make faire weather in your blustering land:
On this Ascension day, remember well,
Vpon your oath of seruice to the Pope,
Goe I to make the French lay downe their Armes.

Exit.

John. Is this Ascension day I did not the Prophet
Say, that before Ascension day at noone,
My Crowne I should giue off? euen so I haue:
I did suppose it should be on constraint,
But (heau'n be thank'd) it is but voluntary.

Enter Bassard.

Bass. All Kent hath yeelded: nothing there holds out
But Dover Castle: London hath recei'd
Like a kinde Host, the Dolphin and his powers.
Your Nobles will not heare you, but are gone
To offer seruice to your enemy:
And wilde amazement hurries vp and downe
The little number of your doubtfull friends.

John. Would not my Lords returne to me againe
After they heard yong Arthur was aliue?

Bass. They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty Casket, where the Iewell of life
By some damnd hand was rob'd, and tane away.

John. That villaine Habers told me he did liue.
Bass. So on my soule he did, for ought he knew:
But wherefore doe you droope? why looke you sad?
Be great in ad, as you haue beene in thought:
Let not the world see feare and sad distrust
Gouerne the motion of a kingly eye:

Be stirring as the time, be fire with fire,
Threaten the threatner, and out-face the brow
Of bragging horror: So shall inferior eyes
That borrow their behauiours from the great,
Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntlesse spirit of resolution.

Away, and glister like the god of warre
When he intendeth to become the field:
Shew boldnesse and aspiring confidence:
What, shall they seeke the Lion in his denne,
And fright him there? and make him tremble there?
Oh let it not be said: forrage, and runne
To meet displeasure farther from the dores,
And grapple with him ere he come so nye.

John. The Legat of the Pope hath beene with mee,
And I haue made a happy peace with mee,
And he hath promis'd to dismisse the Powers
Led by the Dolphin.

Bass. Oh inglorious league:
Shall we vpon the footing of our land,
Send sayre-play-orders, and make conprimise,
Insinuation, parley, and base truce
To Armes Inuasiue? Shall a beardlesse boy,
A cockred-silken wanton braue our fields,
And flesh his spirit in a warre-like soyle,
Mocking the ayre with colours idly spred,
And finde no checke? Let vs my Liege to Armes.
Perchance the Cardinall cannot make your peace,
Or if he doe, let it at least be said
They saw we had a purpose of defence.

John. Haue thou the ordering of this present time.
Bass. Away then with good courage. yet I know
Our Partie may well meet a rowder foe.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter (as Armes) Dolphin, Salisbury, Melborne, Pembroke, Bigot, Soldiers.

Dol. My Lord Melborne, let this be coppied out,
And keepe it safe for our remembrance:
Returne the president to these Lords againe,
That hauing our faire order written downe,
Both they and we, perusing ore these notes
May know wherefore we tooke the Sacrament,
And keepe our faithes firme and inuolable.
Sal. Vpon our sides it neuer shall be broken.
And Noble Dolphin, albeit we sweare
A voluntary zeale, and an vn-urg'd Faith
To your proceedings: yet belceue me Prince,
I am not glad that such a fore of Time
Should seeke a plaster by contemn'd reuolt,
And heale the inueterate Canker of one wound,

By

By making many : Oh it grieues my soule,
That I must draw this meedle from my side
To be a widow-maker : oh, and there
Where honourable rescue, and defence
Cries out vpon the name of Salisbury.
But such is the infection of the time,
That for the health and Physicke of our right,
We cannot deale but with the very hand
Of sterne Iniustice, and confus'd wrong :
And is't not pity, (oh my grieued friends)
That we, the sonnes and children of this Isle,
Was borne to see so sad an houre as this
Wherein we step after a stranger, march
Vpon her gentle bosom, and fill vp
Her Enemies ranks ? I must withdraw, and weepe
Vpon the spot of this inforced cause,
To grace the Gentry of a Land remote,
And follow vnacquainted colours heere.
What heere ? O Nation that thou couldst remove,
That Neptunes Armes who clippeth thee about,
Would beare thee from the knowledge of thy selfe,
And cripple thee vnto a Pagan shore,
Where these two Christian Armies might combine
The blood of malice, in a vaine of league,
And not to spend it so vn neighbourly.

Dolph. A noble temper dost thou shew in this,
And great affections wrastring in thy bosome
Doth make an earth-quake of Nobility :
Oh, what a noble combat hast fought
Between compulsion, and a braue respect :
Let me wipe off this honourable dewe,
That sliuerly doth progresse on thy cheekes :
My heart hath melted at a Ladies teares,
Being an ordinary Inundation
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This showre, blowne vp by tempest of the soule,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd
Then had I seene the vaultie top of heauen
Figur'd quite ore with burning Meteors,
Lift vp thy brow (renowned Salisbury)
And with a great heart heaue away this storme -
Commend these waters to those baby-eyes
That neuer saw the giant-world enrag'd,
Nor met with Fortune, other then at feasts,
Full warme of blood, of mirth, of gossiping
Come, come, for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deepe
Into the purse of rich prosperity
As Lewis himselfe so (Nobles) shall you all,
That knit your sinewes to the strength of mine.

Enter Pandulpho.

And euen there, methinkes an Angell spake,
Looke where the holy Legate comes apace,
To giue vs warrant from the hand of heauer,
And on our actions set the name of right
With holy breath

Pand. Haile noble Prince of France :
The next is this King John hath reconcil'd Himselfe to Rome, his spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy Church,
The great Metropolis and Sea of Rome
Therefore thy threatening Colours now winde vp,
And tame the sauage spirit of wilde warre,
That like a Lion fostered vp at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace,
And be no further harmefull then in showe.

Dol. Your Grace shall pardon me, I will not backe :

I am too high-borne to be propoosed
To be a secondary at controll,
Or vsfull seruing-man, and Instrument
To any Soueraigne State throughout the world.
Your breath first kindled the dead coale of warres,
Betweene this chafuz'd kingdom and my selfe,
And brought in matter that should seed this fire ;
And now 'tis farre too huge to be blowne out
With that same weake winde, which enkindled it :
You taught me how to know the face of right,
Acquainted me with interest to this Land,
Yea, thrust this enterprize into my heart,
And come ye now to tell me John hath made
His peace with Rome ? what is that peace to mee ?
I (by the honour of my marriage bed)
After yong Arthur, claime this Land for mine,
And now it is halfe conquer'd, must I backe,
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome ?
Am I Romes slaue ? What penny hath Rome borre ?
What men provided ? What munition sent To vnder-prop this Action ? Is't not I
That vnder-goe this charge ? Who else but I,
And such as to my claime are liable,
Sweat in this businesse, and maintaine this warre ?
Haue I not heard these Islanders shout out
Vive le Roy, as I haue bank'd their Townes ?
Haue I not heere the best Cards for the game
To winne this easie match, plaid for a Crowne ?
And shall I now giue ore the yeelded Set ?
No no, on my soule it neuer shall be said,

Pand. You looke but on the out-side of this worke -

Dol. Out-side or in-side, I will not returne
Till my attempt so much be glorified,
As to my ample hope was promised,
Before I drew this gallant head of warre,
And cull'd these fiery spirits from the world
To out looke Conquest, and to winne renowne
Euen in the lawes of danger, and of death.
What lusty Trumpet thus doth summon vs ?

Enter Bastard

Bast. According to the faire-play of the world,
Let me haue audience. I am sent to speake.
My holy Lord of Millane, from the King
I come to learne how you haue dealt for him
And, as you answer, I doe know the scope
And warrant limited vnto my tongue.

Pand. The Dolphin is too wilfull opposite
And will not temporize with my intreaties.
He flatly saies, hee li not lay downe his Armes

Bast. By all the blood that euer fury breath'd,
The youth saies well Now heare our Engl/b King,
For thus his Royaltie doth speake in me :
He is prepar'd, and reason to he should,
This apish and vnmanerly approach,
This harness'd Maske, and vnaduis'd Revell,
This vn-heard sawciness and boyish Troupes,
The King doth smile at, and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish warre, this Pigmy Armes
From out the circle of his Territories
That hand which had the strength, euen at your dore,
To cudgell you, and make you take the hatch,
To diuelike Buckets in concealed Weller,
To crowch in litter of your stable planks,
To lye like pawnes, lock'd vp in chests and trunks,
To hug with swine, to seeke sweet safety out
In vaults and prisons, and to thrill and shake,

Euen

Euen at the crying of your Nations crow,
Thinking this voyce an armed Englishman,
Shall that victorious hand be feeble heere,
That in your Chambers gaue you chastisement?
No know the gallant Monarch is in Armes,
And like an Eagle, o're his ayerie towres,
To sowle annoyance that comes neere his Nest;
And you degenerate, you ingrate Reuolts,
you bloody Nero's, ripping vp the wombe
Of your deere Mother-England. blush for shame.
For your owne Ladies, and pale-visag'd Maides,
Like Amazons, come tripping after drummes:
Their thimbles into armed Gantlets change,
Their Needl's to Lances, and their gentle hearts
To fierce and bloody inclination

Dol There end thy braue, and turn thy face in peace,
We grant thou canst out-scold vs. For thee well,
We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabler.

Par. Giue me leaue to speake.

Basf. No, I will speake.

Dol We will attend to neyther:
Strike vp the drummes, and let the tongue of warre
Pleade for our interest, and our being heere
Basf. Indeepe your drums being beaten, wil cry out;
And so shall you, being beaten Do but start
An eccho with the clamor of thy drumme,
And euen at hand, a drumme is readie brad'd,
That shall reuerberate all, as lowd as thine
Sound but nother, and another shall (As lowd as thine) rattle the Welkins eare,
And mocke the deepe mouth'd Thunder. for at hand
(Not trusting to this halting Legate heere, Whom he hath vs'd rather for sport, then neede)
Is warlike John: and in his fore-head sits
A bare-rib'd death, whose office is this day
To feast vpon whole thousands of the French.

Dol Strike vp our drummes, to finde this danger out.

Basf. And thou shalt finde it (Dolphin) do not doubt
Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Alarums. Enter John and Hubert.

John. How goes the day with vs? oh tell me Hubert.

Hub. Badly I ferre, how fares your Maiesie?

John This Feauer that hath troubled me so long,
Lyes heaue on me oh, my heart is sicke.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes My Lord your valiant kinsman Falconbridge,
Desires your Maiesie to leaue the field,
And send him word by me, which way you go.

John. Tell him toward Swinsford, to the Abbey there.

Mes. Be of good comfort for the great supply,
That was expected by the Dolphin heere,
Are wrack'd three nights ago on Goodwin sands.
This newes was brought to Richard but euen now,
The French fight coldly, and retyre themselves.

John. Aye me, this tyrant Feauer burnes mee vp,
And will not let me welcome this good newes
Set on toward Swinsford to my Litter straight,
Weaknesse possesseth me, and I am faint.

Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, and Bigot.

Sal. I did not thinke the King so stor'd with friends.

Pem. Vp once againe: put spirit in the French,
If they miscarry: we miscarry too.

Sal. That misbegotten duell Falconbridge,
In spight of spight, alone vpholds the day.

Pem. They say King John sore sick, hath left the field.

Enter Meloun wounded

Mel. Lead me to the Reuolts of England heere.

Sal. When we were happie, we had other names.

Pem. It is the Count Meloune

Sal. Wounded to death.

Mel. Fly Noble English, you are bought and sold,
Vnthred the rude eye of Rebellion,
And welcome home againe discarded faith,
Seeke out King John, and fall before his secte:
For if the French be Lords of this loud day,
He meanes to recompence the paines you take,
By cutting off your heads. Thus hath he sworne,
And I with him, and many moe with mee,
Vpon the Altar at S. Edmundsbury,
Euen on that Altar, where we swore to you
Deere Amity, and euerlasting loue.

Sal. May this be possible? May this be true?

Mel Hue I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life,
Which bleeds away, euen as a forme of waxe
Resolueth from his figure gainst the fire?
What in the world should make me now deceiue,
Since I must loose the vse of all deceite?
Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must dye heere, and liue hence, by Truth?
I say againe, if Lewis do win the day,
He is forsworne, if eie those eyes of yours
Behold another day breake in the East:
But euen this night, whose blacke contagious breath
Already smoakes about the burning Crest
Of the old, feeble, and day wearied Sunne,
Euen this ill night, your breathing shall expire,
Paying the fine of rated Treachery,
Euen with a treacherous fine of all your liues.
If Lewis, by your assistance win the day,
Commend me to one Hubert, with your King;
The loue of him, and this respect besides
(For that my Grandfire was an Englishman)
Awakes my Conscience to confesse all this.
In lieu whereof, I pray you beare me hence
From forth the noise and rumour of the Field;
Where I may thinke the remnant of my thoughts
In peace: and part this bodie and my soule
With contemplation, and deuout desires.

Sal We do beleue thee, and bestrew my soule,
But I do loue the fauour, and the forme
Of this most faire occasion, by the which
We will vntread the steps of damned flight,
And like a bared and retired Flood,
Leaung our ranknesse and irregular course,
Stoope lowe within those bounds we haue ore-look'd,
And calmly run on in obedience
Euen to our Ocean, to our great King John
My arme shall giue thee helpe to beare thee hence,

For

For I do see the cruell pangs of death
Right in thine eye. Away, my friends, new flight,
And happie newnesse, that intends old right. Exeunt

Scena Quinta.

Enter Dolphin, and his Train

Dol. The Sun of heaven (me thought) was loth to set,
But staid, and made the Western Welkin bluish,
When English measure backward their owne ground
In faint Retire. Oh brauely came we off,
When with a volley of our needlesse shot,
After such bloody toile, we bid good night,
And woo'd our tottering colours clearly vp,
Last in the field, and almost Lords of it.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Where is my Prince, the Dolphin?

Dol. Heere what newes?

Mes. The Count Meloun is slaine The English Lords
By his perswasion, are againe false off,
And your supply, which you have wish'd so long,
Are cast away, and sunke on Goodwin sands

Dol. Ah fowle, shrew'd newes, Beshrew thy very
I did not thinke to be so sad to night (hart)
As this hath made me. Who was he that said
King John did flie an houre or two before
The stumbling night did part our wearie powres?

Mes. Who euer spoke it, it is true my Lord

Dol. Well keepe good quarter, & good care to night,
The day shall not be vp so soone as I,
To try the faire aduventure of tomorrow. Exeunt

Scena Sexta.

Enter Bastard and Hubert, severally.

Hub. Whose there? Speake ho, speake quickly, or I shoote.

Bast. A Friend. What art thou?

Hub. Of the part of England

Bast. Whether dost thou go?

Hub. What's that to thee?

Why may not I demand of thine affaires,
As well as thou of mine?

Bast. Hubert, I thinke.

Hub. Thou hast a perfect thought.

I will vpon all hazards well beleue

Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well
Who art thou?

Bast. Who thou wilt: and if thou please
Thou maist be-friend me so much, as to thinke
I come one way of the Plantagenets

Hub. Vnkinde remembrance: thou, & endles night,
Haue done me shame Braue Soldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from thy tongue,
Should scape the true acquaintance of mine care.

Bast. Come, come: faine complement, What newes abroad?

Hub. Why heere walke I, in the black brow of night
To finde you out.

Bast. Brecefe then: and what's the newes?

Hub. O my sweet sir, newes fitting to the night,
Blacke, fearefull, comfortlesse, and horrible.

Bast. Shew me the very wound of this ill newes,
I am no woman, Ile not wound at it.

Hub. The King I feare is poyson'd by a Monke,
I left him almost speechlesse, and broke out
To acquaint you with this euill, that you might
The better arme you to the sodaine time,
Then if you had at leisure knowne of this.

Bast. How did he take it? Who did taste to him?

Hub. A Monke I tell you, a resolu'd villaine
Whose Bowels sodainly burst out The King
Yet speakes, and peradventure may recover.

Bast. Who didst thou leaue to tend his Majesty?

Hub. Why know you not? The Lords are all come backe,

And brought Prince Henry in their companie,
At whose request the king hath pardon'd them,
And they are all about his Majesty

Bast. With-hold thine indignation, mighty heauen,
And tempt vs not to beare about our power
He tell thee Hubert, false my power this night
Passing these Flats, are taken by the Tide,
These Lincolne-Washes haue deuoured them,
My selfe, well mounted, hardly haue escap'd.
Away before 'Conduct me to the king,
I doubt he will be dead, or ere I come. Exeunt

Scena Septima.

Enter Prince Henry, Saluburse, and Bigot.

Hen. It is too late, the life of all his blood
Is touch'd, corruptibly: and his pure braine
(Which some suppose the foules fraile dwelling house)
Doth by the idle Comments that it makes,
Fore-tell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pem. His Highnesse yet doth speake, & holds beleefe,
That being brought into the open ayre,
It would allay the burning qualitie
Of that fell poison which assaileth him

Hen. Let him be brought into the Orchard heere:
Doth he still rage?

Pem. He is more patient
Then when you left him, euen now he sung.

Hen. Oh vanity of sickness: fierce extreames
In their continuance, will not feele themselves.
Death hauing praid vpon the outward parts
Leaues them inuisible, and his seige is now
Against the winde, the which he prickes and wounde
With many legions of strange fantasies,
Which in their throng, and presse to that last hold,
Counfound themselves 'Tis strangest death shold sing
I am the Symet to this pale faint Swan,
Who chaunts a dolefull hymne to his owne death,
And from the organ pipe of frailty sings
His soule and body to their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort (Prince) for you are borne
To set a forme vpon that indigest
Which he hath left so shapelyesse and so rude.

John brought in.

John. I marrie, now my soule hath elbow room,

The life and death of King John.

It would not out at windowes, nor at doores,
There is so hot a summer in my bosome,
That all my bowels crumble vp to dust:
I am a scribbled forme drawne with a pen
Vpon a Parclement, and agunst this fire
Do I shrinke vp

Hen How fares your Maiesty?

Job. Poyson'd, ill fare: dead, forsooke, cast off,
And none of you will b.d the winter come
To thrust his ycie fingers in my maw;
Nor let my kingdoms Riuer take their course
Through my burn'd bosome. nor intreat the North
To make his bleake winde kisse my parched lips,
And comfort me with cold I do not aske you much,
I begge cold comfort and you are so straight
And so ingratefull, you deny me that.

Hen. Oh that there were some vertue in my teares,
That might releue you.

John. The salt in them is hot.
Within me is a hell, and there the poyson
Is, as a fiend, confin'd to tyrannize,
On vnrepceuable condemned blood.

Enter Bastard.
Bast. Oh, I am scalded with my violent motion
And ipleene of speede, to see your Maiesty.
John. Oh Cozen, thou art come to let mine eyes:
The tackle of my heart, is crack'd and burnt,
And all the shrowds wherewith my life should faile,
Are turned to one thred, one little haire:
My heart hath one poore string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy newes be vttered,
And then all this thou seest, is but a clod,
And module of confounded roylty.

Bast. The Dolphin is preparing hitler-ward,
Where heuen he knowes now we shall answer him.
For in a night the best part of my powre,
As I vpon aduantage did remoue,
Were in the Washes all vnwarly,
Deuoured by the vnexpected flood

Sal. You breath these dead newes in as dead an eare
My Liege, my Lord but now a King, now thus.

Hen Euen so must I run on, and euen so stop
What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was now a King, and now is clay?

Bast. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behinde,
To do the office for thee, of reuenge,
And then my soule shall waite on thee to heauen,

As it on earth hath bene thy seruant still.
Now, now you Starres, that moue in your right spheres,
Where be your powres? Shew now your mended faiths,
And instantly retume with me againe.
To push destruction, and perpetuall shame
Out of the weake doore of our fainting Land:

Straight let vs seeke, or straight we shall be sought,
The Dolphin rages at our verie heeles.

Sal. It seemes you know not then so much as we,
The Cardinall Pandulph is within at rest,
Who halfe an houre since came from the Dolphin,
And brings from him such offers of our peace,

As we with honor and respect may take,
With purpose presently to leaue this warre.

Bast. He will the rather do it, when he sees
Our selues well sinew'd to our defence.

Sal. Nay, 'tis in a manner done already,
For many carriages hee hath dispatch'd
To the sea side, and put his cause and quarrell
To the disposing of the Cardinall,

If you thinke meete, this afternoone will poast
To consummate this businesse happily.

Bast. Let it be so, and you my noble Prince,
Shall waite vpon your Fathers Funerall.

Hen. At Worcester must his bodie be interred,
For so he will do it.

Bast. Thither shall it then,
And happily may your sweet selfe put on
The lineall state, and glorie of the Land,

To whom with all submission on my knee,
I do bequeath my faithfull seruices
And true subiection euercastingly

Sal. And the like tender of our loue wee make
To rest without a spot for euermore

Hen. I haue a kinde soule, that would giue thanks,
And knowes not how to do it, but with teares.

Bast. Oh let vs pay the time: but needfull wor,
Since it hath bene before hand with our grieues,
This England neuer did, nor reuer: all
Lye at the proud soote of a Conqueror.

But when it first did helpe to vnder it selfe.
Now, these her Princes are come home againe,
Come the three corners of the world in Armes,
And we shall shooke them: Naught shall make vs run,
If England to it selfe, do rest but true.

Exeunt.

The life and death of King Richard the Second.

Actus Primus, Scena Prima.

Enter King Richard, Iohn of Gaunt, with other Nobles and Attendants.

King Richard

O Ld Iohn of Gaunt, time-honoured Lancaster,
Hast thou according to thy oath and band
Brought hither Henry Herford thy bold son
Heere to make good his boistrous late appeale
Which then our leysure would not let vs heare,
Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Gaunt. I haue my Liege:

King. Tell me moreover, hast thou sounded him,
If he appeale the Duke on ancient malice,
Or worthily as a good subiect should
On some knowne ground of treacherie in him.

Gaunt. As neere as I could list him on that argument,
On some apparant danger scene in him,
Aym'd at your Highnesse, no inueterate malice.

King. Then call them to our presence face to face,
And frowning brow to brow, our selues will heare
Th'accuser, and the accused, freely speake,
High stomack'd are they both, and full of ire,
In rage, deafe as the sea, hastie as fire

Enter Bullingbrooke and Mowbray

Bul. Many yeares of happy dayes befall
My gracious Soueraigne, my most louing Liege.

Mow. Each day still better others happinesse
Vntill the heauens enuying earths good hap,
Adde an immortall title to your Crowne.

King. We thanke you both, yet one but flatters vs,
As well appeareth by the cause you come,
Namely, to appeale each other of high treason.
Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object
Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Bul. First, heauen be the record to my speech,
In the deuotion of a subiects loue,
Tendering the precious safetie of my Prince,
And free from other misbegotten hate,
Come I appealant to this Princely presence.
Now Thomas Mowbray do I turne to thee,
And make my greeting well for what I speake,
My body shall make good vpon this earth,
Or my diuine soule answer it in heauen.
Thou art a Traitor, and a Miscreant;
Too good to be so, and too bad to liue,
Since the more faire and christall is the skie,

The vglyer seeme the cloudes that in it flye:
Once more, the more to aggravate the note,
With a foule Traitors name stuffe I thy throte,
And wish (so please my Soueraigne) ere I moue,
What my tong speaks, my right drawn sword may proue.

Mow. Let not my cold words heere accuse my zeale.
Tis not the triall of a Womans warre,
The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,
Can arbitrate this cause betwixt vs twaine:
The blood is hot that must be cool'd for this.
Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be hush'd, and nought at all to say.
First the faire reuerence of your Highnesse curbes mee,
From giuing reines and spurres to my free speech,
Which else would pozt, vntill it had return'd
These tearmes of treason, doubly downe his throat.
Setting aside his high bloods royalty,
And let him be no Kinsman to my Liege,
I do defie him, and I spit at him,

Call him a slanderous Coward, and a Villaine -
Which to maintaine, I would allow him oddes,
And meete him, were I tide to runne afoote,
Euen to the frozen ridges of the Alpes,
Or any other ground inhabitable,
Where euer Englishman durst set his foote.
Meane time, let this defend my loyalty,
By all my hopes most falsely doth he lie.

Bul. Pale trembling Coward, there I throw my gag.
Disclaiming heere the kindred of a King.
And lay aside my high bloods Royalty,
Which feare, not reuerence makes thee to except.
If guilty dread hath left thee so much strength,
As to take vp mine Honors pawne, then stoope.
By that, and all the rites of Knight-hood else,
Will I make good against thee arme to arme,
What I haue spoken - or thou canst deuise.

Mow. I take it vp, and by that sword I sweare,
Which gently laid my Knight-hood on my shoulder,
He answer thee in any faire degree,
Or Chualrous designe of knightly triall:
And when I mount, aloue may I not light,
If I be Traitor, or vnultly fight.

King. What doth our Cousin lay to Mowbrays charge?
It must be great that can inherite vs,
So much as of a thought of ill in him.

Bul. Look what I said, my life shall proue it true,
That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand Nobles,

In

Inname of lendings for your Highnesse Soldiers,
The which he hath detain'd for lewd employments,
Like a false Traitor, and insurious Villaine.
Besides I say, and will in battaile proue,
Or heere, or elsewhere to the furthest Verge
That euer was suruey'd by English eye,
That all the Treasons for these eightheene yeres
Comploted, and contriued in this Land,
Fetch'd from false Mowbray their first head and spring,
Further I say, and further will maintaine
Vpon his bad life, to make all this good.
That he did plot the Duke of Glousters death,
Suggest his soone beleeuing aduersaries,
And consequently, like a Traitor Coward,
Slue'd out his innocent soule through streames of blood;
Which blood, like sacrificing Abels cries,
(Euen from the toonglesse cauerne of the earth)
To me for iustice, and rough chastisement:
And by the glorious worth of my discent,
This arme shall do it, or this life be spent.

King. How high a pitch his resolution soares:
Thomas of Norfolk, what sayest thou to this?

Mow. Oh let my Soueraigne turne away his face,
And bid his eares a little while be deafe,
Till I haue told this slander of his blood,
How God, and good men, haue so soule a liar.

King. Mowbray, impartiall are our eyes and eares,
Were he my brother, nay our kingdoms heyre,
As he is but my fathers brothers sonne;
Now by my Scepters awe, I make a vow,
Such neighbour-neerenesse to our sacred blood,
Should nothing priuledge him, nor partialize
The vn-spooning firmenesse of my vpright soule.
He is our subiect (Mowbray) so art thou,
Free speech, and ferrelesse, I so thee allow.

Mow. Then Butlingbrooke, as I doe as to thy heart,
Through the false passage of thy throat, thou lyest:
Three parts of that receipt I had for Callice,
Disburst I to his Highnesse souldiers;
The other part referu'd I by consent,
For that my Soueraigne Liege was in my debt,
Vpon remainder of a deere Accompt,
Since last I went to France to fetch his Queene:
Now swallow downe that Lye For Glousters death,
I slew him not; but (to mine owne disgrace)
Neglected my sworne duty in that case:
For you my noble Lord of LANCASTER,
The honourable Father to my foe,
Once I did lay an ambush for your life,
A trespasse that doth vex my greued soule:
But ere I last receiu'd the Sacrament,
I did confesse it, and exactly begg'd
Your Graces pardon, and I hope I had it.
This is my fault: as for the rest appeald,
It issues from the rancour of a Villaine,
A recreant, and most degenerate Traitor,
Which in my selfe I boldly will defend,
And interchangeably hurle downe my gage
Vpon this ouer-weening Traitors foote;
To proue my selfe a loyall Gentleman,
Euen in the best blood chamber'd in his bosome.
In hast whereof, most heartily I pray
Your Highnesse to assigne our Trial day.

King. Wrath-kindled Gentlemen be rul'd by me:
Let's purge this choller without letting blood:
This we prescribe, though no Physicion,

Deepe malice makes too deepe incision.
Forget, forgive, conclude, and be agreed,
Our Doctors say, This is no time to bleed.
Good Vnckle, let this end where it begun,
Wee'l calme the Duke of Norfolk; you, your son.

Gaunt. To be amake-peace shall become my age,
Throw downe (my sonne) the Duke of Norfolk's gage.

King. And Norfolk, throw downe his,
Gaunt. When Harris when? Obedience bids,
Obedience bids I should not bid agan.

King. Norfolk, throw downe, we bidde; theretis no boote.

Mow. My selfe I throw (dread Soueraigne) at thy foot.
My life thou shalt command, but not my shame,
The one my dutie owes, but my faire name
Despight of death, that liues vpon my graue
To darke dishonours vse, thou shalt not haue.
I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffel'd heere,
Pierc'd to the soule with slanders venom'd speere
The which no balme can cure, but his heart blood
Which breath'd this poyson.

King. Rage must be withstood.
Giue me his gage: Lyons make Leopards tame.

Mow. Yea, but not chasge his spurs take but my stags,
And I resigne my gage. My deere, deere Lord,
The purest treasure mortall times afford
Is spotlesse reputation: that away,
Men are but gilded loame, or painted clay.
A Iewell in a ten times barr'd vp Chest,
Is a bold spirit, in a loyall brest.

Mine Honor is my life, both grow in one:
Take Honor from me, and my life is done.
Then (deere my Liege) mine Honor let me trie,
In that I liue; and for that will I die.

King. Cousin, throw downe your gage,
Do you begin.

Bul. Oh heauen defend my soule from such soule sin,
Shall I seeme Crest-falne in my fathers sight,
Or with pale beggar-fear impeach my light
Before this out-dar'd dastard? Let my toong,
Shall wound mine honor with such feeble wrong;
Or sound so base a parle: my mouth shall teare
The sturish motiue of recanting feare,
And spit it bleeding in his high disgrace,
Where shame doth harbour, euen in Mowbray's face.

Exit Gaunt

King. We were not borne to sue, but to command,
Which since we cannot do to make you friends,
Be readie, (as your liues shall answer it)
At Couentre, vpon S. Lamberts day:
There shall your swords and Lances arbitrate
The swelling difference of your seeld hate:
Since we cannot atone you, you shall see
Iustice designe the Victors Chivalrie.
Lord Marshall, command our Officers at Armes,
Be readie to direct these home Alarmes. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Gaunt, and Dutchesse of Gloucester.

Gaunt. Alas, the part I had in Glousters blood,
Doth more solicite me then your exclames,
To furre against the Butchers of his life.

But

But since correction lyeth in those hands
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrell to the will of heauen,
Who when they see the houres ripe on earth,
Will raigne not vengeance on offenders heads.

Dut. findes brotherhood in thee no sharper spurre?
Hath loue in thy old blood no liuing fire?

Edwards seuē sonnes (whereof thy selfe art one)
Were as seuē violles of his Sacred blood,
Or seuē faire branches springing from one roote:
Some of those seuē are dride by natures course,
Some of those branches by the destinies cut.

But Thomas, my deere Lord, my life, my Glouster,
One Viol full of Edwards Sacred blood,
One flourishing branch of his most Royall roote
Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spilt,
Is hackt downe, and his summer leaues all vaded
By Enuies hand, and Murders bloody Axe
Ah Gaunt! His blood was thine, that bed, that wombe,
That mettle, that selfe mould that fashion'd thee,
Made him a man. and though thou liu'st, and breath'st,
Yet art thou flaine in him: thou dost consent
In some large measure to thy Fathers death,
In that thou seest thy wretched brother dye,
Who was the modell of thy Fathers life.
Call it no patience (Gaunt) it is dispaire,
In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,
Thou shew'st the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching sterne murder how to butcher thee:
That which in meane men we mutile patience
Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts.
What shall I say, to safegard thine owne life,
The best way is to venge my Glousters death.

Gaunt Heauens is the quarrell for heauens substitute
His Deputy annointed in his sight,
Hath caus'd his death, the which if wrongfully
Let heauen reuenge for I may neuer lift
An angry arme against his Minister.

Dut. Where then (alas may I) complaint my selfe?

Gau. To heauen, the widdowes Champion to defence

Dut. Why then I will farewell old Gaunt.
Thou go'st to Couentre, there to behold
Our Cosine Herford, and sell Mowbray fight
O fit my husbands wrongs on Herfords speare,
That it may enter butcher Mowbrayes brest
Or if misfortune misse the first careere,
Be Mowbrayes sinnes so heauy in his bosome,
That they may breake his foaming Courfers backe,
And throw the Rider headlong in the Lists,
A Caytiffe recreant to my Cosine Herford
Farewell old Gaunt, thy sometimes brothers wife
With her companion Greefe, must end her life.

Gau. Sister farewell I must to Couentree,
As much good stay with thee, as go with mee.

Dut. Yet one word more. Greefe boundeth where it
Not with the emptie hollownes, but weight (falls,
I take my leaue, before I haue begun,
For sorrow ends not, when it seemeth done.
Commend me to my brother Edmund Yorke
Loe, this is all: nay, yet depart not so,
Though this be all, do not so quickly go,
I shall remember more. Bid him, Oh, what?
With all good speed at Plafine visit mee.
Alacke, and what shall good old Yorke there see
But empty lodgings, and vnfurnish'd waller,
Vn-peopel'd Offices, vntraden stones?

And what heare there for welcome, but my grones?
Therefore commend me, let him not come there,
To seeke out sorrow, that dwels euery where.
Desolate, desolate will I hence, and dye,
The last leaue of thee, takes my weeping eye.

Eaunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Marshall, and Aumerle.

Mar. My L. Aumerle, is Harry Herford arm'd

Aum Yea, at all points, and longs to enter in,

Mar The Duke of Norfolk, sprightly and bold,
Stayes but the summons of the Appealants Trumpet.

Au. Why then the Champions, are prepar'd, and stay
For nothing but his Maiesties approach

Flourish.

Enter King, Gaunt, Bushy, Bagot, Greene, & others. Then Mowbray in Ar- mor, and Harrold.

Rich. Marshall, demand of yonder Champion
The cause of his arriuall heere in Armes,
Aske him his name, and orderly proceed
To sweare him in the iustice of his cause

Mar. In Gods name, and the Kings say who yart,
And why thou com'st thus knightly clad in Armes?
Against what man thou com'st, and what's thy quarrell,
Speake truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
As so defend thee heauen, and thy valour

Mow. My name is Tho. Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk,
Who hither comes engaged by my oath
(Which heauen defend a knight should violate)
Both to defend my loyalty and truth,
To God, my King, and his succeeding issue,
Against the Duke of Herford, that appeales me:
And by the grace of God, and this mine arme,
To proue him (in defending of my selfe)
A Traitor to my God, my King, and me,
And as I truly fight, defend me heauen.

Tucket. Enter Herford, and Harold.

Rich Marshall - Aske yonder Knight in Armes,
Both who he is, and why he cometh hither,
Thus placed in habiliments of warre:
And formerly according to our Law
Depose him in the iustice of his cause

Mar. What is thy name? and wherfore com'st y hither
Before King Richard in his Royall Lists?
Against whom com'st thou? and what's thy quarrell?
Speake like a true Knight, so defend thee heauen.

Bul. Harry of Herford, I ancaster, and Derby,
Am I who ready heere do stand in Armes,
To proue by heauens grace, and my bodies valour,
In Lists, on Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norfolk,
That he's a Traitor foule, and dangerous,
To God of heauen, King Richard, and to me,
And as I truly fight, defend me heauen.

Mar. On paine of death, no person be so bold,
Or daring hardie as to touch the Lists,
Except the Marshall, and such Officers
Appointed to direct these faire designs.

Bul Lord Marshall, let me kisse my Soueraigns hand,
And bow my knee before his Maiestie -
For Mowbray and my selfe are like two men,
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage,

c

Then

Nor euer write, regreete, or reconcile
This lowering tempest of your home-bred hate,
Nor euer by aduised purpose meete,
To plot, contriue, or complot any ill,
Gainst Vs, our State, our Subiects, or our Land.

Bull I swear.

Mow. And I, to keepe all this.

Bul. Norfolk, so fare, as to mine enemye,
By this time (had the King permitted vs)
One of our soules had wandred in the ayre,
Banish'd this fraile sepulchre of our flesh,
As now our flesh is banish'd from this Land.
Confesse thy Treasons, ere thou flye this Realme,
Since thou hast farre to go, beare not along
The clogging burthen of a guilty soule.

Mow. No Bullingbroke If euer I were Traitor,
My name be blotted from the booke of Life,
And I from heauen banish'd, as from hence
But what thou art, heauen, thou, and I do know,
And all too soone (I feare) the King shall rue Farewell (my Liege) now no way can I stray,
Saue backe to England, all the worlds my way.

Exit.

Rich. Vncle, euen in the glasse of thine eyes
I see thy greened heart thy sad aspect,
Hark from the number of his banish'd yeares
Pluck'd foure away • Six frozen Winters spent,
Returne with welcome home, from banishment
Bul How long a time lyes in one little word •
Foure lagging Winters, and toure wanton springs
End in a word, such is the breath of Kings.

Gaunt. I thanke my Liege, that in regard of me
He shortens foure yeares of my sonnes exile •
But little vantage shall I reape thereby.
For ere the sixe yeares that he hath to spend
Can change their Moones, and bring their times about,
My oyle-dride Lampe, and time-bewasted light
Shall be extinct with age, and endlesse night
My inch of Taper, will be burnt, and done,
And blindfold death, not let me see my sonne

Rich. Why Vncle, thou hast many yeeres to liue.

Gaunt. But not a minute (King) that thou canst giue;
Shorten my dayes thou canst with sudden sorow,
And plucke nights from me, but not lend a morrow •
Thou canst helpe time to furrow me with age,
Sut stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage:
Thy word is currant with him, for my death,
But dead, thy kingdome cannot buy my breath.

Rich. Thy sonne is banish'd vpon good aduice,
Whereto thy tongue a party-verdict gaue,
Why at our Iustice seem'st thou then to lowre?

Gau. Things sweet to tast, proue in digestion sowre •
You vrg'd me as a Iudge, but I had rather you would haue bid me argue like a Father
Alas, I look'd when some of you should say,
I was too strict to make mine owne away.
But you gaue leaue to my vnwilling tong,
Against my will, to do my selfe this wrong.

Rich. Cosine farewell and Vncle bid him so:
Six yeares we banish him, and he shall go.

Exit.

Flourish

An. Cosine farewell • what preference must not know
From where you do remaine, let paper show.

Mow. My Lord, no leaue take I, for I will ride
As farre as land will let me, by your side.

Gaunt. Oh to what purpose dost thou hord thy words,
That thou returnst no greeting to thy friends?

Bull. I haue too few to take my leaue of you,
When the tongues office should be prodigall,
To breath th' abundant dolour of the heart.

Gau. Thy greefe is but thy absence for a time

Bull. Ioy absent, greefe is present for that time.

Gau. What is sixe Winters, they are quickely gone?

Bul To men in ioy, but greefe makes one houre ten.

Gau. Call it a travell that thou tak'st for pleasure.

Bul My heart will sigh, when I miscall it so,
Which findes it an inforced Pilgrimage.

Gau. The fullen passage of thy weary steppes
Esteeme a loyle, wherein thou art to set
The precious fewell of thy home returne.

Bul. Oh who can hold a fire in his hand
By thinking on the frost e Caucasus?

Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite,
by bare imagination of a Feast?

Or Wallow naked in December snow
by thinking on fantastick summers heate?

Oh no, the apprehension of the good

Giues but the greater feeling to the worse •

Fell sorrowes tooth, doth euer ranckle more

Then when it bites, but lanceth not the sore

Gau Come, come (my son) lle bring thee on thy way
Had I thy youth, and cause, I would not stay.

Bul Then Englands ground farewell sweet soil adieu,
My Mother, and my Nurse, which beares me yet •

Where ere I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a true-borne Englishman •

Scena Quarta.

Enter King, Annerle, Greene, and Bagot.

Rich. We did obserue. Cosine Annerle,
How far brought you high Herford on his way?

Anm I brought high Herford (if you call him so) but to the next high way, and there I left him.

Rich. And say, what store of parting tears were shed?

Anm. Faith none for me: except the Northeast wind
Which then grew bitterly against our face,
Awak'd the sleepe thewme, and so by chance
Did grace our hollow parting with a teare.

Rich. What said our Cosin when you parted with him?

An Farewell and for my hart disdain'd y my tongue
Should so prophane the word, that taught me craft
To counterfet oppression of such greefe,
That word seem'd buried in my sorrowes graue.
Marry, would the word Farewell, haue lengthen'd houres,
And added yeeres to his short banishment,
He should haue had a volume of Farwells,
but since it would not, he had none of me

Rich. He is our Cosin (Cosin) but 'tis doubt,
When time shall call him home from banishment,
Whether our kinsman come to see his friends,
Our selfe, and Bushy heere Bagot and Greene
Obseru'd his Courteship to the common people:
How he did seeme to due into their hearts,
With humble, and familiar courtesie,
What reuerence he did throw away on slaves;
Wooing poore Craftes-men, with the craft of soules,
And patient vnder-bearing of his Fortune,
As 'twere to banish their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an Oyster-wench,

A brace of Dray-men bid God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee,
With thanks my Countymen, my loving friends,
As were our England in reuerſion his,
And he our ſubjects next degree in hope.

Gr. Well, he is gone, & with him go theſe thoughts:
Now for the Rebels, which ſtand out in Ireland,
Expedient manage muſt be made my Liege
Ere further leiſure, yeeld them further meanes
For their aduantage, and your Highneſſe loſſe.

Ric. We will our ſelfe in perſon to this waſte,
And for our Coſſers, with too great a Court,
And liberal Largeſſe, are growne ſomewhat light,
We are inſord'd to farme our royall Realme,
The Reuennew whereof ſhall furniſh vs
For our affayres in hand: if that come ſhort
Our Subſtitutes at home ſhall haue Blanke-charters:
Whereto, when they ſhall know what men are rich,
They ſhall ſubſcribe them for large ſummes of Gold,
And ſend them after to ſupply our wants
For we will make for Ireland preſently

Enter Buſhy.

Buſhy, what newes?

Bu. Old Iohn of Gaunt is verie ſicke my Lord, Sodainly taken, and hath ſent forth haſte
To entreat your Maieſty to viſit him.

Ric. Where lyes he?

Bu. At Ely houſe.

Ric. Now put it (heauen) in his Phyſicians minde,
To helpe him to his graue immediately:
The lining of his coſſers ſhall make Coates
To decke our ſouldiers for theſe Iriſh warres.
Come Gentlemen, let's all go viſit him:
Pray heauen we may make haſt, and come too late. Exit.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Gaunt, ſicke with Yorke.

Gau. Will the King come, that I may breath my laſt
In whoſome counſell to his vnſlaid youth?

Yor. Vex not your ſelfe, nor ſtrive not with your breth,
For all in vaine comes counſell to his care.

Gau. Oh but (they ſay) the tongues of dying men
Inforce attention like deepe harmony;
Where words are ſcarſe, they are ſeldome ſpent in vaine,
For they breath truth, that breath their words in paine.
He that no more muſt ſay, is liſten'd more,
Then they whom youth and eaſe haue taught to gloſe,
More are mens ends markt, then their lues before,
The ſetting Sun, and Muſicke is the cloſe
As the laſt taſte of ſweeteſt, is ſweeteſt laſt,
Writ in remembrance, more then things long paſt;
Though Richard my lues counſell would not heare,
My deaths ſad tale, may yet vndeafe his care.

Yor. No, it is ſtopt with other flatt'ring ſounds
As praifes of his ſtate: then there are found
Lacimous Meeters, to whoſe venom ſound
The open eare of youth doth alwayes liſten,
Report of faſhions in proud Italy,
Whoſe manners ſtill our rardie apith Nation
Limps after in baſe imitation

Where doth the world thruſt forth a vanity,
So it be new, there's no reſpect how vile,
That is not quickly buz'd into his eares?
That all too late comes counſell to be heard,
Where will doth mutiny with wits regard.
Direſt not him, whoſe way himſelfe will chooſe,
Tis breath thou lackſt, and that breath wilt thou looſe

Gaunt. Me thinkes I am a Prophet new inſpir'd,
And thus expiring, do foretell of him,
His raſh fierce blaze of Ryot cannot laſt,
For violent fires ſoone burne out themſelues,
Small ſhowres laſt long, but ſodaine ſtormes are ſhort,
He tyres betimes, that ſpurs too faſt betimes;
With eager feeding, food doth choake the feeder:
Light vanity, inſatiate cormorant,
Conſuming meanes ſoone preyes vpon it ſelfe.
This royall Throne of Kings, this ſceptred Iſle,
This earth of Maieſty, this ſeat of Mars,
This other Eden, demy paradise,
This Fortreſſe built by Nature for her ſelfe,
Againſt infection, and the hand of warre:
This happy breed of men, this little world,
This precious ſtone, ſet in the ſiluer ſea,
Which ſerues it in the office of a wall,
Or as a Moate deſenſiue to a houſe,
Againſt the enuy of leſſe happier Lands,
This bleſſed plot, this earth, this Realme, this England,
This Nurſe, this teeming wombe of Royall Kings,
Fear'd by their breed, and famous for their birth,
Renowned for their deeds, as farre from home,
For Chriſtian ſeruiſe, and true Chiuallrie,
As is the ſepulcher in ſtubborne Iury
Of the Worlds ranſome, bleſſed Maries Sonne.
This Land of ſuch deere ſoules, this deere-deere Land,
Deere for her reputation through the world,
Is now Leas'd out (I dye pronouncing it)
Like to a Tenement or pelting Farme.
England bound in with the triumphant ſea,
Whole rocky ſhore beates backe the enuious ſiedge
Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with ſhame,
With luky blottes, and rotten Parchment bonds
That England, that was wont to conquer others,
Hath made a ſhamefull conqueſt of it ſelfe.
Ah! would the ſcandall vaniſh with my life,
How happy then were my enſuing death?

Enter King, Queene, Aumerle, Buſhy, Greene, Bugot, Roſ, and Willoughby

Yor. The King is come, deale mildly with his youth,
For young hot Colts, being rag'd, do rage the more.

Qu. How fares our noble Vncle Lancaſter?

Re. What comfort man? How iſt with aged Gaunt?

Ga. Oh how that name befits my compoſition:
Old Gaunt indeed, and gaunt in being old:
Within me greefe hath kept a tedious faſt,
And who abſtaynes from meate, that is not gaunt?
For ſleeping England long time haue I watcht,
Watching breeds leanneſſe, leanneſſe is all gaunt.
The pleaſure that ſome Fathers feede vpon,
Is my ſtriſt faſt, I meane my Childrens lookes,
And therein faſting, haſt thou made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the graue, gaunt as a graue,
Whoſe hollow wombe inherits naught but bones.

Ric. Can ſicke men play ſo nicely with their names?

Gau. No, miſery makes ſport to mocke it ſelfe:
Since thou doſt ſeek to kill my name in mee,

I mocke my name (great King) to flatter thee.

Ric. Should dying men flatter those that liue?

Gau. No, no, men liuing flatter those that dye.

Ricb. Thou now a dying, sayst thou flatter'st me.

Gau. Oh no, thou dyest, though I the sicker be.

Ricb. I am in health, I breath, I see thee ill.

Gau. Now he that made me, knowes I see thee ill:

Ill in my selfe to see, and in thee, seeing ill,
Thy death-bed is no lesse then the Land,
Wherein thou lyest in reputation sicke,
And thou too care-lesse patient as thou art,
Committ'st thy anointed body to the cure
Of those Physicians, that first wounded thee.
A thousand flatterers sit within thy Crowne,
Whose compasse is no bigger then thy head,
And yet incaged in so small a Verge,
The waste is no whit lesse then thy Land:
Oh had thy Grandfire with a Prophets eye,
Seene how his sonnes sonne, should destroy his sonnes,
From forth thy reach he would haue laid thy shame,
Deposing thee before thou wert posselt,
Which art posselt now to depole thy selfe.
Why (Cousine) were thou Regent of the world,
It were a shame to let his Land by lease
But for thy world enioying but this Land,
Is it not more then shame, to shame it so?
Landlord of England art thou, and not King:
Thy state of Law, is bondslau to the law,
And——

Ricb. And thou, a lunaticke leane-witted foole,
Presuming on an Agues priuledge,
Dar'st with thy frozen admonition
Make pale our cheeke, chasing the Royall blood
With fury, from his natieue residence?
Now by my Seates right Royall Maiestie,
Wer't thou not Brother to great Edwards sonne,
This tongue that runs so roundly in thy head,
Should run thy head from thy vnreuerent shoulders.

Gau. Oh spare me not, my brothers Edwards sonne,
For that I was his Father Edwards sonne:
That blood already (like the Pellican)
Thou hast tapt out, and drunkenly carows'd.
My brother Gloucester, plaine well meaning soule
(Whom faire befall in heauen 'mongst happy soules)
May be a president, and witness good,
That thou respect'st not spilling Edwards blood:
Ioyne with the present sicknesse that I haue,
And thy vnkindnesse be like crooked age,
To crop at once a too-long wither'd flowre.
Liue in thy shame, but dye not shame with thee,
These words heereafter, thy tormentors bee.
Conuey me to my bed, then to my graue,
Loue they to liue, that loue and honor haue.

Exit

Ricb. And let them dye, that age and fullens haue,
For both hast thou, and both become the graue.

Tor. I do beseech your Maiestie impute his words
To wayward sicklinesse, and age in him:
He loues you on my life, and holds you deere
As Harry Duke of Herford, were he heere

Ricb. Right, you say true as Herfords loue, so his;
As theirs, so mine and all be as it is.

Enter Northumberland.

Tor. My Liege, olde Gau. commends him to your Maiestie.

Ricb. What sayes he?

Tor. Nay nothing, all is said:

His tongue is now a sittinglesse instrument,
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.

Tor. Be Yorke the next, that must be bankrupt so,
Though death be poore, it ends a mortall wo.

Ricb. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth he,
His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be:
So much for that. Now for our Irish warres,
We must supplant those rough rug-headed Kernes,
Which liue like venom, where no venom else
But onely they, haue priuledge to liue
And for these great assayres do aske some charge
Towards our assistance, we do seize to vs
The plate, come, reuennues, and moueables,
Whereof our Vncle Gau. did stand posselt.

Tor. How long shall I be patient? Oh how long
Shall tender dutie make me suffer wrong?
Not Glousters death, nor Herfords banishment,
Nor Gau. rebukes, nor Englands priuate wrongs,
Nor the preuention of poore Bullingbrooke,
About his marriage, nor my owne disgrace
Haue euer made me sowe my patient cheeke,
Or bend one wrinkle on my Soueraignes face:
I am the last of noble Edwards sonnes,
Of whom thy Father Prince of Wales was first,
In warre was neuer Lyon rag'd more fierce:
In peace, was neuer gentle La. be more milde,
Then was that yong and Princely Gentleman,
His face thou hast, for euen so I rok'd he Accomplish'd with the number of thy howers:
But when he frown'd, it was against the French,
And not against his friends: his noble hand
Did win what he did spend: and spent not that
Which his triumphant fathers hand had won:
His hands were guilty of no kindreds blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kinne.
Oh Ricb. and Tor. is too farre gone with griefe,
Or else he neuer would compare betweene

Ricb. Why Vncle,

What's the matter?

Tor. Oh my Liege, pardon me if you please; if not
I pleas'd not to be pardon'd, am content with all:
Seeke you to seize, and gripe into your hands
The Royalties and Rights of banish'd Herford?
Is not Gau. dead? and doth not Herford liue?
Was not Gau. iust? and is not Harry true?
Did not the one deserue to haue an heyre?
Is not his heyre a well-deseruing sonne?
Take Herfords rights away, and take from time
His Charters, and his custumarie rights:
Let not to morrow then insue to day,
Be not thy selfe. For how art thou a King
But by faire sequence and succession?
Now afore God, God forbid I say true,
If you do wrongfully seize Herfords right,
Call in his Letters Parents that he hath
By his Atturneyes generall, to sue
His Liverie, and demie his offer'd homage,
You plucke a thousand dangers on your head,
You loose a thousand well-disposed hearts,
And pricke my tender patience to those thoughts
Which honor and allegiance cannot thinke.

Ric. Thinke what you will we seite into our hands,
His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.

Tor. Ile not be by the while. My Liege farewell,

What

What will ensue heereof, there's none can tell.
But by bad you ses may be vnderstood,
That their euents can neuer fall our good.

Exit.

Rich. Go Bisshp to the Earle of Wiltshire straight,
Bid him repaire to vs to Ely house,
To see this businesse. to morrow next
We will for Ireland, and 'tis time, I trow.
And we create in absence of our selfe
Our Vncle Yorke, Lord Gouvernor of England:
For he is iust, and alwayes lou'd vs well.
Come on our Queene, to morrow must we part,
Be merry, for our time of stay is short.

Flourish.

Annet North. Willoughby, & Ross

Nor. Well Lords, the Duke of Lancaster is dead.

Ross. And liuing too, for now his sonne is Duke.

Wil. Barely in title, not in reuennew

Nor. Richly in both, if iustice had her right.

Ross. My heart is great: but it must break with silence,
Er't be disburthen'd with a liberall tongue

Nor. Nay speake thy mind & let him ne'r speak more

That speakes thy words againe to do thee harme

Wil. Tends that thou'dst speake to th'Du. of Hereford,
If it be so, out with it boldly man,

Quicke is mine eare to heare of good towards him.

Ross. No good at all that I can do for him,

Vnlesse you call it good to piete him,

Bereft and gelded of his patrimonie.

Nor. Now afore heauen, 'tis shame such wrongs are borne,

In him a royall Prince, and many moe
Of noble blood in this declining Land;
The King is not himselfe, but basely led
By Flatterers, and what they will informe
Meerely in hare 'gamil any of vs all,
That will the King seuerely prosecute
Gainst vs, our liues, our children, and our heires, I

Ross. The Commons hath he pil'd with greuous taxes
And quite lost their hearts the Nobles hath he finde
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.

Wil. And daily new exactions are deuiz'd,
As blankes, beneuolences, and I wot not what:
But what o' Gods name doth become of this?

Nor. Wars hath not wasted it, for war'd he hath not.
But basely yelded vpon comprimize,
That which his Ancestors atchieu'd with blowes:
More hath he spent in peace, then they in warres.

Ross. The Earle of Wiltshire hath the realme in Farme.

Wil. The Kings growne bankrupt like a broken man.

Nor. Reproach, and dissolution hangeth ouer him.

Ross. He hath not monie for these Irish warres:

(His burthenous taxations notwithstanding)

But by the robbing of the banish'd Duke.

Nor. His noble Kinsman, most degenerate King:
But Lords, we heare this fearefull tempest sing,
Yet seeke no shelter to auoid the storme:
We see the winde sit fore vpon our salles,
And yet we strike not, but securely perish

Ross. We see the very wracke that we must suffer,
And vnauoyded is the danger now
For suffering so the causes of our wracke.

Nor. Not so. euen through the hollow eyes of death,
I spie life peering but I dare not say
How neere the tidings of our comfort is.

Wil. Nay let vs share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours

Ross. Be confident to speake Northumberland,

We three, are but thy selfe, and speaking so,

Thy words are but as thoughts, therefore be bold.

Nor. Then thus. I haue from Port le Blanc
A Bay in Britaine, recei'd intelligence,
That Harry Duke of Herford, Ramald Lord Cobham,
That late broke from the Duke of Exeter,
His brother Archbishop, late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, Sir Iohn Rainsfon,
Sir Iohn Nerberie, Sir Robert Waterton, & Francis Quount,
All these well furnish'd by the Duke of Britaine,
With eight tall ships, three thousand men of warre
Are making hither with all due expedience,
And shortly meane to touch our Northerne shore:
Perhaps they had ere this, but that they stay
The first departing of the King for Ireland.
If then we shall shake off our slaushy yake,
Impe out our drooping Countries broken wing,
Redeeme from broaking pawne the blemish'd Crowne,
Wipe off the dust that hides our Scepters gilt,
And make high Maestie looke like it selfe,
Away with me in poste to Rauenburgh,
But if you faint, as feating to do so,
Stay, and be secret, and my selfe will go.

Ross. To horte, to horte, vrgd doubts to them y feare.

Wil. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Queene, Bushy, and Bagot.

Bush. Madam, your Maestie is too much sad,
You promis'd when you parted with the King,
To lay aside selfe-harming heauinesse,
And entertaine a cheerefull disposition.

Qu. To please the King, I did: to please my selfe
I cannot do it: yet I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as greefe,
Saue bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard, yet againe me thinkes,
Some vnborne sorrow, ripe in fortunes wombe,
Is comming towards me, and my inward soule
With nothing trembles, at something it greues,
More then with parting from my Lord the King.

Bush. Each substance of a greefe hath twenty shadowes
Which shewes like greefe it selfe, but is not so:
For sorrowes eye, glazed with blinding teares,
Diuides one thing intire, to many obiects,
Like perspectiues, which rightly gaz'd vpon
Shew nothing but confusion, ey'd awry,
Distinguish forme: so your sweet Maestie
Looking awry vpon your Lords departur,
Finde shap'es of greefe, more then himselfe to waile,
Which look'd on as it is, is naught but shadowes
Of what it is not: then thrice-gracious Queene,
More then your Lords departur weep not, more's not
Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrowes eie, (scene;

Which for things true, weepe things imaginary.
Qu. It may be so: but yet my inward soule
Perlwades me it is otherwile: how ere it be,
I cannot but be sad: so heauy sad,
As though on thinking on no thought I thinke,
Makes me with heauy nothing faint and shrinke.

Bush. 'Tis nothing but conceit (my gracious Lady.)
Queene.

Qu. 'Tis nothing lesse: conceit is still deriu'd
From some fore father greefe, mine is not so,
For nothing hath begot my something greefe,
Or something, hath the nothing that I greue,
'Tis in reuerſion that I do poſſeſſe,
But what it is, that is not yet knowne, what
I cannot name, 'tis namelesſe woe I wor.

Enter Greene.

Gre. Heauen ſaue your Maieſty, and wel met Gentle-
I hope the King is not yet ſhip't for Ireland. (men)

Qu. Why hop'ſt thou ſo? 'Tis better hope he is:
For his deſignes craue haſt, his haſt good hope,
Then wherefore doſt thou hope he is not ſhip't?

Gre. That he our hope, might haue retyr'd his power,
and driuen into diſpaire an enemies hope,
Who ſtrongly hath ſet footing in this Land.
The baniſh'd Bullingbrooke repeales himſelfe,
And with vp-liſted Armes is ſafe arriu'd.

At Rauenspurg

Qu. Now God in heauen forbid.

Gr. O Madam 'tis too true: and that is worſe,
The L. Northumberland, his yong ſonne Henrie Perce,
The Lords of Roffe, Beaumont, and Wyloughby,
With all their powerfull friends are fled to him.

Buſh Why haue you not proclaim'd Northumberland
And the reſt of the reuolted faction, Traytors?

Gre. We haue wher-upon the Earle of Worceſter
Hath broke his ſtaffe, reſign'd his Stewardſhip,
And al the houſhold ſeruants fled with him to Bullinbrooke.

Qu. So Greene, thou art the midwife of my woe,
And Bullinbrooke my ſorrows diſmall heyre:
Now hath my ſoule brought forth her prodegie,
And I a gasping new deliuered mother,
Haue woe to woe, ſorrow to ſorrow ioyn'd.

Buſh Diſpaire not Madam

Qu. Who ſhall hinder me?

I will diſpaire, and be at enmitie
With couzening hope, he is a Flatterer,
A Paraſite, a keeper backe of death,
Who gently would diſſolue the bands of life,
Which ſalie hopes linger in extremity.

Enter Torke

Gre. Heere comes the Duke of Yorke.

Qu. With ſignes of warre about his aged necke,
Oh full of carefull buſineſſe are his lookes
Vncle for heauens ſake ſpeake comfortable words.

Tor Comfort's in heauen, and we are on the earth,
Where nothing liues but croſſes, care and greefe:
Your husband he is gone to ſaue farre off,
Wniſt others come to make him looſe at home:
Heere am I left to vnder-prop his Land,
Who weake with age, cannot ſupport my ſelfe
Now comes the ſicke houre that his ſurſet made,
Now ſhall he try his friends that flattered him.

Enter a ſervant.

Ser. My Lord, your ſonne was gone before I came.

Tor. He was why ſo? go all which way it will:
The Nobler they are fled, the Commons they are cold,
And will I feare reuolt on Herfords ſide
ſirra, get thee to Plathie to my ſiſter Gloſter,
Bid her ſend me preſently a thouſand pound,
Hold, take my Ring

Ser. My Lord, I had forgot
To tell you, I ordſhip, to day I came by, and call'd there,
But I ſhall greue you to report the reſt.

Tor. What iſt knaue?

Ser. An houre before I came, the Dutcheſſe di'de,

Tor. Hea'n for his mercy, what a tide of woe
Come ruſhing on this wofull Land at once?

I know not what to do: I would to heauen
(So my vntruth had not prouok'd him to it)
The King had cut off my head with my brothers.
What, are there poſtes diſpatcht for Ireland?

How ſhall we do for money for theſe warres?
Come ſiſter (Cozen I would ſay) pray pardon me.
Go fellow, get thee home, poouide ſome Carre,
And bring away the Armour that is there,
Gentlemen, will you muſter men?

If I know how, or which way to order theſe affaires
Thus diſorderly thruſt into my hands,
Neuer belecue me Both are my kiſmen,
Th'one is my Soueraigne, whom both my oath
And dutie bids defend: th'other againe

Is my kiſman, whom the King hath wrong'd,
Whom conſcience, and my kindred bids to right:
Well, ſomewhat we muſt do: Come Cozen,
He diſpoſe of you Gentlemen, go muſter vp your men,
And meet me preſently at Berkley Caſtle
I ſhould to Plathy too but time will not permit,
All is vncuen, and euery thing is left at ſix and ſeuene. Exit

Buſh The wnde ſits faire for newes to go to Ireland,
But none returnes: For vs to leuy power
Proportionable to th'enemy, is all impoſſible.

Gr. Beſides our neceſſeneſſe to the King in loue,
Is neere the hate of thoſe loue not the King.

Ba And that's the wauering Commons, for their loue
Lies in their purſes, and who ſo empties them,
By ſo much ſits their hearts with deadly hate.

Buſh Wherein the king ſtands generally condemn'd

Bag. If iudgement lye in them, then ſo do we,
Becauſe we haue bene euer neere the King

Gr. Well I will for refuge ſtraight to Briſtoll Caſtle,
The Earle of Wilſhire is already there.

Buſh Thither will I with you, for little office
Will the hatefull Commons perſorme for vs,
Except like Curres, to teare vs all in peeces:
Will you go along with vs?

Bag. No, I will to Ireland to his Maieſtie:
Farewell, if hearts preſages be not vaine,
We three here part, that new'r ſhall mee'te againe.

Bu That's as Yorke thriues to beate back Bullinbrooke

Gr. Alas poore Duke, the taſke he vndertakes
Is numbring ſands, and drinking Oceans drie,
Where one on his ſide fights, thouſands will flye.

Buſh Farewell & once, for once, for all, and euer.
Well, we may mee'te againe.

Bag. I feare me neuer.

Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter the Duke of Hereford, and Northumberland.

Bul. How farre is it my Lord to Berkley now?

Nor. Beleeue me noble Lord,
I am a ſtranger heere in Glouceſterſhire,
Theſe high wilde hilles, and rough vncuen waies,
Drawes out our miles, and makes them wearisome:
And yet our faire diſcourſe hath bene as ſugar,

Mark in Making the hard way sweet and delectable :

But I bethinke me, what a wearie way
From Rauenspurgh to Cotteshold will be found,
In Rosse and Willoughby, wanting your companie,
Which I protest hath very much beguild
The tediousnesse, and proceffe of my travell :
But theirs is sweetned with the hope to haue
The present benefit that I possesse ;
And hope to ioy, is little lesse in ioy,
Then hope enioy'd . By this, the wearie Lords
Shall make their way seeme short, as mine hath done,
By sight of what I haue, your Noble Companie.

Bull. Of much lesse value is my Companie,
Then your good words : but who comes here ?

Enter H. Percie.

North. It is my Sonne, young Harry Percie,
Sent from my Brother Warcester . Whence soeuer.
Harry, how fares your Vnckle ?

Percie. I had thought, my Lord, to haue learn'd his health of you.

North. Why, is he not with the Queene ?

Percie. No, my good Lord, he hath forsook the Court,
Broken his Staffe of Office, and disperst
The Household of the King.

North. What was his reason ?

He was not so resolu'd, when we last spake together.

Percie. Because your Lordsh.<sup>p</sup> was proclaimed Traitor.
But hee, my Lord, is gone to Rauenspurgh,
To offer seruice to the Duke of Hereford,
And sent me ouer by Barkely, to discouer
What power the Duke of Yorke had leuied there,
Then with direction to repaire to Rauenspurgh.

North. Haue you forgot the Duke of Hereford (Boy.)

Percie. No, my good Lord ; for that is not forgot
Which ne're I did remember to my knowledge,
Ineuer in my life did looke on him

North. Then learne to know him now : this is the Duke.

Percie. My gracious Lord, I tender you my seruice,
Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young,
Which elder dayes shall ripen, and confirme
To more approoued seruice, and desert.

Bull. I thanke thee gentle Percie, and be sure
I count my selfe in nothing else so happy,
As in a Soule remembering my good Friends :
And as my Fortune ripens with thy Loue,
It shall be still thy true Loues recompence,
My Heart this Couenant makes, my Hand thus seales it.

North. How farre is it to Barkely ? and what stirre Keepes good old Yorke there, with his Men of Warre ?

Percie. There stands the Castle, by yond tuft of Trees,
Mann'd with three hundred men, as I haue heard,
And in it are the Lords of Yorke, Barkely, and Seymour,
None else of Name, and noble estimate

Enter Rosse and Willoughby

North. Here come the Lords of Rosse and Willoughby, Bloody with spurring, fierie red with haste

Bull. Welcome my Lords, I wot your loue pursues
A banisht Traytor ; all my Treasure
Is yet but vnfelt thanks, which more enrich'd,
Shall be your loue, and labours recompence.

Rosse. Your preience makes vs rich, most Noble Lord,
Will. And farre surmounts our labour to attaine it.

Bull. Euermore thanks, th' Exchequer of the poore,
Which till my infant-fortune comes to yeeres,
Stands for my Bountie ; but who comes here ?

Enter Barkely.

North. It is my Lord of Barkely, as I ghesse.

Bark. My Lord of Hereford, my Message is to you

Bull. My Lord, my Answer is to Lancaster,
And I am come to seeke that Name in England,
And I must finde that Title in your Tongue,
Before I make reply to aught you say.

Bark. Mistake me not, my Lord, 'tis not my meaning
To raze one Title of your Honor out.
To you, my Lord, I come (what Lord you will)
From the most glorious of this Land,
The Duke of Yorke, to know what pricks you on
To take aduantage of the absent time,
And fight our Nauie Peace with selfe-borne Armes.

Enter Yorke.

Bull. I shall not need transport my words by you,
Here comes his Grace in Person. My Noble Vnckle,

Yorke. Shew me thy humble heart, and not thy knee,
Whose dutie is deceiuable, and false.

Bull. My gracious Vnckle.

Yorke. Tut, tut, Grace me no Grace, nor Vnckle me,
I am no Traytors Vnckle ; and that word Grace,
In an vngracious mouth, is but prophane.

Why haue these banish'd, and forbuiden Legges,
Dar'd once to touch a Duft of Englands Ground ?
But more then why, why haue they dar'd to march
So many miles vpon her peacefull Bosome,
Frighting her pale-fac'd Villages with Warre,
And ostentation of despised Armes ?

Com'st thou becaue th' ancynted King is hence ?

Why foolish Boy, the King is left behind,

And in my loyall Bosome lyes his power.

Were I but now the Lord of such hot youth,

As when braue Gaunt, thy Father, and my selfe

Rescued the Black Prince that yong Mars of men,

From forth the Ranks of many thousand French :

Oh then, how quickly should this Arme of mine,

Now Prisoner to the Pallie, chastise thee,

And minister correction to thy Fault.

Bull. My gracious Vnckle, let me know my Fault,

On what Condition stands it, and wherein ?

Yorke. Euen in Condition of the worst degree,

In grosse Rebellion, and detested Treason .

Thou art a banish'd man, and here art come

Before th' expiration of thy time,

In brauing Atmes against thy Soueraigne.

Bull. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd Hereford,
But as I come, I come for Lancaster.

And Noble Vnckle, I beseech your Grace

Looke on my Wrongs with an indifferent eye :

You are my Father, for me thinkes in you

I see old Gaunt aliue . Oh then my Father,

Will you permit, that I shall stand condemn'd

A wandring Vagabond ; my Rights and Royalties

Pluckt from my armes perforce, and giuen away

To vpstart Vnthrists ? Wherefore was I borne ?

If that my Cousin King, be King of England,

It must be graunted, I am Duke of Lancaster.

You haue a Sonne, Anierle, my Noble Kinsman,

Had you first died, and he beene thus trod downe,

He should haue found his Vnckle Gaunt a Father,

To rowze his Wrongs, and chase them to the bay.

I am denyde to sue my Luerie here,

And yet my Letters Patents giue me leaue :

My Fathers goods are all distraynd, and sold,

And these, and all, are all amisse employd.

What

What would you haue me doe? I am a Subiect,
And challenge Lay: Attorneys are deny'd me;
And therefore personally I lay my claime
To my Inheritance of free Discent

North. The Noble Duke hath been too much abus'd.

Reff. It stands your Grace vpon, to doe him right.

Who. Base men by his endowments are made great.

Tork. My Lords of England, let me tell you this,

I haue had feeling of my Cosens Wrongs,
And labour'd all I could to doe him right.
But in this kind, to come in brauing Armes,
Be his owne Caruer, and cut out his way,
To find out Right with Wrongs, it may not be,
And you that doe abett him in this kind,
Cherish Rebellion, and are Rebels all.

North. The Noble Duke hath sworne his coming is
But for his owne; and for the right of that,
Wee all haue strongly sworne to giue him ayd,
And let him neu'r see Ioy, that breakes that Oath.

Tork. Well, well, I see the issue of these Armes,
I cannot mend it, I must needes confesse,
Because my power is weake, and all ill left.
But if I could, by him that gaue me life,
I would attach you all, and make you stoope
Vnto the Soueraigne Mercy of the King.
But since I cannot, be it knowne to you,
I doe remaine as Neuter. So fare you well,
Vnlesse you please to enter in the Castle,
And there repose you for this Night.

Bull. An offer Vnckle, that wee will accept.
But wee must winne your Grace to goe with vs
To Bristow Castle, which they say is held
By Busbie, Bagot, and their Complices,
The Caterpillers of the Commonwealth,
Which I haue sworne to weed, and plucke away.

Tork. It may be I will go with you but yet Ile pawse,
For I am loth to breake our Countries Lawes:
Nor Friends, nor Foes, to me welcome you are,
Things past redresse, are now with me past care Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Salisbury, and a Capraine.

Capt. My Lord of Salisbury, we haue stayd ten dayes,
And hardly kept our Countrey men together,
And yet we heare no tidings from the King;
Therefore we will disperse our selues: farewell

Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trustie Welchman,
The King reposeth all his confidence in thee.

Capt. 'Tis thought the King is dead, we will not stay;
The Bay-trees in our Countrey all are wither'd,
And Meteors fright the fixed Starres of Heauen;
The pale-fac'd Moone lookes bloody on the Earth,
And leane-look'd Prophets whisper tearesfull change;
Rich men looke sad, and Ruffians dance and leape,
The one in feare, to loose what they enioy,
The other to enioy by Rage, and Warre:
These signes fore-run the death of Kings.
Farewell, our Countrey men are gone and fled,
As well assur'd Richard their King is dead. Exit.

Sal. Ah Richard, with eyes of heauie mind,
I see thy Glory, like a shooting Starre,
Fall to the base Earth, from the Firmament:
Thy Sunne sets weeping in the lowly West,
Witnessing Stormes to come, Woe, and Vnrest:
Thy Friends are fled, to wait vpon thy Foes,
And crossely to thy good, all fortune goes Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Bullingbrooke, Torkes, Northumberland, Rosse, Percie, Willoughby, with Busbie and Greene Prisoners.

Bull. Bring forth these men.

Busbie and Greene. I will not vex your soules,
(Since presently your soules must part your bodies)
With too much vrging your pernicious liues,
For 'twere no Charitie: yet to wash your blood
From off my hands, here in the view of men,
I will vnfold some causes of your deaths.
You haue mis-led a Prince, a Royall King,
A happie Gentleman in Blood, and Lineaments,
By you vnhappyd, and disfigur'd cleane:
You haue in manner with your sinfull houres
Made a Druorce betwixt his Queene and him,
Broke the possession of a Royall Bed,
And stayn'd the beautie of a faire Queenes Cheekes,
With teares drawn frô her eyes, with your soule wronge
My Ielse a Prince, by fortune of my birth,
Neere to the King in blood, and neere in loue,
Till you did make him mis-interpret me,
Haue stoopt my neck vnder your iniuries,
And sigh'd my English breath in forraigne Clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment;
While you haue fed vpon my Seignories,
Dis-park'd my Parkes, and sell'd my Forrest Woods;
From mine owne Windowes torne my Household Coat,
Raz'd out my Impresse, leauing me no signe,
Saue mens opinions, and my liuing blood,
To shew the World I am a Gentleman.
This, and much more, much more then twice all this,
Condemnes you to the death: see them deliuered ouer
To execution, and the hand of death.

Busbie. More welcome is the stroake of death to me,
Then Bullingbrooke to England.

Greene. My comfort is, that Heauen will take our soules,
And plague Inujustice with the paines of Hell.

Bull. My Lord Northumberland, see them dispatch'd:
Vnckle, you say the Queene is at your House,
For Heauens sake fairely let her be entreated,
Tell her I send to her my kind commends;
Take speciall care my Greetings be deliuer'd.

Tork. A Gentleman of mine I haue dispatch'd
With Letters of your loue, to her at large.

Bull. Thankes gentle Vnckle: come Lords away,
To fight with Glendonre, and his Complices;
A while to worke, and after holliday.

Exeunt.

Scæna

Scena Secunda.

Drums: Flours, and Colours.Enter Richard, Annerle, Carlile, and Soulaiers.Rich. Batt'roughly Castle call you this at hand?An. Yea, my Lord: how brooks your Grace the ayre,
After your late tossing on the breaking Seas?Rich. Needs must I like it well. I weepe for 10y
To stand vpon my Kingdome once againe.
Deere Earth, I doe salute thee with my hand,
Though Rebels wound thee with their Horses hooves:
As a long parted Mother with her Child,
Plays fondly with her teares, and smiles in meeting;
So weeping, smiling, greet I thee my Earth,
And doe thee fauor with my Royall hands
Feed not thy Soueraignes Foe, my gentle Earth,
Nor with thy Sweetes, comfort his rauenuous sence:
But let thy Spiders, that suck vp thy Venome,
And heauie-gated Toades lye in their way,
Doing annoyance to the trecherous feete,
Which with vsurping steps doe trample thee.
Yield stinging Nettles to mine Enemies;
And when they from thy Bosome pluck a Flower,
Guard it I prethee with a lurking Adder,
Whose double tongue may with a mortall touch
Throw death vpon thy Soueraignes Enemies.
Mock not my fencelesse Coniuration, Lords;
This Earth shall haue a feeling, and these Stones
Proue armed Souldiers, ere her Native King
Shall falter vnder foule Rebellious Armes.Car. Feare not my Lord, that Power that made you King
Hath power to keepe you King, in spite of all.Anm. Hemeanes, my Lord, that we are too remisse,
Whilest Bullingbrooke through our securitie,
Growes strong and great, in substance and in friends.Rich. Discomfortable Cousin, knowest thou not,
That when the searching Eye of Heauen is hid
Behind the Globe, that lights the lower World,
Then Theeues and Robbers raunge abroad vnseene,
In Murthers and in Out-rage bloody here.
But when from vnder this Terrestriall Ball
He fires the prowd tops of the Easterne Pines,
And darts his Lightning through eu'ry guiltie hole,
Then Murthers, Treasons, and detested sinnes
(The Cloake of Night being pluckt from off their backs)
Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves.
So when this Theefe, this Traytor Bullingbrooke,
Who all this while hath reuell'd in the Night,
Shall see vs rising in our Throne, the East,
His Treasons will sit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of Day;
But selfe-affrighted, tremble at his sinne,
Nor all the Water in the rough rude Sea
Can wash the Balme from an annoynted King;
The breath of worldly men cannot depose
The Deputie elected by the Lord:
For every man that Bullingbrooke hath prest,
To lift shrewd Steele against our Golden Crowne,
Heauen for his Richard hath in heauently payA glorious Angell: then if Angels fight, Weake men must fall, for Heauen full guards the right,Enter Salisbury.

Welcome my Lord, how farre off lyes your Power?

Salub. Nor neere, nor farther off, my gracious Lord,
Then this weake arme; discomfort guides my tongue,
And bids me speake of nothing but despaire:
One day too late, I feare (my Noble Lord)
Hath clouded all thy happie dayes on Earth:
Oh call backe Yesterday, bid Time returne,
And thou shalt haue twelve thousand fighting men:
To day, to day, ynhappy day too late
Orethrowes thy Ioyes, Friends, Fortune, and thy State;
For all the Welchmen hearing thou wert dead,
Are gone to Bullingbrooke, disperst, and fled.Anm. Comfort my Lieve, why lookes your Grace so pale?Rich. But now the blood of twentie thousand men
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled,
And till so much blood thither come againe,
Haue I not reason to looke pale, and dead?
All Soules that will be safe, flye from my side,
For Time hath set a blot vpon my pride.Anm. Comfort my Lieve, remember who you are.Rich. I had forgot my selfe. Am I not King?
Awake thou sluggard Maiestie, thou sleepest:
Is not the Kings Name fortie thousand Names?
Arme, arme my Name: a p'nie subiect strikes
At thy great glory. Looke not to the ground,
Ye Fauorites of a King are wee not high?
High be our thoughts. I know my Vnckle Torks
Hath Power enough to serue our turne,
But who comes here?Enter Scroope.Scroope. More health and happinesse beude my Lieve,
Then can my care-tun'd tongue deliuer him.Rich. Mine eare is open, and my heart prepar'd:
The worst is worldly losse, thou canst vnfold
Say, Is my Kingdome lost? why 'twas my Care.
And what losse is it to be rid of Care?
Striues Bullingbrooke to be as Great as wee?
Greater he shall not be. If hee serue God,
Wee'l serue him too, and be his Fellow so.
Reuolt our Subiects? That we cannot mend,
They breake their Faith to God, as well as vs:
Cry Woe, Destruction, Ruine, Losse, Decay,
The worst is Death, and Death will haue his day.Scroope. Glad am I, that your Highnesse is so arm'd
To beare the tidings of Calamitie.
Like an vnseasonable stormie day,
Which make the Silver Riuers drowne their Shores,
As if the World were all dissol'd to teares:
So high, about his Limits, swells the Rage
Of Bullingbrooke, couering your fearefull Land
With hard bright Steele, and hearts harder then Steele:
White Beares haue arm'd their thin and hairelesse Scalps
Against thy Maiestie, and Boyes with Womens Voyces,
Striue to speake bigge, and clap their female ioints
In stiffe vnwieldie Armes: against thy Crowne
Thy very Beadf-men learne to bend their Bowes
Of double fatall Eugh: against thy State
Yea Distaffe-Women manage rustie Bills:
Against thy Seat both young and old rebell,
And all goes worse then I haue power to tell.Rich. Too well, too well thou tell'st a Tale so ill.
Where is the Earle of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?
What is become of Bulbin? where is Greene?

That

That they haue let the dangerous Enemie
Measure our Confinnes with such peacefull steps?
If we preuaile, their heads shall pay for it.

I warrant they haue made peace with Bullingbrooke.

Scroope. Peace haue they made with him indeede (my Lord.)

Rich. Oh Villains, Vipers, damn'd without redemption,
Dogges, easily wooen to fawne on any man,
Snakes in my heart blood warm'd, that sting my heart,
Three Iudas'es, each one thrice worse then Iudas,
Would they make peace? terrible Hell make warre
Vpon their spotted Soules for this Offence

Scroope. Sweet Loue (I see) changing his propertie, Turnes to the fowrest, and most deadly hate:
Againe vncurse their Soules, their peace is made
With Heads, and not with Hands: those whom you curse
Haue felt the worst of Deaths destroying hand,
And lye full low, graud in the hollow ground.

Ann. Is Bullshie, Greene, and the Earle of Wiltshire dead?

Scroope. Yea all of them at Bristow lost their heads

Ann. Where is the Duke my Father with his Power?

Rich. No matter where; of comfort no man speake:
Let's talke of Graues, of Wormes, and Epitaphs,
Make Dust our Paper, and with Raynie eyes
Write Sorrow on the Bosome of the Earth.
Let's chuse Executors, and talke of Wills.
And yet not so, for what can we bequeath,
Saue our deposed bodies to the ground?

Our Lands, our Liues, and all are Bullingbrookes,
And nothing can we call our owne, but Death,
And that small Modell of the barren Earth,
Which serues as Paste, and Couer to our Bones.
For Heauens take let vs sit vpon the ground,
And tell sad stories of the death of Kings
How some haue been depos'd, some slaine in warre,
Some haunted by the Ghosts they haue depos'd,
Some poyson'd by their Wiues, some sleeping kill'd,
All murder'd. For within the hollow Crowne

That rounds the mortall Temples of a King,
Keepes Death his Court, and there the Antique sits
Scoffing his State, and grinning at his Pompe,
Allowing him a breath, a little Scene,
To Monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks,
Infusing him with selfe and vaine conceit,
As if this Flesh, which wails about our Life,
Were Brasse impregnable and humor'd thus,
Comes at the last, and with a little Pinne
Bores through his Castle Walls, and farwell King.
Couer your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
With solemne Reuerence. throw away Respect,
Tradition, Forme, and Ceremonious duce,
For you haue but mistooke me all this while.
I liue with Bread like you, feeble Want,
Taste Griefe, need Friends subiected thus,
How can you say to me, I am a King?

Carl. My Lord, wise men ne're waile their present woes,
But presently preuent the wayes to waile
To feare the Foe, since feare oppresseth strength,
Gives in your weakenesse, strength vnto your Foe;
Feare, and be slaine, no worse can come to fight,
And fight and die, is death destroying death,
Where fearing, dying, payes death seruile breath.

Ann. My Father hath a Power, enquire of him,
And learne to make a Body of a Limbe

Rich. Thou chid'st me well proud Bullingbrooke I come

To change Blowes with thee, for our day of Doome:

This ague fit of feare is ouer-blowne,

An easie taske it is to winne our owne.

Say Scroope, where lyes our Vnckle with his Power?

Speake sweetly man, although thy lookes be fowre.

Scroope. Men iudge by the complexion of the Skie

The state and inclination of the day;

So may you by my dull and heauie Eye.

My Tongue hath but a heauier Tale to say:

I play the Torturer, by small and small

To lengthen out the worst, that must be spoken.

Your Vnckle Torke is ioynd with Bullingbrooke,

And all your Northerne Castles yeelded vp,

And all your Southerne Gentlemen in Armes

Vpon his Faction.

Rich. Thou hast said enough.

Beshrew thee Cousin, which didst lead me forth

Of that sweet way I was in, to despaire:

What say you now? What comfort haue we now?

By Heauen Ile hate him euerlastingly,

That bids me be of comfort any more.

Goe to Flint Castle, there Ile pine away,

A King, Woes slaue, shall Kingly Woe obey:

That Power I haue, discharge, and let 'em goe

To care the Land, that hath some hope to grow,

For I haue none. Let no man speake againe

To alter this, for counsaile is but vaine

Ann. My Liege, one word.

Rich. He does me double wrong,

That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.

Discharge my followers let them hence away,

From Richards Night, to Bullingbrookes faire Day.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter with Drum and Colours, Bullingbrooke,
Torke, Northumberland, Attendants

Bull. So that by this intelligence we learne
The Welchmen are dispers'd, and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the King, who lately landed
With some few priuate friends, vpon this Coast.

North. The newes is very faire and good, my Lord,
Richard, not farre from hence, hath hid his head.

Tork. It would befeeme the Lord Northumberland,
To say King Richard alack the heauie day,
When such a sacred King should hide his head.

North. Your Grace mistakes. onely to be brieue, Left I his Title out.

Tork. The time hath beene,
Would you haue beene so brieue with him, he would
Haue beene so brieue with you, to shorten you,
For taking so the Head, your whole heads length.

Bull. Mistake not (Vnckle) farther then you should.

Tork. Take not (good Cousin) farther then you should.
Least you mistake the Heauens are ore your head.

Bull. I know it (Vnckle) and oppose not my selfe Against their will. But who comes here?

Enter Perce.

Welcome Harry what, will not this Castle yeeld?

Per. The Castle royally is mann'd, my Lord, Against thy entrance.

Bull. Roy-

Bull. Royalty: Why, it contains no King?

Per. Yes (my good Lord)

It doth containe a King: King Richard lyes
Within the limits of yond Lime and Stone,
And with him, the Lord Annerle, Lord Salisbury,
Sir Stephen Scroope, besides a Clergie man
Of holy reuerence; who, I cannot learne.

North. Oh, belike it is the Bishop of Carlile.

Bull. Noble Lord,

Goe to the rude Ribs of that ancient Castle,
Through Brazen Trumpet send the breath of Parle
Into his ruin'd Eares, and thus deliuer
Henry Bullingbrooke vpon his knees doth kisse
King Richards hand, and sends allegiance
And true faith of heart to his Royall Person. hither come
Euen at his feet, to lay my Armes and Power,
Prouided, that my Banishment repeal'd,
And Lands restor'd againe, be freely graunted.
If not, Ile vse th'advantage of my Power,
And lay the Summers dust with showers of blood,
Rayn'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen;
The which, how farre off from the mind of Bullingbrooke
It is, such Crimson Tempest should bedrench
The fresh greeke Lap of faire King Richards Land,
My stooping dutie tenderly shall shew.
Goe signifie as much, while here we march
Vpon the Grassie Carpet of this Plaine
Let's march without the noyse of threatening Drum,
That from this Castles ratter'd Battlements
Our faire Appointments may be well perus'd.
Me thinkes King Richard and my selfe should meet
With no lesse terror then the Elements
Of Fire and Water, when their thundring smoake
At meeting teares the cloudie Cheekes of Heaven:
Be he the fire, Ile be the yeelding Water,
The Rage be his, while on the Earth I raine
My Waters on the Earth, and not on him
March on, and make King Richard how he lookes.

Parle without, and answere within - then a Flourish.

Enter on the Walls, Richard, Carlile, Annerle, Scroope, Salisbury

See, see, King Richard doth himselfe appeare
As doth the blushing discontented Sunne,
From out the fierie Portall of the East,
When he perceiues the enuious Clouds are bent
To dimme his glory, and to staine the tract
Of his bright passage to the Occident.

Tork. Yet lookes he like a King behold his Eye
(As bright as is the Eagles) lightens forth
Controlling Maiestie. alack, alack, for woe,
That any harme should staine so faire a shew.

Rich. Wee are amaz'd, and thus long haue we stood
To watch the fearefull bending of thy knee,
Because we thought our selfe thy lawfull King:
And if we be, how dare thy ioynts forget
To pay their awfull dutie to our presence?
If we be not, shew vs the Hand of God,
That hath dismiss'd vs from our Stewardship,
For well wee know, no Hand of Blood and Bone
Can gripe the sacred Handle of our Scepter,
Vnlesse he doe prophane, steale, or vsurpe.
And though you thinke, that all, as you haue done,
Haue torne their Soules, by turning them from vs,
And we are barren, and bereft of Friends:
Yet know, my Master, God Omnipotent,
Is mustring in his Clouds, on our behalfe,

Armies of Pestilence, and they shall strike
Your Children yet vnborne, and vnbegot,
That list your Vassall Hands against my Head,
And threat the Glory of my precious Crowne.
Tell Bullingbrooke, for yond me thinkes he is,
That euery stride he makes vpon my Land,
Is dangerous Treason: He is come to ope
The purple Testament of bleeding Warre;
But ere the Crowne he lookes for, lye in peace,
Ten thousand bloody crownes of Mothers Sonnes
Shall ill become the flower of Englands face,
Change the complexion of her Maid-pale Peace
To Scarlet Indignation, and bedew
Her Pastors Grassie with faithfull English Blood

North. The King of Heaven forbid our Lord the King
Should so with ciuill and vnciuill Armes
Be rush'd vpon: Thy thrice-noble Cousin,
Harry Bullingbrooke, doth humbly kisse thy hand,
And by the Honorable Tombe he swears,
That stands vpon your Royall Grandfathers Bones,
And by the Royalties of both your Bloods,
(Currents that spring from one most gracious Head)
And by the buried Hand of Warlike Gaunt,
And by the Worth and Honor of himselfe,
Comprising all that may be sworne, or said,
His coming hither hath no further scope,
Then for his Lineall Royalties, and to begge
Infranchisement immediate on his knees:
Which on thy Royall partie graunted once,
His glittering Armes he will commend to Rust,
His barbed Steedes to Stables, and his heart
To faithfull seruice of your Maiestie
This swears he, as he is a Prince, is iust,
And as I am a Gentleman, I credit him.

Rich. Northumberland, say thus The King returns,
His Noble Cousin is right welcome hither,
And all the number of his faire demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction
With all the gracious vterance thou hast,
Speake to his gentle hearing kind commends.
We doe debate our selfe (Cousin) doe we not,
To looke so poorely, and to speake so faire?
Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the Traytor, and so die?

Anm. No, good my Lord, let's fight with gentle words,
Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful Swords.

Rich. Oh God, oh God, that ere this tongue of mine,
That layd the Sentence of dread Banishment
On yond proud man, should take it off againe
With words of sooth: Oh that I were as great
As is my Griefe, or lesser then my Name,
Or that I could forget what I haue beene,
Or not remember what I must be now:
Swell't thou proud heart? Ile giue thee scope to beat,
Since Foes haue scope to beat both thee and me.

Anm. Northumberland comes backe from Bullingbrooke.

Rich. What must the King doe now? must he submit?
The King shall doe it: Must he be depos'd?
The King shall be contented. Must he loose
The Name of King? O Gods Name let it goe.
Ile giue my Jewels for a sett of Beades,
My gorgeous Pallace, for a Hermitage,
My gay Apparell, for an Almes-mans Gowne,
My figur'd Goblets, for a Dish of Wood,
My Scepter, for a Palmers walking Staffe,

My

My Subiects, for a payre of carued Saints,
And my large Kingdome, for a little Graue,
A little little Graue, an obscure Graue.
Or Ile be buried in the Kings high-way,
Some way of common Trade, where Subiects feet
May howrely trample on their Soueraignes Head:
For on my heart they tread now, whilst I lue;
And buried once, why not vpon my Head?
Annerie, thou weep'st (my tender-hearted Cousin)
Wee'le make foule Weather with despised Teares.
Our sighes, and they, shall lodge the Summer Corne,
And make a Dearth in this reuolting Land.
Or shall we play the Wantons with our Woes,
And make some prettie Match, with shedding Teares?
As thus to drop them still vpon one place,
Till they haue fretted vs a payre of Graues,
Within the Earth and therein ly'd, there lyes
Two Kinsmen, digg'd their Graues with weeping Eyes?
Would not this ill, doe well? Well, well, I see
I talke but idly, and you mock at mee.
Most mightie Prince, my Lord Northumberland,
What sayes King Bullingbrooke? Will his Maiestie
Giue Richard leaue to lue, till Richard die?
You make a Legge, and Bullingbrooke sayes I
North. My Lord, in the base Court he doth attend
To speake with you, may it please you to come downe
Rich Downe, downe I come, like glist'ring Phaeton,
Wanting the manage of vnruely lades.
In the base Court? base Court, where Kings grow base,
To come at Traytors Calls, and doe them Grace
In the base Court come downe down Court, down King,
For night-Owls strike, where mourning Larks should sing.

Bull. What sayes his Maiestie?

North Sorrow, and griefe of heart
Makes him speake fondly, like a frantick man:
Yet he is come.

Bull. Stand all apart,
And shew faire dutie to his Maiestie.
My gracious Lord.

Rich Faire Cousin,
You debase your Princely Knee,
To make the base Earth proud with kissing it.
Me rather had, my Heart might feele your Loue,
Then my vnpleas'd Eye see your Courtesie.
Vp Cousin, vp, your Heart is vp, I know,
Thus high at least, although your Knece below.

Bull. My gracious Lord, I come but for mine owne

Rich. Your owne is yours, and I am yours, and all

Bull. So farre be mine, my most redoubted Lord,
As my true seruice shall deserue your loue.

Rich. Well you deseru'd:
They well deserue to haue,
That know the strong'ft, and surest way to get.
Vnckle giue me your Hand. nay, drie your Eyes,
Teares shew their Loue, but want their Remedies.
Cousin, I am too young to be your Father,
Though you are old enough to be my Heire.
What you will haue, Ile giue, and willing to,
For doe we must, what force will haue vs doe.
Set on towards London.

Cousin, is it so?

Bull Yea, my good Lord.

Rich. Then I must not say, no,

Flourish Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter the Queene, and two Ladies.

Qu. What sport shall we deuise here in this Garden,
To driue away the heauie thought of Care?

La Madame, wee'le play at Bowles.

Qu. 'Twill make me thinke the World is full of Rubs,
And that my fortune runnes against the Byas.

La. Madame, wee'le Dance

Qu. My Legges can keepe no measure in Delight,
When my poore Heart no measure keepest in Griefe.
Therefore no Dancing (Girle) some other sport.

La. Madame, wee'le tell Tales.

Qu. Of Sorrow, or of Griefe?

La. Of eyther, Madame.

Qu. Of neyther, Girle

For if of Ioy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of Sorrow:
Or if of Griefe, being altogether had,
It addes more Sorrow to my want of Ioy:
For what I haue, I need not to repeat,
And what I want, it bootes not to complaine.

La. Madame, Ile sing

Qu. 'Tis well that thou hast cause.

But thou should'st please me better, wouldst thou weepe.

La I could weepe, Madame, would it doe you good.

Qu. And I could sing, would weeping doe me good,
And neuer borrow any Teare of thee.

Enter a Gardiner, and two Seruants.

But stay, here comes the Gardiners,
Let's step into the shadow of these Trees
My wretchednesse, vnto a Rowe of Pinnes,
They le talke of State for euery one doth so,
Against a Change; Woe is fore-runne with Woe.

Gard Goe binde thou vp yond dangling Apricocks,
Which like vnruely Children, make their Syre
Soupe with oppression of their prodigall weight.
Giue some suppertance to the bending twiggies.
Goe thou, and like an Executioner

Cut off the heads of too fast growing sprayes,
That looke too loslie in our Common-wealth:

All must be even, in our Government
You thus imploy'd, I will goe root away
The noysome Weedes, that without profit sucke
The Soyles fertilitie from wholesome flowers.

Ser. Why should we, in the compasse of a Pale,
Keepe Law and Forme, and due Proportion,
Shewing as in a Modell our firme Estate?
When our Sea-walled Garden, the whole Land,
Is full of Weedes, her fairest Flowers choakt vp,
Her Fruit-trees all vnpruin'd, her Hedges run'd,
Her Knots disorder'd, and her wholesome Hearbes
Swarming with Caterpillers.

Gard Hold thy peace.

He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd Spring,
Hath now himselfe met with the Fall of Lease.
The Weedes that his broad-spreading Leaues did shelter,
That seem'd, in eating him, to hold him vp,
Are pull'd vp, Root and all, by Bullingbrooke:
I meane, the Earle of Wiltshire, Busshie, Greene.

d

Ser. What,

Ser. What are they dead?

Gard. They are,

And Bullingbrooke hath seiz'd the wastefull King.
Oh, what pitty is it, that he had not so trim'd
And dress'd his Land, as we this Garden, at time of yeare,
And wound the Barke, the skin of our Fruit-trees;
Least being ouer-proud with Sap and Blood,
With too much riches it confound it selfe?
Had he done so, to great and growing men,
They might haue liu'd to beare, and he to taste
Their fruites of dutie. Superfluous branches
We lop away, that bearing boughes may liue:
Had he done so, himselfe had borne the Crowne,
Which waste and idle houres, hath quite thrown downe.

Ser. What thinke you the King shall be depos'd?

Gard. Deprest he is already, and depos'd
'Tis doubted he will be. Letters came last night
To a deere Friend of the Duke of Yorke,
That tell blacke tydings.

Qu. Oh I am prest to death through want of speaking:
Thou old Adam's likenesse, set to dresse this Garden:
How dares thy harsh rude tongue sound this vnpleasing
What Eue? what Serpent hath suggested thee, (newes
To make a second fall of cursed man?
Why do'st thou say, King Richard is depos'd,
Dar'st thou, thou little better thing then earth,
Diuine his downfall? Say, where, when, and how Cam'st thou by this ill-tydings? Speake thou wretch.

Gard. Pardon me Madam, Little Ioy haue I
To breath these newes; yet what I say, is true;
King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
Of Bullingbrooke, their Fortunes both are weigh'd:
In your Lords Scale, is nothing but himselfe,
And some few Vanities, that make him light:
But in the Ballance of great Bullingbrooke,
Besides himselfe, are all the English Peeres,
And with that oddes he weighes King Richard downe.
Poste you to London, and you'll finde it so,
I speake no more, then euery one doth know.

Qu. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foote,
Doth not thy Embassage belong to me?
And am I last that knowes it? Oh thou think'st
To serue me last, that I may longest keepe
Thy sorrow in my breast. Come Ladies goe,
To meet at London, Londons King in woe.
What was I borne to this: that my sad looke,
Should grace the Triumph of great Bullingbrooke.
Gard'ner, for telling me this newes of woe,
I would the Plants thou graft'st, may neuer grow. Exit.

O Poore Queen, so that thy State might be no worse,
I would my skill were subiect to thy curses:
Heere did she drop a teare, heere in this place
He set a Banke of Rew, sowe Herbe of Grace:
Rue, eu'n for ruth, heere shortly shall be seene,
In the remembrance of a Weeping Queene. Exit.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter As to the Parliament, Bullingbrooke, Aumerle, *Northumb*land, Perce, Fitz-Water, Surrey, Carlile, Abbas of Westminster. Herauld, Officers, and Bagot.

Bullingbrooke. Call forth Bagot.

Now Bagot, freely speake thy minde,
What thou do'st know of Noble Glousters death:
Who wrought it with the King, and who perform'd
The bloody Office of his Timelesse end.

Bag. Then set before my face, the Lord Aumerle.
Bul. Cofin, stand forth, and looke vpon that man,

Bag. My Lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue
Scornes to vsay, what it hath once deliuer'd.
In that deadtime, when Glousters death was plotted,
I heard you say, Is not my arme of length,
That reacheth from the restfull English Court
As farre as Callis, to my Vnkles head,
Amongst much other talke, that very time,
I heard you say, that you had rather refuse
The offer of an hundred thousand Crownes,
Then Bullingbrookes returne to England; adding withall,
How blest this Land would be, in this your Cofins death

Aum. Princes, and Noble Lords:

What answer shall I make to this base man?

Shall I so much dishonor my faire Starres,

On equall termes to giue him chastisement?

Either I must, or haue mine honor soyl'd

With th'Attainder of his slanderous Lippes.

There is my Gage, the manuell Seale of death

That markes thee out for Hell. Thou lye'st,

And will maintaine what thou hast said, is false,

In thy heart blood, though being all too base

To staine the temper of my Knightly sword.

Bul. Bagot forbear, thou shalt not take it vp.

Aum. Excepting one, I would he were the best
In all this presence, that hath mou'd me so.

Fitz. If that thy valour stand on sympathize:

There is my Gage, Aumerle, in Gage to thine:

By that faire Sunne, that shewes me where thou stand'st,

I heard thee say (and vauntingly thou spak'st it)

That thou wert cause of Noble Glousters death.

If thou deniest it, twenty times thou lye'st,

And I will turne thy falshood to thy harr,

Where it was forged with my Rapiers point.

Aum. Thou dar'st not (Coward) liue to see the day.

Fitz. Now by my Soule, I would it were this houre.

Aum. Fitzwater thou art damn'd to hell for this.

Per. Aumerle, thou lye'st: his Honor is a true

In thisAppeale, as thou art all vntrue:

And that thou art so, there I throw my Gage

To proue it on thee, to th'extremest point

Of mortall breathing. Seize it, if thou dar'st.

Aum. And if I do not, may my hands rot off,

And neuer brandish more reuengefull Steele,

Over the glittering Helmet of my Foe.

Surrey. My Lord Fitzwater:

I do remember well, the very time

Aumerle, and you did talke.

Fitz. My Lord,

'Tis very true: You were in presence then,

And you can witness with me, this is true.

Surrey. As false, by heauen,

As Heauen it selfe is true.

Fitz. Surrey, thou lye'st.

Surrey. Dishonourable Boy;

That lye, shall lie so heauy on my Sword,

That it shall render Vengeance, and Reuenge,

Till thou the Lye-giuer, and that lye, doe lye

In earth as quiet, as thy Fathers Scull.

In prooffe whereof, there is mine Honors pawne,

Engage it to the Triall, if thou dar'st.

Exit.

Fitz How fondly do'st thou spur a forward Horse?
If I dare eate, or drinke, or breathe, or lue,
I dare meete, Surrey in a Wildernesse,
And spit vpon him, whilst I say he Lyes,
And Lyes, and Lyes: there is my Bond of Faith,
To tye thee to my strong Correction
As I intend to tye in this new World,
Aumerle is guiltie of my true Appeale
Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolke say,
That thou Aumerle didst send two of thy men,
To execute the Noble Duke at Caillis.

Ann Some honest Christian trust me with a Gage,
That Norfolke lyes: here doe I throw downe this,
If he may be repeal'd, to trie his Honor.

Bull. These differences shall all rest vnder Gage,
Till Norfolke be repeal'd. repeal'd he shall be;
And (though mine Enemie) restor'd againe
To all his Lands and Seignories. when hee's return'd,
Against Aumerle we will enforce his Tryall.

Carl. That honorable day shall ne're be seene.
Many a time hath banish'd Norfolke fought
For Iesu Christ, in glorious Christian field
Stream'ng the Ensigne of the Christian Crosse,
Against black Pagans, Turkes, and Saracens.
And toyl'd with workes of Warre, retyr'd himselfe
To Italy, and there at Venice gaue
His Body to that pleasant Countries Earth,
And his pure Soule vnto his Captaine Christ,
Vnder whose Colours he had fought so long.

Bull. Why Bishop, is Norfolke dead?

Carl. As sure as I lue, my Lord.

Bull. Sweet peace conduct his sweet Soule
To the osome of good old Abraham
Lords Appealants your differences shall all rest vnder gage,
Till we assigne you to your dayes of Tryall

Enter Torke

Torke Great Duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
From plume-pluckt Richard, who with willing Soule
Adopts thee Heire, and his high Scepter yelds
To the possession of thy Royall Hand.
Ascend his Throne, descending now from h.m.,
And long lue Henry, of that Name the Fourth
Bull. In Gods Name, Ile ascend the Regall Throne

Carl. Mary, Heauen forbid.

Worst in this Royall Presence may I speake,
Yet best befeeming me to speake the truth
Would God, that any in this Noble Presence
Were enough Noble, to be vpriht Iudge
Of Noble Richard then true Noblenesse would Learne him forbearance from so foule a Wrong.
What Subiect can giue Sentence on his King?
And who sits here that is not Richards Subiect?
Theques are not iudg'd, but they are by to heate,
Although apparant guilt be seene in them.
And shall the figure of Gods Maestie,
His Captaine, Steward, Deputie elect,
Anoynted, Crown'd, planted many yeeres,
Be iudg'd by subiect, and inferior breathe,
And he himselfe not present? Oh, forbid it, Gods,
That in a Christian Climate, Soules refine
Should shew so heynous, black, obscene a deed.
I speake to Subiects, and a Subiect speaks,
Surr'd vp by Heauen, thus boldly for his King,
My Lord of Hereford here, whom you call King,
Is a foule Traytor to proud Herefords King.
And if you Crowne him, let me prophetic,

The blood of English shall manure the ground,
And future Ages groane for his foule Act.
Peace shall goe sleepe with Turkes and Infidels,
And in this Seat of Peace, tumultuous Warres
Shall Kinne with Kinne, and Kinde with Kinde confound.
Disorder, Horror, Feare, and Murrine
Shall here inhabit, and this Land be call'd
The field of Golgotha, and dead mens Sculls.
Oh, if you reare this House, against this House
It will the wofullest Diuision proue,
That euer fell vpon this cursed Earth.
Preuent it, resist it, and let it not be so,
Least Child, Childs Children cry against you, Woe.

North Well haue you argu'd Sir, and for your paines,
Of Capitall Treason we arrest you here.
My Lord of Westminster, be it your charge,
To keepe him safely, till his day of Tryall.

May it please you, Lords, to grant the Commons Suit?

Bull. Fetch hither Richard, that in common view
He may surrender: so we shall proceede
Without suspition.

Torke I will be his Conduet.

Exit.

Bull. Lords, you that here are vnder our Arrest,
Procure your Sureties for your Dayes of Answer
Little are we beholding to your Loue,
And little look'd for at your helping Hands.

Enter Richard and Torke.

Rich. Alack, why am I sent for to a King,
Before I haue shooke off the Regall thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet haue learn'd
To insinuate, flatter, bowe, and bend my Knee.
Giue Sorrow leaue a while, to tuture me
To this submission. Yet I well remember
The fauors of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, All haile to me?
So Indas did to Christ: but he in twelue,
Found truth in all, but one, I, in twelue thousand, none.
God saue the King: will no man say, Amen?
Am I both Priest, and Clarke? well then, Amen.
God saue the King, although I be not hee.
And yet Amen, if Heauen doe thinke him mee.
To doe what seruice, am I sent for hither?

Torke To doe that office of thine owne good will,
Which tyred Maestie did make thee offer:
The Resignation of thy State and Crowne
To Henry Bullingbrooke.

Rich. Giue me the Crowne Here Cousin, seize y<sup>e</sup> Crowne:
Here Cousin, on this side my Hand, on that side thine.
Now is this Golden Crowne like a deepe Well,
That owes two Buckets, filling one another,
The emptier euer dancing in the ayre,
The other downe, vnscene, and full of Water:
That Bucker downe, and full of Teares am I,
Drinking my Griefes, whilst you mount vp on high.

Bull. I thought you had been willing to resigne.

Rich. My Crowne I am, but still my Griefes are mine:
You may my Glories and my State depose,
But not my Griefes; still am I King of those.

Bull. Put of your Cares you glue me with your Crowne.

Rich. Your Cares servp, do not pluck my Cares downe.
My Care, is losse of Care, by old Care done,
Your Care, is game of Care, by new Care wonne:
The Cares I giue, I haue, though giuen away,
They tend the Crowne, yet still with me they stay:

Bull. Are you contented to resigne the Crowne?

d z

Rich. I,

Rich. I, no; no, I: for I must nothing bee:
Therefore no, no, for I resigne to thee.
Now, marke me how I will vndoe my selfe.
I giue this heauie Weight from off my Head,
And this vnwieldie Scepter from my Hand,
The pride of Kingly sway from our my Heart,
With mine owne Teares I wash away my Balme,
With mine owne Hands I giue away my Crowne,
With mine owne Tongue denie my Sacred State,
With mine owne Breath release all durtious Oathes;
All Pompe and Maiestie I doe forswear:
My Manors, Rents, Reuenues, I forgoe;
My AEs, Decrees, and Statutes I denie:
God pardon all Oathes that are broke to mee,
God keepe all Vowes vobroke are made to thee.
Make me, that nothing haue, with nothing griev'd,
And thou with all pleas'd, that hast all archieue'd,
Long may'st thou liue in Richards Seat to sit,
And soone lye Richard in an Earthie Pit.
God saue King Henry, vn-King'd Richard sayes,
And fend him many yeeres of Sunne-shine dayes.
What more remains?

North. No more: but that you reade
These Accusations, and these grievous Crymes,
Committed by your Person, and your followers,
Against the State, and Profit of this Land.
That by confessing them, the Soules of men
May deeme, that you are worthily depos'd

Rich. Must I doe so? and must I rauell out
My weau'd-up follies? Gentle Northumberland,
If thy Offences were vpon Record,
Would it not shame thee, in so faire a troupe,
To reade a Lecture of them? If thou would'st,
There should'st thou finde one heynous Article,
Contayning the deposing of a King,
And cracking the strong Warrant of an Oath,
Mark'd with a Blot, damn'd in the Booke of Heauen.
Nay, all of you, that stand and looke vpon me,
Whil'st that my wretchednesse doth baite my selfe,
Though some of you, with Pilates, wash your hands,
Shewing an outward pittie: yet you Pilates
Haue here deliuer'd me to my fowre Crosse,
And Water cannot wash away your sinne.

North. My Lord dispatch, reade o're these Articles.

Rich. Mine Eyes are full of Teares, I cannot see
And yet salt Water blindes them not so much,
But they can see a sort of Traytors here.
Nay, if I turne mine Eyes vpon my selfe,
I finde my selfe a Traytor with the rest:
For I haue giuen here my Soules consent,
T'vndeck the pompous Body of a King;
Made Glory base; a Soueraigntie, a Slaue;
Prowd Maiestie, a Subject, State, a Pefant.

North. My Lord.

Rich. No Lord of thine, thou haught-insulting man;
No, nor no mans Lord: I haue no Name, no Title;
No, nor that Name was giuen me at the Font,
But 'tis vsurpt: alack the heuile day,
That I haue worne so many Winters out,
And know not now, what Name to call my selfe.
Oh, that I were a Mockerie, King of Snow,
Standing before the Sunne of Bullingbrooke,
To melt my selfe away in Water-drops.
Good King, great King, and yet not greatly good,
And if my word be Sterling yet in England,
Let it command a Mirror hither straigh,

That it may shew me what a Face I haue,
Since it is Bankrupt of his Maiestie.

Bull. Goe some of you, and fetch a Looking-Glasse
North. Read o're this Paper, while y<sup>e</sup> Glasse doth com

Rich. Friend, thou tortments me, ere I come to Hell.
Bull. Vrgie it no more, my Lord Northumberland.

North. The Commons will not then be satisfy'd.

Rich. They shall be satisfy'd: He reade enough,
When I doe see the very Booke indeede;

Where all my sinnes are writ, and that's my selfe.

Enter one with a Glasse

Giue me that Glasse, and therein will I reade.
No deeper wrinkles yet? hath Sorrow stutke
So many Blowes vpon this Face of mine,
And made no deeper Wounds? Oh flatter'ing Glasse,
Like to my followers in prosperitie,
Thou do'st beguile me. Was this Face, the Face
That euery day, vnder his House-hold Rouse,
Did keepe ten thousand men? Was this the Face,
That like the Sunne, did make beholders winke?
Is this the Face, which fac'd so many follies,
That was at last out-fac'd by Bullingbrooke?
A brittle Glory shineth in this Face,
As brittle as the Glory, is the Face,
For there it is, cracke in an hundred shivers.
Marke silent King, the Morall of this sport,
How soone my Sorrow hath destroy'd my Face,

Bull. The shadow of your Sorrow hath destroy'd
The shadow of your Face.

Rich. Say that againe.

The shadow of my Sorrow: ha, let's see,
'Tis very true, my Griefe lyes all within,
And these externall manner of Laments,
Are meere shadows, to the vnscene Griefe
That swells with silence in the tortur'd Soule.
There lyes the substance. and I thanke thee King
For thy great bountie, that not onely giu'st
Me cause to wayle, but teachest me the way
How to lament the cause. He begge one Boone,
And then be gone, and trouble you no more,
Shall I obtaine it?

Bull. Name it, faire Cousin.

Rich. Faire Cousin? I am greater then a King.
For when I was a King, my flatterers
Were then but subjects; being now a subject,
I haue a King here to my flatterer.
Being so great, I haue no neede to begge.

Bull. Yet aske.

Rich. And shall I haue?

Bull. You shall.

Rich. Then giue me leaue to goe.

Bull. Whither?

Rich. Whither you will, so I were from your fight.

Bull. Goe some of you, conuey him to the Tower.

Rich. Oh good. conuey: Conueyers are you all,
That rise thus nimbly by a true Kings fall.

Bull. On Wednesday next, we solemnly set downe
Our Coronation Lords, prepare your selues. Exeunt

Abbot. A wofull Pageant haue we here beheld.

Carl. The Woes to come, the Children yet vnborn,
Shall feele this day as sharpe to them as Thorne.

Ann. You holy Clergie-men, is there no Plot
To rid the Realme of this pernicious Plot.

Abbot. Before I freely speake my minde herein,
You shall not onely take the Sacrament,
To bury mine intents, but also to effect

What

What euer I shall happen to deuise.
I see your Browes are full of Discontent,
Your Heart of Sorrow, and your Eyes of Teares.
Come home with me to Supper, Ile lay a Plot
Shall shew vs all a merry day. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Queene, and Ladies

Qu. This way the King will come this is the way
To Iulius Cæsars ill-erected Tower.
To whose flint Bosome, my condemned Lord
Is doom'd a Prisoner, by proud Bullingbrooke
Here let vs rest, if this rebellious Earth
Haue any resting for her true Kings Queene.

Enter Richard, and Guard

But soft, but see, or rather doe not see,
My faire Rose wither: yet looke vp, behold,
That you in pittie may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh againe with true Loue Teares
Ah thou, the Modell where old Troy did stand,
Thou Mapple of Honor, thou King Richards Tombe,
And not King Richard thou most beauteous Inne,
Why should hard-fauor'd Griefe be lodg'd in thee,
When Triumph is become an Ale-house Guest.

Rich. Ioyne not with griefe, faire Woman, do not so,
To make my end too sudden. Iearne good Soule,
To thinke our former State a happie Dreame,
From which awak'd, the truth of what we are,
Shewes vs but this. I am sworne Brother (Sweet)
To grim Necessitie; and hee and I
Will keepe a League till Death, High thee to France,
And Cloyster thee in some Religious House.
Our holy liues must winne a new Worlds Crowne,
Which our prophane houres here haue stricken downe.

Qu. What, is my Richard both in shape and minde Transform'd, and weaken'd? Hath Bullingbrooke
Depos'd thine Intellect? hath he bene in thy Heart?
The Lyon dying, thrusteth forth his Paw,
And wounds the Earth, if nothing else, with rage
To be ore-powr'd: and wilt thou, Pupill-like,
Take thy Correction mildly, kisse the Rodde,
And fawne on Rage with base Humilitie,
Which art a Lyon, and a King of Beasts?

Rich. A King of Beasts indeed if aught but Beasts,
I had bene still a happy King of Men.
Good (sometime Queene) prepare thee hence for France.
Thinke I am dead, and that euen here thou tak'st,
As from my Death-bed, my last liuing leaue.
In Winters tedious Nights sit by the fire
With good old folkes, and let them tell thee Tales
Of wofull Ages, long agoe betide.
And ere thou bid good-night, to quit their griefe,
Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their Beds:
For why? the sencelesse Brands will sympathize
The heauie accent of thy mouing Tongue,
And in compassion, weepe the fire out
And some will mourne in ashes, some coale-black,
For the deposing of a rightfull King.

Enter Northumberland.

North. My Lord, the mind of Bullingbrooke is chang'd.

You must to Pomfret, not vnto the Tower.
And Madame, there is order ta'en for you:
With all swift speed, you must away to France.

Rich. Northumberland, thou Ladder wherewithall
The mounting Bullingbrooke ascends my Throne,
The time shall not be many houres of age,
More then it is, ere soule sinne, gathering head,
Shall breake into corruption thou shalt thinke,
Though he diuide the Realme, and giue thee halfe,
It is too little, helping him to all:

He shall thinke, that thou which know'st the way
To plant vnrighfull Kings, wilt know againe,
Being ne're so little vrg'd another way,
To pluck him headlong from the vsurped Throne.
The Loue of wicked friends conuerts to Feare;
That Feare, to Hate; and Hate turnes one, or both,
To worthe Danger, and deserued Death.

North. My guilt be on my Head, and there an end.
Take leaue, and part, for you must part forthwith.

Rich. Doubly diuorc'd? (bad men) ye violate
A two-fold Marriage, 'twixt my Crowne, and me,
And then betwixt me and my married Wife.
Let me vn-kisse the Oath 'twixt thee, and me;
And yet not so, for with a Kisse 'twas made,
Part vs, Northumberland - I, towards the North,
Where shivering Cold and Sicknesse pines the Clyme:
My Queene to France from whence, set forth in pompe,
She came adorned hither like sweet May;
Sent back like Hollowmas, or short't of day.

Qu. And must we be diuided? must we part?

Rich. I, hand from hand (my Loue) and heart from heart.

Qu. Banish vs both, and send the King with me.

North. That were some Loue, but little Pollicy.

Qu. Then whither he goes, thither let me goe.

Rich. So two together weeping, make one Woe.
Weepe thou for me in France, I, for thee heere:
Better farre off, then neere, be ne're the neere.
Goe, count thy Way with Sighes; I, mine with Groanes.

Qu. So longest Way shall haue the longest Moanes.

Rich. Twice for one step he groane, & Way being short,
And peece the Way out with a heauie heart.
Come, come, in wooing Sorrow let's be brieue,
Since wedding it, there is such length in Griefe:
One Kisse shall stop our mouthes, and dumbely part;
Thus giue I mine, and thus take I thy heart.

Qu. Giue me mine owne againe 'twere no good part,
To take on me to keepe, and kill thy heart.
So, now I haue mine owne againe, be gone,
That I may strue to kill it with a groane.

Rich. We make Woe wanton with this fond delay:
Once more adieu; the rest, let Sorrow say. Exeunt.

Scœna Secunda.

Enter Yorke, and his Duchesse.

Duch. My Lord, you told me you would tell the rest,
When weeping made you breake the story off,
Of our two Cousins coming into London.

Yorke. Where did I leaue?

Duch. At that sad stoppe, my Lord,
Where rude mis-gouern'd hands, from Windowes tops,
Threw dust and rubbish on King Richards head.

d 3

Yorke. Then

Yorke. Then, as I said, the Duke, great Bullingbrooke, Mounted vpon a hot and fierie Steed,
Which his aspiring Rider seem'd to know,
With slow, but stately pace, kept on his course:
While all tongues cryde, God saue thee Bullingbrooke.
You would haue thought the very windowes ipake,
So many greedy lookes of yong and old,
Through Casements darted their desiring eyes
Vpon his visage, and that all the wiles,
With painted Imagery had said it once,
Ielu preserve thee, welcom Bullingbrooke.
Whil'st he, from one side to the other turning,
Bare-headed, lower then his proud Steeds necke,
Bespake them thus. I thanke you Countymen:
And thus still doing, thus he past along.

Dutch. Alas poore Richard, where rides he the whil'st?

Yorke. As in a Theater, the eyes of men
After a well grac'd Actor leaues the Stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious:
Euen so, or with much more contempt, mens eyes
Did scowle on Richard: no man cryde, God saue him:
No ioyfull tongue gaue him his welcome home,
But dust was throwne vpon his Sacred head,
Which with such gentle sorrow he shooke off,
His face still combating with teares and smiles
(The badges of his greefe and patience)
That had not God (for some strong purpose) steeld
The hearts of men, they must perforce haue melted,
And Barbarisme it selfe haue pittied him.
But heauen hath a hand in these euents,
To whose high will we bound our calme contents.
To Bullingbrooke, are we sworne Subjects now,
Whose State, and Honor, I for aye allow.

Enter Aumerle.

Dut. Heere comes my sonne Aumerle.

Yor. Aumerle that was,
But that is lost, for being Richards Friend,
And Madam, you must call him Rutland now.
I am in Parliament pledge for his truth,
And lasting fealtie to the new-made King.
Dut. Welcome my sonne: who are the Violets now,
That strew the Greene-lap of the new come Spring?

Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not,
God knowes, I had as lief be none, as one.

Yorke. Well, beere you well in this new-spring of time
Least you be crop't before you come to prime.
What newes from Oxford? Hold those lusts & Triumphs?

Aum. For ought I know my Lord, they do.

Yorke. You will be there I know.

Aum. If God preuent not, I purpose so.

Yor. What Seale is that that hangs without thy bosom?
Yea, look'st thou pale? Let me see the Writing.

Aum. My Lord, 'tis nothing.

Yorke. No matter then who sees it,
I will be satisfied, let me see the Writing.

Aum. I do beseech your Grace to pardon me,
It is a matter of small consequence,
Which for some reasons I would not haue seene.

Yorke. Which for some reasons sir, I meane to see:
I feare, I feare.

Dut. What should you feare?

'Tis nothing but some bond, that he is enter'd into
For gay apparel, against the Triumph.

Yorke. Bound to himselfe? What doth he with a Bond
That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a foole.

Boy, let me see the Writing.

Aum. I do beseech you pardon me, I may not shew it.

Yor. I will be satisfied: let me see it I say. Snatches it
Treason, soule Treason, Villaine, Traitor, Slaue.

Dut. What's the matter, my Lord?

Yorke. Ho, who's within there? Saddle my horse.
Heauen for his mercy: what treachery is heere?

Dut. Why, what is't my Lord?

Yorke. Giue me my boots, I say: Saddle my horse.
Now by my Honor, my life, my troth,
I will appeach the Villaine.

Dut. What is the matter?

Yorke. Peace foolish Woman.

Dut. I will not peace. What is the matter Sonne?

Aum. Good Mother be content, it is no more
Then my poore life must answer.

Dut. Thy life answer?

Enter Seruant with Boots.

Yor. Bring me my Boots, I will vnto the King.

Dut. Strike him Aumerle. Poore boy, 'tis amaz'd,
Hence Villaine, neuer more come in my sight.

Yor. Giue me my Boots, I say.

Dut. Why Yorke, what wilt thou do?

Wilt thou not hide the Trespasse of thine owne?

Haue we more Sonne? Or are we like to haue?

Is not my teeming date drunke vp with time?

And wilt thou plucke my faire Sonne from mine Age,

And rob me of a happy Mothers name?

Is he not like thee? Is he not thine owne?

Yor. Thou fond mad woman:

Wilt thou conceale this darke Conspiracy?

A dozen of them heere haue eate the Sacrament,

And interchangeably set downe their hands

To kill the King at Oxford.

Dut. He shal be none:

Wee I keepe him heere: ther what is that to him?

Yor. Away fond woman: we're hee twenty times my Son, I would appeach him.

Dut. Hadst thou groin'd for him as I haue done,
Thou wouldest be more pittifull:

But now I know thy minde, thou do'st suspect

That I haue bene disloyall to thy bed,

And that he is a Bastard, not thy Sonne:

Sweet Yorke, sweet husband, be not of that minde:

He is as like thee, as a man may bee,

Not like to me, nor any of my Kin,

And yet I loue him.

Yorke. Make way, rannely Woman.

Exit

Dut. After Aumerle. Mount thee vpon his horse,

Spurre post, and get before him to the King,

And begge thy pardon, ere he do accuse thee,

He not be long behind: though I be old,

I doubt not but to ride as fast as Yorke:

And neuer will I rise vp from the ground,

Till Bullingbrooke haue pardon'd thee. Away be gone. Exit

Scena Tertia.

Enter Bullingbrooke, Perce, and other Lords.

Bul. Can no man tell of my vnchristie Sonne?

'Tis full three monthes since I did see him last.

If any plague hang ouer vs, 'tis he,

I would to heauen my Iords) he might be found:

Enquire at London, 'mongst the Fauernes there:

For

For there (they say) he dayly doth frequent,
With vnrestrained loose Companions,
Euen such (they say) as stand in narrow Lanes,
And rob our Watch, and beate our passengers,
Which he, yong wanton, and effeminate Boy
Takes on the point of Honor, to support
So dissolute a crew.

Per. My Lord, some two dayes since I saw the Prince,
And told him of these Triumphes held at Oxford

Bul. And what said the Gallant?

Per. His answer was . he would vnto the Stewes,
And from the common'st creature plucke a Gloue
And weare it as a fauour, and with that
He would vnhorle the lustiest Challenger.

Bul. As dissolute as desprate, yet through both,
I see some sparkes of better hope which elder dayes
May happily bring forth. But who comes heere?

Enter Aumerle.

Aum. Where is the King?

Bul. What meanes our Cofin, that hee stares
And lookes so wildly?

Aum. God saue your Grace. I do beseech your Maiesty
To haue some conference with your Grace alone.

Bul. Withdraw your selues, and leaue vs here alone:
What is the matter with our Cofin now?

Aum. For euer may my knees grow to the earth,
My tongue cleaue to my roofo within my mouth,
Vnlesse a Pardon, ere I rise, or speake.

Bul. Intended, or committed was this fault?
If on the first, how heynous ere it bee,
To win thy after loue, I pardon thee

Aum. Then giue me leaue, that I may turne the key,
That no man enter, till my tale me done

Bul. Haue thy desire Torke within.

Tor. My Liege beware, looke to thy selfe,
Thou hast a Traitor in thy presence there.

Bul. Villaine, Ile make thee safe.

Aum. Stay thy reuengefull hand, thou hast no cause to feare.

Torke. Open the doore, secure soole-hardy King:
Shall I for loue speake treason to thy face?
Open the doore, or I will breake it open.

Enter Torke

Bul. What is the matter (Vnkle) speak, recouer breath,
Tell vs how neere is danger,
That we may arme vs to encounter it

Tor. Peruse this writing heere, and thou shalt know
The reason that my haste forbids me show.

Aum. Remember as thou read'st, thy promise past:
I do repent me, reade not my name there,
My heart is not confederate with my hand.

Tor. It was (villaine) ere thy hand did set it downe.
I tore it from the Traitors bosome, King.
Feare, and not Loue, begets his penitence;
Forget to pittie him, least thy pittie proue
A Serpent, that will sting thee to the heart

Bul. Oh heinous, strong, and bold Conspiracie,
O loyall Father of a treacherous Sonne:
Thou sheere, immaculate, and situer fountaine,
From whence this streame, through muddy passages
Hath had his current, and defil'd himselfe.

Thy ouerflow of good, conuerts to bad,
And thy abundant goodnesse shall excuse
This deadly blot, in thy digressing sonne.

Torke. So shall my Vertue be his Vices bawd,
And he shall spend mine Honour, with his Shame;

As thriflesse Sonnes, their scraping Fathers Gold.
Mine honor lues, when his dishonor dies,
Or my sham'd life, in his dishonor lies:
Thou kill'st me in his life, giuing him breath,
The Traitor lues, the true man's put to death.

Dutcheffe within.

Dut. What hoa (my Liege) for heauens sake let me in.
Bul. What shrill-voic'd Suppliant, makes this eager cry?

Dut. A woman, and thine Aunt (great King) 'tis I.

Speake with me, pittie me, open the doore,
A Begger begs, that neuer begg'd before.

Bul. Our Scene is alter'd from a serious thing,
And now chang'd to the Begger, and the King.
My dangerous Cofin, let your Mother in,
I know she's come, to pray for your foule sin.

Torke. If thou do pardon, whosoever pray,
More sinnes for this forgiuenesse, prosper may.
This fester'd soynt cut off, the rest rests sound,
This let alone, will all the rest confound.

Enter Dutcheffe.

Dut. O King, belecue not this hard-hearted man,
Loue, louing not it selfe, none other can

Tor. Thou franticke woman, what dost y make here,
Shall thy old dugges, once more a Traitor reare?

Dut. Sweet Yorke be patient, heare me: gentle Liege.

Bul. Rise vp good Aunt.

Dut. Not yet, I thee beseech.

For euer will I kneele vpon my knees,
And neuer see day, that the happy sees,
Till thou giue ioy: vntill thou bid me ioy.
By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing Boy.

Aum. Vnto my mothers prayres, I bend my knee.

Torke. Against them both, my true ioynts bended be.

Dut. Pleades he in earnest? Looke vpon his Face,
His eyes do drop no teares his prayres are in selfe:
His words come from his mouth, ours from our brest.
He prayes but faintly, and would be denide,
We pray with heart, and soule, and all beside.
His weary ioynts would gladly rise, I know,
Our knees shall kneele, till to the ground they grow:
His prayers are full of false hypocisie,
Ours of true zeale, and deepe integritie.
Our prayers do out-pray his, then let them haue
That mercy, which true prayers ought to haue

Bul. Good Aunt stand vp

Dut. Nay, do not say stand vp.

But Pardon first, and afterwards stand vp.
And if I were thy Nurse, thy tongue to teach,
Pardon should be the first word of thy speech.
I neuer long'd to heare a word till now.
Say Pardon (King,) lee pittie teach thee how.
The word is short: but not so short as sweet,
No word like Pardon, for Kings mouth's so meet.

Torke. Speake it in French (King) say Pardon me may.

Dut. Dost thou teach pardon, Pardon to destroy?
Ah my fowre husband, my hard-hearted Lord,
That let's the word it selfe, against the word,
Speake Pardon, as 'tis current in our Land,
The chopping French we do not vnderstand.
Thine eye begins to speake, set thy tongue there,
Or in thy pittous heart, plant thou thine care,
That hearing how our plaints and prayres do pearce,
Pittie may moue thee, Pardon to rehearse.

Bul. Good Aunt, stand vp.

Dut. I do not sue to stand,
Pardon is all the sure I haue in hand.

Bul.

Bul. I pardon him, as heauen shall pardon mee.

Dut. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee.
Yet am I sicke for feare: Speake it againe,
Twice saying Pardon, doth not pardon twaine,
But makes one pardon strong.

Bul. I pardon him with all my hart.

Dut. A God on earth thou art.

Bul. But for our trusty brother-in-Law, the Abbot,
With all the rest of that comforted crew,
Destruction straight shall dogge them at the heeles:
Good Vnckle helpe to order severall powres
To Oxford, or where ere these Traitors are:
They shall not liue within this world I sweare,
But I will haue them, if I once know where.
Vnckle farewell, and Cousin adieu
Your mother well hath praid, and proue you true.
Dut. Come my old son, I pray heauen make thee new.

Exeunt.

Enter Exton and Seruants.

Ext. Didst thou not marke the King what words hee spake?

Haue I no friend will rid me of this liuing feare:
Was it not so?

Ser. Thole were his very words.

Ext. Haue I no Friend? (quoth he) he spake it twice,
And vrg'd it twice together, did he not?

Ser. He did.

Ext. And speaking it, he wistly look'd on me,
As who should say, I would thou wert the man
That would dinorce this terror from my heart,
Meaning the King at Poinfret. Come, let's goe;
I am the Kings Friend, and will rid his Foe.

Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Richard.

Rich. I haue bin studying, how to compare
This Prison where I liue, vnto the World:
And for because the world is populous,
And heere is not a Creature, but my selfe,
I cannot do it. yet lie hammer'd out.
My Braine, Ile proue the Female to my Soule,
My Soule, the Father: and these two beget
A generation of still breeding Thoughts;
And these same Thoughts, people this Little World
In humors, like the people of this world,
For no thought is contented. The better sort,
As thoughts of things Diuine, are intermixt
With scruples, and do set the Faith it selfe
Against the Faith as thus: Come little ones & then again,
It is as hard to come, as for a Camell
To thred the posterne of a Needles eye:
Thoughts tending to Ambition, they do plot
Vnlikely wonders; how these vaine weake nailes
May teare a passage through the Flinty ribbes
Of this hard world, my ragged prison walles:
And for they cannot, dye in their owne pride.
Thoughts tending to Content, flatter themselves,
That they are not the first of Fortunes slaues,
Nor shall not be the last. Like silly Beggars,
Who sitting in the Stockes, refuge their Shame
That many haue, and others must sit there;
And in this Thought, they finde a kind of ease,

Bearing their owne misfortune on the backe
Of such as haue before indur'd the like.
Thus play I in one Prison, many people,
And none contented. Sometimes am I King;
Then Treason makes me with my selfe a Beggar,
And so I am. Then crushing penurie,
Perswades me, I was better when a King:
Then am I king'd againe: and by and by,
Thinke that I am vnking'd by Bullingbrocke,
And straight am nothing. But what ere I am, Musicke
Nor I, nor any man, that but man is,
With nothing shall be pleas'd, till he be eas'd
With being nothing. Musicke do I heare?
Ha, ha? keepe time? How sowre sweet Musicke is,
When Time is broke, and no Proportion kept?
So is it in the Musicke of mens liues:
And heere haue I the daintinesse of eare,
To heare time broke in a disorder'd string.
But for the Concord of my State and Time,
Had not an eare to heare my true Time broke.
I wast'd Time, and now doth Time waste me:
For now hath Time made me his numbring clocke;
My Thoughts, are minutes; and with Sighes they iatte,
Their watches on vnto mine eyes, the outward Watch,
Whereto my finger, like a Dials point,
Is pointing still, in cleansing them from teares.
Now sir, the sound that tells what houre it is,
Are clamorous groanes, that strike vpon my heart,
Which is the bell. So Sighes, and Teares, and Groanes,
Shew Minutes, Hours, and Times: but my Time
Runs positing on, in Bullingbrocks proud ioy,
While I stand fooling heere, his iacke o'th Clocke.
This Musicke made me, let it sound no more,
For though it haue holpe madmen to their wits,
In me it teenes, it will make wise-men mad.
Yet blessing on his heart that giues it me,
For tis a signe of loue, and loue to Richard,
Is a strange Breoch in this all haing world.

Enter Greene

Gre. Haile Royall Prince

Rich. Thanks Noble Peere,

The cheapest of vs, is ten groates too deere.
What art thou? And how com'st thou hither?
Where no man euer comes, but that I'd dogge
That brings me food, to make misfortune liue?

Gre. I was a poore Groomer of thy Stable (King)
When thou wert King, who travelling towards Yorke,
With much ado, at length haue gotten leaue
To looke vpon my (sometimes Royall) masters face.
O how it yern'd my heart, when I beheld
In London streets, that Coronation day,
When Bullingbrocke rode on Roane Barbary,
That horse, that thou so often hast bestrid,
That horse, that I so carefully haue dress'd.

Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me gentle Friend,
How went he ynder him?

Gre. So proudly, as if he had disdain'd the ground

Rich. So proud, that Bullingbrocke was on his backe;
That Iade hath eate bread from my Royall hand.
This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.
Would he not stumble? Would he not fall downe
(Since Pride must haue a fall) and breake the necke
Of that proud man, that did vsurpe his backe?
Forgiuenesse horse. Why do I raile on thee,
Since thou errest to be aw'd by man
Was't borne to beare? I was not made a horse,

And

And yet I beare a burthen like an Ass,
Spur-gall'd, and ryd by sauncing Bullingbrooke

Enter Keeper with a Dish.

Keep Fellow, giue place, heere is no longer stay.

Rich. If thou loue me, tis time thou wert away.

Gros. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say. Exit.

Keep My Lord, wilt please you to fall too?

Rich. Taste of it first, as thou wert wont to doo.

Keep My Lord I dare not. Sir Pierce of Exton,
Who lately came from th' King, commands the contrary.

Rich. The diuell take Henrie of Lancaster, and thee;
Patience is stale, and I am weary of it.

Keep. Helpe, helpe, helpe.

Enter Exton and Seruants.

'Ri. How now? what meanes Death in this rude assault?
Villaine, thine owne hand yeelds thy deaths instrument,
Go thou and fill another roome in hell.

Exton strikes him downe.

That hand shall burne in neuer-quenching fire,
That staggers thus my person. Exton, thy fierce hand,
Hath with the Kings blood, stain'd the Kings owne land
Mount, mount my soule, thy seate is vp on high,
Whilft my grosse flesh sinkes downward, heere to dye

Exton As full of Valor, as of Royall blood,
Both haue I spilt: Oh would the deed were good.
For now the diuell, that told me I did well,
Sayes, that this deede is chronicled in hell.

This dead King to the liuing King I leaue,
Take hence the rest, and giue them buriall heere. Exit

Scena Quinta.

Flourish. Enter Bullingbrooke, Yorke, with other Lords & attendants.

Bul Kinde Vnkle Yorke, the latest newes we heare,
Is that the Rebels haue consum'd with fire
Our Towne of Ciceter in Gloucestershire,
But whether they be tane or slaine, we heare not

Enter Northumberland.

Welcome my Lord: What is the newes?

Nor. First to thy Sacred State, wish I all happinesse.
The next newes is, I haue to London sent
The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent.

The manner of their taking may appeare
At large discoursed in this paper heere.

Bul. We thank thee gentle Percy for thy names,
And to thy worth will adde right worthy gaines.

Enter Fitz-waters.

Fitz. My Lord, I haue from Oxford sent to London,
The heads of Braccas, and Sir Bennet Seely,
Two of the dangerous confortd Traitors,
That fought at Oxford, thy dire ouerthrow.

Bul. Thy paines Fitzwaters shall not be forgot,
Right Noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter Percy and Carlile.

Per The grand Conspirator, Abbot of Westminster,
With clog of Conscience, and sowre Melancholly,
Hath yeelded vp his body to the graue:

But heere is Carlile, liuing to abide
Thy Kingly doome, and sentence of his pride.

Bul Carlile, this is your doome
Choote out some secret place, some reuerend roome
More then thou hast, and with it ioyn thy life.
So as thou liu'st in peace, dye free from strife
For though mine enemy thou hast euer beene,
High sparkes of Honor in thee haue I seene

Enter Exton with a Coffin

Exton. Great King, within this Coffin I present
Thy buried seare. Heerein all breathlesse lies

The mightiest of thy greatest enemies

Richard of Burdeaux, by me hither brought

Bul. Exton, I thanke thee not, for thou hast wrought
A deede of Slaughter, with thy satall hand,
Vpon my head, and all this famous Land

Ex From your owne mouth my Lord, did I this deed.

Bul. They loue not poyson, that do poyson neede,
Nor do I thee: though I did wish him dead,

I hate the Murderer, lone him murdered
The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,

But neither my good word, nor Princely fauour.
With Caine go wander through the shade of night,

And neuer shew thy head by day, nor light.

Lords, I protest my soule is full of woe,
That blood should sprinkle me, to make me grow.

Come mourne with me, for that I do lament,
And put on sullen Blacke incontinent.

Ile make a voyage to the Holy-land,
To wash this blood off from my guilty hand.

March sadly after, grace my mourning heere,
In weeping after this vntimely Beere.

Exeunt.

FINIS.

The First Part of Henry the Fourth,

with the Life and Death of HENRY

Surnamed HOT-SPURRE

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter the King, Lord Iohn of Lancaster, Earle of Westmerland, with others.

King.

Shaken as we are, to wan with care,
 Finde we a time for frighted Peace to part,
 And breath shortwinded accents of new broils
 To be commene'd in Stronds a-farre remote:
 No more the thursty entrance of this Soile,
 Shall daube her lippes with her owne childrens blood:
 No more shall trenching Warre channell her fields,
 Nor bruise her Flowrets with the Armed hooves
 Of hostile paces. Those opposed eyes,
 Which like the Meteors of a froubled Heauen,
 All of one Nature, of one Substance bred,
 Did lately meete in the intestine Shooke,
 And furious cloze of ciuill Batchery,
 Shall now in mutuall well-beseeming ranks
 March all one way, and be no more oppos'd
 Against Acquaintance, Kindred, and Allies.
 The edge of Warre, like an ill-breathed knife,
 No more shall cut his Master, Therefore Friends,
 As farre as to the Sepulchres of Christ,
 Whose Souldier now vnder whose blessed Crosse
 We are impress'd and engag'd to fight,
 Forthwith a power of English shall we leue,
 Whose armes were moulded in their Mothers wombe
 For chase these Pagans in those holy Fields,
 Ouer whose Acres walk'd those blessed seere
 Which fourteene hundred yeares ago were nail'd
 For our aduantage on the bitter Crosse.
 But this our purpose is a twelue month old,
 And bootlesse 'tis to tell you we will go:
 Therefore we meete not now. Then let me heare
 Of you my gentle Cousin Westmerland,
 What yesternight our Councell did decree,
 In forwarding this deere expedience.

West. My Liege. This haste was hot in question,
 And many limits of the Charge set downe
 But yesternight. when all athwart there came
 A Post from Wales, laden with heauy Newes;
 Whose worst was, That the Noble Mortimer,
 Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight
 Against the irregular and wilde Glendower,
 Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken,
 And a thousand of his people butchered:

Vpon whose dead corpes there was such misuse,
 Such beastly, shamelesse transformation,
 By those Welshwomen done, as may not be (Without much shame) re-told or spoken of.

King. It seemes then, that the tidings of this broile,
 Brake off our businesse for the Holy land.

West. This marche with other like, my gracious Lord,
 Farre more vneuen and vnwelcome Newes
 Came from the North, and thus it did report:
 On Holy-roode day, the gallant Holspurre there,
 Young Harry Percy, and braue Archibald,
 That ever-variant and approoued Scot,
 At Holmeden met, where they did spend
 A sad and bloody houre:
 As by discharge of their Artillerie,
 And shape of likely-hood the newes was told:
 For he that brought them, in the very heate
 And pride of their contention, did take horse,
 Vncertaine of the issue any way.

King. Heere is a deere and true iudicious friend,
 Sir alter Blunt, new lighted from his Horse,
 Strain'd with the variation of each foyle,
 Betwixt that Holmeden, and this Seat of ours:
 And he hath brought vs smooth and welcomes newes.
 The Earle of Dowglas is discomfited,
 Ten thousand bold Scots, two and twenty Knights Balk'd in their owne blood did Sir Water see.
 On Holmeden Plaines. Of Prisoners, Holspurre tooke
Mordake Earle of Fife, and eldest Sonne
 To beate Dowglas, and the Earle of Archeil,
 Of Murray, Angus, and Montenib.

And is not this an honourable spoyle?
 A gallant prize? Ha Cousin, is it not? In faith it is.

West. A Conquest for a Prince to boast of.

King. Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, & mak'st me sin,
 In enuy, that my Lord Northumberland
 Should be the Father of so blest a Sonne:
 A Sonne, who is the Theame of Honors tongue;
 Among't a Groue, the very straightest Plant,
 Who is sweet Fortunes Minion, and her Pride:
 Whil'st I by looking on the praise of him,
 See Ryot and Dishonor staine the brow
 Of my yong Harry O that it could be prou'd,
 That some Night-tripping-Faerie, had exchang'd
 In Cradle-clothes, our Children where they lay,
 And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet:

The

Then would I haue his Harry, and he mine:
But let him from my thoughts. What thinke you Coze
Of this young Perce pride? The Prisoners
Which he in this aduenture hath surpriz'd,
To his owne vse he keepes, and sends me word
I shall haue none but Mordake Earle of Esse.

West. This is his Vnckles teaching. This is Worcester
Malevolent to you in all Aspects:
Which makes him prune himselfe, and bristle vp
The crest of Youth against your Dignity.

King. But I haue sent for him to answer this:
And for this cause a-while we must neglect
Our holy purpose to Ierusalem.
Cofin, on Wednesday next, our Councell we will hold
At Windsor, and so informe the Lords:
But come your selfe with speed to vs againe,
For more is to be said, and to be done,
Then out of anger can be vittered.

West I will my Liege.

Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Henry Prince of Wales, Sir Iohn Falstaffe, and Pointz.

Fal. Now Hal, what time of day is it Lad?

Prince. Thou art so fat-witted with drinking of olde Sacke, and vnbuttoning thee after Supper, and sleeping vpon Benches in the afternoone, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly, which thou wouldest truly know. What a diuell hast thou to do with the time of the day? vnlesse houres were cups of Sacke, and minutes Capons, and clockes the tongues of Bawdes, and dialls the signes of Leaping-houes, and the blessed Sunne himselfe a faire hot Wench in Flame-coloured Taffata; I see no reason, why thou shouldst bee so superfluous, to demaund the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed you come neere me now Hal, for we that take Purser, go by the Moone and seven Starres, and not by Phœbus hee, that wand'ring Knight so faire. And I prythee sweet Wagge, when thou art King, as God saue thy Grace, Maiesty I should say, for Grace thou wilt haue none.

Prim. What, none?

Fal. No, not so much as will serue to be Prologue to an Egge and Butter.

Prim. Well, how then? Come roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marry then, sweet Wagge, when thou art King, let not vs that are Squires of the Nights bodie, bee call'd Theeues of the Dayes beautie. Let vs be Dianaes Forrefters, Gentlemen of the Shade, Minions of the Moone; and let men say, we be men of good Government, being gouerned as the Sea is, by our noble and chaste mistris the Moone, vnder whose countenance we steale.

Prim. Thou say'st well, and it holds well too: for the fortune of vs that are the Moones men, doeth ebbe and flow like the Sea, being gouerned as the Sea is, by the Moone: as for prooffe. Now a Purse of Gold most resolutely snarch'd on Monday night, and most dissolutely spent on Tuesday Morning, got with swearing, Lay by and spent with crying, Bring in: now, in as low an ebbe as the foot of the Ladder, and by and by in as high a flow as the ridge of the Gallowes.

Fal. Thou say'st true Lad: and is not my Hostesse of the Tauerne a most sweet Wench?

Prim. As is the hony, my old Lad of the Castle: and is not a Buffe Jerkin a most sweet robe of durance?

Fal. How now? how now mad Wagge? What in thy quips and thy quiddities? What a plague haue I to doe with a Buffe-Jerkin?

Prim. Why, what a poxe haue I to doe with my Hostesse of the Tauerne?

Fal. Well, thou hast call'd her to a reck'ning many a time and oft.

Prim. Did I euer call for thee to pay thy part?

Fal. No, Ile giue thee thy due, thou hast paid al there

Prim. Yea and elsewhere, so farre as my Coine would stretch, and where it would not, I haue vs'd my credit.

Fal. Yea, and so vs'd it, that were it heere apparant, that thou art Heire apparant. But I prythee sweet Wag, shall there be Gallowes standing in England when thou art King? and resolution thus fobb'd as it is, with the rustie curbe of old Father Anticke the Law? Doe not thou when thou art a King, hang a Theefe.

Prim. No, thou shalt.

Fal. Shall I? O rare! Ile be a braue Iudge.

Prim. Thou iudget false already. I meane, thou shalt haue the hanging of the Theeues, and so become a rare Hangman

Fal. Well Hal, well: and in some sort it iumpes with my humour, as well as waiting in the Court, I can tell you.

Prim. For obtaining of suites?

Fal. Yea, for obtaining of suites, whereof the Hangman hath no leane Wardrobe. I am as Melancholly as a Gyb-Cat, or a lugg'd Beare.

Prim. Or an old Lyon, or a Louers Lute.

Fal. Yea, or the Drone of a Lincolnshire Bagpipe.

Prim. What say'st thou to a Hare, or the Melancholly of Moore Ditch?

Fal. Thou hast the most vnfaoury smiles, and art indeed the most comparatiue rascaldest sweet yong Prince. But Hal, I prythee trouble me no more with vanity, I wold thou and I knew, where a Commodity of good names were to be bought: an olde Lord of the Councell rated me the other day in the street about you fir; but I mark'd him not, and yet hee talk'd very wisely, but I regarded him not, and yet he talkt wisely, and in the street too.

Prim. Thou didst well, for no man regards it.

Fal. O, thou hast damnable iteration, and art indeede able to corrupt a Saint. Thou hast done much harme vnto me Hal, God forgie thee for it. Before I knew thee Hal, I knew nothing, and now I am (if a man shold speake truly) little better then one of the wicked. I must giue ouer this life, and I will giue it ouer: and I do not, I am a Villaine. Ile be damn'd for neuer a Kings sonne in Christendome

Prim. Where shall we take a purse to morrow, Iacke?

Fal. Where thou wilt Lad, Ile make one. and I doe not, call me Villaine, and baffle me.

Prim. I see a good amendment of life in thee. From Praying, to Purse-taking.

Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my Vocation Hal. 'Tis no sin for a man to labour in his Vocation

Pointz. Now shall wee know if Gods hill haue set a Watch. O, if men were to be saued by merit, what hole in Hell were hot enough for him? This is the most omnipotent Villaine, that euer cryed, Stand, to a true man

Prim. Good morrow Ned,

Pointz.

Poines. Good morrow sweet Hal, What saies Monsieur Remorse? What saies Sir John Sacke and Sugar: Jacke? How agrees the Diuell and thee about thy Soule, that thou soldst him on Good-Friday last, for a Cup of Madera, and a cold Capons legge?

Prin. Sir John stands to his word, the diuell shall haue his bargain, for he was neuer yet a Breaker of Prouerbs: He will gine the diuell his due.

Poin. Then art thou damn'd for keeping thy word with the diuell.

Prin. Else he had damn'd for cozening the diuell.

Poy. But my Lads, my Lads, to morrow morning, by foure a clocke early at Gads hill, there are Pilgrimes going to Canterbury with rich Offerings, and Traders riding to London with fat Purfes. I haue vizards for you all; you haue horses for your selues. Gads-hill lyes to night in Rochester, I haue bespoken Supper to morrow in Eastcheape; we may do it as secure as sleepe. if you will go, I will stuffe your Purfes full of Crownes: if you will not, tarry at home and be hang'd.

Fal. Heare ye Yedward, if I tarry at home and go not, Ile hang you for going.

Poy. You will chop.

Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

Prin. Who, I rob? I a Theefe? Not I.

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou cam'st not of the blood-royall, if thou dar'st not stand for ten shillings.

Prin. Well then, once in my dayes Ile be a mad-cap.

Fal. Why, that's well said.

Prin. Well, come what will, Ile tarry at home.

Fal. Ile be a Traitor then, when thou art King.

Prin. I care not.

Poyn. Sir John, I prythee leaue the Prince & me alone, I will lay him downe such reasons for this aduerture, that he shall go.

Fal. Well, maist thou haue the Spirit of perswasion; and he the eares of profiting, that what thou speakest, may moue; and what he heares may be beleued, that the true Prince, may (for recreation sake) proue a false theefe; for the poore abuses of the time, want countenance. Farewell, you shall finde me in Eastcheape.

Prin. Farewell the latter Spring. Farewell Alhollown Summer.

Poy. Now, my good sweet Hony Lord, ride with vs to morrow. I haue a iest to execute, that I cannot manage alone. Falstaffe, Harney, Rossill, and Gads-hill, shall robbe those men that wee haue already way-layde, your selfe and I, wil not be there: and when they haue the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head from my shoulders.

Prin. But how shal we part with them in setting forth?

Poyn. Why, we wil set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to faile; and then will they aduerture vpon the exploit themselves, which they shall haue no sooner atchieued, but we'll set vpon them.

Prin. I, but tis like that they will know vs by our horses, by our habits, and by euery other appointment to be our selues.

Poy. Tut our horses they shall not see, Ile tye them in the wood, our vizards wee will change after wee leaue them: and firrah, I haue Cases of Buckram for the nonce, to immaske our noted outward garments.

Prin. But I doubt they will be too hard for vs.

Poin. Well, for two of them, I know them to bee as true bred Cowards as euer turn'd backe, and for the third if he fight longer then he sees reason, Ile forswear Armes. The vertue of this iest will be, the incomprehensible lyes that this fat Rogue will tell vs, when we meete at Supper. how thirty at least he sought with, what Wardes, what blowes, what extremities he endured; and in the reproofe of this, lyes the iest.

Prin. Well, Ile goe with thee, prouide vs all things necessary, and meete me to morrow night in Eastcheape, there Ile sup. Farewell.

Poyn. Farewell, my Lord.

Exit Poins

Prin. I know you all, and will a-while uphold The vnyoak'd humor of your idlenesse:

Yet neerein will I imitate the Sunne,
Who doth permit the base contagious cloudes
To smother vp his Beauty from the world,
That when he please againe to be himselfe,
Being wanted, he may be more wondred at,
By breaking through the foule and egly mists
Of vapours, that did seeme to strangle him.

If all the yeare were playing holidayes,
To sport, would be as tedious as to worke;
But when they telldome come, they wisht-for come,
And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.
So when this loose behaviour I throw off,
And pay the debt I neuer promised;
By how much better then my word I am,
By so much shall I falsifie ments hopes,
And like bright Metall on a fullen ground:
My reformation glittering o're my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Then that which hath no Foyle to set it off.
Ile so offend, to make offence a skill,
Redeeming time, when men thinke least I will.

Scena Tertia.

Enter the King, Northumberland, Worcester, Hotspurre, Sir Walter Blunt, and others.

King. My blood hath beene too cold and temperate,
Vnapt to stirre at these indignities,
And you haue found me; for accordingly,
You tread vpon my patience. But be sure,
I will from henceforth rather be my Selfe,
Mighty, and to be fear'd, then my condition
Which hath beene smooth as Oyle, soft as yong Downe,
And therefore lost that Title of respect,

Which the proud soule ne're payes, but to the proud,
War. Our house (my Squeraigne Liege) little deserues
The scourge of greatnesse to be vsed on it,
And that same greatnesse too, which our owne hands
Haue holpe to make so portly.

Nor. My Lord.

King. Worcester get thee gone: for I do see Danger and disobedience in thine eye.
O fir, your presence is too bold and peremptory,
And Maiestie might neuer yet endure
The moody Frontier of a seruant brow,
You haue good leaue to leaue vs. When we need
Your vse and counsell, we shall send for you.
You were about to speake.

North. Yea, my good Lord.

Those

Those Prisoners in your Highness demanded,
Which Harry Percy heere at Holmesdow tooke
Were (as he sayes) not with such strength denied
As was deliuered to your Maiesty:

Who either through enuy, or misprision,
Was guilty of this fault, and not my Sonne.

Hot. My Liege, I did deny no Prisoners.
But, I remember when the fight was done,
When I was dry with Rage, and extreame Toyle,
Breathlesse, and Faint, leaning vpon my Sword,
Came there a certaine Lord, neat and trimly drest,
Fresh as a Bride-groom, and his Chin new reapt,
Shew'd like a stubble Land at Haruest home.
He was perfwmed like a Milliner,
And twixt his Finger and his Thumbe, he held
A Pouncet-box which euer and anon
He gaue his Nose, and took't away againe:
Who therewith angry, when it next came there,
Tooke it in Snuffe: And still he smil'd and talk'd
And as the Souldiers bare dead bodies by,
He call'd them vntaught Knaues, Vnmannerly,
To bring a shew of vnhandfome Coarfe
Betwixt the Winde, and his Nobility
With many Holiday and Lady rearme
He question'd me. Among the rest, demanded
My Prisoners, in your Maiesties behalfe.
Then, all-smarting, with my wounds being cold,
(To be so pestered with a Poppingay)
Out of my Greefe, and my Impatience,
Answer'd (neglectingly) I know not what,
He should, or should not: For he made me mad,
To see him shine so briske, and smell so sweet,
And talke so like a Waiting-Gentlewoman,
Of Guns, & Drums, and Wounds God saue the marke;
And telling me, the Soueraign'st thing on earth
Was Parimacy, for an inward bruiſe:
And that it was great pittie, so it was,
That villanous Salt-peter should be digg'd
Out of the Bowels of the harmlesse Earth,
Which many a good Tall Fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly And but for these vile Gunnes,
He would himselfe haue beene a Souldier.
This bald, vnioynted Chat of his (my Lord)
Made me to answer indirectly (as I said)
And I beseech you, let not this report
Come currant for an Accusation,
Betwixt my Loue, and your high Maiesty

Blunt. The circumstance considered, good my Lord,
What euer Harry Percy then had said,
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest retold,
May reasonably dye, and neuer rise
To do him wrong, or my way impeach
What then he said, so he vsay it now.

King. Why yet doth deny his Prisoners,
But with Promise and Exception,
That we at our owne charge, shall ransom straight
His Brother-in-Law, the foolish Mortimer,
Who (in my toyle) hath wilfully betrayd
The liues of those, that he did leade to Fight, Against the great Magitian, damn'd Glendower
Whose daughter (as we heare) the Earle of Marsh
Hath lately married. Shall our Coffers then,
Be emptied, to redeeme a Traitor home?
Shall we buy Treason? and indent with Feares,
When they haue lost and forfeited themselves

No: on the barren Mountaine let him sterue:
For I shall neuer hold that man my Friend,
Whose tongue shall aske me for one peny cost
To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Hot. Revolted Mortimer?

He neuer did fall off, my Soueraigne Liege,
But by the chance of Warre: to proue that true,
Needs no more but one tongue. For all those Wounds,
Those mouthed Wounds, which valiantly he tooke,
When on the gentle Seuernes sledge banke,
In single Opposition hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an houre
In changing hardiment with great Glerdower
Three times they breath'd, and three times did they drink
Vpon agreement, of swift Seuernes flood,
Who ther' affrighted with their bloody lookes,
Ran fearefully among the trembling Reeds,
And hid his crispe-head in the hollow banke,
Blood-stained with these Valiant Combatants.
Neuer did base and rotten Policy
Colour her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor neuer could the Noble Mortimer
Receiue so many, and all willingly.
Then let him not be stand reed with Revolt.

King. Thou dost bely him Percy, thou dost bely him;
He neuer did encounter with Glerdower.

I tell thee, ne durst as well haue met the diuell alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.

Art thou not ashamed? But Sirrah, henceforth
Let me not heare you speake of Mortimer.

Send me your Prisoners with the speediest meanes,
Or you shall heare in such a kinde from me
As will displease ye. My Lord Northumberland,
We Licenſe your departure with your sonne,
Send vs your Prisoners, or you'll heare of it. Exit King.

Hot. And if the diuell come and roare for them
I will not send them I will after straight
And tell him so: for I will ease my heart,
Although it be with hazard of my head

Nor. What? drunke with choller? stay & pause awhile, Heere comes your Vnckle Enter Worcester.

Hot. Speake of Mortimer?

Yes, I will speake of him, and let my soule
Win mercy, if I do not toyne with him.
In his behalfe, Ile empty all these Veines,
And shed my deere blood drop by drop i'th dust,
But I will lift the downfall Mortimer

As high i'th Ayre, as this Vnthankfull King,
As this Ingrate and Cankred Bullingbrooke.

Nor. Brother, the King hath made your Nephew mad
Hot. Who strooke this heate vp after I was gone?

Hot. He will (forsooth) haue all my Prisoners:
And when I vrg'd the ransom once againe
Of my Wiues Brother, then his cheek' look'd pale,
And on my face he turn'd aray of death,
Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.

Hot. I cannot blame him was he not proclaim'd
By Richard that dead is, the next of blood?

Nor. He was I heard the Proclamation,
And then it was, when the unhappy King
(Whose wrongs in vs God pardon) did set forth
Vpon his Irish Expedition.

From whence he intercepted, did returne
To be depos'd, and shortly murdered.

Hot. And for whose death, we in the worlds wide mouth
Luce scandaliz'd, and fouly spoken of.

c

Hot.

Hot. But soft I pray you; did King Richard then Proclaime my brother Mortimer,
Heyre to the Crowne?

Nor. He did, my selfe did heare it.

Hot. Nay then I cannot blame his Cousin King,
That with'd him on the barren Mountaines star'd.
But shall it be, that you that set the Crowne
Vpon the head of this forgetfull man,
And for his sake, wore the drested blot
Of murderous subornation? Shall it be,
That you a world of curses vndergoe,
Being the Agents, or base second meanes,
The Cords, the Ladder, or the Hangman rather?
O pardon, if that I descend so low,
To shew the Line, and the Predicament
Wherein you range vnder this subtil King.
Shall it for shame, be spoken in these dayes,
Or fill vp Chronicles in time to come,
That men of your Nobility and Power,
Did gage them both in an vnuit behalfe
(As Both of you, God pardon it, haue done)
To put downe Richard, that sweet louely Rose,
And plant this Thorne, this Canker Bullingbrooke?
And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shooke off
By him, for whom these shames ye vnderwent?
No: yet time serues, wherein you may redeeme
Your banish'd Honors, and restore your felues
Into the good Thoughts of the world againe.
Reuenge the geering and disdain'd contempt
Of this proud King, who studies day and night
To answer all the Debr he owes vnto you,
Euen with the bloody Payment of your deaths:
Therefore I say—

Nor. Peace Cousin, say no more

And now I will vnclasp a Secret booke,
And to your quicke conceyuing Discontents,
He reade you Matter, deepe and dangerous,
As full of perill and aduenturous Spirit,
As to o're-walke a Current, roaring loud
On the vnstedfast footing of a Speare

Hot. If he fall in, good night, or sinke or swimme:
Send danger from the East vnto the West,
So Honor crosse it from the North to South,
And let them grapple. The blood more stirs
To torwze a Lyon, then to start a Hare.

Nor. Imagination of some great exploit,
Drives him beyond the bounds of Patience.

Hot. By heauen, me thinks it were an easie leap,
To plucke bright Honor from the pale-fac'd Moone,
Or diue into the bottome of the deepe,
Where Fadome-line could neuer touch the ground,
And plucke vp drowned Honor by the Lockes:
So he that doth redeeme her thence, might weare
Without Co-swall, all her Dignities:
But out vpon this halfe-fac'd Fellowship.

Nor. He apprehends a World of Figures here,
But not the forme of what he should attend:
Good Cousin giue me audience for a-while,
And list to me.

Hot. I cry you mercy.

Nor. Those same Noble Scettes
That are your Prisoners.

Hot. He keepe them all.

By heauen, he shall not haue a Scot of them:
No, if a Scot would saue his Soule, he shall not.

He keepe them, by this Hand.

Nor. You start away,
And lend no eare vnto my purposes,
Those Prisoners you shall keepe.

Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat:
He said, he would not ransom Mortimer:
Forbad my tongue to speake of Mortimer.
But I will finde him where he lyes asleepe,
And in his eare, He holla Mortimer.
Nay, He haue a Starling shall be taught to speake
Nothing but Mortimer, and giue it him,
To keepe his anger still in motion.

Nor. Heare you Cousin: a word.

Hot. All Studies heere I solemnly dehe,
Saue how to gall and pinch this Bullingbrooke,
And that same Sword and Buckler Prince of Wales.
But that I thinke his Father loues him not,
And would be glad he met with some mischance,
I would haue poyson'd him with a pot of Ale.

Nor. Farewell: Kinsman: He talke to you
When you are better temper'd to attend.

Nor. Why what a Waspe-tongue'd & impatient foole
Art thou, to breake into this Womans mood,
Tying thine eare to no tongue but thine owne?

Hot. Why look you, I am whip & scourg'd with rods,
Netled, and stung with Pismires, when I heare
Of this vile Politician Bullingbrooke.

In Richards time: What de'ye call the place?

A plague vpon't, it is in Gloucestershire:

'Twas, where the madcap Duke his Vncle kept,
His Vncle Yorke, where I first bow'd my knee
Vnto this King of Smiles, this Bullingbrooke:
When you and he came backe from Ravenspurgh

Nor. At Barkley Castle.

Hot. You say true:

Why what a caudie deale of curtesie,
This fawning Grey-hound then did proffer me.
Looke when his infant Fortune came to age,
And gentle Harry Percy, and kinde Cousin:
O, the Diuell take such Couzeners, God forgiue me,
Good Vncle tell your tale, for I haue done.

Nor. Nay, if you haue not, too't againe,
Wee'l stay your leysure.

Hot. I haue done insooth.

Nor. Then once more to your Scottish Prisoners.
Deliver them vp without their ranfome straight,
And make the Douglas sonne your onely meane
For powres in Scotland. which for diuers reasons
Which I shall send you written, be assur'd
Will easly be granted you, my Lord.
Your Sonne in Scotland being thus impl y'd,
Shall secretly into the bosome creepe
Of that same noble Prelate, well belou'd,
The Archbishop.

Hot. Of Yorke, is't not?

Nor. True, who beares hard
His Brothers death at Brisfow, the Lord Scroope
I speake not this in estimation,
As what I thinke might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted, and set downe,
And onely staves but to behold the face
Of that occasion that shall bring it on.

Hot. I smell it:

Vpon my life, it will do wond'rous well.

Nor. Before the game's a-foot, thou still let'st slip.

Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a Noble plot,

And

And then the power of Scotland, and of Yorke
To ioyne with Mortimer; Ha.

War. And so they shall.

Hot. In faith it is exceedingly well aynd.

War. And 'tis no little reason bids vs speed,

To saue our heads, by raising of a Head:

For, beare our selues as euen as we can,

The King will alwayes thinke him in our debt,

And thinke, we thinke our selues vnsatisfied,

Till he hath found a time to pay vs home.

And see already, how he doth beguine

To make vs strengers to his lookes of loue.

Hot. He does, he does, wee'l be reueng'd on him

War. Cousin, farewell. No further go in this,

Then I by Letters shall direct your course

When time is ripe, which will be sodainly.

He steale to Glendower, and loe, Mortimer,

Where you, and Douglas and our powres at once,

As I will fashion it, shall happily meete,

To beare our fortunes in our owne strong armes,

Which now we hold at much vncertainty.

Nor. Farewell good Brother, we shall thrue, I trust

Hot. Vncle, adieu. O let the houres be short, Till fields, and blowes, and grones, applaud our sport

ding in the stable.

1. Car. Nay soft I pray ye, I know a trick worth two of that.

Gad. I prethee lend me thine.

2. Car. I, when, canst tell? Lend mee thy Lanthorne (quoth-a) marry Ile see thee hang'd first.

Gad. Sirra Carrier. What time do you mean to come to London?

2. Car. Time enough to goe to bed with a Candle, I warrant thee. Come neighbour Mugges, wee'll call vp the Gentlemen, they will along with company, for they haue great charge

Exeunt

Enter Chamberlaine.

Gad. What ho, Chamberlaine?

Cham. At hand quoth Pick-purse.

Gad. That's euen as faire, as at hand quoth the Cham-berlaine: For thou varrest no more from picking of Purses, then giuing direction, doth from labouring. Thou layst the plot, how.

Cham. Good morrow Master Gads-Hill, it holds currant that I told you yesternight. There's a Franklin in the wilde of Kent, hath brought three hundred Markes with him in Gold. I heard him tell it to one of his company last night at Supper, a kinde of Auditor, one that hath abundant of charge too (God knowes what) they are vp already, and call for Egges and Butter. They will away presently

Gad. Sirra, if they meete not with S Nicholas Clarke,
Ile giue thee this necke.

Cham. No, Ile none of it: I prythee keep that for the Hangman, for I know thou worshippst S Nicholas as truly as a man of falshood may.

Gad. What talkest thou to me of the Hangman? If I hang, Ile make a fat payre of Gallowes. For, if I hang, old Sir Iohn hangs with mee, and thou know'st hee's no Straweling. Tut, there are other Troians that ydica'm't not of, the which (for sport sake) are content to doe the Profession some grace, that would (if matters should bee look'd into) for their owne Credit sake, make all Whole
I am ioynd with no Foot-land-Rakers, no Long-staffe fix-penny strikers, none of these mad Mustacho-purlehu'd-Maltuormes, but with Nobility, and Tranquillitee; Bourgomasters, and great Oneyers, such as can holde in,
such as will strike sooner then speake, and speake sooner
then drinke, and drinke sooner then pray: and yet I lye, for they pray continually vnto their Saint the Commonwealth, or rather, not to pray to her, but prey on her, for they ride vp & downe on her, and make hir their Bootes.

Cham. What, the Commonwealth their Bootes? Will she hold our water in foule way?

Gad. She will, she will, Iustice hath liquor'd her. We steale a in a Castle, cocksure: we haue the reseat of Fernseede, we walke inuisible.

Cham. Nay, I thinke rather, you are more beholding to the Night, then to the Fernseede, for your walking inuisible.

Gad. Giue me thy hand
Thou shalt haue a share in our purpose,
As I am a true man

Cham. Nay, rather let mee haue it, as you are a false Theefe.

Gad. Goodtoo. Homo is a common name to all men.
Bid the Officer bring the Gelding out of the stable. Farewell, ye muddy Knaue.

Exeunt.

Scena

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Carrier with a Lanterne in his hand

1. Car. Heigh-ho, an't be not foure by the day, Ile be hang'd. Charles wame is ouer the new Chimney, and yet our horse not packt. What Officer?

Off. Anon, anon.

1. Car. I prethee Tom, beate Cuts Saddle, put a few Flockes in the point: the poore Iade is wrung in the withers, out of all cisse

Enter another Carrier.

2. Car. Pease and Beanes are as danke here as a Dog, and this is the next way to giue poore Iades the Bottes
This house is turred vpside downe since Robin the Officer dyed

1. Car. Poore fellow neuer ioy'd since the price of oats rose, it was the death of him.

2. Car. I thinke this is the most villanous house in al
London rode for Fleas. I am stung like a Tench.

1. Car. Like a Tench? There is ne're a King in Chri-stendome, could be better bit, then I haue beene since the first Cocke.

2. Car. Why, you will allow vs ne're a Tourden, and then weleake in your Chimney and your Chamber-lye breeds Fleas like a Loach

1. Car. What Officer, come away, and be hang'd-come away.

2. Car. I haue a Gammon of Bacon, and two razes of Ginger, to be deliuered as farre as Charing-crosse.

1. Car. The Turkies in my Pinnier are quite starued
What Officer? A plague on thee, hast thou neuer an eye in thy head? Canst thou heare? And I were not as good a deed as drinke, to break the pate of thee, I am a very Villaine. Come and be hang'd, haist no faith in thee?

Enter Gads-hill

Gad. Good-morrow Carriers. What's a clocke?

Car. I thinke it be two a clocke.

Gad. I prethee lend me thy Lanthorne to see my Gel-

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prince, Poynes, and Peto.Poynes Come shelter, shelter, I haue remoued Falstaff Horse, and he frets like a gum d Vcluet.Prim. Stand close*Enter Falstaffe.Fal.* Poynes, Poynes, and be hang'd PoynesPrim. Peace ye fat-kidney'd Rascall, what a brawling dost thou keepe*Fal.* What Poynes. Hal?Prim. He is walk'd vp to the top of the hill, Ile go seek him.Fal. I am accurst to rob in that Theefe company: that Rascall hath remoued my Horse, and tied him I know not where. If I trauell but foure foot by the squire further a foote, I shall breake my winde. Well, I doubt not but to dye a faire death for all this, if I scape hanging for killing that Rogue, I haue forsworne his company hourly any time this two and twenty yere, & yet I am bewitcht with the Rogues company. If the Rascall haue not giuen me medicines to make me loue him, Ile behang'd, it could not be else. I haue drunke Medicines. Poynes, Hal, a Plague vpon you both. Bardolph, Peto Ile starue ere I rob a foote further. And 'twere not as good a deede as to drinke, to turne True-man, and to leaue these Rogues, I am the veriest Varlet that euer chewed with a Tooth. Eight yards of vneuen ground, is threescore & ten miles afoot with me: and the stony-hearted Villaines knowe it well enough. A plague vpon't, when Theeues cannot be true one to another.They whistle

Whew: a plague light vpon you all, Giue my Horse you Rogues: giue me my Horse, and be hang'd

Prim. Peace ye fat guttes, lye downe, lay thine eare close to the ground, and list if thou can heare the tread of Travellers.Fal. Haue you any Leauers to lift me vp again being downe? Ile not beare mine owne flesh so far afoot again, for all the coine in thy Fathers Exchequer. What a plague meane ye to colt me thus?Prim. Thou ly'st, thou art not colted, thou art vncoltd.Fal. I prethee good Prince Hal, help me to my horse, good Kings sonne.Prim. Out you Rogue, shall I be your Ostler?Fal. Go hang thy selfe in thine owne heere-apparant Garters: If I be tane, Ile peach for this: and I haue not Ballads made on ill, and sung to filthy tunes, let a Cup of Sacke be my poyson. when a iest is so forward, & a foote too, I hate it.Enter Gads hill.Gad Stand*Fal.* So I do against my will.Poyne O'tis our Setter, I know his voyce*Bardolfe*, what newes?Bar. Case ye, case ye, on with your Vizards, there's mony of the Kings comming downe the hill, 'tis going to the Kings Exchequer.Fal. You lie you rogue, 'tis going to the Kings Tauern.Gad. There's enough to make vs all*Fal.* To be hang'd.Prim. You foure shall front them in the narrow Lane. Ned and I, will walke lower; if they scape from your on counter, then they light on vs.Peto. But how many be of them?Gad. Some eight or ten.Fal. Will they not rob vs?Prim. What, a Coward Sir John Paunch?Fal. Indeed I am not John of Gaunt your Grandfather, but yet no Coward, Hal.Prim. Wee'll leaue that to the prooffe.Poyne. Sirra lacke, thy horse stands behinde the hedge, when thou need'st him, there thou shalt finde him. Farewell, and stand fast.Fal. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hang'd.Prim. Ned, where are our disguises?Poyne. Heere hard by. ## Scena Tertia.

Enter Hotspur alone, reading a Letter.But for mine owne part, my Lord, I could bee well contented to be there, in respect of the loue I beare your house.

He

He could be contented: Why is he not then in respect of the love he beares our house. He shewes in this, he lodes his owne Barne better then he loves our house. Let me see some more. The purpose you undertake is dangerous. Why that's certaine: 'Tis dangerous to take a Colde, to sleepe, to drinke. but I tell you (my Lord foole) out of this Nettle, Danger, we plucke this Flower, Safety. The purpose you undertake is dangerous, the Friends you have named uncertaine, the Time is selfe vsorted, and your whole Plot too light, for the counterpoize of so great an Opposition. Say you to, say you so. I say vnto you againe, you are a shallow cowardly Hinde, and you Lye. What a lacke-braine is this? I protest, our plot is as good a plot as euer was laid; our Friend true and constant: A good Ploue, good Friends, and full of expectation. An excellent plot, very good Friends. What a Frosty-spirited rogue is this? Why, my Lord of Yorke commends the plot, and the generall course of the action. By this hand, if I were now by this Rascall, I could braine him with his Ladies Fan. Is there not my Father, my Vnckle, and my Selfe, Lord Edmund Mortimer, my Lord of Yorke, and Owen Glendour? Is there not besides, the Dowglas? Haue I not all their letters, to meeete me in Armes by the ninth of the next Month? and are they not some of them set forward already? What a Pagan Rascall is this? An Infiidel! Ha, you shall see now in very sincerity of Feare and Cold heart, will he to the King, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could diuide my selfe, and go to buffets, for mouing such a dish of skim'd Milk with so honourable an Action. Hang him, let him tell the King we are prepared. I will set forwards to night.

Enter his Lady.

How now Kate, I must leaue you within these two hour

La. O my good Lord, why are you thus alone? For what offence haue I this fortnight bin A banish'd woman from my Harrys bed? Tell me (sweet Lord) what is't that takes from thee Thy stomacke, pleasure, and thy golden sleepe? Why dost thou bend thine eyes vpon the earth? And start so often when thou sit'st alone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheekes? And giuen my Treasures and my rights of thee, To ticke-ey'd musing, and curst melancholly? In my faint-slumbers, I by thee haue watcht, And heard thee murmore tales of Iron Warres: Speake tearmes of manage to thy bounding Steed, Cry courage to the field. And thou hast talk'd Of Sallies, and Retires; Trenches, Tents, Of Palizadoes, Frontiers, Parapets, Of Basiliskes, of Canon, Culverin, Of Prisoners ranfome, and of Souldiers flaine, And all the current of a headdy fight. Thy spirit within thee hath beene so at Warre, And thus hath so bestir'd thee in thy sleepe, That beds of sweate hath stood vpon thy Brow, Like bubbles in a late-disturbed Streame; And in thy face strange motions haue appear'd, Such as we see when men restraime their breath On some great sodaine haile. O what portents are these? Some heauie businesse hath my Lord in hand, And I must know it. else he loues me not.

Hor. What ho, is Gilliams with the Packet gone?

Sir He is my Lord, an houre agoe.

Hor. Hath Burley brought those horses fro the Sheriffe?

Ser. One horse, my Lord, he brought euen now.

Hot. What Horse? A Roane, a crop care, is it not.

Ser. It is my Lord.

Hot. That Roane shall be my Throne. Well, I will backe him straight. Esperance, bid Burley lead him forth into the Parke.

La. But heare you, my Lord.

Hot. What say'st thou my Lady?

La. What is it carries you away?

Hot. Why, my horse (my Loue) my horse.

La. Out you mad-headed Ape, a Weazell hath not such a deale of Spleene, as you are toft with. In sooth I know your businesse Harry, that I will. I feare my Brother Mortimer doth stirre about his Title, and hath sent for you to line his enterprize. But if you go—

Hot. So farre a foot, I shall be weary, I loue.

La. Come, come, you Paraquito, answer me directly vnto this question, that I shall aske. Indeede I he breake thy little finger Harry, if thou wilt not tel me true.

Hot. Away, away you trisler. Loue, I loue thee not,

I care not for thee Kate: this is no world To play with Mammets, and to tilt with lips We must haue bloodie Noses, and crack'd Crownes, And passe them currant too. Gods me, my horse What say'st thou Kate? what wold'st thou haue with me?

La. Do ye not loue me? Do ye not indeed?

Well, do not then. For since you loue me not, I will not loue my selfe. Do you not loue me?

Nay, tell me if thou speak'st in iest, or no.

Hot. Come, wilt thou see me ride? And when I am a horsebacke, I will sweare I loue thee infinitely. But hearken you Kate, I must not haue you henceforth, question me, Whether I go. nor reason whereabout.

Whether I must, I must: and to conclude, This Euening must I leaue thee, gentle Kate. I know you wise, but yet no further wise Then Harry Percies wife. Constant you are, But yet a woman: and for fecrecie, No Lady closer. For I will beleue Thou wilt not utter what thou do'st not know, And so farre wilt I trust thee, gentle Kate.

La. How so farre?

Hot. Not an inch further. But harke you Kate, Whither I go, thither shall you go too: To day will I set forth, to morrow you. Will this content you Kate?

La. It must of force

Scena Quarta.

Enter Prince and Pomes.

Prin. Ned, prethee come out of that fat roome, & lend me thy hand to laugh a little

Pomes. Where hast bene Hall?

Prin. With three or foure Logger-heads, amongst 3. or fourescore Hogsheads. I haue founded the yetie base string of humility. Sirra, I am sworn brother to a leash of Drawers, and can call them by their names, as Tom Dicke, and Francis. They take it already vpon their confidence, that though I be but Prince of Wales, yet I am the King of Curtestellings me flatly I am no proud lack like Falstaffe, but a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy, and when I am King of England, I shall command al the good Laddes in East-cheape. They call drinking deepe, dying Scarlet; and when you breath in your wauering, then they they cry hem, and bid you play it off. To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an houre, that I can drinke with any Tinker in his owne Language during my life. I tell thee Ned, thou hast lost much honor, that thou wert not with me in this action: but sweet Ned, to sweeten which name of Ned, I giue thee this peniworth of Sugar, clapt euen now into my hand by an vnder Skinker, one that neuer spake other English in his life, then Eight shillings and six pence, and, Thou art welcome with this shrill addition, Anon, anon sir, Score A Pint of Bassard in the Halfe Moone, not so. But Ned, to drine away time till Falstaffe come, I prythee doe thou stand in some by-roome, while I question my puny Drawer, to what end hee giue me the Sugar, and do neuer leaue calling Francis, that his Tale to me may be nothing but, Anon step aside, and he shew thee a President.

Pomerio Francis

Prin Thou art perfect.

Poin Francis.

Enter Drawer.

Fran Anon, anon sir; looke downe into the Pomgar-net, Ralfe.

Prince, Come hither Francis

Fran My Lord

Prin How long hast thou to serue, Francis?

Fran Forsooth five yeares, and as much as to——

Poin Francis.

Fran Anon, anon sir.

Prin Five yeares? Berladly a long Lease for the clin-king of Pewter. But Francis, darest thou be so valiant, as to play the coward with thy Indenture, & shew it a faire paire of heeles, and run from it?

Fran O Lord sir, he be sworne vpon all the Books in England, I could finde in my heart

Poin Francis.

Fran Anon, anon sir.

Prin How old art thou, Francis?

Fran Let me see, about Michaelmas next I shal be——

Poin Francis.

Fran Anon sir, pray you stay a little, my Lord.

Prin Nay but harke you Francis, for the Sugar thou gauest me, 'twas a penyworth, was't not?

Fran O Lord sir, I would it had bene two.

Prin I will giue thee for it a thousand pound: Aske me when thou wilt, and thou shalt haue it.

Poin Francis.

Fran Anon, anon

Prin Anon Francis? No Francis, but to morrow Francis or Francis, on Thursday. or indeed Francis when thou wilt. But Francis.

Fran My Lord.

Prin Wilt thou rob this Leatherne Jerkin, Christall button, Not-pated, Agar ring, Pike stocking, Caddice garter, Smooth tongue, Spanish pouch.

Fran O Lord sir, who do you meane?

Prin Why then your browne Bastard is your onely drinke: for looke you Francis, your white Canuas doublet will fuffey. In Barbary sir, it cannot come to so much.

Fran What sir?

Poin Francis.

Prin Away you Rogue, dost thou heare them call?

Here they both call him, the Drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.

Enter Uinton.

Vint What, stand'st thou still, and hear'st such a calling? Looketo the Guests within: My Lord, olde Sir John with halfe a dozen more, are at the doore: shall I let them in?

Prin Let them alone awhile, and then open the doore, Poiners.

Enter Poiners.

Poin Anon, anon sir

Prin Sitra, Falstaffe and the rest of the Theeues, are at the doore, shall we bomey?

Poin As merrie as Crickets my Lad. But harke yee, What cunning match haue you made with this iest of the Drawer? Come, what's the issue?

Prin I am now of all humors, that haue shewed them. selues humors, since the old dayes of Goodman Adam, to the pupill age of this present twelue a clock at midnight, What's a clocke Francis?

Fran Anon, anon sir

Prin That euer this Fellow should haue fewer words then a Parrot, and yet the sonne of a Woman. His industry is vp-staires and down-staires, his eloquence the parcel of a reckoning I am not yet of Ferrius mind, the Horsepurre of the North, he that killes me some fixe or seauen dozen of Scots at a Breakfast, washes his hands, and saies to his wife; Fie vpon this quiet life, I want worke O my sweet Harry sayes she, how many hast thou kill'd to day? Giue my Roane horse a drench (sayes hee) and answeres, some fourteene, an houre after. a trifle, a trifle I prythee call in Falstaffe, he play Percy, and that damn'd Brawne shall play Dame Mortimer his wife. Rime, sayes the drunkard. Call in Ribs, call in Tallow.

Enter Falstaffe.

Poin Welcome Iacke, where hast thou beene?

Fal A plague of all Cowards I say, and a Vengeance too, marry and Amen. Giue me a cup of Sacke Boy Ere I leade this life long, he towe neither stockes, and n end them too. A plague of all cowards. Giue me a Cup of Sacke, Rogue. Is there no Vertue extant?

Prin Didst thou neuer see Titan kisse a dish of Butter, pittifull hearted Titan that melted at the sweete Tale of the Sunne? If thou didst, then behold that compound.

Fal You Rogue, heere's Lime in this Sacke too there is nothing but Roguery to be found in Villanous man, yea a Coward is worse then a Cup of Sack with Lime. A villanous Coward, go thy wayes old Iacke, die when thou wilt, if manhood, good manhood be not forgot vpon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten Herring: there liues not three good men vnhang'd in England, & one of them is fat, and growes old, God helpe the while, a bad world I say. I would I were a Weauer, I could sing all manner of songs. A plague of all Cowards, I say still.

Prin How now Woolfacke, what matter you?

Fal A Kings Sonnet? If I do not beate thee out of thy Kingdome with a dagger of Lath, and drue all thy Subjects afore thee like a flocke of Wilde-geese, he neuer weare haire on my face more. You Prince of Wales?

Prin Why you horson round man? what's the matter?

Fal Are you not a Coward? Answer me to that, and Poiners there?

Prin Yefatch paunch, and yee call mee Coward, hee stab thee.

Fal I call thee Coward? Hee see thee damn'd ere I call the Coward: but I would giue a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders, you care not who sees your backe: Call you that that backing of your friends? a plague vpon such backing. giue me them that will face me. Giue me a Cup of Sack, I am a Rogue if I drunke to day.

Prince. O Villaine, thy flippes are scarce wip'd, since thou drunk'st last.

Falst. All's one for that. He drunke

A plague of all Cowards still, say I.

Prince. What's the matter?

Falst. What's the matter? here be foure of vs, haue ta'ne a thousand pound this Morning.

Prince. Where is it, Jack? where is it?

Falst. Where is it? taken from vs, it is: a hundred vpon poore foure of vs.

Prince. What, a hundred, man?

Falst. I am a Rogue; if I were not at halfe Sword with a dozen of them two houres together. I haue scaped by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the Doublet, foure through the Hose, my Buckler cut through and through, my Sword hackt like a Hand-saw, ecce signum. I neuer dealt better since I was a man: all would not doe. A plague of all Cowards. let them speake, if they speake more or lesse then truth, they are villaines, and the sonnes of darknesse.

Prince. Speake sirs, how was it?

Gad. We foure set vpon some dozen

Falst. Sixteene, at least, my Lord.

Gad. And bound them.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound.

Falst. You Rogue, they were bound, euery man of them, or I am a lew else, an Ebrew lew.

Gad. As we were sharing, some fixe or seuen freth men set vpon vs.

Falst. And vnbound the rest, and then come in the others.

Prince. What, fought yee with them all?

Falst. All? I know not what yee call all: but if I fought not with fiftie of them, I am a bunch of Radish; if there were not two or three and fiftie vpon poore olde Jack, then am I no two-legg'd Creature.

Poin. Pray Heauen, you haue not murdered some of them.

Falst. Nay, that's past praying for, I haue pepper'd two of them: Two I am sure I haue payed, two Rogues in Buckrom Sutes. I tell thee what, Hal, if I tell thee a Lye, spit in my face, call me Horse. thou knowest my olde word: here I lay, and thus I bore my point, foure Rogues in Buckrom let driue at me.

Prince. What, foure? thou sayd'st but two, euen now.

Falst. Foure Hal, I told thee foure.

Poin. I, I, he said foure.

Falst. These foure came all a-front, and mainely thrust at me; I made no more adoe, but tooke all their seuen points in my Targuet, thus.

Prince. Seuen? why there were but foure, euen now.

Falst. In Buckrom.

Poin. I, foure, in Buckrom Sutes.

Falst. Seuen, by these Hils, or I am a Villaine else.

Prim. Prethee let him alone, we shall haue more anon.

Falst. Doeft thou heare me, Hal?

Prim. I, and marke thee too, Jack.

Falst. Doe so, for it is worth the listning too: these nine in Buckrom, that I told thee of.

Prim. So, two more already.

Falst. Their Points being broken.

Poin. Downe fell his Hose.

Falst. Began to giue me ground: but I followed the close, came in foot and hand; and with a thought, scut of the cleuen I pay'd.

Prim. O monstrous! cleuen Buckrom men growne out of two?

Falst. But as the Deuill would haue it, three misbegotten Knaues, in Kendall Greene, came at my Back, and let driue at me; for it was so darke, Hal, that thou could'st not see thy Hand.

Prim. These Lyes are like the Father that begets them, grosse as a Mountaine, open, palpable. Why thou Clay-brayn'd Gurs, thou Knotty-pated Foole, thou Horson obscene greasie Tallow Catch.

Falst. What, art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth, the truth?

Prim. Why, how could'st thou know these men in Kendall Greene, when it was so darke, thou could'st not see thy Hand? Come, tell vs your reason: what say'st thou to this?

Poin. Come, your reason Jack, your reason.

Falst. What, vpon compulsion? No: were I at the Strappado, or all the Racks in the World, I would not tell you on compulsion. Giue you a reason on compulsion? If Reasons were as plentie as Blackberries, I would giue no man a Reason vpon compulsion, I.

Prim. He be no longer guiltie of this sinne. This sanguine Coward, this Bed-prester, this Horse-back-breaker, this huge Hill of Fleish.

Falst. Away you Starueling, you Elfe-skin, you dried Neats tongue, Bulles-pissell, you stocke-fish: O for breath to utter. What is like thee? You Tailors yard, you sheath you Bow-case, you vile standing tucke.

Prim. Well, breath a-while, and then to t againe: and when thou hast ty'd thy selfe in base comparisons, heare me speake but thus.

Poin. Marke lacke.

Prim. We two, saw you foure set on foure: and bound them, and were Masters of their Wealth. mark now how a plaine Tale shall put you downe. Then did we two, set on you foure, and with a word, outfac'd you from your prize, and haue it: yea, and can shew it you in the House. And halstaffe, you caried your Guts away as nimbly, with as quicke dexteritie, and roared for mercy, and still ranne and roard, as euer I heard Bull-Calf. What a Slaue art thou, to hacke thy sword as thou hast done, and then say it was in fight. What trick? what deuice? what starting hole canst thou now find out, to hide thee from this open and apparant shame?

Poin. Come, let's heare Iacke: What tricke hast thou now?

Fal. I knew ye as well as he that made ye. Why heare ye my Masters, was it for me to kill the Heire apparant? Should I turne vpon the true Prince? Why, thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules: but beware Infinit, the Lion will not touch the true Prince. Infinit is a great matter. I was a Coward on Infinit: I shall thinke the better of my selfe, and thee, during my life. I, for a valiant Lion, and thou for a true Prince. But Lads, I am glad you haue th: Mony. Hostesse clap to the doores: watch to night, pray to morrow. Gallants, Lads, Boyes, Harts of Gold, all the good Titles of Fellowship come to you. What, shall we be merry? shall we haue a Play extempory Prim. Content, and the argument shall be, thy running away.

Fal. A, no more of that Hal, and thou louest me.

Enter Hostesse.

Host. My Lord, the Prince?

Prim.

Prin. How now my Lady the Hostesse, what say'st thou to me?

Hostesse. Marry, my Lord, there is a Noble man of the Court at doore would speake with you: hee sayes, hee comes from your Father.

Prin. Giue him as much as will make him a Royall man, and send him backe againe to my Mother.

Falst. What manner of man is hee?

Hostesse. An old man.

Falst. What doth Gramme out of his Bed at Midnight? Shall I giue him his answer?

Prin. Prethee doe Iacke.

Falst. Faith, and Ile send him packing. Exit.

Prince. Now Sirs: you fought saire; so did you Peto, so did you Bardol: you are Lyons too, you ranne away vpon instinct: you will not touch the true Prince; no; he.

Bard. Faith, I ranne when I saw others runne.

Prin. Tell mee now in earnest, how came Falstaffs Sword so hackt?

Peto. Why, hee hackt it with his Dagger, and said, hee would sweare truth out of England, but hee would make you beleue it was done in fight, and perswaded vs to doe the like.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our Noses with Spear-grasse, to make them bleed, and then to beslobber our garments with it, and sweare it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seuen yeeres before, I blush to heare his monstrous deuices.

Prin. O Villaine, thou stolest a Cup of Sicke eigh- teene yeeres agoe, and wert taken with the manner, and euer since thou hast blusht extempore: thou hadst fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou ranst away, what instinct hadst thou for it?

Bard. My Lord, doe you see these Meteors? doe you behold these Exhalations?

Prin. I doe.

Bard. What thinke you they portend?

Prin. Hot Livers, and cold Purfes.

Bard. Choler, my Lord, if rightly taken.

Prin. No, if rightly taken, Halter.

Enter Falstaffe

Heere comes leane Iacke, heere comes bare-bone How now my sweet Creature of Bombast, how long is't agoe, Iacke, since thou saw'st thine owne Knee?

Falst. My owne Knee? When I was about thy yeeres (Hal) I was not an Eagles Talent in the Waste, I could haue crept into any Aldermans Thumbe-Ring a plague of sighing and griefe, it blowes a man vp like a Bladder. There's villanous Newes abroad: heere was Sir John Braby from your Father; you must goe to the Court in the Morning. The same mad fellow of the North, Percy; and hee of Wales, that gaue Armadon the Bastinado, and made Lucifer Cuckold, and swore the Deuill his true Liege-man vpon the Crosse of a Welch-hooke; what a plague call you him?

Prin. O, Glendower.

Falst. Owen, Owen; the same, and his Sonne in Law Mortimer, and old Northumberland, and the sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runnes a Horse-backe vp a Hill perpendicular.

Prin. Hee that rides at high speede, and with a Pistoll kills a Sparrow flying.

Falst. You haue hit it

Prin. So did he neuer the Sparrow.

Falst. Well, that Rascall hath good mettall in him, hee will not runne.

Prin. Why, what a Rascall art thou then, to prayse him so for running?

Falst. A Horse-backe (ye Cuckoe) but a foot hee will not budge a foot.

Prin. Yes Iacke, vpon instinct.

Falst. I grant ye, vpon instinct: Well, hee is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blew-Cappes more, Worcester is holne away by Night: thy Fathers Beard is turn'd white with the Newes; you may buy Land now as cheape as stinking Mackrell.

Prin. Then 'tis like, if there come a hot Sunne, and this ciuill buffeting hold, wee shall buy Maiden-heads as they buy Hob-nayles, by the Hundreds.

Falst. By the Masse Lad, thou say'st true: it is like wee shall haue good trading that way. But tell me Hal, art not thou horrible ascar'd? thou being Heire apparant, could the World picke thee out three such Enemies a-gaine, as that Fiend Douglas, that Spirit Percy, and that Deuill Glendower? Art not thou horrible afraid? Doth not thy blood thrill at it?

Prin. Not a whit: I haue some of thy instinct.

Falst. Well, thou wilt be horrible childe to morrow, when thou comest to thy Father. if thou doe loue me, practise an answer.

Prin. Doe thou stand for my Father, and examine mee vpon the particulars of my Life.

Falst. Shall I? content: This Chayre shall bee my State, this Dagger my Scepter, and this Cushion my Crowne.

Prin. Thy State is taken for a Ioynd-Stoole, thy Golden Scepter for a Leaden Dagger, and thy precious rich Crowne, for a pittifull bald Crowne.

Falst. Well, and the fire of Grace be not quite out of thee now shalt thou be moued. Giue me a Cup of Sacke to make mine eyes looke redde, that it may be thought I haue wept, for I must speake in passion, and I will doe it in King Cambyses vaine.

Prin. Well, heere is my Legge

Falst. And heere is my speech: stand aside Nobilitie.

Hostesse. This is excellent sport, yfaith.

Falst. Weepe not, sweet Queene, for trickling teares are vaine.

Hostesse. O the Father, how hee holdes his countenance?

Falst. For Gods sake Lords, conuey my trustfull Queen, For teares doe stop the flood-gates of her eyes.

Hostesse. O rare, he doth it as like one of these harlotry Players, as euer I see.

Falst. Peace good Pint-pot, peace good Tickle-braine Harry, I doe not onely maruell where thou spendest thy time; but also, how thou art accompanied. For though the Camomile, the more it is troden, the faster it growes; yet Youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it weares. Thou art my Sonne: I haue partly thy Mothers Word, partly my Opinion; but chiefly, a villanous trick of thine Eye, and a foolish hanging of thy nether Lippe, that doth warrant me. If then thou be Sonne to mee, heere lyeth the point. why, being Sonne to me, art thou so poynted at? Shall the blessed Sonne of Heaven proue a Micher, and eate Black-berries? a question not to bee askt. Shall the Sonne of England proue a Theefe, and take Purfes? a question to be askt. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is knowne to many many in our Land, by the Name of Pitch: this Pitch (as ancient Writers doe report) doth defile, so doth the companie thou keepest: for Harry, now I doe not speake to thee in Drinke, but in Teares; not in Pleasure, but in Passion; not in Words onely, but in Woes also. and yet there is a vertuous man, whom I haue often noted in thy companie, but I know not his Name.

Prin. What manner of man, and is like your Maestie?

Falst. A goodly portly man yfaith, and a corpulent, of a chearefull Look, a pleasing Eye, and a most noble Carriage, and as I thinke, his age some fiftie, or (byrlady) inclining to threescore; and now I remember mee, his Name is Falstaffe: if that man should be Jewdly giuen, hee deceiues mee, for Harry, I see Vertue in his Lookes. If then the Tree may be knowne by the Fruit, as the Fruit by the Tree, then peremptorily I speake it, there is Vertue in that Falstaffe him keepe with, the rest banish. And tell mee now, thou naughty Varlet, tell mee, where hast thou beene this moneth?

Prin. Do'st thou speake like a King? doe thou stand for mee, and Ile play my Father.

Falst. Depose me: if thou do'st it halte so grauely, so maiestically, both in word and matter, hang me vp by the heeles for a Rabber-sucker, or a Poulsters Hare.

Prin. Well, heere I am set.

Falst. And heere I stand iudge my Masters.

Prin. Now Harry, whence come you?

Falst. My Noble Lord, from East-cheape.

Prin. The complaints I heare of thee, are grievous.

Falst. Yfaith, my Lord, they are false. Nay, Ile tickle ye for a young Prince.

Prin. Swearst thou, vngracious Boy? henceforth ne re looke on me: thou art violently carryed away from Grace: there is a Deuill haunts thee, in the likeness of a fat old Man; a Tunne of Man is thy Companion. Why do'st thou conuerse with that Trunke of Humors, that Boulting-Hutch of Beastlinesse, that swolne Parcell of Dropies, that huge Bombard of Sacke, that stufte Cloake-bagge of Guts, that rosted Manning Tree Oxe with the Pudding in his Belly, that reuerend Vice, that grey Iniquitie, that Father Ruffian, that Vanitie in yeeres? wherein is he good, but to taste Sacke, and drinke it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carue a Capon, and eat it? wherein cunning, but in Crafts? wherein craftie, but in Villainie? wherein Villanous, but in all things? wherein worthy, but in nothing?

Falst. I would your Grace would take me with you whom meane your Grace?

Prin. That villanous abhominable mis-leader of Youth, Falstaffe, that old whee-bearded Sathan.

Falst. My Lord, the man I know.

Prin. I know thou do'st.

Falst. But to say, I know more haire in him then in my selfe, were to say more then I know. That hee is olde (the more the pittie) his white hayres doe witness it: but that hee is (saying your reuerence) a Whore-master, that I vterly deny. If Sacke and Sugar be a fault, Heaven helpe the Wicked. If to be olde and merry, be a sinne, then shew any an olde Hostie, that I know, as damnd: if to be fat, be to be hated, then Pharaohs leane Kine are to be loued. No, my good Lord, banish Pierp, banish Bardolph, banish Pierres. but for sweete Jacks Falstaffe, kinde Jacks Falstaffe, true Jacks Falstaffe, valiant Jacks Falstaffe, and therefore more valiant, being as hee is olde Jacks Falstaffe, banish not him thy Harryes companie, banish not him thy Harryes companie; banish plump Jacks, and banish all the World.

Prince. I doe, I will.

Enter Bardolph running.

Bard. O, my Lord, my Lord, the Sherife, with a most most monstrous Watch, is at the doore.

Falst. Out you Rogue, play out the Play. I haue much to say in the behalfe of that Falstaffe.

Enter the Hostesse.

Hostesse. O, my Lord, my Lord.

Falst. Heigh, heigh, the Deuill rides vpon a Fiddle-sticke: what's the matter?

Hostesse. The Sherife and all the Watch are at the doore. they are come to search the House, shall I let them in?

Falst. Do'st thou heare Hal, neuer call a true peece of Gold a Counterfeit: thou art essentially made, without seeming so.

Prince. And thou a naturall Coward, without instinct.

Falst. I deny your Maur: if you will deny the Sherife, so: if not, let him enter. If I become not a Cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing vp: I hope I shall as soone be strangled with a Halter, as another.

Prince. Goe hide thee behinde the Atras, the rest walke vp aboute. Now my Masters, for a true Face and good Conscience.

Falst. Both which I haue had: but their date is out, and therefore Ile hide me. Exit.

Prince. Call in the Sherife.

Enter Sherife and his Carrier.

Prince. Now Master Sherife, what is your will with mee?

She. First pardon me, my Lord. A Hue and Cry hath followed certaine men vnto this house.

Prince. What men?

She. One of them is well knowne, my gracious Lord, a grosse fat man.

Car. As fat as Butter.

Prince. The man, I doe assure you, is not heere, For I my selfe at this time haue employ'd him: And Sherife, I will engage my word to thee, That I will by to morrow Dinner time, Send him to answer thee, or any man, For any thing he shall be charg'd withall: And so let me entreat you, leaue the house.

She. I will, my Lord: there are two Gentlemen Haue in this Robberie lost three hundred Markes.

Prince. It may be so: if he haue robb'd these men, He shall be answerable: and so farewell.

She. Good Night, my Noble Lord.

Prince. I thinke it is good Morrow, is it not?

She. Indeede, my Lord, I thinke it be two a Clocke. Exit.

Prince. This oily Rascall is knowne as well as Poules: goe call him forth.

Peto. Falstaffe? fast asleepe behinde the Atras, and snorting like a Horse.

Prince. Hawke, how hard he fetches breath: search his Pockets. End.

The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

He searcheth his Pockets, and findeth certaine Papers.

Prince. What hast thou found?

Peto. Nothing but Papers, my Lord.

Prince. Let's see, what be they? read them.

Peto. Item, a Capon.

ii.s.ii.d.

Item, Sacke, two Gallons.

iii.d.

Item, Anchoues and Sacke after Supper.

v.s.viii.d.

Item, Bread.

ii.s.vi.d.

ob.

Prince. O monstrous, but one halfe penny-worth of Bread to this intollerable deale of Sacke? What there is else, keepe close, wee le read it at more aduantage: there let him sleepe till day. He to the Cour in the Morning. Wee must all to the Warres, and thy place shall be honorable. He procure this fat Rogue a Charge of Foot, and I know his death will be a Match of Twelue-score. The Money shall be pay'd backe againe with aduantage. Be with me betimes in the Morning. and so good morrow Peto.

Peto. Good morrow, good my Lord.

Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Hotspurre, Worcester, Lord Mortimer,
Owen Glendower.

Mort. These promises are faire, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosperous hope.

Hotsp. Lord Mortimer, and Cousin Glendower,
Will you sit downe?

And Vnckle Worcester; a plague vpon it,
I haue forgot the Mappe.

Glend. No, here it is:

Sit Cousin Percy, sit good Cousin Hotspurre:

For by that Name, as oft as Lancaster doth speake of you,
His Cheekes looke pale, and with a rising sigh,

He wisheth you in Heauen.

Hotsp. And you in Hell, as oft as he heares Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glend. I cannot blame him. At my Natinitie,

The front of Heauen was full of fierie shapes,

Of burning Cressets: and at my Birth,

The frame and foundation of the Earth

Shak'd like a Coward.

Hotsp. Why so it would haue done at the same season, if your Mothers Cat had but kitten'd, though your selfe had neuer bene borne.

Glend. I say the Earth did shake when I was borne.

Hotsp. And I say the Earth was not of my minde,

If you suppose, as fearing you, it shooke.

Glend. The Heauens were all on fire, the Earth did tremble.

Hotsp. Oh, then the Earth shooke

To see the Heauens on fire,

And not in feare of your Natinitie.

Diseased Nature oftentimes breakes forth

In strange eruptions, and the trembling Earth

Is with a kinde of Collick pinche and vex'd.

By the imprisoning of vnruely Winde

Within her Wombe: which for enlargement struiuing,
Shakes the old Beldame Earth, and tombles downe

Steeple, and inosse-growne Towers. At your Birth,
Our Grandam Earth, hauing this distemperature,
In passion shooke.

Glend. Cousin of many men

I doe not beare these Crossings: Giue me leaue
To tell you once againe, that at my Birth

The front of Heauen was full of fierie shapes,

The Goates ranne from the Mountaines, and the Heards
Were strangely clamorous to the frighted fields.

These signes haue markt me extraordinarie,

And all the courses of my Life doe shew,

I am not in the Roll of common men.

Where is the Liuing, clipt in with the Sea,

That chides the Bankes of England, Scotland, and Wales,

Which calls me Pupill, or hath read to me?

And bring him out, that is but Womans Sonne,

Can trace me in the tedious wayes of Art,

And hold me pace in deepe experiments

Hotsp. I thinke there's no man speakes better Welsh
He to Dinner.

Mort. Peace Cousin Percy, you will make him mad.

Glend. I can call Spirits from the vastie Deepe.

Hotsp. Why lo can I, or so can any man.

But will they come, when you doe call for them?

Glend. Why, I can teach thee, Cousin, to command the Deuill

Hotsp. And I can teach thee, Cousin, to shame the Deuill,

By telling truth. Tell truth, and shame the Deuill.

It thou haue power to rayle him, bring him hither,

And Ile be sworne, I haue power to shame him hence.

Oh, while you liue, tell truth, and shame the Deuill

Mort. Come, come, no more of this vnprohtable Chat.

Glend. Three times hath Henry Bullingbrooke made head
Against my Power: thrice from the Banks of Wye,

And sandy-bottom'd Severne, haue I hent him

Bontlesse home, and Weather-beaten backe.

Hotsp. Home without Bootes,

And in soule Weather too,

How scapes he Agues in the Deuils name?

Glend. Come, heere's the Mappe.

Shall wee diuide our Right,

According to our three-fold order ta'ne?

Mort. The Arch-Deacon hath diuided it
Into three Limits, very equally:

England, from Treht, and Seuerus hitherto,

By South and East, is to my part assign'd:

All Westward, Wales, beyond the Seuerne shore,

And all the fertile Land within that bound,

To Owen Glendower. And deare Couze, to you

The remnant Northward, lying off from Trent,

And our Indentures Tripartite are drawne

Which being sealed enterchangeably,

(A Businesse that this Night may execute)

To morrow, Cousin Percy, you and I,

And my good Lord of Worcester, will set forth,

To meete your Father, and the Scottish Power.

As is appointed vs at Shrewsbury.

My Father Glendower is not readie yet,

Nor shall wee neede his helpe these fourteene dayes.

Within that space, you may haue drawne together

Your Tenants, Friends, and neighbouring Gentlemen.

Glend. A shorter time shall lend me to you, Lords:
And in my Conduet shall your Ladies come;
From whom you now must steale, and take no leaue,
For there will be a World of Water shed,

Vpon the parting of your Wiues and you.

Hotsp. Me thinks my Mouty, North from Burton here,
In quantitie equals not one of yours;
See, how this Riuer comes me cranking in,
And cuts me from the best of all my Land,
A huge halfe Moone, a monstrous Cante out.
He haue the Currant in this place dam'd vp,
And here the smug and Siluer Trent shall runne,
In a new Channell, faire and evenly
It shall not vnde with such a deepe indent,
To rob me of so rich a Bortome here.

Glend. Not vnde? it shall, it must, you see it doth.

Mort. Yea, but marke how he beates his course,
And runnes me vp, with like aduantage on the other side,
Gelding the opposed Continent as much,
As on the other side it takes from you.

Worc. Yea, but a little Charge will trench him here,
And on this North side winne this Cape of Land,
And then he runnes straight and euen

Hotsp. He hure it to a little Charge will doe it.

Glend. He not haue it alter'd.

Hotsp. Will not you?

Glend. No, nor you shall not.

Hotsp. Who shall say, me nay?

Glend. Why, that will I.

Hotsp. Let me not vnderstand you then, speake it in Welsh.

Glend. I can speake English, Lord, as well as you.
For I was trayn'd vp in the English Court,
Where, being but young, I framed to the Harpe
Many an English Dittie, lowely well,
And gaue the Tongue a helpfull Ornament,
A Vertue that was neuer scene in you.

Hotsp. Marry, and I am glad of it with all my heart,
I had rather be a Kitten, and cry mew,
Then one of these same Meeter Billad-mongers
I had rather heare a Brazen Candlestick turn'd,
Or a dry Wheele grate on the Axle-tree,
And that would set my teeth nothing an edge,
Nothing so much, as mincing Poetrie,
'Tis like the forc't gate of a shuffling Nagge.

Glend. Come, you shall haue Trent turn'd.

Hotsp. I doe not care. He giue thirce so much Land
To any well-deseruing friend,
But in the way of Bargaine, marke ye me,
He caull on the ninth part of a hayre.
Ate the Indentures drawne? shall we be gone?

Glend. The Moone shines faire,
You may away by Night
He haste the Writer; and withall,
Breake with your Wiues, of your departure hence:
I am afraid my Daughter will runne madde,
So much she doteth on her Mortimer. Exit

Mort. Fie, Cousin Percy, how you crosse my Father.

Hotsp. I cannot chuse. Sometime he angers me,
With telling me of the Moldwarpe and the Ant,
Of the Dreamer Merlin, and his Prophecies;
And of a Dragon, and a sinne-lesse Fish,
A clip-wing'd Griffin, and a moulten Rauon,
A couching Lyon, and a ramping Cat,
And such a deale of skimble-skamble Stuff,
As puts me from my Faith. I tell you what,
He held me last Night, at least, nine howres,
In reckning vp the feuerall Demils Names,
That were his Lacquyes:

I cry'd hum, and well, goe too,
But mark'd him not a word. O, he is as tedious
As a tyred Horse, a rayling Wife,
Worse then a smoakie House. I had rather liue
With Cheese and Garlick in a Windmill farre,
Then feede on Cares, and haue him talke to me,
In any Summer-House in Christendome.

Mort. In faith he was a worthy Gentleman,
Exceeding well read, and profited,
In strange Concealments.

Valiant as a Lyon, and wondrous affable,
And as bountifull, as Mynes of India,
Shall I tell you, Cousin,
He hold's your temper in a high respect,
And curbes himselfe, euen of his naturall scope,
When you doe crosse his humor. Faith he does.
I warrant you, that man is not aine,
Might so haue tempted him, as you haue done,
Without the taste of danger, and reproofe:
But doe not vse it oft, let me entreat you.

Worc. In faith, my Lord, you are too wilfull blame,
And since your coming hither, haue done enough,
To put him quite besides his patience
You may it needs learne, Lord, to amend this fault
Though sometimes it shew Greatnesse, Courage, Blood,
And that's the dearest grace it renders you;
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh Rage,
Defect of Manners, want of Gouernment,
Pride, Haughtinesse, Opinion, and Disdaine:
The least of which, haunting a Nobleman,
Loseth mens hearts, and leaues behind a stayne
Vpon the beaue of all parts besides,
Beguiling them of commendation.

Hotsp. Well, I am school'd
Good-manners be your speede;
Heere come your Wiues, and let vs take our leaue,

Enter Glendower, with the Ladies.

Mort. This is the deadly spight, that angers me,
My Wife can speake no English, I no Welsh

Glend. My Daughter weepes, shee'll not part with you,
Shee'll be a Souldier too, shee'll to the Warres.

Mort. Good Father tell her, that she and my Aunt Percy Shall follow in your Conduct speedily.

Glendower speaks to her in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.

Glend. Shee is desperate heere:
A peeuish selfe-will'd Harlotry,
One that no perswasion can doe good vpon,

The Lady speaks in Welsh

Mort. I vnderstand thy Lookes, that pretty Welsh
Which thou pour'st down from these swelling Heauens,
I am too perfect in it, and but for shame,
In such a parley should I answer thee.

The Lady againe in Welsh.

Mort. I vnderstand thy Kisses, and thou mine,
And that's a feeling disputation:
But I will neuer be a Truant, Loue,
Till I haue learn'd thy Language, for thy tongue

Makes

Makes Welsh as sweet as Ditties highly penn'd,
Sung by a faire Queene in a Summers Bowre,
With rauishing Diuision to her Lute.

Glend Nay, if thou melt, then will she runne madde.

The Lady speaks againe in Welsh.

Mort. O, I am Ignorance it selfe in this.

Glend. She bids you,

On the wanton Rushes lay you downe,
And rest your gentle Head vpon her Lappe,
And she will sing the Song that pleaseth you,
And on your Eye-lids Crowne the God of Sleepe,
Charming your blood with pleasing heauinesse;
Making such difference betwixt Wake and Sleepe,
As is the difference betwixt Day and Night,
The houre before the Heauenly Harneis'd Teeme
Begins his Golden Progress in the East.

Mort. With all my heart Ile sit, and heare her sing:
By that time w'll our Booke, I thinke, be drawne.

Glend. Doe so

And those Musicians that shall play to you,
Hang in the Ayre a thousand Leagues from thence;
And straight they shall be here - sit, and attend

Hotsp. Come Kate, thou art perfect in lying downe
Come, quicke, quicke, that I may hy my Head in thy Lappe

Lady. Goe, ye giddy-Goose

The Musicke plays.

Hotsp. Now I perceiue the Deuill vnderstands Welsh,
And 'tis no manuell he is so humorous:
Byrlady hee's a good Musitian.

Lady. Then would you be nothing but Musicall,
For you are altogether gouerned by humors.

Lye still ye sheefe, and heare the Lady sing in Welsh.

Hotsp. I had rather heare (Lady) my Brach howle in Irish

Lady. Would it haue thy Head broken?

Hotsp. No

Lady. Then be still

Hotsp. Neyther, 'tis a Womans fault.

Lady. Now God helpe thee.

Hotsp. To the Welsh Ladie Bed.

Lady. What's that?

Hotsp. Peace, shee sings

Heere the Lady sings a Welsh Song.

Hotsp. Come, Ile haue your Song too.

Lady. Not mine, in good sooth.

Hotsp. Not yours, in good sooth?

You sweare like a Comfit-makers Wife:

Not you, in good sooth; and, as true as I liue;
And, as God shall mend me; and, as sure as day;
And giuest such Sarcener suretie for thy Oathes,
As if thou neuer walk'st further then Finabury.

Sweare me, Kate, like a Lady, as thou art,
A good mouth-filling Oath, and leaue in sooth,
And such protest of Pepper Ginger-bread,
To Veluet-Guards, and Sunday-Citizens.
Come, sing

Lady. I will not sing.

Hotsp. 'Tis the next wy to turne Taylor, or be Red-breast teacher. and the Indentures be drawne, Ile away within these two howres: and so come in, when yee will.

Exit.

Glend. Come, come, Lord Mortimer, you are as slow,
As hot Lord Percy is on fire to goe.

By this our Booke is drawne: wee'll but seale,
And then to Horse immediately.

Mort. With all my heart,

Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, and others.

King. Lords, giue vs leaue:
The Prince of Wales, and I,
Must haue some priuate conference:
But be neere at hand,
For wee shall presently haue neede of you.

Exeunt Lords.

I know not whether Heauen will haue it so,
For some displeasing seruice I haue done;
That in his secret Doome, out of my Blood,
Hee'll breede Reuengement, and a Scourge for me:
But thou do'st in thy passages of I life,
Make me beleue, that thou art onely ma'k'd
For the hot vengeance, and the Rod of heauen
To punish my Mistreadings. Tell me else.
Could such inordinate and low desires,
Such poore, such bare, such lewd, such meane attempts,
Such barren pleasures, rude societie,
As thou art matcht withall, and grafted too,
Accompanie the greatnesse of thy blood,
And hold their leuell with thy Princely heart?

Prince. So please your Maiesty, I would I could Quit all offences with as cleare excuse,
As well as I am doubtlesse I can purge
My selfe of many I am charg'd withall:
Yet such extenuation let me begge,
As in reproofe of many Tales deu's'd,
Which oft the Eare of Greatnesse needes must heare,
By smiling Pick-thankes, and base Newes-mongers;
I may for some things true, where in my youth
Hath faultie wandred, and irregular,
Finde pardon on my true submission.

King. Heauen pardon thee:

Yet let me wonder, Harry,
At thy affections, which doe hold a Wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in Councell thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger Brother is supply'd:
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the Court and Princes of my blood.
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd, and the Soule of euery man
Prophetically doe fore-thinke thy fall.
Had I so labish of my presence beene,
So common hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheape to vulgar Company;
Opinion, that did helpe me to the Crowne,
Had still kept loyall to possession,
And left me in reputelesse banishment,
A fellow of no marke, nor likelyhood.
By being seldome scene, I could not sturre,
But like a Comet, I was wondred at,

That

That men would tell their Children, This is hee :
Others would say, Where, Which is Bullingbrooke.
And then I stole all Courties from Heauen,
And drest my selfe in such Humilitie,
That I did plucke Allegiance from mens hearts,
Lowd Shows and Salutations from their mouthes,
Euen in the presence of the Crowned King.
Thus I did keepe my Person fresh and new,
My Presence like a Robe Pontificall,
Ne're seene, but wondred at : and so my State,
Seldome but sumptuous, shewed like a Feast,
And wonne by rarenesse such Solemnitie.
The skipping King hee ambled vp and downe,
With shallow Iesters, and rash Bawin Wits,
Soone kindled, and soone burnt, carded his State,
Mingled his Royaltie with Carping Fooles,
Had his great Name prophaned with their Scornes,
And gaue his Countenance, against his Name,
To laugh at gybing Boyes, and stand the push
Of euery Beardless vaine Comparatiue,
Grew a Compan on to the common Streeter,
Enfeoff'd himselfe to Popularitie
That being dayly swallowed by mens Eyes,
They surfetted with Honey, and began to loathe
The taste of Sweetnesse, whereof a little
More then a little, is by much too much
So when he had occasion to be seene,
He was but as the Cuckow is in Iune,
Heard, not regarded : seene but with such Eyes,
As sicke and blunted with Communitie,
Affoord no extraordinarie Gaze,
Such as is bent on Sunne-like Maestie,
When it shines seldome in admiring Eyes.
But rather drow'd, and hung their eye-lids downe,
Slept in his Face, and rendred such aspect
As Cloudie men vse to doe to their aduersaries,
Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and full
And in that very Line, Harry, standest thou.
For thou hast lost thy Princely Priuiledge,
With vile participation Not an Eye
But is aware of thy common sight,
Saue mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more
Which now doth that I would not haue it doe,
Make blinde it selfe with foolish tendernesse.
Prince. I shall hereafter, my thrice gracious Lord,
Be more my selfe
King. For all the World,
As thou art to this houre, was Richard then,
When I from France set foot at Rauenspurgh;
And euen as I was then, is Percy now:
Now by my Scepter, and my Soule to boot,
He hath more worthy interest to the State
Then thou the shadow of Succession;
For of no Right, nor colour like to Right.
He doth fill fields with Harpers in the Realme,
Turnes head against the Lyons armed Iawes;
And being no more in debt to yeeres, then thou,
Leades ancient Lords, and reuerent Bishops on
To bloody Battails, and so brusing Armes.
What neuer-dying Honor hath he got,
Against renowned, Douglas? whose high Deedes,
Whose hot Incursions, and great Name in Armes,
Holds from all Souldiers chiefe Maioritie.
And Militarie Title Capitall
Through all the Kingdomes that acknowledge Christ,
Thrice hath the Hotspur Marr, in swathing Clothes,

This Infant Warrior, in his Enterprises,
Discomfited great Douglas, ta'ne him once,
Enlarged him, and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of deepe Defiance vp,
And shake the peace and safetie of our Throne.
And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland,
The Arch-bishops Grace of Yorke, Douglas, Mortimer, Capitulate against vs, and are vp
But wherefore doe I tell these Newes to thee?
Why, Harry, doe I tell thee of my Foes,
Which art my neer'st and dearest Enemy?
Thou, that art like enough, through vassall Feare,
Base Inclination, and the start of Spleene,
To fight against me vnder Percies pay,
To dogge his heeles, and curtsie at his frownes,
To shew how much thou art degenerate.

Prince Doenot thinke so, you shall not finde it so:
And Heauen forgieue them, that so much haue sway'd
Your Maesties good thoughts away from me:
I will redeeme all this on Percies head,
And in the closing of some glorious day,
Be bold to tell you, that I am your Sonne,
When I will weare a Garment all of Blood,
And staine my fauours in a bloody Maske:
Which washt away, shall scowre my shame with it.
And that shall be the day, when ere it lights,
That this same Child of Honor and Renowne,
This gallant Hotspur, this all-prayed Knight,
And your vnrthought-of Harry chance to meet:
For euery Honor sitting on his Helme,
Would they were multitudes, and on my head
My shames redoubled. For the time will come,
That I shall make this Northerne Youth exchange
His glorious Deedes for my Indignities:
Percy is but my Factor, good my Lord,
To engrosse vp glorious Deedes on my behalfe.
And I will call him to so strict account,
That he shall render euery Glory vp,
Yea, euen the sleightest worship of his time,
Or I will teare the Reckoning from his Heart
This, in the Name of Heauen, I promise here:
The which, if I performe, and doe suruiue,
I doe beseech your Maestie, may salue
The long-growne Wounds of my intemperature:
If not, the end of Life cancels all Bands,
And I will dye a hundred thousand Deaths,
Ere breake the smallest parcell of this Vow.

King A hundred thousand Rebels dye in this:
Thou shalt haue Charge, and soueraigne trust herein.

Enter Blunt.

How now good Blunt? thy Lookes are full of speed.
Blunt. So hath the Businesse that I come to speake of.
Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word,
That Douglas and the English Rebels met
The eleuenth of this moneth, at Shrewsbury:
A mightie and a fearefull Head they are,
(If Promises be kept on euery hand)
As euer offered soule play in a State.

King The Earle of Westmerland set forth to day:
With him my sonne, Lord John of Lancaster,
For this aduersisement, is five dayes old.
On Wednesday next, Harry thou shalt set forward:
On Thursday, wee our selues will march
Our meeting is Bridgenorth: and Harry, you shall march f Through

The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Through Gloucestershire. by which account,
Our Businesse valued some twelue dayes hence,
Our generall Forces at Bridgenorth shall meete.
Our Hands are full of Businesse. let's away,
Aduantage feedes him fat, while men delay. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe and Bardolph.

Falst. Bardolph, am I not false away vilely, since this last action? doe I not bate? doe I not dwindle? Why my skinnie hangs about me like an olde Ladies loose Gowne: I am withered like an olde Apple John. Well, He repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking: I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. And I have not forgotten what the in-side of a Church is made of, I am a Pepper-Corne, a Brewers Horse, the in-side of a Church. Company, villanous Company hath bene the spoyle of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so fretfull, you cannot liue long.

Falst. Why there is it. Come, sing me a bawdy Song, make me merry. I was as vertuously giuen, as a Gentleman need to be; vertuous enough, swore little, die'd not aboute seuen times a weeke, went to a Bawdy-house not aboute once in a quarter of an houre, payd Money that I borrowed, three or foure times; liued well, and in good compasse: and now I liue out of all order, out of compasse.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needes bee out of all compasse; out of all reasonable compasse, Sir John.

Falst. Doe thou amend thy Face, and He amend thy Life. Thou art our Admirall, thou bearest the Lanterne in the Poope, but 'tis in the Nose of thee; thou art the Knight of the burning Lampe.

Bard. Why, Sir John, my Face does you no harme.

Falst. No, He be sworne. I make as good vse of it, as many a man doth of a Deaths-Head, or a Memento Mori. I neuer see thy Face, but I thinke vpon Hell fire, and Duces burning. If thou wert any way giuen to vertue, I would sweare by thy Face; my Oath should bee, By this Fire: But thou art altogether giuen ouer; and wert indeede, but for the Light in thy Face, the Sunne of viter Darkenesse. When thou ran'st vp Gads-Hill in the Night, to catch my Horse, if I did not thinke that thou hadst bene an Ignis fatuus, or a Ball of Wild-fire, there's no Purchase in Money. O thou art a perpetuall Triumph, an euermourning Bonè-fire-Light: thou hast saued me a thousand Markes in Linkes and Torches, walking with thee in the Night betwixt Tauerne and Tauerne: But the Sack that thou hast drunk me, would haue bought me Lights as good cheape, as the dearest Chandelers in Europe. I haue maintayn'd that Salamander of yours with fire, any time this two and thirtie yeeres, Heaven reward me for it.

Bard. I would my Face were in your Belly.

Falst. So should I be sure to be heart-burn'd.

Enter Hostesse.

How now, Dame Parlet the Hen, haue you enquir'd yet who pick'd my Pocket?

Hostesse. Why Sir John, what doe you thinke, Sir John? doe you thinke I keepe Theeues in my House? I haue search'd, I haue enquired, so haz my Husband, Man by Man, Boy by Boy, Seruant by Seruant: the tight of a hayre was neuer lost in my house before.

Falst. Ye lye Hostesse: Bardolph was shau'd, and lost many a hayre; and He be swome my Pocket was pick'd.

Hostesse. Who I? I defie thee: I was neuer call'd so goe to, you are a Woman, goe.

Falst. Who I? I defie thee: I was neuer call'd so in mine owne house before.

Hostesse. No, Sir John, you doe not know me, Sir John I know you, Sir John. you owe me Money, Sir John, and now you picke a quarrell, to beguile me of it. I bought you a dozen of Shirts to your Backe.

Falst. Douglas, filthy Douglas: I haue giuen them away to Bakers Wiues, and they haue made Boulsters of them.

Hostesse. Now as I am a true Woman, Holland of eight shillings an Ell: You owe Money here besides, Sir John, foure and twentie pounds.

Falst. Hee had his part of it let him pay.

Hostesse. Hee? alas hee is poore, hee hath nothing.

Falst. How? Poore? Looke vpon his Face. What call you Rich? Let them coyne his Nose, let them coyne his Cheekes, He not pay a Denier. What, will you make a Yonker of me? Shall I not take mine ease in mine Inne, but I shall haue my Pocket pick'd? I haue lost a Scale-Ring of my Grand-fathers, worth fortie Marke.

Hostesse. I haue heard the Prince tell him, I know not how oft, that that Ring was Copper.

Falst. How? the Prince is a Iacke, a Sneake-Cupper, and if hee were heere, I would cudgell him like a Dogge, if hee would say so.

Enter the Prince marching, and Falstaffe meets him, playing on his Trunchion like a Fife

Falst. How now Lad? is the Winde in that Doore? Must we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate fashion.

Hostesse. My Lord, I pray you heare me.

Prince. What say'st thou, Mistresse Quickly? How does thy Husband? I loue him well, hee is an honest man.

Hostesse. Good, my Lord, heere mee.

Falst. Prethee let her alone, and list to mee.

Prince. What say'st thou, Jacks?

Falst. The other Night I fell asleepe heere behind the Arras, and had my Pocket pickt. this House is turn'd Bawdy-house, they picke Pockets.

Prince. What didst thou lose, Jacks?

Falst. Wilt thou belecue me, Hal? Three or foure Bonds of fortie pound apeece, and a Scale-Ring of my Grand-fathers.

Prince. A Trifle, some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my Lord; and I said, I heard you, Grace say so: and (my Lord) hee speakes most vilely of you, like a foule-mouth'd man as hee is, and said, hee would cudgell you.

Prince. What hee did not?

Host. There's neyther Faith, Truth, nor Woman-hood in me elie.

Falst. There's

Falst. There's no more faith in thee then a stude Prune; nor no more truth in thee, then in a drawne Fox. and for Wooman-hood, Maid-marian may be the Deputies wife of the Ward to thee. Go you nothing go.

Hof. Say, what thing? what thing?

Falst. What thing? why a thing to thanke heauen on.

Hof. I am no thing to thanke heauen on, I wold thou shouldst know it. I am an honest mans wife. and setting thy Knighthood aside, thou art a knaue to call me so.

Falst. Setting thy woman-hood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwife.

Hof. Say, what beast, thou knaue thou?

Fal. What beast? Why an Otter.

Prin. An Otter, sir John? Why an Otter?

Fal. Why? She's neither fish nor flesh; a man knowes not where to haue her

Hof. Thou art vnust man in saying so; thou, or anie man knowes where to haue me, thou knaue thou.

Prince. Thou say'st true Hostesse, and he slanders thee most grossely.

Hof. So he doth you, my Lord, and sayde this other day, You ought him a thousand pound.

Prince. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

Falst. A thousand pound Hal! A Million. Thy loue is worth a Million; thou ow'st me thy loue.

Hof. Nay my Lord, he call'd you Iacke, and said hee would cudgell you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bar. Indeed Sir John, you said so.

Fal. Yea, if he said my Ring was Copper.

Prince. I say 'tis Copper. Dar'st thou bee 'as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why Hal? thou know'st, as thou art but a man, I dare. but, as thou art a Prince, I feare thee, as I feare the roaring of the Lyons Whelpes.

Prince. And why not as the Lyon?

Fal. The King himselfe is to bee feared as the Lyon Do'st thou thinke Ile feare thee, as I feare thy Father? nay if I do, let my Girdle breake

Prin. O, if it should, how would thy guttes fall about thy knees. But sirra. There's no roome for Faith, Truth, nor Honesty, in this bosome of thine. it is all fill'd vpepe with Gutes and Midriffe. Charge an honest Womeh with picking thy pocket? Why thou horson impudent imboist Rascall, if there were any thing in thy Pocket but Tauerne Recknings, Memoirandums of Bawdie-houses, and one poore peny-worth of Sugar-candie to make thee long-winded; if thy pocket were enrich'd with anie other iniuries but these, I am a Villaine! And yet you will stand to it, you will not Pocket vp wrong. Art thou not asham'd?

Fal. Do'st thou heare Hal? Thou know'st in the state of Innocency, Adam fell stand what should poore Iacke Falstaffe do, in the dayes of Villany? Thou seest, I haue more flesh then another man, and therefore more frailty. You confesse then you pickt my Pocket?

Prin. It appears so by the Story

Fal. Hostesse, I forgive thee

Go make ready Breakfast, loue thy Husband, Looke to thy Seruaunts, and cherish thy Guests: Thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: Thou seest, I am pacified still.

Nay, I prethee he gone.

Exit Hostesse.

Now Hof. to the next Court for the Robbety, Lad? How Shan answered?

Prin. O my sweet Beece I must still be good Angell to thee.

The Monie is paid backe againe.

Fal. O, I do not like that paying backe, 'tis a double Labour.

Prin. I am good Friends with my Father, and may do any thing.

Fal. Rob me the Exchequer the first thing thou do'st, and do it with vnwash'd hands too.

Bard. Do my Lord.
